ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

First and foremost, I’d like to extend my deepest and sincerest thanks to Ed Berger, without whom this book would not have been possible. Ed contributed amazing, in-depth and original research to several key parts of this book and his contributions were and are invaluable. If you enjoy historical deep dives about the intersection of organized crime networks, corporate power and intelligence agencies, please consider listening to and supporting his podcast: The Pseudodoxology Podcast Network at https://www.patreon.com/wydna

I also want to thank my amazing assistant Star Parsons for helping keep my website afloat while I worked on this book and for painstakingly formatting all the many, many citations within this book. I also owe much to my publisher Kris Millegan for his infinite patience and understanding, as this book was delayed several times, and for his support of my work. Also, an important thank you to Johnny Vedmore who made some important contributions to this book and whose original past reporting on the Epstein case was key to developing important parts of this book.

In addition, this work, and my journalistic career in general, would not have been possible if not for Mnar Muhawesh and the team at MintPress News. Mnar and the MintPress team first gave me the space and platform necessary to develop my journalistic work and provided me with the support I needed to publish my original, four-part series on which this book is based. Thank you so much for believing in me and for supporting my work from the very beginning – I owe you all so much.

I also would like to thank my amazing babysitters, Fresia Retamal and Patricia Guzmán, for taking great care of my little ones so that I could put in the time to write this book.

Last but not least, I would like to extend my deepest, heartfelt thanks to all of my supporters, specifically the thousands of readers who financially support my work, allowing me to be 100% independent. Without your support, this book would not have happened and I cannot thank you enough for your help in financing this book as well as in supporting and sharing my other work, both online and in print.

FOREWORD

THIS BOOK makes no claim to literary merit. It is simply a work of research and documentation, giving evidence and facts which I trust will help the reader in drawing his own conclusions.

In the course of my researches as an international political investigator into the causes of social unrest, I have probed the depths of infamy which now surrounds, not ours only, but also the next generation, whose right to lead a decent life should be as good as was ours. As a woman of the world I have witnessed things the existence of which I did not suspect and I have realised that, due to my " protected " position in life. they should never have been expected to have come to my knowledge. Let me tell every woman, however much " protected", whether Dairymaid or Duchess, that the safeguards which she imagines to be thrown around herself are but a mirage of the past. Her own and her children's future are at the mercy of those " forces " the activities of which it has been my business, for the last ten years, to follow as one of a group of investigators.

Today, most of the good people are afraid to be good. They strive to be broadminded and tolerant ! It is fashionable to be tolerant — but mostly tolerant of evil — and this new code has reached the proportions of demanding intolerance of good. The wall of resistance to evil has thus been broken down and no longer affords protection to those who, persecuted by evil doers, stand in need of it.

Worse still, there are cases wherein virtuous people's good name is relentlessly " filched from them ", but no effort will be made by the presumed good people to rally to their defence. Happy are they if they themselves can discover the cause of their ruin, materiel or moral, either partial or total.

In offering this book to the public, I have endeavoured to expose some of the means and methods used by a secret world, one might almost say an underworld, to penetrate, dominate and destroy not only the so-called upper classes, but also the better portion of all classes. There are those who feel confident that if they refrain from joining any society or group and avoid entanglements, no harm can befall them. To such, let me say that situations can be, and are, created for innocent dupes every day and wrecked homes are the direct result. Neither fortune nor a blameless life led, as it were, in an island of strict virtue in the midst of a tumultuous sea of evil, spells security.

Irrefutable evidence of a particular example of underworld tyranny has come into my possession. The victim's guilt was her reluctance to step from virtue into the mire of evil which surrounded her. Moreover she was intolerant of evil and sought to oppose and destroy it. The case of her persecution at the hands of her foes is complete. She belonged to what is termed Society as did also some of the other actors in this bewildering drama. The world, social, financial, legal and, shall we say also, the underworld, leaving to this word its generally accepted literal meaning, knows them. So many Jekylls and Hydes stalk about unsuspectingly in our midst !

From such an example I have been led to the conclusion that, among others, three factors can help one from being completely destroyed by the combined forces of that " underworld " : a flawless life, independent means and real friends, all three of which must be backed by a fearless determination to fight evil on all points of the Masonic compass.

In these days when apparently vice triumphs and virtue must be penalized, it may be well for all of us to fight the undertow by which our children may be dragged under and must of necessity perish. Vice rings and secret societies form but one vortex into which youth is drawn and destroyed whilst the " good people ", because of their ignorance, look on helplessly in despair.

It is for their instruction that this book has been written. Its compilation has taken several years and, had it not been for the generous efforts of one of my friends, Mme de Shishmareff, and of several other persons, I would never have been able to complete the task which I set out to accomplish.

What must concern us all now is the protection of decency or, in other words — Equal rights — for such as are not vice adepts.

This book is not complete. It will never be complete, but for the present it must remain as a study of the root conditions which have led to present day subversive upheavals and the overthrow of the principles of Christian civilization.

OCCULT THEOCRASY

PART I

" My final work is a word of warning to American women : Keep away from the Swamis, the Yogis, the traveling teaching men. You would need no such bidding if, for an instant, you guessed the truth. In your good faith, in your eager-minded receptivity of high-sounding doctrine, in your hunger for colour, romance, glamour, and dreams come true, you expose yourself, all unsuspecting, to things that, if you knew them, would kill you dead with unmerited shame. "

Katherine Mayo in Why I wrote Mother India.

THE MYSTERIES OF FREEMASONRY

CHAPTER I

THE RELIGION OF THE SECRET

Man is a creature of mind and matter. To the realm of mind belongs metaphysical thought which, whether trained or untrained, is peculiar to each individual and is subject for its development or restraint to his will. It is the basis of religion in the generally accepted sense of this word ; it is purely spiritual and can reach the height of mysticism. From it issue creeds or doctrines and the erection of a theological system of beliefs.

Imparted to other individuals and accepted by them, the metaphysical thought of a few great minds has become the basis of religious systems. Upon its teaching was grafted a Ritual or Law, disciplining the life, mystic, moral, social and even physical, of its adherents or believers. From the exercise of such laws, theocracy or the rule of priesthood was evolved. It is to be found in every religion regardless of the fact that in some instances like in the Buddhist doctrine of Gautama and in the teaching of Jesus Christ, nothing is further removed than ritualism from the metaphysical thought or religious conception of the founders.

The power of theocrasy or exercise of government rule over the masses by a hierarchy of priests or adepts rested on its dual system of teaching, namely : Exoterism and Esoterism, the former a code of discipline of the thought and mode of life of the masses, the latter the hierarchic school wherein were trained the chosen adepts destined to safeguard the rules imposed upon the people by the high priests.

Upon a close study of the manifold religious systems, the corruption of which led to theocratic rule, namely, Brahminism, the Ancient Egyptian Cult, Mosaism or Judaism, Christianism and Mahometanism, one finds the accepted belief of Monotheism as the basis of esoteric or secret belief or doctrine. Monotheism is here taken in the sense of First Principle.

Whereas the Egyptian high priesthood of Memphis kept this theory as the esoteric teaching of the high adepts, Moses, brought up as one of them, gave it as exoteric or popular belief to the Israelitic sect to which he belonged, embodying it in a deity, the terrible Jehovah of the Jews.

Another side of the esoteric teaching was that of occultism, the development of all human psychic forces which, when misused, lead to the practice of magic. The esoteric part of all religions or hermeticism, the teaching and practice of occultism, led to the development of what might be termed the religion of the secret, which eventually overshadowed and helped to dissimulate subversive activities.

It is with this that we are chiefly concerned and will endeavour, to some degree, to show its baneful influence on society of all creeds and nations. Let the reader bear in mind that it is not the object of this work to discuss the place occupied and the part played by either Metaphysics and Philosophy on the one hand, and Science and Ritualism on the other. The limitations of each and its encroachment upon the territory of the others, the ensuing conflicts, are matter for the history of fanaticism throughout the ages. Our aim is to follow the outgrowth of Esoterism and a few of its multiple ramifications in the realm of perversion and subversion.

CHAPTER II

THE MEANING OF OCCULTISM

A summary and some explanation of the principal forms of occultism must precede the chapters which deal with the historical side of this subject, and the objections, those of the credulous as well as those of the sceptics, must be foreseen and forestalled. Many persons are tempted to deny, arbitrarily and without examination, statements on matters of which they have no previous knowledge, but even the possible criticism of such as these must have received due consideration.

In this age of wireless and aeroplanes, one of the fads of the modern highbrow is to scoff at such things as sorcerers, magic and evocations as old wives' tales. Tales of ancient history ! There are people who refuse to believe in the existence of the supernatural, perhaps we should say supernormal, even when confronted with the evidence. Such are the sceptics who deny everything. Hidebound in their prejudice, they ignore the fact that magic, White or Black, has now as many adepts as ever, nor can they distinguish between the different schools of spiritism.

First, there are the charlatans whose tricks in the line of Spiritism are generally sooner or later unmasked.

Second, there are the Occultists who operate in secrecy and hide their meetings from all but initiates with the greatest care.

Many persons are duped by charlatans, so the sceptics persuade themselves of the absolute non-existence of all diabolical practices in modern times. They are wrong. For Occultism flourishes now in Europe, Asia, and America. The Black Mass is said today in Paris and London, and Satanism has its faithful followers. On this subject one of the most eminent writers was Carl Hackse, who, under the pseudonym of Dr. Bataille, made an extensive study of Occultism and gave his extremely exaggerated views of it in the book Le Diable au XIX^e Siècle.

The following pages of this chapter are mostly either quotations or abridgements from that work :

" According to the teaching of the Christian churches, God allows demons certain limited powers, but they are not permitted to open the gates of hell and release a spirit at the request of one who evokes the dead. The dead, even damned, will not show themselves if evoked, nor would evocations be answered by those who had succeeded in attaining the kingdom of heaven, but devils can and do, says the Church, substitute themselves for the deceased. They will impersonate a dead person whose appearance is demanded by invocations.

" It is also admitted that the fallen angels or spirits will often manifest to people without being called, The theological hagiographa cite many cases of diabolical apparitions to saints, apparitions which these saints have been able to repel and conquer... but what sceptics and agnostic Christians alike ignore is that besides the drawing room mediums, mediums for diversion, there are occultists whose vile practices are veiled in the profoundest mystery. These men, whose moral sense is absolutely perverted, believe in Lucifer, but they believe him to be the equal of God and worship him secretly. "[1]

Modern Occultism is on the one hand practical Cabala and on the other, Indian Yogism, both of which have always had their adepts more or less openly.

The Cabala is Occult Science itself. It is the secret theology of the initiates, theology essentially Satanic. In a word the counter-theology. Our God, the God of the Christians, is the power of evil in the eyes of the Cabalists ; and for them the power of good, the real God, is Lucifer.

" The Cabala teaches magic or the art of intercourse with spirits and supernatural beings.

" One cannot be a convinced Cabalist without soon becoming a magician and devoting oneself to the practices of occultism.

" Not that our Cabalists or contemporary magicians practise all the different branches of occultism. Some of these have been abandoned and others are only used by charlatans for the exploitation of superstitious persons, but a great many, precisely the most criminal and perverse, are observed in the hidden dens of our modern Luciferians. "[2]

Magic has two divisions :

The first is divining magic, subdivided into several branches of which the principal are :

Astrology
Palmistry
Anthropomancy
Oneirocritics
Aeromancy
Hydromancy
Pyromancy
Cartomancy

---

[2] Ibid., p. 29.

The second is operative magic, also subdivided into several branches of which the principal are :

Alchemy | Necromancy
Mesmerism | Theurgy
Various miraculous feats

There are moreover some superstitious practices not specially classed.

Bataille thus defines some of the foregoing :

Astrology. — Divining the future by the stars. The casting of horoscopes is its most prevalent practice.

Palmistry. — Divining the future by the hand.

Anthropomancy. — This is one of the practices supposed at present to have fallen into disuse. It is a horrible, savage abomination and consists in disembowelling a human being for the purpose of divining the future by inspection of the entrails.

Mediaeval history accuses Gilles de Retz of perpetrating this crime on children, whom he lured to his castle for the purpose. Tacitus says that the Druids, in ancient Britain, used to consult their Gods by looking into the entrails of their captives.

Oneirocritics. — Divining the future through interpretation of dreams.

Aeromancy. — Divination by the study of aerial phenomena.

Hydromancy. -— Divination by the study of liquids or aquatic phenomena.

Pyromancy. — Divination by fire.

Cartomancy. — Divination by cards.

There is no need to expatiate further on the more or less grotesque means employed by those who follow these false sciences. One must be somewhat erratic to imagine that the future can be foretold by coffee grounds, by the antics of flames in a grate, by the order in which shuffled cards will be drawn, or by the odd shapes assumed by wind-driven clouds ! When events corroborate predictions made under these conditions, it can be attributed to the use of the power of clairvoyance, but these fortune tellers, some of whom have a thorough knowledge of the rules governing the practices of these absurdities, are the first to distrust their art.

Such expedients, disdained by the real occultists, are too unimportant to be worthy of note. It is quite another matter to expose the Satanists, ignored by the public, whose sects, bearing different names in different countries, constitute, in reality, only one, single, secret religion whose fanatics, imbued with the spirit of evil, will sacrifice themselves blindly to their cause.

Throughout the universe, all Luciferian and Satanic rites bear a basic similarity.

Dealing principally with the practices of contemporary operative magic, it is Bataille's opinion that as regards the mysterious art of Alchemy, its theory is called Hermetic Science and has a double objective, namely, the discovery of the philosopher's stone, a substance capable of transmuting base metals into gold and drinkable gold, or the Elixir of long life which is a magic potion endowed with the properties necessary to prolong human life indefinitely or, at least, to maintain in old age the faculties of youth. Alchemy as a science seems now obsolete.

The Alchemists knew the existence of microbes and toxins long before the medical discoveries of the present age. The laboratories of Satanic bacteriology have been working, for a long time, on cultures of bacilli or solutions of their toxic properties which, even when administered in infinitesimal doses, mixed with food or drink, disseminate disease and death where it is judged necessary by the " Masters " that life is to be destroyed. In these cases deaths occur from apparently natural causes!

He further says that Magnetic Mesmerism is the occult medicine of the Cabalists. One must naturally not confuse the scientists who are at present making researches in hypnotism and suggestion, in the interest of science, with the emulators of Cagliostro whose aim is to procure diversions, often wicked and immoral. Scientific magnetism is still an obscure question being studied by theologians, physiologists and criminologists, whereas that of the adepts of magic has nothing to do with this ; it is a branch of the subterranean work that is nearing its goal today.

Necromancy is partly divining magic and partly operative magic. This practice consists in the evocation of the spirits of the dead. Spiritism and rapping of tables are necromancy, but if all spiritists are not necessarily Cabalists, all Cabalists are practicing necromancy. People are far from suspecting the progress made by necromancy along these lines. Freemasonry is yearly more and more invaded by the spiritist element to the extent that, in 1889, an international convention of spiritist Freemasons attended by about 500 delegates was held at the Hotel of the Grand Orient of France, rue Cadet, Paris.

This was only a beginning ! [3]

Eliphas Levi, a renowned occultist of the 19th century, writing in Histoire de la Magie, [4] in the following words, sounds a warning to those who, recklessly, would venture into the domain of the occult.

" The experiences of theurgy and necromancy are always disastrous to those who indulge in them. When one has once stood on the threshold of the other world one must die and almost invariably under terrible conditions. First giddiness, then catalepsy followed by madness. It is true that the atmosphere is disturbed, the woodwork cracks and doors tremble and groan in the presence of certain persons, after a series of intoxicating acts. Weird sounds, sometimes bloody signs, will appear spontaneously on paper or linen. They are always the same and are classed by magicians as Diabolical writings. The very sight of them induces a state of convulsion or ecstacy in the mediums who believe themselves to be seeing spirits. Thus Satan, the Spirit of Evil, is transfigured for them into an angel of light but, before they will manifest, these so-called spirits require sympathetic excitement produced by sexual intercourse on the part of their devotees. Hands must be placed in hands, feet on feet, they must breathe in each other's faces, these acts often being followed by others of an obscene character. The initiates, revelling in these forms of excesses believe themselves to be the elect of God and the arbiters of destiny. They are the successors of the fakirs of India. No warning will save them.

" To cure such illnesses, the priests of Greece used to terrify their patients by concentration and exaggeration of the evil in one great paroxysm. They made the adept sleep in the cave of Trophonius. After some preliminary preparations, he descended to a subterranean cavern in which he was left without light soon to be prostrated by intoxicating gases. Then the visionary, still in the throes of ghastly dreams caused by incipient asphyxia, was rescued, being carried off prophesying on his tripod. These tests gave their nervous systems such a shock that the patients never dared mention evocations of phantoms again.

" Theurgy is the highest degree of occultism. Necromancy is limited to the summoning of dead souls, but the Theurgists of the nineteenth century evoke entities qualified by them as genii, angels of light, exalted spirits, spirits of fire etc. In their meetings, scattered throughout the world, they worship Lucifer. The three mysterious letters J... B... M..., that the common initiates see in the Masonic Temples, are reproduced in the meeting rooms of the Luciferians, but they no longer mean Jakin, Bohaz, Mahabone, as in the Lodges, nor Jacques Bourguignon Molay, as with the Knights Kadosch ; in Theurgy these three letters mean ; Jesus Bethlemitus Maledictus. Theurgy is therefore pure Satanism. "[5]

" Moreover it is important to note that the Cabalists, admitted to the mysteries of Theurgy, never mention the word Satan. They look upon certain dissident adepts who invoke the devil under the name of Satan as heretics, whose system they call Goety or Black Magic. They call their own practices Theurgy or White Magic. "[6]

Between these two types of Devil worshippers, the Luciferian occultists and the Satanists, there is a difference which must not be overlooked.

Luciferians never call their infernal master " Spirit of Evil" or " Father and Creator of Crime ". Albert Pike even forbade the use of the word Satan under any circumstances.

There is indeed a distinction between the Satanists and Luciferians. The Satanists, described by Mr. Huysmans in his book, Là Bas, are chiefly persons mentally deranged by the use and abuse of drugs who, while suffering from a peculiar form of hysteria, accuse the God of the Christians of having betrayed the cause of humanity. They are persons who recognize that their God Satan occupies a position in the supernatural sphere, inferior to that of the Christian deity. On the other hand the Luciferians or the initiates of kindred rites, while still labouring under a strange delusion, act deliberately and glorify Lucifer as the principle of good. To them he is the equal of the God of the Christians whom they describe as the principle of evil.

[6] Ibid., p. 36.

It is necessary to recognize the distinction which exists between Luciferians and Satanists, for their two cults bear each other no resemblance, although Lucifer-Satan manifests indiscriminately to his faithful followers of both denominations. One must not, however, imagine that the pride and satisfaction he derives from this adulation acts as an inducement to making him appear whenever he is called ! Occultists of all schools agree that nothing is more capricious than the conduct of spirits when evoked !

It is well moreover to remember that Luciferian occultism is no novelty, nor must one make the mistake of confusing it with ordinary Freemasonry, the Lodges of which are only private clubs. [7]

Many authors have published books on Freemasonry, some printing the rituals, some their personal observations on certain facts, but few of these authors, having themselves passed into occult masonry, the real masonry of the Cabalistic degrees which is in touch with all secret societies, Masonic as well as non-Masonic, have been able to state that Luciferian Occultism controls Freemasonry.

Though this is indeed the case, neither the President of the Council of the Order of the Grand Orient of France, the supreme chief of French Freemasonry, nor the president of the Supreme Council of Scottish Rites will be received at the meeting of a simple Luciferian ceremony just on account of his title and dignity unless, at the same time, he possesses a diploma of Cabalistic grade which requires another initiation. On the other hand, the first Oddfellow from Canada, a member of the Chinese San-ho-hui of China, a Luciferian Fakir from India, all these can visit at their pleasure all lodges and inner shrines of ordinary Freemasonry in all countries because, in each one of the Satanic sects, the directing authority is exercised by heads who belong to the most exalted masonic degrees of the different rites, degrees which are for them of secondary importance. These chiefs, at the request of their subordinates of the Luciferian societies, deliver to them freely the diplomas necessary to obtain admittance everywhere, as well as the sacred words and yearly and half yearly pass-words of all the masonic rites of the globe.[8]

Luciferian Occultism, as has been said before, is therefore not a novelty, but it bore a different name in the early days of Christianity. It was called Gnosticism and its founder was Simon the Magician.

The Gnostics were not ordinary heretics but constituted an anti-christian sect. To deceive the multitude, they affected disagreement with certain doctrines of the Apostles, and the chiefs selected from among the initiates those destined to receive, in secret council, the Satanic revelation. Gnosticism is marked with the seal of Lucifer. It is contemporary with the Apostle Peter and has continued, without interruption, down to the present day, periodically changing its mask.

The seven founders of Freemasonry were all Gnostics, Magi of the English Rose Croix, whose names were : Theophile Desaguliers, named Chaplain of the Prince of Wales by George II, Anderson, the clergyman, an Oxford graduate and preacher to the King of England, George Payne, James King, Calvert, Lumden-Madden, and Elliott.

Gnosticism, as the Mother of Freemasonry, has imposed its mark in the very centre of the chief symbol of this association. The most conspicuous emblem which one notices on entering a masonic temple, the one which figures on the seals, on the rituals, everywhere in fact, appears in the middle of the interlaced square and compass, it is the five pointed star framing the letter G. Different explanations of this letter G are given to the initiates. In the lower grades, one is taught that it signifies Geometry. To the brothers frequenting the lodges admitting women as members, it is revealed that the mystic letter means Generation, but the revelation is attended with great secrecy. Finally, t6 those found worthy to penetrate into the sanctuary of Knights Kadosch, the enigmatic letter becomes the initial of the doctrine of the perfect initiates which is Gnosticism. This explanation is no longer an imaginary fabrication. It is Gnosticism which is the real meaning of the G in the flamboyant star, for, after the grade of Kadosch (a Hebrew word meaning consecrated) the Freemasons dedicate themselves to the glorification of Gnosticism (or anti-christianity) which is defined by Albert Pike as " the soul and marrow of Freemasonry. " [9] [9] " The G which the Freemasons place in the middle of the flamboyant star signifies Gnosticism and Generation, the most sacred words of the ancient Cabala. " See Eliphas Levi, Dogme et Rituel de la Haute Magie, vol. II, p. 97.

Let us add that the ancient mysteries of Gnosticism have been known and published in the past. There is no difference between the Gnosticism of the early ages of Christianity and modern occultism.

The fundamental principle of Gnosticism was the double divinity (dual principle) and this is exactly the theological theory of modern occultism. The Gnostics claimed that the good God was Lucifer and that Christ was the devil, that what the Christians call vice was for them virtue, and to the Christian dogma they opposed Gnosticism, a word meaning human knowledge.

Early Gnosticism had its doctors ; the Basilideans, Ophites and Valentinians. Basilide of Alexandria, one of them, lived at the end of the first century. He taught metempsychosis and the principles underlying present-day Theosophy. His system resembles that of the spiritists of the nineteenth century who have invented nothing, for they copy Gnosticism even in its theory of the transmigration of souls. Basilide affirmed that he was the reincarnation of Plato. Whoever has penetrated into assemblies of modern theurgists can attest that one of its current theories is that of reincarnation.

After Basilide came Montanus who died in 212. Montanus was a grand master of the art of divination. The Bite of Mizraim (a Freemasonry said to be Egyptian) copies slavishly, in its Cabalistic grades, all the phantasmagoria of Montanus. This Gnostic doctor plunged himself into ecstasies and, according to history, he had two women, Maximilla and Priscilla, trained to act as his accomplices. The Gnostics came in crowds to admire their contortions worthy of epileptics. They had the sacred illness,[10] and were considered two saints of

10. In reference to the Pagans " who (as we read in divers authors) consecrated most kinds of Distempers of the Body, and Affections of the Mind; erected Temples and Altars to Satan. In the assemblies of the sect, when they went into frenzies and prophesied, their oracular sayings were listened to with veneration by the adepts.

Were they acting a part, were they just mediums or somnambulists, or were they what the Roman Catholics call " possessed " ?

This is a hard question to answer.

A modern example of the influence exercised by occult organizations on the destinies of mankind is to be found in the history of The Holy Alliance, founded in 1815 by Alexander I, Emperor of Russia. This was originally a union of monarchs pledged to support the Christian Church and to stem the rising tide of radicalism, revolution and subversion.

In L'Histoire de la Magie (p. 467), Eliphas Levi states that the spiritist sect of " The Rescuers of Louis XVI ", wishing to penetrate this organization to use it for their own purposes, succeeded in insinuating one of their illumines into the good graces of the Czar. This was Madame Bouche, known to the adepts as Sister Salome. After eighteen months spent at the Russian Court, during which she had many secret interviews with the Emperor, she was supplanted by another medium-somnambulist of the sect, the famous Madame de Krudner who acquired so great an influence

" But it must be remembered this Distemper was called also Morbus Comitialis ; because if any one fell into it, during the Assembly, it was a fatal Omen, and they immediately broke up ".

Bishop Lavington, The Enthusiasm of Methodists and Papists compared, p. 123.

over the Czar that his ministers became alarmed at the situation thus created.

Levi thus describes the fall of the favorite ;

" One day, as the emperor was leaving her, she barred his passage crying ' God reveals to me that your life is in great danger. An assassin is in the palace. ' The Emperor, alarmed, caused the palace to be searched and a man, armed with a dagger, was found. He confessed, when questioned, that he had been introduced into the palace by Madame de Krudner herself. '

One wonders if the whole affair was not simply the result of a clever intrigue calculated to get rid of the prophetess. As such it was singularly successful for Madame de Krudner was summarily banished from the Russian Court.

In De la Maçonnerie Occulte (pp. 87-88), J. M. Ragon tells us that " science counts four kinds of Somnambulism : The natural, the symptomatic, the magnetic and the ecstatic.

" Natural and symptomatic somnambulism are two essentially different states, one occurring only at night, the other by day as well as by night. The conduct of the subject is different under the two conditions.

" Magnetic and ecstatic somnambulism differ from one another insomuch as the one is commanded (willed) and the other is not. The first is artificial, the other natural. In the first, the subject is dependent; in the second, he acts independently. That is why induced somnambulism cures the natural when substituted for it.

" A lucid somnambulist bears no more resemblance to a man asleep than he does to an active man awake ".

When the Gnostics practised magic, they evoked the spirits of the dead exactly as do the occultists of today. Dawning Christianity was prolific in miracles so, in order to fight it, the disciples of Gnosticism had recourse to diabolical marvels. In this respect, are not contemporaneous spiritists, with their rapping tables and apparitions, Gnostics under another name ?

Secret Gnostic meetings lead to depravity, as the adepts indulge in every kind of turpitude and obscenity, often under the influence of drugs such as Indian Hemp (Cannabis indica) or Opium, the medicinal properties of which, when administered under certain conditions, are provocative of mediumistic phenomena.

Thus debauched, their moral sense weakened, initiates are ready to work. They work, they fall, and, as they fall the Occult power grasps its prey. Their life, henceforth, is subject to the will of the Hidden Masters who, according to their secret designs, will lead their slaves to power, or a semblance of power, or else to their downfall. To use the words of " Inquire Within " in Light-bearers of Darkness (p. 118) ... " These masters — doubtless identical with the terrible power behind the horrors of Russia's sufferings and World Revolution — have in reality no interest in soul or astral development, except as a means of forming passive illuminised tools, completely controlled in mind and actions. "[11]

" Inquire Within " further suggests that there is " a group of flesh-and-blood men, who can form etheric links, from any distance, with the leaders of these societies and who secretly work by means of that light which can * slay or make alive ', intoxicating, blinding, and, if need be, destroying unwary men and women, using them as instruments or ' Light-bearers ' to bring to pass this mad and evil scheme of World

Dominion by the God-People —the Cabalistic Jew. "[12]

A further explanation of the phenomenon of induced mediumship is given us by the same author who quotes the following lines from Eliphas Levi's History of Magic:

> " This may take place when, through a series of almost impossible exercises... our nervous system, having been habituated to all tensions and fatigues, has become a kind of living galvanic pile, capable of condensing and projecting powerfully that Light (astral) which intoxicates and destroys.

" Inquire Within " comments further :

> " It attempts to show that it leads to mastership and self control, but on careful consideration it proves to be merely conscious mediumship inspired by crafty and wilful deception, giving the adept a false confidence, inducing him to let go his physical senses and work upon the astral, where, enclosed by formulae given by these masters themselves, he is completely at their mercy. "

A recent practical illustration of these methods is the teaching contained in a book Asia Mysteriosa by Zam Bhotiva, (published by Dorbon Ainé) which suggests ways and means of communication with the " Hidden Masters ".

It will be recognised by anyone having taken an interest in the progress of science along certain lines that there is nothing impossible or even improbable in the suggestion that telepathy may be exploited by organisations for their own particular ends.

Forty years ago William Gay Hudson wrote on telepathy as follows :

> If the power exists in man to convey a telepathic message to his fellow-man, it presupposes the existence of the power in the percipient to repeat the message to a third person, and so on indefinitely, until some one receives it who has the power to elevate the information above the threshold of his consciousness, and thus convey it to the objective intelligence of the world. Nor is the element of time necessarily an adverse factor in the case ; for there is no reason to suppose that such messages may not be transmitted from one to another for generations. Thus, the particulars of a tragedy might be revealed many years after the event, and in such a way as to render it difficult, if not impossible, to trace the line through which the intelligence was transmitted. For the spiritist the easy and ever-ready explanation of such a phenomenon is to ascribe it to the intervention of spirits of the dead. But to those who have kept pace with the developments of modern scientific investigation, and who are able to draw the legitimate and necessary conclusions from the facts discovered, the explanation is obvious, without the necessity of entering the domain of the supernatural. "[13]

12. " Inquire Within " op. cit., pp. 116-117.

On the subject of Hypnotism and Crime, Hudson, writing further, reaches however a fatally false conclusion which for many years remained unchallenged. He states (p. 140) " It is true that, on ordinary questions, the truth is always uppermost in the subjective mind. A hypnotic subject will often say, during the hypnotic sleep, that which he would not say in his waking moments. Nevertheless, he never betrays a vital secret... That this is true is presumptively proved by the fact that in all the years during which the science of hypnotism has been practised, no one has ever been known to betray the secrets of any society or order. The attempt has often been made, but it has never succeeded. " opposing the suggestion of another. This however is not the case, for, where a member of a secret society or order is concerned, that member was already hypnotized during initiation and it is not his will that guards the secret," it is the will of another, the will of the Lodge.

Hudson attributes this reticence to auto-suggestion

13. Hudson, The Law of Psychic Phenomena, p. 236.

How many people know that hypnotism is about all there is to initiation ? Hypnotism and fear. The rest is camouflage.

In the event of this statement being doubted, we quote herewith from Freemasonry Universal an article which needs no further comment: [14]

> " The Stewards prepare the candidate ; the Tyler first, and afterwards in turn the I. G., Deacons and Junior Wardens should inspect the candidate to see that everything is strictly correct.
> " The preparation symbolises poverty, blindness (or ignorance) and poverty of spirit, — but it may also signify a purification, i.e., that the riches and pleasures which bind one to the material side of life are discarded and the spirit blinded to their attractions. The baring of the right arm, left breast, left knee and right heel being slipshod, are apparently a reference to the awakening of occult centres in one's being which may only become active when purification of the whole nature has begun.
> " The very specific character of the preparation points to real knowledge of the occult physiology of the process of initiation on the part of those who originated the method which has been so faithfully preserved. Certain Forces are sent through the candidate's body during the ceremony, especially at the moment when he is created, received and constituted an Entered Apprentice Freemason. Certain parts of the Lodge have been very heavily charged with magnetic force especially in order that the Candidate may absorb as much as possible of this force. The first object of this curious method of preparation is to expose to this influence those various parts of the body which are especially used in the ceremony. In ancient Egypt, there was another reason for these preparations, for a weak current of physical electricity was sent through the candidate by means of a rod or sword with which he was touched at certain points. It is partly on this account that at this first initiation the candidate is deprived of all metals since they may very easily interfere with the flow of the currents. "

All kinds of nice inspiring symbolical interpretations of the ritual are generally given for the benefit of people who seem to want them, but it is here evident that the candidate, unknown to himself or herself, has acted throughout the ceremony of initiation under the stress of hypnotism. No longer a free agent, the initiate takes the oath under hypnotic force which, has also been used to instil into him the feeling of fear. Fear guards the secret of initiation, fear born under the power of hypnotism to serve henceforth as the controlling agent of the initiators over the initiated.

The Right Worshipful Master must be a genuine occultist, as it is up to him to charge (hypnotise) the candidate, for to give this in the words of Freemasonry Universal : " The R. W. M. gives the light, the pure white light of truth and illumination. "[15]

Illumination, alias Kundalini, alias Serpent power, alias Electro-magnetic force, alias the Sex force, etc. !

Even in our western world any one wishing to study Hatha Yoga can learn to neutralize the action of gravity and go some yards up in the air. This stunt, and the assumption of any size at will, are tricks for which training is essential, and if one works at it hard enough, one will eventually be able to mesmerise people for one's own purposes, business, political or other, thus following the lure of the occult to a sinister end i.e. Black Magic. [16]

We would here observe that the miracles performed by Jesus Christ bore a distinctive feature, often overlooked, namely, that in every case altruism was the source of their inspiration. Thus they were a symbol of charity.

This gives us the esoteric explanation of His silence when taunted on the cross. " He saved others, himself he cannot save. " Sooner than use this power for personal advantage He chose death !

Gnostic miracles, such as that of being buried alive for a period of time which constitutes the Hindu religious rites of Samadhi have no ulterior charitable purpose. They are chiefly performed for the object of creating wonderment, curiosity or faith in magic, and as such, failing the altruistic motive, are classifiable under the general term of Black Magic.

As a stimulus to popular faith, they are, however, sanctioned by most Pagan religions, though where such a custom prevails, the magical performers themselves are not privileged to withhold their gains for themselves, as these are claimed by the Temple.

Having dealt with the preliminaries of the subject, we will now proceed along the thorny paths of history — not the history of wars, battles, heroes, but that of the agents of their being !

16. In Hinduism it is known as Kala Yoga.

CHAPTER III

BRAHMINISM

For a brief study of Brahminism, the religion practised in India, we can hardly do better than quote from the work of such recognized authorities as Messrs. Stillson and Hughan. [1] In attempting to trace the origin of Brahminism, they make the following observations :

" After being conquered by the Cuthites under Rama, the son of Cush, referred to in Genesis x, 2, 7, the Mysteries of the Deluge were introduced. The worship soon became divided into two sects. We are not fully apprised when was first introduced the Brahminic system, composed of Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva, constituting the Trimurti... one branch of which was mild and benevolent, and addressed to Vishnu, the Preserver, while the other proclaimed the superiority of Siva, who was called the Destroyer and the representative of terror and penance, barbarity and blood ; in Egypt, represented by Typhon.

" These Mysteries, whatever may have been their origin, or for what purposes they were then instituted, were certainly a corruption of the original worship of the one Deity. They bore a direct reference to the happiness of Man in Paradise, where he was first placed ; his subsequent deviations and transgressions, and the destruction of the race by the general deluge... The great cavern of Elephanta, perhaps the most ancient temple in the world made by man, in which these rites were performed and remaining to the present day, is an evidence of the magnitude of that system...

" The caverns of Salsette, of which there are three hundred, all have within them carved and emblematic characters. The different ranges of apartments are connected by open galleries, and only by private entrances could the most secret caverns, which contained the ineffable symbols, be approached, and so curiously contrived as to give the highest effect upon the neophytes when in the ceremonial of initiation. A cubical cisia, used for the periodical sepulture of the aspirant, was located in the most secret recesses of the cavern. The consecrated water of absolution was held in a carved basin in every cavern, and on the surface floated the flowers of the lotus. The Linga or Phallus appeared everywhere most conspicuous, and oftentimes in situations too disgusting to be mentioned...

" Sacrifices to the sun, to the planets, and to household gods, were made accompanied with ablutions of water, purifications with dung and urine of the cow. This last was because the dung was the medium by which the soil was made fertile and reminded them of the doctrine of ' Corruption and reproduction ' taught in the worship of Siva. "

An initiation is thus described :

" Amidst all the confusion, a sudden explosion was heard, which was followed by a dead silence. Flashes of brilliant light were succeeded by darkness. Phantoms and shadows of various forms, surrounded by rays of light, flitted across the gloom. Some with many hands, arms, and legs; others without them; sometimes a shapeless trunk, then a human body with the head of a bird, or beast, or a fish ; all manner of incongruous forms and bodies were seen, and all calculated to excite terror in the mind of the postulant.

" A gorgeous appearance, with unnumbered heads, each having a crown set with resplendent jewels, one of which excelled the others; his eyes gleamed like flaming torches, but his neck, his tongues and his body were black ; the skirts of his garments were yellow, and sparkling jewels hung in all of his ears ; his arms were extended, and adorned with bracelets, and his hands bore the holy shell; the radiated weapon, the war mace, and the sacred lotus. This image represented Mahadeva[2] himself, in his character of the Destroyer. "

Among other learned authorities, writing on these subjects, is Jacolliot who gives the following description of perverted Brahminism :

" The study of philosophic truth does not relieve the Nirvanys and Yogys from the necessity of the tapassas, or bodily mortifications. On the contrary, it would seem that they carry them to the greatest extremes...... Everything that affects or consumes the body, everything that tends to its annihilation, without actually destroying it, is thought to be meritorious.

" Several centuries previous to the present era, however, these bodily mortifications had assumed a character of unusual severity. [3]

" To the contemplative dreamers of the earliest ages in India, who devoted the whole of their time to meditation, and never engaged in practices involving physical suffering oftener than once a week, had succeeded a class of bigoted fanatics, who placed no limit to their religious enthusiasm, and inflicted upon themselves the most terrible tortures.[4]

[3] Louis Jacolliot, Occult Science in India, pp. 92-93.

" A spiritual reaction, however, occurred, and those who had been initiated into the higher degrees took that opportunity to abandon the practice of the tapassas, or corporal mortification. They sought rather to impress the imagination of the people by excessive asceticism in opposition to the laws of nature. A profound humility, an ardent desire to live unknown by the world, and to have the divinity as the only witness to the purity of their morals, took possession of them, and though they continued the practice of excessive abstemiousness, they did so perhaps more that they might not seem to be in conflict with the formal teachings of the sacred scriptures.

" That kind of austerity is the only one now enjoined upon all classes of initiates.

" The Fakirs appear to have gradually monopolized all the old modes of inflicting pain, and have carried them to the greatest extremes. They display the most unbounded fanaticism in their self-inflicted tortures upon all great public festivals. . . .

" The Nirvanys live in a constant state of ecstatic contemplation, depriving themselves of sleep as far as possible, and taking food only once a week, after sunset.

" They are never visible either in the grounds or inside the temples, except on the occasion of the grand festival of fire, which occurs every five years. On that day, they appear at midnight upon a stand erected in the centre of the sacred tank. They appear like spectres, and the surrounding atmosphere is illumined by them by means of their incantations. They seem to be in the midst of a column of light rising from earth to heaven.[5]

[4] Bataille, op. cit., for a fanciful description of such rites.

" The seven degrees of initiation in the sacerdotal cast of the Brahmins are : [6]

Grihasta—or House-Master.
Pourohita—or Priest of Popular Evocations.
Fakir—Performing.
Sanyassis—or Naked Cenobites, Superior Exorcists.
Nirvanys—Naked Evocators.
Yogys—Contemplative.
Brahmatma—Supreme Chief.

" Upon reaching the third degree of initiation, the Brahmins were divided into tens, and a superior Guru, or professor of the occult sciences, was placed over each decade. He was revered by his disciples as a god.

" Seventy Brahmins more than seventy years old are chosen from among the Nirvanys to see that the law of the Lotus, or the occult science, is never revealed to the vulgar, and that those who have been initiated into the sacred order are not contaminated by the admission of any unworthy person. " (Quoted from the Agrouchada-Parikchai).

" In addition to its attributes as an initiatory tribunal, the council of the elders also had charge of administering the pagoda property, from which it made provision for the wants of its members (of the three classes) who shared everything in common. It also directed the wanderings of the Fakirs, whose duty it is to give manifestations of occult power outside.

It also elected the Brahmatma from its own members.

With regard to the rise to power of the Brahmin caste in India, Mr. Jacolliot writes in Les Fils de Dieu :

" Doubtless, in the midst of this new society discontent and discord were unavoidable. Happy in the power they had secured, the chiefs of the Brahmins, however, had to consider means for preserving and insuring it against a reversal of popular favour. At this distance, it is impossible for us to judge the mental influences at work during a period covering about two thousand years, that is to say, from the day when the priests united into a kind of corporation to the time when, enjoying unchallenged authority, they published the Vedhas. This was a collection of prayers and ancient ceremonies interspersed with the texts necessary to maintaining their supremacy under the name of Manou (Sanscrit meaning : wise law giver), a new code of law which, rejecting all the ancient customs of equality and dividing the people into castes, invested the Brahmins with world power and established the dogma of the Trimourti or Trinity of God, from which eventually was to spring polytheism and a host of the most monstrous superstitions.

" This religious revolution occurred about twelve thousand years before our era, under the Brahmatma Vasichta-Richi.

" The Vedhas and Manou, collected and codified by the Brahmins were given as coming from Brahma himself, and anyone doubting the truth of this origin was liable to the penalty of death. "

As among the Ancient Egyptians the teaching of monotheism was restricted to the highest initiates alone. Jacolliot emphasises this when he writes :

" The worship of the one God or Zeus unrevealed, reserved to the priests, was forbidden to the lower classes, but three temples dedicated to the three persons of the Trimourti, Brahma, Vishnu, Siva, opened their doors to the adoration of the people, all of whom were allowed to select one of the three personages of the trinity they would prefer to worship. "

This division in religious worship which eventually led to the caste system shows the power of theocratic tyranny, the Brahmins, seeking to justify the method whereby the control of the masses is vested in the hands of a few, when preaching in the pagodas, even now say : " See how logical is this system of division of the people into castes. It was formed in the likeness of the divinity, Zeus, sovereign master of all things, but taking no action himself. This is the Brahmin priest Brahma, the God who creates, who acts, who directs, that is the aristocrat or the prince ; Vishnu, the God who preserves, that is the artisan, the merchant, who produces taxes, preserving and assuring the prosperity of the State by his work and industry. As for Siva, the terrible God, he keeps the Soudra (peasant) in a state of humility and obedience appropriate to his station in life.

" Another very important function appears however to have been early assigned to him, on which much more stress is laid in his (Siva) modern worship — that of destroyer — viz., the character of a generative power, symbolized in the phallic emblem (Linga) and in the sacred bull (Nandi), the favourite attendant of the god. This feature being entirely alien from the nature of the Vedic god, it has been conjectured with some plausibility, that the Linga-worship was originally prevalent among the non-Aryan population, and was thence introduced into the worship of Siva. [7]

[7] Article on Brahminism : Enc. Brit. 9th Edition.

One of the most curious facts in the Theocratic System ruling India is that the principle of equality is evidenced only in the teaching and practice of Occultism. Members of all castes are admitted on the same footing to learn magic or fakirism and compose the class known under the name of Fakirs. This system of equality is similar to the brotherhood principle and teaching of democracy advocated in Freemasonry which was so effectively exploited in all the lodges that fomented the French Revolution.

" As all castes are admitted to the congregation of the Fakirs, the lowest of the soudras on entering it becomes the equal of the Brahmins. In spreading the belief that whosoever consented to enrol among the high initiates of the pagoda, and to die for the faith, was transported to the abode of Brahma without accomplishing further migration on earth or having to pass through hell, the Brahmins provided for an inexhaustible supply of fakirs. "

" Before entering the category of fakir, those who are destined to illustrate the ceremonies of the cults by their tortures and death, the new recruits practise the occult sciences under the direction of initiated Brahmins in the innermost recesses of the pagodas. "

While " there are indeed extraordinary phenomena in what is termed by the Brahmins occult science, there are none which cannot be explained and which are not in accordance with the law of nature. "

" To become expert in magic, like the believers in the philosophic doctrine of the Pitris, the pupil must learn, from a magician whom the sorcerers call their Guru, the formulas of evocation, by means of which the malign spirits are brought into complete subjection.

" Some of these spirits the magician evokes in preference to others, probably on account of their willingness to do anything that may be required of them. "

" An intimate connection exists between the doctrine of the ancient Jewish Cabalists and those of the Hindu votaries of the Pitris — or spirits — whose scientific book is the Agrouchada-parikchai. [8]

" It would be impossible to enumerate the different drugs, ingredients and implements that compose the stock-in-trade of a magician. " [9]

The standard Indian book on magic is the Oupnek'hat. Therein is to be found a detailed description of methods available for producing catalepsy, somnambulism, hallucination and ecstasy by strength of will and fatigue of the nervous system. [10]

This is what is known to the modern common-sense mortal as " Yogi stuff ", and it is mostly based on breathing exercises.

We will now quote from Mr. Sellon :

" It is a little remarkable that of the host of Divinities, especially in Bengal, Siva is the God whom they are especially delighted to honour. As the Destroyer, and one who revels in cruelty and bloodshed, this terrible deity, who has not inaptly been compared to the Moloch of Scripture, of all their Divinities suggests most our idea of the Devil. It may therefore be concluded that the most exalted notion of worship among the Hindus is a service of Fear. The Brahmins say that the other Gods are good and benevolent, and will not hurt their creatures, but that Siva is powerful and cruel, and that it is necessary to appease him.

" Although this deity is sometimes represented in the human form in his images, it is not thus that he is most frequently adored. The most popular representation of him is unquestionably the Linga ; a smooth stone rising out of another stone of finer texture, simulacrum membri virilis, et pudendum muliebre. This emblem is identical with Siva in his capacity of ' Lord of all.' [11]

" It is necessary, however, to observe here that Professor Wilson, while admitting that ' the Linga is perhaps the most ancient object of homage adopted in India', adds, ' subsequently to the ritual of the Vedhas, which was chiefly, if not wholly, addressed to the Elements, and particularly to fire. How far the worship of the Linga is authorized by the Vedhas is doubtful, but that it is the main purport of several of the Puranas there can be no doubt.' [12]

" The worship of Siva under the type of the Linga is almost the only form in which that deity is reverenced. Its prevalence throughout the whole tract of the Ganges as far as Benares is sufficiently conspicuous. In Bengal, the Lingam Temples are commonly erected in a range of six, eight, or twelve on each side of a Ghaut leading to the river. At Kalma is a circular group of one hundred and eight temples erected by the Rajah of Burdwan. These temples, and indeed all those found in Bengal, consist of a simple chamber of a square form surmounted by a pyramidal centre ; the area of each is very small. The Linga of black or white marble, and sometimes of alabaster slightly tinted and gilt, is placed in the middle. " [13]

" Benares is the peculiar seat of this form of worship. The principal Deity, Siva, there called Viweswarra, is a Linga ; and most of the chief objects of pilgrimage are similar blocks of stone. No less than forty-seven Lingas are visited, all of preeminent sanctity; but there are hundreds of inferior note still worshipped, and thousands whose fame and fashion have passed away. It is a singular fact, that upon this adoration of the procreative and sexual Sacti (or power) seen "throughout nature, hinges the whole gist of the Hindu faith. [14]

" Bacchus or Osiris was represented by an equilateral triangle, and the sectarian mark of the worshippers of Siva is this hieroglyphic. The worship of Bacchus was the same as that which is paid to Siva, it had the same obscenities, the same cruel bloodthirsty rites, and the same emblem of the generative power. [15]

" Durga, Kali, or Maha Kali as the Sacti, spouse or energetic will of Siva, the destructive power, bears a remarkable analogy with the Moloch of Scripture, as well as with Typhon, Saturn, Dis, Pluto, and other divinities of the West. [16]

" When the attributes of the Supreme Being began to be viewed in the light of distinct individuals, mankind attached themselves to the worship of the one or the other exclusively, and arranged themselves into sects : the worshippers of Siva introduced the doctrine of the eternity of matter. In order to reconcile the apparent contradiction of assigning the attribute of creation to the principle of Destruction, they asserted that the dissolution and destruction of bodies was not real with respect to matter, which was in itself indestructible, although its modifications were in a constant succession of mutation ; that the power must necessarily unite in itself the attributes of creation and apparent destruction ; that this power and matter are two distinct and co-existent principles in nature ; the one active, the other passive ; the one male, the other female; and that creation was the effect of the mysterious union of the two.

" This Union is worshipped under a variety of names : Bhava, Bhavani, Mahadeva, Mahamaya, etc. Thus the attribute of creation was usurped from Brahma, by the followers of Siva, to adorn and characterise their favourite divinity. "

" This seems to have been a popular worship for a great length of time, out of which sprang two sects : the one personified the whole Universe and dispensations of providence (in the regulation of it) under the name of Prakriti, and which we from the Latin call nature. This sect retains the Sacti only, and were the originators of the Sactas sects, or worshippers of Power. The other sect took for their symbol the Male emblem (Linga) unconnected with the female Sacti (or Yoni). There was also a third sect, who adored both male and female.

" According to Theodoret, Arnobius, and Clemens of Alexandria, the Yoni of the Hindus was the sole object of veneration in the mysteries of Eleusis.[17]

" It is not only the votaries of Siva who adore their God under the symbolic form of the Linga; the Vaishnavas, or followers of Vishnu, use the same medium. They also are Lingayetts, one of the essential characteristics of which is wearing the Type on some part of their dress or person.[18]

" The Vaishnavas are divided into many sects. They comprise the Ghoculasthas, the Yonijas, the Ramani, and Radha-balluthis.

" The Ghoculasthas adore Krishna, while the Ramani worship Rama ; both have again branched into three sects — one consists of the exclusive worshippers of Krishna, and these only are deemed true and orthodox Vaishnavas... As Parameswarra, Krishna is represented of a black or dark blue colour. Now the Tulasi is the black Ocymum, and all animals or vegetables of a black or blue colour are sacred to him. His linga also is always either black or dark blue, and may thus be distinguished from that of Siva, which is generally white.

" This divinity, as Parameswarra, is Janan'nauth (Juggernaut), or ' Lord of the Universe ', and it is under the wheels of his sacred car that so many misguided beings annually immolated themselves.

" To return, however, to the Vaishnavas. Another of their sects adore Krishna and his mistress Radha united. These are the Lingionijas, whose worship is perhaps the most free of all the Pujas. A third, the Radha-ballubhis, dedicate their offerings to Radha only. The followers of these last mentioned sects have adopted the singular practice of presenting to a naked girl the oblation intended for the Goddess, constituting her the living impersonation of Radha. Rut when a female is not to be obtained for this purpose, the votive offerings are made to an image of the Yoni, or emblem of the feminine power. These worshippers are called

18. Ibid., p. 40.

Yonijas, in contradistinction to the Lingayats, or adorers of the Krishna (Vishnu) Linga.

" As the Saivas are all worshippers of Siva and Bowannee (Pavati) conjointly, so the Vaishnavas also offer up their prayers to Laksmi-Nayarana. The exclusive adorers of this Goddess are the Sactas.

" The caste mark of the Saivas and Sactas consists of three horizontal lines on the forehead with ashes obtained, if possible, from the hearth on which a consecrated fire is perpetually maintained. The adoration of the Sacti is quite in accordance with the spirit of the mythological system of the Hindus. It has been computed that, of the Hindus in Bengal, at least three-fourths are Sactas, of the remaining fourth, three parts are Vaishnavas, and one, Saivas.

" Independently of the homage paid to the principal Deities, there are a great variety of inferior beings, Dewtas, and demi-gods of a malevolent character and formidable aspect, who receive the worship of the multitude. The bride of Siva, however, in one or other of her many and varied forms, is by far the most popular goddess in Bengal and along the Ganges.

" The worship of the female generative principle, as distinct from the Divinity, appears to have originated in the literal interpretation of the metaphorical language of the Vedhas, in which Will, or purpose to Create the Universe, is represented as originating from the Creator and co-existent with him as his bride, and part of himself. "

" Although the adoration of the Sacti (the personified energy of the Omnipotent) is authorized by some of the Puranas, the rites and formulae are more clearly set forth in a voluminous collection of books called Tantras. These writings convey their meaning in the similitude of dialogue between Uma (or Siva) and Pavati.

" The followers of the Tantras profess to consider them as a fifth Vedh, and attribute to them equal antiquity and superior authority. "

" The Tantras are too numerous to specify them further, but the curious reader will find them under the heads of Syama Rahasya, Anandra, Rudra, Yamala, Mandra, Mahodahi, Sareda, Tilika, and Kalika-Tantras.

" Although any of the goddesses may be objects of the Sacta worship, and the term Sacti comprehends them all, yet the homage of the Sactas is almost restricted, in Bengal, to the consort of Siva. The Varnis, or Vamacharis, worship Devi as well as all goddesses. Their worship is derived from a portion of the Tantras.

" According to the immediate object of the worshipper is the particular form of worship ; but all the forms require the use of some or all of the five Makaras — Mansa, Matsya, Madya, Maithuna, and Mudra — that is : flesh, fish, wine, women, and certain mystical gesticulations with the fingers. Suitable Muntrus, or incantations, are also indispensable, according to the end proposed, consisting of various unmeaning monosyllabic combinations of letters, of great imaginary efficacy.

" When the object of worship is to acquire an interview with, and control over, impure spirits, a dead body is necessary. The adept is also to be alone, at midnight, in a cemetery or place where bodies are burnt. Seated on the corpse he is to perform the usual offerings, and if he do so without fear or disgust, the Dhutas, the Yoginis, and other male and female demons become his slaves. [19]

" In this and many of the observances practised, solitude is enjoined, but all the principal ceremonies comprehend the worship of Sacti, or Power, and require, for that purpose, the presence of a young and beautiful girl, as the living representative of the goddess. This worship is mostly celebrated in a mixed society ; the men of which represent Bhairavas, or Viras, and the women, Bhanravis and Nayikas. The Sacti is personified by a naked girl, to whom meat and wine are offered, and then distributed among the assistants. Here follows the chanting of the Muntrus and sacred texts, and the performance of the Mudra, or gesticulations with the fingers. The whole terminates with orgies amongst the votaries of a very licentious description. This ceremony is entitled the Sri Chakra or Purnabisheka, The Ring or full Initiation.[20]

" This method of adoring the Sacti is unquestionably acknowledged by the texts regarded by the Vanis as authorities for the impurities practised.

" The members of the sect are sworn to secrecy, and will not therefore acknowledge any participation in Sacta-Puja. Some years ago, however, they began to throw off this reserve, and at the present day they trouble themselves very little to disguise their initiation into its mysteries, but they do not divulge in what those mysteries consist.

" The Kauchiluas are another branch of the Sactas sect; their worship much resembles that of the Caulas. They are, however, distinguished by one particular rite not practised by the others, and throw into confusion all the ties of female relationship ; natural restraints are wholly disregarded, and a community of "women among the votaries inculcated.

" On the occasions of the performance of divine worship, the women and girls deposit their " julies ", or bodices, in a box in charge of the Guru, or priest. At the close of the rites, the male worshippers take each a " julie " from the box, and the female to whom it belongs, even were she his sister, becomes his partner for the evening in these lascivious orgies.

" In every temple of any importance in India we find a troupe of Nautch or dancing girls attached.

" These women are generally procured when quite young, and are early initiated into all the mysteries of their profession. They are instructed in dancing and vocal and instrumental music, their chief employment being to chant the sacred hymns, and perform nautches before the God, on the recurrence of high festivals. But this is not the only service required of them, for besides being the acknowledged mistresses of the officiating priests, it is their duty to prostitute themselves in the courts of the temple to all comers, and thus raise funds for the enrichment of the place of worship to which they belong... A Nautch woman esteems it a peculiar privilege to become the Radha Dea on such occasions. It is an office indeed which these adepts are, on every account, better calculated to fulfil with satisfaction to the sect of Sacteyas, who require their aid, than a more innocent and unsophisticated girl.

" The worship of Sacti is the adoration of Power, [21] which the Hindus typify by the Yoni, or womb, the Argha or vulva, and by the leaves and flowers of certain plants thought to resemble it. [22]

" In Ananda Tantram, cap. VII, 148, and other passages, reference is made to Bhagamala. She appears to be the goddess who presides over the pudendum muliebre, i.e. the deified vulva ; and the Sacti is thus personified.

" Such are some of the peculiar features of the worship of Power (or Gnosticism), and which, combined with the Linga Puga (or adoration of the Phallus), constitutes at the present day one of the most popular dogmas of the Hindus. "

Heckethorn tells us that the Maharajas constitute another sect of priests and adds : " It appears abundantly from the works of recognized authority written by Maharajas, and from existing popular belief in the Vallabhacharya sect, that Vallabhacharya is believed to have been an incarnation of the god Krishna, and that the Maharajas, as descendants of Vallabhacharya, have claimed and received from their followers the like character of incarnations of that god by hereditary succession. The ceremonies of the worship paid to Krishna through these priests are all of the most licentious character. The love and subserviency due to a Supreme Being are here materialized and transferred to those who claim to be the living incarnations of the god. Hence the priests exercise an unlimited influence over their female votaries, who consider it a great honour to acquire the temporary regard of the voluptuous Maharajas, the belief in whose pretensions is allowed to interfere, almost vitally, with the domestic relations of husband and wife. " [23]

Miss Mayo, in her book Mother India, published in 1927, gives an interesting description of a temple of Kali. " Kali Ghat " — place of Kali — is the root-word of the name Calcutta. " Kali is a Hindu goddess, wife of the great god Siva, whose attribute is destruction and whose thirst is for blood and death-sacrifice. "

Kali has thousands of temples in India, great and small.

Heckethorn further explains that " the association of Thugs, after having existed in India for centuries, was only discovered in 1810. The names by which the members were known to each other, and also to others, was Funsiegeer, that is, ' men of the noose '. The name Thug is said to be derived from thaga, to deceive, because the Thugs get hold of their victims by luring them into false security. One common mode of decoying young men having valuables upon them is to place a young and handsome woman by the wayside, and apparently in great grief, who, by some pretended tale of misfortune, draws him into the jungle, where the gang are lying in ambush, and on his appearance strangle him. The gang consists of from ten to fifty members ; and they will follow or accompany the marked-out victim for days, nor attempt his murder until an opportunity, offering every chance of success, presents itself. After every murder they perform a religious ceremony, called Jagmi; and the division of the spoil is regulated by old-established laws — the man that threw the handkerchief gets the largest share, the man that held the hands the next largest proportion, and so on. In some gangs their property is held in common. Their crimes are committed in honour of Kali who hates our race, and to whom the death of man is a pleasing sacrifice. [24]

" Kali, or Bhowany, for she is equally well known by both names, was, according to the Indian legend, born of the burning eye which Shiva has on his forehead,

[24] Heckethorn, op. cit., p. 318, vol. II.

•whence she issued, like the Greek Minerva, out of the skull of Jupiter, a perfect and full-grown being. She represents the Evil Spirit, delights in human blood, presides over plague and pestilence, and directs the storm and hurricane, and ever aims at destruction. She is represented under the most frightful effigy the Indian mind could conceive ; her face is azure, streaked with yellow ; her glance is ferocious ; she wears her dishevelled and bristly hair displayed like the peacock's tail and braided with green serpents. Her purple lips seem streaming with blood ; her tusk-like teeth descend over her lower lip ; she has eight or ten arms, each hand holding some murderous weapon, and sometimes a human head dripping with gore. With one foot she stands on a human corpse. She has her temples, in which the people sacrifice cocks and bullocks to her, but her priests are the Thugs, the ' Sons of Death ', who quench the never-ending thirst of this divine vampyre. "[25]

As regards the sect of Kali's worshippers, Heckethorn gives the following details :

" A newly admitted member takes the appellation of Sahib-Zada. He commences his infamous career as lughah, or gravedigger, or as belhal, or explorer of the spots most convenient for executing a projected assassination, or bhil. In this condition he remains for several years, until he has given abundant proof of his ability and good will. He is then raised to the degree of Bhuttotah, or strangler, which advancement, however, is preceded by new formalities and ceremonies. On the day appointed for the ceremony, the candidate is conducted by his guru into a circle, formed in the sands and surrounded by mysterious hieroglyphics, where prayers are offered up to their deity. The ceremony lasts four days, during which the candidate is allowed no other food but milk. He occupies himself in practising the immolation of victims fastened to a cross erected in the ground. On the fifth day the priest gives him the fatal noose, washed in holy water and anointed with oil, and after more religious ceremonies, he is pronounced a perfect bhuttotah. He binds himself by fearful oaths to maintain the most perfect silence on all that concerns the society, and to labour without ceasing towards the destruction of the human race. He is the rex sacrificulus, and the person he encounters, and Bhowany places in his way, the victim. Certain persons, however, are excepted from the attacks of the Thugs. "[26]

The political significance of such a sect in any Theocrasy can be easily understood when one realizes what it means to the rulers of a land to have at their disposal a staff of fanatics trained to kill anyone on the order of a priest! The utility of such organizations is obvious in a hierarchy where the rulers are also priests reigning by "Divine Right".

CHAPTER IV

MAZDEISM

(Zoroastrianism)

While the origin of Mazdeism seems shrouded in mystery, one may nevertheless recognize its antiquity, probably the same as that of the Rig-Vedha, for it has been proved by Eugene Bournouf and Spiegel that certain parts of the Avesta are as old as the Rig, and the many similarities of this religion with that of the Vedhas proves that Mazdeism must have had its origin at the time when the Aryans undertook the conquest of India, that is to say seventeen to eighteen centuries before our era.

From Le Mazdeisme, l'avesta of G. de Lafont, we extract the following facts :[1] The historic role of Media began with Ouwakshatara, a name written by the Greeks Kyouxares, the founder of the Median empire. After defeating the Scythians, Kyouxares went to Assyria where he laid siege to Nineveh, after the destruction of which the Assyrian empire came to an end. (612 B. C.)

Kyouxares left a son Astyage whose daughter Mandane married the Persian Cambyses and from their union sprang the great Cyrus the founder of the Persian empire.

The Parthian dynasty of the Arsacides, who reigned from 256 B. C. until 226 A. D., marks a fatal period for Mazdeism. It was only on the accession of Ardeschir Babejan, the founder of the Sassanide dynasty, that Mazdeism regained its strength. With Ardeshir, Mazdeism became the state religion and Shapour II caused all the Avesta texts treating of philosophy, medicine, cosmogony and astronomy to be collected.

Under the last Sassanides appeared several heretical sects, the most celebrated of which were those of Manes and of Mazdeck. However, in the seventh century, came the Arab conquest; with Yesdegirt the Persian empire of the Sassanides disappeared and with it the influence of Mazdeism.

Towards the tenth century, a few thousand Persians, faithful to the old cult, went into exile taking with them their laws and altars. Some of these took refuge in the Kirman in the Yezd while the others fled to India where they now constitute the well known sect of the Parsees.

The Zend Avesta, the sacred book of Persia and of the modern Parsees, contains the teaching of Zoroaster (Zarathustra), a reformer, said to have lived some 7000 years before Christ. It was first translated into French by Hyacinthe-Anquetil Duperron in 1761.

The Chevalier de Ramsay, giving Plutarch as his authority, says : — " Zoroaster taught that there are two Gods contrary to each other in their Operations, the one the Author of all the Good, the other of all the Evil in Nature. The good Principle he calls Oromazes, (Ahura-Mazda) the other the Daemon Arimanius (Agra-Mainyus). He says that the one resembles Light and Truth, the other Darkness and Ignorance.

There is likewise a middle God between these two named Mythras, whom the Persians call the Intercessor or Mediator. Mythras is the Yazata (spirit) of light and the guardian of justice and truth. "

For the benefit of the reader we compile the following interesting information from the previously mentioned author, G. de Lafont :

Pure Zoroastrianism was monotheistic, for in the beginning Ahura-Mazda was recognized as infinitely more powerful than Agra-Mainyus, thus dualism, or the potential equality of these two deities, was actually the development of a later corruption of the Zoroastrian teaching.

The Avesta, the bible of Mazdeism, containing the revelations of Ahura-Mazda to the Prophet Zoroaster, is composed of two principal parts — the Avesta, containing the Vendidad, the Yacnca and the Vispered, and the Khorda Avesta, or little Avesta, itself composed of six parts.

Mazdeism taught the immortality of the soul, a compensating justice in another world of Heaven or Hell, the resurrection of the body, the last judgment and the freedom of the soul to choose between right and wrong as a free agent, as opposed to the Islamic theory of fatalism.

Oromazes is the Universal Creator of all that is good, eternal, he created the Good Genii, the spiritual and material world ; man is his creature, and at the end of time he will resurrect him to endow him with eternal happiness and will cause the powers of evil and evil itself to vanish from the earth. No cult is rendered to Agra-Mainyus (Lucifer) who, with his Devas (evil spirits) fights Ahura-Mazda (God) through the ages.

Fire, in the Mazdean religion, was worshipped as the luminous and pure element, the work of Ahura-Mazda and for that reason always burns sheltered from defilement. But it is not material fire that in this case is to be considered as a Yazata. The Avesta distinguishes several kinds of fire :

1. Berezucavanha, or internal fire of the earth.
2. Vohufryana or fire of the human body and animals. (Kundalini, Sex-force, Serpent Power).
3. Urvazista or fire of vegetation.
4. Vazista or fire of lightning.
5. Cpenista or fire of Ahura-Mazda, represented by the fire on the Altar.

The Fravashis (modern Ferouers) are supposed to be the souls of the dead deified. Their cult also forms the basis of the Ancestor worship, of the Pitris of India and the Manes of Latin Countries.

According to Geiger, by " Fravashis " must be understood the immortal, divine part in man, which unites with a body for a limited time only. Consequently there are Fravashis of those who are dead, of those who are living, and of those who are still unborn. Darmstater further explains that the Fravashis are the spiritual form of a being, independent of its material life and anterior to it. According to Mazdean teaching, Oromazes offered to the Ferouers of men the choice of remaining in the spiritual world or of descending on earth to incarnate in human bodies.

At the advent of death, corpses were supposed immediately to become the prey of the Demon Druge Nacus, the demon of the impurity of corpses. Thus, it being most essential never to allow the elements of fire, water and earth to be sullied by contact with anything unclean, the funeral rites and ceremonies of the Mazdeans differ from those of other religions.

Their ancient customs persist today among the Parsees of India where the bodies of the dead are carried to " The Towers of Silence " there to be exposed and devoured by the birds of prey.

Besides the many other parallels between Mazdeism and Christianity, the deity of the Mazdeans, their personal God, Ahura-Mazda, was not a god of vengeance as was the Jehovah of the Jews. He was the essence of universal love, charity, justice and activity and the ideal of Mazdean virtue in early times was similar to that of the Christians of today.

JAINISM

Jainism, which like Buddhism denies the authority of the Vedhas and is therefore regarded by the Brahmins of India as heretical, may have been founded by Parsva whose death is placed at 250 years before that of Vardhamana Mahavira, the last of the prophets of the Jains and a contemporary of Buddha.

Vardhamana Mahavira died at the age of 72 at Pava 527 B. C. He had eleven disciples to whom he preached the law. Many authorities however believe the Jain Church to be as old as Brahminism itself.

The following paragraph quoted from Hastings' Encyclopaedia of Religions and Ethics, article on Jainism, describes the Jain theory of the Transmigration of Souls as opposed to the orthodox theory of Reincarnation. It is here referred to as " a peculiarity of the Jains which had struck all observers more than any other, viz. their extreme carefulness not to destroy any living being, a principle which is carried out to its very last consequences in monastic life, and has shaped the conduct of the laity in a great measure.

No layman will intentionally kill any living being, not even an insect, however troublesome : he will remove it carefully without hurting it. It goes without saying that the Jains are strict vegetarians. This principle of not hurting any living being bars them from some professions, e. g. agriculture, and has thrust them into commerce and especially into its least elevating branch of money-lending. Most of the money lending in Western India is in the hands of the Jains, and this accounts in a great measure both for their unpopularity and for their wealth. A remarkable institution of the Jains, due to their tender regard for animal life, is their asylums for old and diseased animals, the panjarapolas, where they are kept and fed till they die a natural death. "

The reluctance on the part of an orthodox Jain to discourage vermin on the theory that a louse may actually be his reincarnated grandmother or a scorpion some other reincarnated relative is only a logical development of his religious belief in the transmigration of souls.

The Jains are subdivided today into numerous schools each following the teachings of a certain master but united in certain fundamental beliefs.

CHAPTER V

CONFUCIANISM AND TAOISM

Previous to the Christian era, China, judging from the available annals, presented the spectacle of a country whose social life was based almost solely on what might be called the family cult. The metaphysical tradition, overshadowing the life of the people, leading to a monotheistic belief in a Supreme Being, was the knowledge and belief of a few. Vaguely, the people believed that the Monarch alone held communication with the Sublime Sovereign or God. The rites had nothing of a religious character, they were purely social. Then in 1122 B. C, when the Chinese dynasty of Chang-Yin was overthrown by the Tcheou, there were introduced in China numerous innovations, most of them appertaining to magic and occultism, also brahminic and avestic dogmas and beliefs. The whole construction of social ideology in China had undergone a slow but radical change. The ground was prepared for the pantheistic teaching of the philosopher Lao-Tse whose doctrine was bitterly fought by Confucius (551-479) who opposed the dualist theory, and strove to regenerate the former state of Chinese social life, the cult of the family and ancestors. Moreover, the whole moral code of Confucius was contained in a few words : loyalty and good feeling towards one's neighbour.

Only in about 65 A. D. was Buddhism introduced in China, followed in turn by Mazdeism, Manicheism and Mahomedanism.

CHAPTER VI

EGYPTIAN ESOTERISM

More than any other country, Ancient Egypt was an illustration of theocratic power. There, priesthood ruled and adumbrated royalty. Depositories of the Indo-Iran tradition of Ra, Zarathustra and Manu, the priests of Thebes and Memphis made of Egypt the fortress of antique esoterism. Their Sovereign Lord God and Teacher bore the name of Hermes or Thoth, the Great Initiator. In him were typified the three great powers of royalty, law-giving or legislative and high priesthood which made the Greeks, disciples of the Egyptians, surname him Hermes Trismegistus or thrice great.

To Hermes was credited a large number of books containing the secrets of Indo-Aryan occult science. Fire was the first Principle, the basis of all teaching and the law of Ammon-Ra, the Sun God of Thebes.

Only after the conquest of Egypt by the Hyksos (2000 B. C.) did the priests spread among the people the cult of Osiris and Isis and their son Horus. This popular religion served as a screen which most effectively shielded the Hermetic mysteries from intrusion and disclosure and safeguarded ancient and Aryan esoterism which had to fear annihilation at the hands of the priesthood of the black or Ethiopian race whose esoterism was based upon a different conception of occult and psychic knowledge.

A striking example of the rivalry of the two esoteric schools is given in the Bible when Moses and Aaron, practising the magic taught them by the Ethiopian Jethro, failed to confound the Egyptian priests before Pharaoh.

Concealed behind the popular cult of Osiris and Isis was the soul of Egyptian esoterism which no one could reach, except after having been deemed worthy to penetrate the most sacred mysteries of Isis whose statue, with its face veiled, stood before the door of the temple of occultism.

The trials of initiation which a candidate had to withstand before he beheld the light of Osiris and understood the " Vision of Hermes " were long and terrible. They were interspersed, however, by states of trance induced by special beverages, during which the initiate had voluptuous visions of Isis preceded by the five-pointed flamboyant star or the Rose of Isis.

Two great flowing currents issued from the esoteric wisdom, jealously safeguarded by the Egyptians, namely: Mosaism or Judaism, taught by Moses whose God was Jehovah, and Orpheism taught by Orpheus whose God was Zeus or Jupiter. The former adapted his beliefs to suit the mentality of undisciplined, rebellious masses of Israelites in Egypt, hence a god of Fear and Vengeance ; the latter legislated for a people whose hellenic genius touched sublime heights of philosophic wisdom on the one hand, and sought on the other to carry its irrepressible sense of beauty and light-heartedness in its pursuit of material pleasures. Hence the great difference between the two currents which had derived their initial teaching from the same source.

CHAPTER VII

JUDAISM

The Pharisees

Judaism has been described by Moses Mendelssohn, a learned Jew, in this way : — " Judaism is not a religion but a Law religionized. " This definition does away effectively with the erroneous belief prevalent among the non-Jews that Judaism is a religion.

In spite of the loud and frequent assertions, made by Jews and Christian divines alike, contending that the Jews were the first monotheists, it is a well proven fact that the high initiates of the Memphis priesthood were monotheists long before the Jews ever went to Egypt.

Judaism would be best described as a rite or compendium of rites, for, if one lends belief to the existence of the Jewish Lawgiver, Moses, one must bear in mind that he first studied among the high initiates of Egypt, and later, became the pupil and son-in-law of black Jethro, the Ethiopian magician whom one might call the Father of Voodooism, name given to the magic practices and rites performed by the negroes.

The closer one studies the history of the Jews, the clearer it appears that they are neither a religious entity nor a nation. The absolute failure of Zionism which was a desperate effort on the part of certain Jewish leaders to bind all the Jews of the world into a national entity, whose territory would have been Palestine, proves the futility of such an effort.

Judaism is not a religion and the Jews are not a nation, but they are a sect with Judaism as a rite.

The obligations and rules of the rite for the Jewish masses are contained in the Talmud and Schulchan Aruk, but the esoteric teachings for the higher initiates are to be found in the Cabala.

Therein are contained the mysterious rites for evocations, the indications and keys to practices for conjuration of supernatural forces, the science of numbers, astrology, etc.

The practical application of the Cabalist knowledge is manifested in the use made of it, through the ages, by Jews to gain influence both in the higher spheres of Gentile life and over the masses. Sovereigns and Popes, both, usually had one or more Jews as astrologers and advisers, and they frequently gave Jews control over their very life by employing them as physicians. Political power was thus gained by Jews in almost every Gentile country alongside with financial power, since Jewish court-bankers manipulated state funds and taxes.

Through the ages also, can be followed the spreading power of the sect, and no more awful example of the devastating and destructive power of the penetration of a secret subversive society has ever been witnessed.

With its B'nai B'rith Supreme Council as the directing head, the sect with its members swarming among all nations has become the sovereign power ruling in the councils of all nations and governing their political, economic, religious and educational policies.

In his book Nicholas II et les Juifs, Netchvolodow explains that " the Chaldean science acquired by many of the Jewish priests, during the captivity of Babylon, gave birth to the sect of the Pharisees whose name only appears in the Holy Scriptures and in the writings of the Jewish historians after the captivity (606 B. C). The works of the celebrated scientist Munk leave no doubt on the point that the sect appeared during the period of the captivity.

" From then dates the Cabala or Tradition of the Pharisees. For a long time their precepts were only transmitted orally but later they formed the Talmud and received their final form in the book called the Sepher ha Zohar. " [1]

The Pharisees were, as it were, a class whose tendency was to form a kind of intellectual aristocracy among the Jews. At first, they formed a sort of brotherhood, a haburah, the members being called haburim or brothers. They were a subversive element, aiming at the overthrow of the Sadducean High-priesthood, whose members prided themselves on their aristocracy of blood and birth, to which the Pharisees opposed an aristocracy of learning. The war waged by the latter extends over a long period of time, and the rivalry was bitter. The Pharisees, who, although they professed, as one of their chief tenets, the utmost contempt of the am-haretz or simple people, did not overlook the fact that they needed their mass support for the attainment of their own aim, and they enlisted it by opposing the Sadducean strictness of the Law in many instances, namely, in the observance of the Sabbath.

The power of the Sadducees fell with the destruction of the Temple by Titus and thenceforth the Pharisaic element held supremacy among the Jews.

1. Lt. Gen. A. Netchvolodow, Nicolas II et les Juifs, p. 139.

Quoting an acknowledged authority on Judaism, Mr. Flavien Brenier, Lt. Gen. Netchvolodow further describes the policy of the sect as follows :[2]

" Before appearing proudly as the expression of Jewish aspirations, The Tradition of the Pharisees had serious difficulties to surmount, the chief of which was the revival of the orthodox faith stimulated in the Jewish people by the Captivity. To the exiles, bemoaning the fall of the Temple of Jerusalem and begging Jehovah to end the misfortunes of their homeland, the revelation that Jehovah was only a phantom, entailed not only certain defeat, but also their own exposure to perils the least of which would have been the loss of all authority over Israel.

" The Pharisees then, judging it wiser to capture the confidence of their compatriots by taking the lead of the religious movement, affected a scrupulous observance of the slightest prescriptions of the law and instituted the practice of complicated rituals, simultaneously however cultivating the new doctrine in their secret sanctuaries. These were regular secret societies, composed during the captivity of a few hundred adepts. At the time of Flavius Josephus which was that of their greatest prosperity they numbered only some 6,000 members.

" This group of intellectual pantheists was soon to acquire a directing influence over the Jewish nation. Nothing, moreover, likely to offend national sentiment ever appeared in their doctrines. However saturated with pantheistic Chaldeism they might have been, the Pharisees preserved their ethnic pride intact. This religion of Man divinised, which they had absorbed at Babylon, they conceived solely as applying to the profit of the Jew, the superior and predestined being. The promises of universal dominion which the orthodox Jew found in the Law, the Pharisees did not interpret in the sense of the reign of the God of Moses over the nations, but in that of a material domination to be imposed on the universe by the Jews. The awaited Messiah was no longer the Redeemer of original Sin, a spiritual victor who would lead the world, it was a temporal king, bloody with battle, who would make Israel master of the world and ' drag all peoples under the wheels of his chariot'. The Pharisees did not ask this enslavement of the nations of a mystical Jehovah, which they continued worshipping in public, only as a concession to popular opinion, for they expected its eventual consummation to be achieved by the secular patience of Israel and the use of human means.

[2] Ibid., p. 139 et seq.

" Monstrously different from the ancient law were such principles as these, but they had nothing one could see, which might have rendered unpopular those who let them filter, drop by drop, among the Jews.

" The admirably conceived organization of the Pharisees did not fail soon to bear fruit.

" One cannot better define its action in the midst of Jewish society before Jesus Christ, " said Mr. Flavien Brenier, " than in comparing it with that of the Freemasons in modern society. "

" A carefully restricted membership tightly bound, imposing on their members the religion of ' the secret', the Pharisees pursued relentlessly their double aim which was : —

1. The seizure of political power, by the possession of the great political offices (the influence of which was tremendous in the reconstituted Jewish nation) and the conquest of the Sanhedrin (Jewish parliament).

" 2. To modify gradually the conceptions of the people in the direction of their secret doctrine. "

The first of these aims was achieved when Hillel, a Pharisee of Babylon who claimed Davidic descent, was elected president of the Sanhedrin. Thus ended the bitter fight between the Pharisees and the Sadducees. Opposed to Hillel was Shammai, a Sadducee, supporter of the Sadducean High Priest who was made Chief Judge of the assembly. The attitude of the two men towards each other is a matter of long record in the Talmud

Among the most noted Pharisees, after Hillel, are : — Yochanan ben Zakkai, founder of the school of Yamnai, Akibah who, with Bar Cochba, fomented the revolt against the Romans under Hadrian, rebellion ending with the order for the dispersion of Jews (132 A. D.) Also Simon ben Yohai, who might be termed the great Magician and Father of the Cabala, lastly Judah the Prince who compiled the Babylonian Talmud. Under these chiefs, the Pharisaic power was definitely established in the Sanhedrin. Those among the Jews who clung to the Sadducean tradition and refused to acknowledge the dominion of the Pharisees, remained as dissidents. Such were the Samaritans and the Karaites who rejected the Talmud.

The second of the aims and its method of attainment is exposed in the so-called Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion so loudly denounced by the descendants of those who devised The Secret Doctrine in Israel, Israel here meaning the Jews as a religious community, most of whom remain quite ignorant of the intricate subversive schemes imputed to them.

The attitude of Jesus Christ to this sect is definitely expressed in the New Testament (see Luke xi and John viii).

Exoteric Judaism, the Jewish religion as practised in the twentieth century, is based on the Old Testament, and on equally ancient commentaries on it, preserved for ages as oral traditions, and known, as above stated, under the general name of The Talmud. All copies of this book were ordered to be burned by Philip IV, the Fair, King of France, in 1306, but the book survived the holocaust.

We know that the Jewish God is not the father of all men and the ideal of love, justice and mercy, like the Christian God, or even like Ahura-Mazda or Brahma. On the contrary, he is the God of vengeance down to the fourth generation, just and merciful only to his own people, but foe to all other nations, denying them human rights and commanding their enslavement that Israel might appropriate their riches and rule over them.

The following quotations will serve to illustrate this point : —

" And when the Lord thy God shall deliver them before thee ; thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them ; thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy unto them. " — Deut. vii, 2.

" For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God : the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth. " — Deut. vii, 6.

The Talmud comments upon it : " You are human beings, but the nations of the world are not human beings but beasts. " Baba Mecia 114,6.

On the house of the Goy (non-Jew) one looks as on the fold of cattle. " — Tosefta, Erubin viii.

From The Talmud (a prayer said on the eve of Passover, to the present day) " We beg Thee, 0 Lord, indict Thy wrath on the nations not believing in Thee, and not calling on Thy name. Let down Thy wrath on them and inflict them with Thy wrath. Drive them away in Thy wrath and crush them into pieces. Take away, O Lord, all bone from them. In a moment indict all disbelievers. Destroy in a moment all foes of Thy nation. Draw out with the root, disperse and ruin unworthy nations. Destroy them ! Destroy them immediately, in this very moment! " — (Pranajtis ; Christianus in Talmudas Judeorum, quotations from : Synagoga Judaica, p. 212. Minhagin, p. 23. Crach Chaim 480 Hagah).

" When one sees inhabited houses of the ' Goy ' one says, ' The Lord will destroy the house of the proud '. And when one sees them destroyed he says, ' The Lord God of Vengeance has revealed himself ' — (The Babylonian Talmud, Berachot 58,6.)

" Those who do not own Torah and the prophets must all be killed. Who has power to kill them, let him kill them openly with the sword, if not, let him use artifices till they are done away with. " — (Schulchan Aruch : Choszen Hamiszpat, 425,50).

The Jewish Sages soon understood that Christ's way of commenting upon the old Law introduced, instead of hatred towards foreign nations, brotherly feelings and equality of all men in the face of God, thus denying the Jews their privileged position as masters of the world.

At the same time, Christ's reforming the very primitive and rough moral ideas of the Old Testament, deprived the Jews of their very convenient-in-the-battle-of-life, unscrupulous, double morality. Thence the Jewish hatred for the Christian faith is conspicuous in the following quotations from Talmudic sources : —

" The estates of the Goys are like wilderness, who first settles in them has a right to them. (Baba Batra, 54 b.)

" The property of the Goys is like a thing without a master. " (Schulchan Aruch : Choszen Hamiszpat, 156,5).

" If a Jew has struck his spade into the ground of the Goy, he has become the master of the whole. " (Baba Batra, 55 a.)

In order to enhance the authority of the Old Testament equally recognized by the Christians, while simultaneously augmenting that of the Talmud and the Rabbis, its commentators and authors teach : —

" In the law (the Bible) are things more or less important, but the words of the Learned in the Scripture are always important.

" It is more wicked to protest the words of the rabbis than of Torah " (Miszna, Sanhedryn xi, 3.) " Who changes the words of the rabbis ought to die. " (Erubin, 21, b.)

" The decisions of the Talmud are words of the living God. Jehovah himself asks the opinion of earthly rabbis when there are difficult affairs in heaven. " (Rabbi Menachem, Comments for the Fifth Book.)

" Jehovah himself in heaven studies the Talmud, standing : he has such respect for that book. " (Tr. Mechilla).

To enhance the dignity of religions dogmas the following commandments are given :

" That the Jewish nation is the only nation selected by God, while all the remaining ones are contemptible and hateful.

" That all property of other nations belongs to the Jewish nation, which consequently is entitled to seize upon it without any scruples. "

" That an orthodox Jew is not bound to observe principles of morality towards people of other nations, and on the contrary, he even ought to act against morality, if it were profitable for himself or for the interest of Jews in general. "

" A Jew may rob a Goy (Goy means unclean, and is the disparaging name for a non-Jew), he may cheat him over a bill, which should not be perceived by him, otherwise the name of God would become dishonoured. " (Schulchan Aruch, Choszen Hamiszpat, 348.)

" Should a Goy to whom a Jew owed some money die without his heirs knowing about the debt, the Jew is not bound to pay the debt. " (Schulchan Aruch, Choszen Hamiszpat 283, 1.)

" The son of Noah, who would steal a farthing ought to be put to death, but an Israelite is allowed to do injury to a goy; where it is written, Thou shalt not do injury to thy neighbour, is not said, Thou shalt not do injury to a goy. " (Miszna, Sanhedryn, 57.)

" A thing lost by a goy may not only be kept by the man who found it, but it is forbidden to give it back to him. " (Schulchan Aruch, Choszen Hamiszpat. 266, 1.)

" Who took an oath in the presence of the goys, the robbers, and the custom-house officer, is not responsible. " (Tosefta Szebnot, 11.)

" In order to annul marriages, oaths and promises, a Jew must go to the rabbi, and if he is absent, he must call three other Jews, and say to them that he is sorry to have done it, and they say, ' Thou art allowed to. ' (Schulchan Aruch, 2, 1. 247.)

The Kol Nidre prayer on the Day of Judgment, that acquits beforehand from the nonfulfilment of all kinds of oaths and vows, is given here.

" All vows, oaths, promises, engagements, and swearing, which, beginning this very day of reconciliation, we intend to vow, promise, swear, and bind ourselves to fulfil, we are sorry for already, and they shall be annulled, acquitted, annihilated, abolished, valueless, unimportant, our vow shall be no vows, and our oaths no oaths at all. " (Schulchan Aruch, edit. I., 136).

" If a goy wants a Jew to stand witness against a Jew at the Court of Law, and the Jew could give fair evidence, he is forbidden to do it, but if a Jew wants a Jew to be a witness in a similar case against a goy, he may do it. " — (Schulchan Aruch, Choszen Hamiszpat, 28 art, 3 and 4.)

" Should a Jew inform the goyish authorities that another Jew has much money, and the other will suffer a loss through it, he must give him remuneration. " (Schulchan Aruch. ~ Ch. Ha., 338.)

" If there is no doubt that someone thrice betrayed the Jews, or caused that their money passed to the goys, a means and wise council must be found to do away with him. "

" Every one must contribute to the expense of the community (Kahal) in order to do away with the traitor. " Ibid., 163, 1.)

" It is permitted to kill a Jewish denunciator everywhere. . . . it is permitted to kill him before he has denounced.... though it is necessary to warn him and say, ' Do not denounce. ' But should he say, ' I will denounce, ' he must be killed, and he who accomplishes it first will have the greater merit. " (Ibid., 388, 10.)

" How to interpret the word ' robbery '. A goy is forbidden to steal, rob, or take women slaves, etc., from a goy or from a Jew, but he (a Jew) is not forbidden to do all this to a goy. " (Tosefta, Aboda Zara, viii, 5.)

" If a goy killed a goy or a Jew he is responsible, but if a Jew killed a goy he is not responsible. "(Ibid., viii, 5.)

The authors of the Talmud, having issued this horrible moral code, that acquits all kinds of crimes, in order to make easier the strife with foreigners to their own nation, understood the necessity of keeping its contents a secret and thus legislated :

" To communicate anything to a goy about our religious relations would be equal to the killing of all the Jews, for if the goys knew what we teach about them, they would kill us openly. " (Book of Libbre David, 37.)

" It is forbidden to disclose the secrets of the Law. He who would do it would be as guilty as if he destroyed the whole world " (Jaktu Chadasz, 171,2). The restrictions and commandments bearing this in view were raised to the dignity of dogmas of faith. It is not astonishing that in face of such prohibitions the secrets of the Talmud have been so little known to other nations, especially to the Western ones, and till the present day, even the most progressive and citizen-like Jews think the disclosure of the principles of the Talmud a proof of the most outrageous intolerance, and an attack on the Jewish religion.

In order to separate the Jewish nation from all others, and thus prevent it from mixing with them, and losing their national peculiarities, a great many precepts of the ritual and rules for every-day life, prejudices and superstitions, the remainder of the times of barbarism and obscurity, have been gathered in the Talmud and consecrated as canons. The precepts observed by Eastern Jews till the present day deride even the most simple notions of culture and hygiene. For instance they enjoin :

" If a Jew be called to explain any part of the rabbinic books, he only ought to give a false explanation, that he might not, by behaving differently, become an accomplice in betraying this information. Who will violate this order shall be put to death. " (Libbre David, 37.)

" It is forbidden to disclose the secrets of the Law. "

" One should and must make false oath, when the goys ask if our books contain anything against them. Then we are bound to state on oath that there is nothing like that. " (Szaalot-Utszabot. The book of Jore d'a, 17.)

" Every goy who studies Talmud, and every Jew who helps him in it, ought to die. " (Sanhedryn 59 a. Aboda Zora 8-6. Szagiga 13.)

" The ears of the goys are filthy, their baths, houses, countries are filthy. " (Tosefta Mikwat, v. 1.)

" A boy-goy after nine years and one day old, and a girl after three years and one day old, are considered filthy. " {Pereferkowicz : Talmud t. v., p. 11.)

These principles afford an explanation of the action of governments in excluding Jews from judicial and military positions. They also explain that mysterious phenomenon known as Antisemitism.

In his Manual of Freemasonry Richard Carlile makes the following observations :[3]

" The disposition of the mistaken Jew is to monopolise his portion of the Sacred Scriptures as a charm or benefit prepared and presented to his people in their sectarian character.

" That there was no such nation as the Israelites, is a truth — found in the consideration that they are not mentioned beyond the Bible in any records whatever. Egypt knew them not, Persia knew them not, Hindostan knew them not, Scythia knew them not, Phoenicia knew them not, Greece knew them not, as a nation. And in the first general notice that we have of the Jews, they are introduced to the world as a sect, or a series of sects, being Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes ; and in that general notice, beyond that sort of mistaken allegorical history which Josephus has copied from the books of the Old Testament, and which is not otherwise corroborated, and no better authority than the book of the Old Testament, there is no presentation of the Jews as the descendants of a larger nation of Israelites ; as a religious or philosophical sect of distinction, mixed up with, and found in real human history, they are not to be traced higher than the century before the Christian era. It is satisfactory to be able to show the origin of anything, for such a knowledge is a common passion and curiosity among mankind ; and I think the Rev. Robert Taylor has discovered and developed the origin of the titles of Hebrew, Israelite, and Jew.[4]

" Hebrew, Israelite, and Jew, are Syriac, Phoenician and Egyptian terms used in the mysterious degrees ; and it would be as reasonable to argue that the Freemasons are a dispersed nation, as that the Jews are, or were, a dispersed nation. The Rev. Mr. Taylor has beautifully explained this in his discourses.[5]

" The scenes and characters of the mysterious drama, as found in the Eleusinian Orgies of Greece, were : —

Eleusis. — The Advent, or coming-in light —• the birth and character of the subject of the drama — the title of the whole play or mystery.

Hierophant. — The Expounder of the Mysteries, the High Priest, the Pope, the Archbishop.

Hupereet. — The Minister, or Ordinary Priest.

Diaconos. — The Deacon, or Lower Officer.

Diadochos. — The Torch-bearer.

Photagogue. — The Bringer-in of Light.

Autoptos. — The Candidate admitted to see the sight. The visitor of the Temple — the Church- and Chapel-goer.

Autopsy. — The sight itself.

[5] Ibid., p. xi.

Hebrew. —The initiated Candidate who had passed through all the degrees of the mystery.

Teleios. — The adept, or perfected.

Israelite. — God-seer, purified from all guile.

Jew .— The God himself, or the mysterious perfection and deification of the human character.

" The whole type of what may be made of human nature by cultivation of mind, which is the conditional promise of paradise, or kingdom of heaven. This is the revelation of all the mysteries. "

Carlile further states [6] " We are prepared with historical disproofs of the existence of such a people as Israelites or Jews as a nation. They were a religious or philosophical sect, who had been made adepts in the higher Pagan Mysteries : a sect among nations ; but not a nation among sects. "

Judaism sanctions Gnosticism which is further elaborated in their books of the Cabala. For further study of this subject we refer the reader to Chapter XIII.

CHAPTER VIII

ORPHEISM AND THE PAGAN MYSTERIES

There is no greater or more erudite authority than Fabre d'Olivet (1768-1825) on Orpheus or Dyonisius [1] and to such an eminent source, among many others, must the reader be referred.

The feats of the white Dorian race of Greece and the mysticism of its priests of Thrace as well as the centuries-long rivalry between the solar or male cult and the lunar or female cult, have provided inexhaustible sources of religious and literary lore.

The legendary birth of Orpheus adorned with his descent from Apollo, his flight from Thrace, initiation in the temple of Memphis and return to his own country as a high adept of the most profound mysteries, constitute but the first part of his life.

After his return to Greece, he united the cults of Dyonisius and Zeus, reformed that of Bacchus and instituted the Mysteries. To him was allotted the task of reducing the power of the Bacchantes, priestesses of Hecate, by a magic superior to theirs, and their vengeance, which caused his death, has been the theme of many a poet.

1. Pythagore, Les Vers Dorés.

One follows the evolution of Greece from Orpheus to Pythagoras, Socrates and Plato and one searches for the remnants of Egyptian esoterism in the utmost recesses of the Delphic temples and in the ceremonies of initiation to the Eleusinian mysteries. These, having still been practised until the Emperor Theodosius I, the Great, (379-395) prohibited them and ordered the destruction of the Eleusinian Temple, much material is available for their description.

We are indebted to Bishop Lavington, an erudite member of the Anglican Church, for a graphic description of the perversion to which they gave rise, but we preface this article with that author's apology to the reader, which, like the text of most of this chapter, we quote verbatim from the Bishop's book The Enthusiasm of Methodists and Papists compared, Part III :

> " We wallow indeed in the mire, by publishing these things. But lest any one should fall into the mire of these heretics, from mere ignorance, I purposely and knowingly defile my own mouth, and the ears of the auditors, because it is beneficial. For it is much better to hear absurdity and filthiness in accusing others, than to fall into them out of ignorance. Much better to be informed of the mire, than, for want of information, to fall into it. "

Bishop Lavington then proceeds with the explanation of the Pagan Mysteries from which we quote : [2] —

" The Gods and Goddesses each had their special mysteries. Even Cotytto, the Goddess of Turpitude, had her rites and devotees.

" A high opinion of the Mysteries was very far from being general, or received by great and good Persons. Those great Men, Agesilaus and Epaminondas, would not submit to an Initiation. . . . The Athenians asking Diogenes to be initiated because such had the Precedency in a future State ; he replied, ' Ridiculous thing ! that Agesilaus and Epaminondas must rowl in dirt; and every Scoundrel initiated, such as Patecion the Thief, be happy in the Elysian Fields. ' Nor shall we entertain the better Notion of the Mysteries when we find so wise and good a Man as Socrates refusing initiation. For which (though perhaps he had stronger) he gives this Reason : ' If the Mysteries were bad, he should not be able to conceal the Secret, but must discourage every one from Initiation; and if good, Humanity would oblige him to discover it for the public Benefit. '

" Rut whether the Mysteries were good or bad, Authors are pretty well agreed as to the preparatory Ceremonies, and manner of Initiation : whereby they were to Represent, and Act over again, the Actions and passions of the Deities, for whose Honour the Mysteries were instituted.

" That Initiation might seem a venerable and solemn Thing, the Devotees were taught to qualify themselves by Prayer to the Demons, Fastings, Watchings, Confession to the Priest, and other Lustrations. We read in Plutarch, ' that fasting is to precede the Mysteries of Ceres, ' and that Confession was required ; ' Antalcidas being examined by the Priest, in order to his initiation, what grievous crimes he had committed, made Answer, ' If I have been guilty of any such Crime, the Gods know it already. ' The Confession was a trick of the Masters of the Ceremonies to get the people under their Girdle.

" Tertullian says, ' As to the superstition of the Eleusinian Mysteries, what they conceal is the Shame of them. Therefore they make the Admission tortuous, take Time in the Initiation, set a Seal on. the Tongue, and instruct the Epoptae for five Years, to raise a high Opinion of them by Delay and Expectation. But all the Divinity in the sacred Domes, the Whole of what they aspire to, what sealeth the Tongue, is this : ___*Simulacrum membri Virilis revelatur.* But for a Cover of their Sacrilege, they pretend these Figures are only a mystical Representation of venerable Nature. '

" The original Reason of such figures being exposed to View, and had in Veneration, in the Mysteries, we learn from others. Clemens Alexandrinus giveth a full account of this religion of the Mysteries, too prolix to be transcribed ; -— 'Of their wicked Institution, Cruelty, Stupidity, Madness, making Goddesses of Harlots, corrupting Mankind : — the Mysteries of Ceres are nothing but representations of incestuous Deities : — their ridiculous Exclamations upon Admission were, I have eat out of the Timbrel, I have drank out of the Cymbal, I have carried the Chest, I have crept into the secret Chamber. ' In the Chest Pudendum Bacchi inclusum erat. — Cistam et veretrum nova Religione colenda tradunt. — It is a shame to mention the filthy circumstances in the story of Ceres...

" The Pagan Mysteries being of such an immoral Nature, and Tendency, it might justly be thought strange, were no Notice taken of them in the Holy Scriptures. And therefore, though such an Enquiry might carry us into too great a Length, yet I shall not entirely pass it over. There can be then little Doubt, but they are pointed out by St. Paul : ' It is a Shame even to speak of those Things that are done of them in Secret. ' And where Christianity is termed the Mystery of Godliness, it is set, I am persuaded, in Opposition, not only to the Mystery of Iniquity that was to work in the Christian World, but likewise to the preceding Mysteries among the Gentiles. Nor is it improbable, that the Apostle writeth in direct Opposition to the Appearances, Pretences, and Impostures of those false Divinities : Without Controversy great is the Mystery of Godliness...

" In the Old Testament, Deut. xxiii. 17 (not indeed in the Hebrew, but in the Septuagint) after the Words, ' There shall be no Whore, — nor Sodomites of the Sons of Israel, ' we find added Words of this Import, ' There shall not be an Initiator, nor an Initiated, of the Sons or Daughters of Israel. ' ' Tis possible this additional Clause may have been inserted by the Seventy, by Way of Interpretation of the preceding Words. They knew the Nature of the Mysteries full well; and we are led to this Meaning by the Impurities forbidden, and by the Price of the Dog in the next Verse ; the Egyptian God Anubis being usually figured with a Dog's Head. (Edit. Daniel. Schol.)

" We may observe also, that Philo the Jew (de Sacrific.) expressly ranketh the Prohibition of the Mysteries among the Laws of Moses. ' The Law, saith he, expressly excludeth the whole of the Mysteries, their Inchantments and execrable Scurrilities, from the Holy Ordinances : not permitting those educated in her Society to celebrate such Heathen Rites; nor, depending on such mystical Ceremonies, to disregard the Truth ; and to follow the Works of Night and Darkness, omitting what deserveth the Light and the Day. Let none therefore among the Disciples of Moses either initiate, or be initiated : it being equally wicked either to teach, or to learn the Mysteries. — ' Tis generally the Case with them, that no good Person is initiated ; but Thieves, and Pirates, and mad Gangs of abominable and immodest women; after parting with their Money to the initiating Priests. "

Several of the Fathers have taken Notice of the same Passage in the Septuagint, and explained it in the same manner.

" For further Proof of the Turpitude in the Mysteries of Isis and Osiris, and that it was so from the Beginning, we need only consult Diodorus Siculus, Lib. I. ' Isis being overwhelmed with Grief for the Loss of her Husband Osiris, took particular Care in deifying him to consecrate his Pudenda ; which she ordered to be peculiarly honoured and adored in the Mysteries. And the same holy Institution was observed with the same Ceremonies, when carried into Greece by Orpheus : where the common People, partly from Ignorance, and partly from a Love of the new god (Phallus), were very fond of being initiated. '

" Much more might be collected (even from initiated Authors, however, generally shy) concerning the infamous Origin of the Mysteries, which I pass over.....

" The celebration of the Eleusinian Mysteries commenced in Greece about 1400 years before Christ but ' whenever or however they were brought into Greece, and transferred to the Honour of Ceres and Proserpina, they were of the same Nature, and observed with equally chaste Ceremonies, with those of Isis... '

" One contrivance for ' giving the Initiated a Sight of the Divinities, was by means of a Looking-glass, wherein none could see their own Faces, but had a clear View of the Gods and Goddesses. ' This we have from Pausanias : and Eusebius relates the same Thing. - So easily might weak People, and under the utmost Astonishment, be deluded by Figures behind a glass, in a proper Habit and Posture ; and especially by living Persons, personating the Deities in any Manner they thought fit.

' As a proof of the Indecencies, Sozomen writeth,

' that Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, egregiously ridiculed and exposed to public View the shameful Figures belonging to the Mysteries, the Phallus, etc. which he brought out of the Pagan Temple. For which the enraged Heathens raised a Tumult, and massacred a great Number of the Christians. ' — Even the initiated Pausanias (notwithstanding his usual Reservedness) sometimes blurts out a little too much, and intimates something shameful — : ' as frequent assignations ; — the proneness of the religious Females to venery — a Mixture of the Obscene and Miraculous ; — the continuance of the Eleusinian Festival for a week ; on the third Day whereof all Males, even the Dogs, are excluded ; but the next Day the Men are admitted among them, when they pass the Time in sporting, and light Discourse ; — the Amours of Ceres, of a very strange Kind ; with the Secrecy enjoined ; — The Obscenities in the Mysteries of Cupid, and suitable Hymns. '

" A man initiated, and under an Oath of Silence, could not well have discovered more of the true Nature of the Mysteries, and the Reason why they ought not to be divulged. We are assured too, that one Day of the Eleusinian Festival was set apart for the Rites of Venus and Cupid, and another for those of Bacchus : both of which were confessedly beyond measure abominable. Nor will our Opinion be more favourable, when we remember what Athenœus writes ; ' Apelles, being extremely desirous of drawing a Venus from the famous Phryne, could find no Opportunity of seeing her naked, without going to the Eleusinian and Neptunian Games ; where she stripped herself in the Sight of all the Men, and went into the sea to wash herself...'

" I apprehend therefore that no great Stress is to be laid upon those initiated Authors, who have thought themselves obliged to say nothing but what was good of the Mysteries ; or have talked of the Unity of the Deity, as the great Secret of them; perhaps to avoid the Shame of being thought Dupes to a foolery, or inquisitive into something worse. "[3]

On the same subject the Chevalier de Ramsay, reputed founder of Scottish Rites, writes the following :[4] —

" About the fifteenth Olympiad, six hundred Years before the Christian æra, the Greeks having lost the traditional Knowledge of the Orientals, began to lay aside the Doctrine of the Ancients, and to reason about the Divine Nature from Prejudices which their Senses and Imagination suggested. Anaximander lived at that time, and was the first that set himself to destroy the Belief of a supreme Intelligence, in order to account for everything from the Action of blind Matter, which by necessity assumes all Sorts of Forms. He was followed by Leucippus, Democritus, Epicurus, Strato, Lucretius, and all the School of the Atomical Philosophers.

" Pythagoras, Anaxagoras, Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, and all the great Men of Greece, opposed this impious Doctrine, and endeavoured to prove the ancient Theology of the Orientals. These Philosophers of a superior Genius observed in Nature, Motion, Thought and Design. And as the Idea of Matter includes none of these three Properties, they inferred from thence, that there was another Substance different from Matter.

" Greece being thus divided into two Sects, they disputed for a long time, without either Party being convinced. At length about the 120th Olympiad Pyrrho formed a third Sect whose great Principle was to doubt everything, and determine nothing. All the Atomists who had laboured in vain to find out a Demonstration of their false Principles, presently struck in with the Pyrrhonian Sect. They ran wildly into the System of an universal Doubt, and carried it almost to such an Excess of Frenzy, that they doubted of the clearest and most sensible Truths. They maintained without any Allegory, that everything we see is only an Illusion, and that the whole Series of Life is but a perpetual Dream of which those of the Night are only so many Images.

[4] The Chevalier de Ramsay, A Discourse upon the Theology and Mythology of the Antients in The Travels of Cyrus, vol. II, P. 76 et seq. (published 1728).

" At last Zeno set up a fourth School about the 130th Olympiad. This Philosopher endeavoured to reconcile the Disciples of Democritus with those of Plato, by maintaining that the first Principle was indeed an infinite Wisdom, but his Essence was only a pure Aether, or a subtile Light, which diffused itself everywhere, to give Life, Motion,' and Reason to all Beings.

" In these last Ages the modern Freethinkers have done nothing but revive the ancient Errors. Jordano Bruno, Vannini and Spinoza, have vamped up the monstrous System of Anaximander; and the last of the three has endeavoured to dazzle weak Minds, by dressing it up in a geometrical Form.

" Some Spinosists, finding that they were every Moment at a Loss for Evidence in the pretended Demonstrations of their Master, are fallen into a senseless sort of Scepticism, called Egomism, where every one fancies himself to be the only Being that exists.

" Mr. Hobbes and several other Philosophers, without setting up for Atheists, have ventured to maintain, that Thought and Extension are Properties of the same Substance.

" Descartes, F. Malebranche, Leibnitz, Dr. Bentley, Clarke, and several Philosophers of a Genius equally Mile and profound, have endeavoured to refute these Errors, and brought Arguments to support the ancient Theology. Besides the Proofs which are drawn from the Effects, they have insisted on others drawn from the Idea of the first Cause. They shew plainly that the Reasons of believing, are infinitely stronger than any Arguments there are for doubting. This is all that can be expected in metaphysical Discussions.

"The History of former times is like that of our own Human Understanding takes almost the same Forms in different Ages, and loses its Way in the same Labyrinths. "

CHAPTER IX

THE DRUIDS

We heard, in 1928, of a " Druid " celebration at Stonehenge. Shortly afterwards we read of another, an initiation ceremony, at Penzance where " 12 bards of Britain, including Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch, the author, were initiated by the Archdruid of Wales into a sect revived after a lapse of 2000 years. "[1]

Some of us might prefer the lapse to have continued and as the subject of the Druid Mysteries is here relevant we quote verbatim the chapter entitled " The Druids " from Mr. Charles William Heckethorn's interesting book Secret Societies of All Ages and Countries :

" The secret doctrines of the Druids were much the same as those of the Gymnosophists and Brahmins of India, the Magi of Persia, the priests of Egypt, and of all other priests of antiquity. Like them, they had two sets of religious doctrines, exoteric and esoteric. Their rites were practised in Britain and Gaul, though they were brought to a much greater perfection in the former country, where the Isle of Anglesey was considered their chief seat. The word Druid is generally supposed to be derived from δρῦς " an oak ", which tree was particularly sacred among them, though its etymology may also be found in the Gaelic word Druidh, ' a wise man ' or ' magician. '

[1] The Daily Telegraph, Sept. 24, 1928.

" Their temples, wherein the sacred fire was preserved, were generally situate on eminences and in dense groves of oaks, and assumed various forms.

" The adytum or ark of the mysteries was called a cromlech, and was used as the sacred pastos[2], or place of regeneration. It consisted of three upright stones, as supporters of a broad, flat stone laid across them on the top, so as to form a small cell. Kit Cotey's House, in Kent, was such a pastos. Considerable space, however, was necessary for the machinery of initiation in its largest and most comprehensive scale. Therefore, the Coer Sidi, where the mysteries of Druidism were performed, consisted of a range of buildings, adjoining the temple, containing apartments of all sizes, cells, vaults, baths, and long and artfully-contrived passages, with all the apparatus of terror used on these occasions. Most frequently these places were subterranean.

" The system of Druidism embraced every religious and philosophical pursuit then known in these islands. The rites bore an undoubted reference to astronomical facts. Their chief deities are reducible to two, — a male and a female, the great father and mother, Hu and Ceridwen, distinguished by the same characteristics as belonged to Osiris and Isis, Bacchus and Ceres, or any other supreme god and goddess representing the two principles of all being. The grand periods of initiation were quarterly, and determined by the course of the sun, and his arrival at the equinoctial and solstitial points. But the time of annual celebration was

2. Pastos — The altar upon which the ritual desecration of virginity obligatory for initiation into the phallic cult took place.

May-eve, when fires were kindled on all the cairns and cromlechs throughout the island, which burned all night to introduce the sports of May-day, whence all the national sports formerly or still practised, date their origin. Round these fires choral dances were performed in honour of the sun, who, at this season, was figuratively said to rise from his tomb. The festival was licentious, and continued till the luminary had attained his meridian height, when priests and attendants retired to the woods, where the most disgraceful orgies were perpetrated. But the solemn initiations were performed at midnight, and contained three degrees, the first or lowest being the Eubates, the second the Bards, and the third the Druids. The candidate was first placed in the pastos bed, or coffin, where his symbolical death represented the death of Hu, or the sun ; and his restoration in the third degree symbolized the resurrection of the sun. He had to undergo trials and tests of courage similar to those practised in the mysteries of other countries, and which therefore need not be detailed here.

" The Druids taught the doctrine of one supreme being, a future state of rewards and punishments, the immortality of the soul and a metempsychosis... Their doctrines were chiefly those of Pythagoras.

" Their authority in many cases exceeded that of the monarch. They were, of course, the sole interpreters of religion, and consequently superintended all sacrifices; for no private person was allowed to offer a sacrifice without their sanction. They possessed the power of excommunication, which was the most horrible punishment that could be inflicted next to that of death, and from the effects of which the highest magistrate was not exempt. The great council of the realm was not competent to declare war or conclude peace without their concurrence. They determined all disputes by a final and unalterable decision, and had the power of inflicting the punishment of death. And, indeed, their altars streamed with the blood of human victims. Holocausts of men, women, and children, enclosed in large towers of wicker-work, were sometimes sacrificed as a burnt-offering to their superstitions, which were, at the same time, intended to enhance the consideration of the priests, who were an ambitious race delighting in blood. The Druids, it is said, preferred such as had been guilty of theft, robbery, or other crimes, as most acceptable to their gods; but when there was a scarcity of criminals, they made no scruple to supply their place with innocent persons. These dreadful sacrifices were offered by the Druids, for the public, on the eve of a dangerous war, or in the time of any national calamity ; and also for particular persons of high rank, when they were afflicted with any dangerous disease.

" The priestesses, clothed in white, and wearing a metal girdle, foretold the future from the observation of natural phenomena, but more especially from human sacrifices. For them was reserved the frightful task of putting to death the prisoners taken in war, and individuals condemned by the Druids ; and their auguries were drawn from the manner in which the blood issued from the many wounds inflicted, and also from the smoking entrails. Many of these priestesses maintained a perpetual virginity, others gave themselves up to the most luxurious excesses.

" As the Romans gained ground in these islands the power of the Druids gradually declined ; and they were finally assailed by Suetonius Paulinus, governor of Britain under Nero, A. D. 61, in their stronghold, the Isle of Anglesey, and entirely defeated, the conqueror consuming many of them in the fires which they had kindled for burning the Roman prisoners they had expected to make — a very just retaliation upon these sanguinary priests. But though their dominion was thus destroyed, many of their religious practices continued much longer; and so late as the eleventh century, in the reign of Canute, it was necessary to forbid the people to worship the sun, moon, fires, etc. Certainly many of the practices of the Druids are still adhered to in Freemasonry ; and some writers on this order endeavour to show that it was established soon after the edict of Canute, and that as thereby the Druidical worship was prohibited in toto, the strongest oaths were required to bind the initiated to secrecy. "

There is no mystery as to the existence in Berlin of the " Druidenorden " today. It is a branch of Freemasonry and its Sovereign Grand Master, until late, was Dr. Hübbe-Schleiden.

CHAPTER X

CHRISTIANITY

To define Christianity, one could hardly do better than use the words of Frederic W. Farrar, Canon of Westminster and Chaplain to Queen Victoria, who in 1874 wrote a Life of Christ. In his preface are the following lines :

" We study the sacred books of all the great religions of the world ; we see the effect exercised by those religions on the mind of their votaries ; and in spite of all the truths which even the worst of them enshrined, we watch the failure of them all to produce the inestimable blessings which we have ourselves enjoyed from infancy, which we treasure as dearly as our life, and which we regard as solely due to the spread and establishment of the Christian faith. We read the systems and treatises of ancient philosophy, and in spite of all the great and noble elements in which they abound, we see their total incapacity to console, or support, or deliver, or regenerate the world. Then we see the light of Christianity dawning like a tender spring day amid the universal and intolerable darkness. From the first, that new religion allies itself with the world's utter feeblenesses, and those feeblenesses it shares; yet without wealth, without learning, without genius, without arms, without anything to dazzle and attract the religion 'of outcasts and exiles, of fugitives and prisoners — numbering among its earliest converts not many wise, not many noble, not many mighty, but such as the gaoler of Philippi, and the runaway slave of Colossae — with no blessing apparently upon it save such as cometh from above — with no light whatever about it save the light that comes from heaven — it puts to flight kings and their armies ; it breathes a new life, and a new hope, and a new and unknown holiness into a guilty and decrepit world. This we see ; and we see the work grow, and increase, and become more and more irresistible, and spread ' with the gentleness of a sea that caresses the shore it covers. ' "

Words fail when attempting to speak of Jesus Christ, the Founder of Christianity. His birth, life and death are known to all. His teaching was public and accessible to the humblest. Long years of learning, awful initiation ceremonies striking terror in the adept's soul were not required from the followers of Christ. Himself, the bearer of that Light which He taught was not to be found in man's earthly nature but was to be sought from without, He invoked God with humble prayer and faith, and performed all miracles.

Therein, is Christ's teaching diametrically opposed to that of the high adepts whose secret doctrine was that man had divinity in himself and could bring it out by exercise of will, by concentration of thought and scientific psychic development. Fear, the predominant feature attendant upon the gaining of knowledge in all other religious systems, was foreign to the adherents of Christ who were repeatedly told : ' Fear not'... " Be not afraid '. No bonds, no fetters were imposed by Him in the shape of ritualism. Love of God and love of neighbour were the only precepts, Faith and Charity the only means through which the divine Spirit gave man transcendental power over moral evil and physical ills.

No purer and simpler doctrine, no greater knowledge of the communion possible between God and man had ever been given. Yet, within a very short time after the death of Christ, Christian ritualism began to appear. A theological system of dogmas and beliefs was devised, modes of worship elaborated and a hierarchy arose with all its attendant evils. However, the Christian faith, under the lash of persecution, had shown the world the power of Faith and Charity.

And against this power the forces of evil have ever been unfurled. Blow after blow was dealt to the rising church. Both its beliefs and practices were attacked by those who professed other views and worshipped other gods and who designed all schemes to subvert and pervert Christianity. Henceforth, as it has ever been with all religions, the history of Christianity and of Gnosticism will develop side by side, the perversion and destruction of the former being the aims of the latter.

The Tree of Christianity gave forth three main branches, the Catholicism of Rome, Greek Catholicism, and in the XVI Century, Lutherism. The two former bodies remained homogeneous but Lutherism gave birth to innumerable sects all dissenting from the parent church.

CHAPTER XI

MANICHEISM

Manicheism is the religion of the followers of Manes, a slave who was sold to a widow who freed and adopted him, thus making him the " son of the widow " a name which after him passed to all his followers and is still used in Masonic Lodges.

Of Manicheism, C. W. Olliver, considered an authority on all masonic matters, writes :

" Manicheism was one of the most important attempts to found a universal religion and to reconcile the Christian, Buddhist, and Mazdean with the Greek philosophy. It presented the same syncretic ideas found later among Moslem Druzes and among Sikhs. It failed in the first place because Islam presented a much simpler system in the East, and because in the West Christianity was already developing, in the time of Manes, a religion which aimed at reconciling the Paganism of Italy and Gaul with the ethics of Christ, this presenting a simpler and more familiar faith. But the one achievement of Manes was the creation of the Devil which led to an afterwards unremovable taint throughout religion. Manes was a notable philosopher and religious teacher born about the year A. D. 216, and he was crucified and flayed alive by the Persian Magi under Bahram I in the year A. D. 277. His Persian name was Shuraik, rendered Cubricus in Latin. "[1]

He was the slave of the wife of a certain Terebinth who was a disciple of Scythianus of the race of the Sarrasins.

Olliver tells us further that : " His Acta Archdei became the Manichean Bible with sundry added epistles. He taught the Mazdean dualism of the powers of light and darkness, as representing good and evil beings, and an asceticism which aimed at the control of all passions. Manes repudiated Judaism, and like the Gnostics, regarded Jehovah as an evil God. The Manicheans were more hated and feared by Catholic Christians than any other sect. They were still in existence in spite of constant persecution as late as our tenth century, and their influence was felt from China to Spain and Gaul. It still lingers in Asia, and among the ' Christians of St. Thomas ' in Madras it survived till the fifteenth century. St. Augustine had listened for nine years to Manes, but the Roman Empire felt the force of this system chiefly in A. D. 280. The Romans knew it themselves in A. D. 330, and Faustus became its missionary among them. Many clung to Manicheism till A. D. 440, when Leo the Great found that he must stamp it out if the Roman creed was not to be extinguished. It was the basis of the Paulican heresy, and of that of the Albigenses in the South of France which was only quenched by blood in the thirteenth century.

" The doctrine of Manes can be summed up as follows. He believed in two gods, or, more exactly, principles, the principle of good and that of evil. Before the creation of the world the ' people of darkness ' revolted against the God, and God, incapable of withstanding the attack, gave to them a portion of His essence. The people of darkness having within them the principle of evil by their very nature, and the principle of good which they had just acquired, were able to constitute the world, where both these principles are combined, but where the principle of evil predominates as the natural characteristic of its originators. Man is a mixture of two natures, the spiritual being the work of God, the body, and especially sex, the work of the Devil. "[2]

[1] C. W. Olliver, An Analysis of Magic and Witchcraft, p. 102.

Summers, another authority, further explains that " it must be clearly borne in mind that these heretical bodies with their endless ramifications were not merely exponents of erroneous religious and intellectual beliefs by which they morally corrupted all who came under their influence, but they were the avowed enemies of law and order, red-hot anarchists who would stop at nothing to gain their ends. Terrorism and secret murder were their most frequent weapons.... The Manichean system was in truth a simultaneous attack upon the Church and the State, a desperate but well-planned organization to destroy the whole fabric of society, to reduce civilization to chaos. "[3]

Manicheism possessed its- dogmas, liturgies, devotees, and churches.

But again to quote Olliver : " First and foremost amongst the manifestations of what had become Devil worship we find the Black Mass or Devil Masses of the Middle Ages, from which the ceremonial and ritual of Black Magic are derived. The principle which forms the very essence of the Devil, the idea of opposition, also underlies the whole ceremonial and ritual of Black Magic and Black Masses. Such ideas as repeating prayers backwards, reversing the cross, consecrating obscene or filthy objects, are typical of this sense of opposition or desecration, which is also a recognised form of mental disease. The key-word to the whole of the practices of Black Magic is desecration. "[4]

Yet another authority not to be overlooked, namely Abbe Baruel, author of Memoires pour servir à l'histoire du Jacobinisms shows the remarkable analogy between the dogmas and rituals of Freemasonry, Templarism and those of Manicheism. Grades concur in number and signs are identical. The mourning for 'Jacques Molay is a ceremony analogous to that practised by the Manicheans in remembrance of Manes and known as Bema. The term MacBenac still used in Masonic lodges was the reminder of the execution of Manes which all Manichean adepts sought to avenge. The practice of so called Fraternity or Brotherhood was in Manicheism extended only to adepts of the sect, just as it is similarly practised by Freemasons towards one another only.

The question which naturally comes up to one's mind when one follows closely the links of the Manichean chain is this : — Is not Freemasonry, such as we see it to-day, the full development of the idea of Cubricus or Manes the slave, the apotheosis of Manicheism as achieved by Albert Pike, Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Freemasonry ?

CHAPTER XII

WITCHCRAFT

Margaret Alice Murray, writing in The Witch-cult in Western Europe establishes both the phallic and religious character of the " craft ", in her remarkable book from which we extract part of the following valuable information :

The deity worshipped by the witches was in some cases Lucifer, as the Good God in opposition to Adonay, the Christian God in His character of the benefactor of humanity, and in other instances Satan, the same spirit, as the Principle of Evil.

This is evident from the various references to their deity adduced in the trials of persons accused of this heresy. In both cases however, the devotees, whether of Lucifer or Satan, were obliged formally to renounce Christ, the Holy Ghost and the Christian God, before embracing the Devil faith which was the logical outgrowth of the Mazdean-Manichean Dualist doctrine of the double divinity. [1]

1. " Epiphanius gives an account of a sect of Heretics called Satanians. ' Satan, say they, is a very great and potent Person, and author of much Mischief. Why, therefore, should we not chiefly fly to him, and adore him, honour, and praise trim, that for our flattering worship he may do us no harm, but

The God of the witches seems to have been generally represented either as the double faced God Janus or the goat-headed Baphomet, the latter variously modified but usually bearing between the horns on its head the phallic emblem of a lighted candle.

Esoterically, this candle symbolized the sex-force or Kundalini risen to the pineal gland.

Cotton Mather stated that the witches " form themselves after the manner of Congregational Churches, " and M. A. Murray gives the following description of their leader :

" The Chief or supreme Head of each district was known to the recorders as the ' Devil '. Below him in each district, one or more officers — according to the size of the district — were appointed by the chief. The officers might be either men or women; their duties were to arrange for meetings, to send out notices, to keep the record of work done, to transact the business of the community, and to present new members. Evidently these persons also noted any likely convert, and either themselves entered into negotiations or reported to the Chief, who then took action as opportunity served. At the Esbats the officer appears to have taken command in the absence of the Grand Master ; at the Sabbaths the officers were merely heads of their own Covens, and were known as Devils or Spirits, though recognized as greatly inferior to the Chief. The principal officer acted as clerk at the Sabbath and entered the witches' report in his book ; if he were a priest or ordained minister, he often performed part of the religious service ; but the Devil himself always celebrated the mass or sacrament. "[2]

From Lemoine in La Tradition, published 1892, we learn that the garter is the distinctive mark of the witch leader, for a woman shared this honour with the Grand Master as the Grand Mistress and in some cases occupied the office of deacon.

Animal masks seem to have been a popular form of disguise adopted by the witches and wizards attending meetings, and this custom is probably responsible for many of the stories of witch lycanthropy.

Among other obscene and phallic witch-rites was the Black Mass, celebrated by a renegade priest upon the naked body of the adept for whose benefit it was performed. It symbolized the perversion of all the rites of the Catholic church. Black candles instead of white, inverted crosses, chalices containing the blood of new-born infants sacrificed for ritual purposes, urine for holy water, all these were part of the paraphernalia needed, according to historians, to propitiate the Prince of Darkness and his retinue of minor Devils. Besides evocations, casting of spells and sex-orgies, devil worship entailed such inanities as desecration of the hosts stolen from catholic churches and the kissing of the Grand Master (devil) on the tail or membrum virile.

Only hosts consecrated in Roman Catholic churches could serve for Black Mass purposes as it was essential, in order to achieve desecration, that the miracle of transubstantiation should have taken place. The host had actually to be, not merely to represent, the body and blood of Christ.

As regards the Black Mass, M. Emile Caillet makes the following astute observation in La Prohibition de L'Occulte, page 113.

" One may wonder if it was not in order to canalize such an overflow of sacrilege that the church, in the Middle Ages, tolerated the ' Feast of Fools ', a last vestige of the saturnalia of Ancient Greece. Before the altar, upon the communion table, writes C. Lenient,[3] were spread pell mell, grilled hogs puddings, sausages, playing cards and dice. For perfumes, old shoe-leather burned in the incense burners. Even the text of the divine service... becomes the butt of an interminable parody..., a confused jumble of jests and nonsense, of grotesque alleluias and latin buffooneries.... an indescribable charivari of cat calls, cries and whistles. etc. A few days afterwards the church, purged of all these impurities, washed and cleaned, resumed its usual appearance ; God again became master of His Altar ; the flood of human folly had passed ! "

In 1484, Pope Innocent VIII issued a bull against the craft couched in the following terms :

" It has come to our ears that numbers of both sexes do not avoid to have intercourse with demons, Incubi and Succubi; and that by their sorceries, and by their incantations, charms and conjurations, they suffocate, extinguish, and cause to perish the births of women, the increase of animals, the corn of the ground, the grapes of the vineyard and the fruit of the trees, as well as men, women, flocks, herds, and other various kinds of animals, vines and apple trees, grass, corn and other fruits of the earth ; making and procuring that men and women, flocks and herds and other animals shall suffer and be tormented both from within and without, so that men beget not, nor women conceive ; and they impede the conjugal action of men and women. "

Eliphas Levi, in Histoire de la Magie, (p. 116) gives the following explanation of the supposed origin of " elementals " known by spiritists as " dwellers on the threshold. "

He states that; " according to the best authorities, these spirits (larves) possess an ethereal body formed of the vapour of blood. That is why they seek blood and why they were supposed, formerly, to feed on the smoke of sacrifices.

" They are the Incubi and Succubi, the monstrous children of impure dreams.

" When sufficiently condensed to be visible, they are only a vapour coloured by the reflection of a picture and, having no independent life, they imitate the life of him who evokes them as the shadow does the body.

" They generally manifest around the persons of idiots and beings devoid of morality whose isolation has led them to develop irregular habits.

" Owing to the feeble cohesion of the parts of their fantastic bodies, they fear the open air, fire, and above all, the point of swords, and as they live only by the life of those who have created or evoked them, they become the vaporous appendices of the real body of their parents. So it can happen that an injury inflicted on them might actually react upon the parent body, as the unborn child is really wounded or disfigured by an impression made upon its mother.

" These elementals draw the vital heat from persons in good health and quickly exhaust those who are weak.

" They are the source of the stories of vampires, stories only too true and periodically recurrent, as everyone knows.

" That is why one feels a chill of the atmosphere when approaching mediums who are persons obsessed by these spirits that never manifest in the presence of anyone able to unveil the mystery of their monstrous birth. They are children of an exalted imagination or unbalanced mentality... "

In politics, throughout the ages, witchcraft, as practised by subversive sects, has played a prominent part.

Illustrations of this are to be found in the case of the North Berwick Witches who were tried for treason in 1592 when their Devil or Grand Master, Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell, attempted to supplant James VI as King of Scotland. The Black Masses held by the infamous Abbe Guibourg for Madame de Montespan, with the object of regaining for her the favour of Louis XIV, are famous in history.

Eliphas Levi, the great initiate, has thus defined the aims of magic and witchcraft :

" To deceive the peoples for the purpose of exploiting them, to enslave them and delay their progress, or prevent it even if possible, such is the crime of black magic. "[4]

Proof of the foregoing devil worship and contact with spirits or devils is found in history, even as late as 1819 when we read that; " The Devil met Margaret Nin-Gilbert etc... " Studying the history of the Mopses in 1761 we find its Grand Masters, Grand Mistresses and Deacons, adorned with the distinctive " Garter " of the witch, performing the ceremonial of kissing the Devil's tail as part of the ritual of 18th Century Masonry. The "Coven" of the Middle Ages is the Masonic ' Lodge " of today, but the " Craft " remains the " Craft ".

CHAPTER XIII

THE GNOSTICS

(The Heretics)

Gnosticism, like the Ancient Mysteries, was founded on Spiritism, their mediums giving instructions purporting to come from the Gods or Spirits.

In the Christian era, one of the earliest prominent Gnostics was Simon Magus, a Jew and an adept of the sect of Dosithians.

This article is composed of certain passages transcribed verbatim from The Moravians Compared and Detected by Lavington. (See pages XIII, 59, 105 to 109 and 133).

Among the successive disciples of Simon Magus were — Basilides, Valentinius, Carpocrates, Marcus, Marcion, Cerdo, Epiphanes, Montanus, etc., and according to Bishop Lavington, " these were Heretics, and, that they were Heretics of the worst Kind that ever defiled and disgraced the Christian Name, is allowed by all Denominations of Christians.

" Some of these lived in the first Century and even in the Apostles' Days, but the second Century was most fruitful in the Production of this Generation of Vipers and we must receive our Knowledge of their abominable Tenets from the early Ecclesiastical writers such as Irenoeus... Epiphanius... Theodoret... and many others...

" The Spirit among these Heretics went by different Names, Ogdoas, Sophia, Terra, Jerusalem and Lord in the masculine Gender : — Is particularly called both Prunicus and Prunica ; Mother Prunica the bold, and Mother Achamoth : — Their Mother is a Woman from a Woman. Sometimes their celestial Beings are neither Male nor Female : sometimes interchangeably either male or female.

" Such was the Excellency of their Knowledge and Illumination, who arrogantly styled themselves Gnostics, that they are superior to Peter or Paul or any of Christ's other disciples. They only, have drunk up the supreme Knowledge, are above Principalities and Powers, secure of Salvation : and for that very Reason are free to debauch Women, or indulge all manner of Licentiousness — This Knowledge is of itself perfect Redemption, and sufficient. " — " Simon Magus, who taught that his Harlot Helena was the Holy Ghost, instituted certain foul and infamous Mysteries inexpressibly filthy and had Assemblies equally filthy to celebrate them : These being the Mysteries of Life, and of the most perfect Knowledge. "

" The Carpocratians... practised all manner of Philtres and Enchantments : in order, as they speak, to have full Power in all Things, and to do whatever they please. — Hence they spend their Time in Luxury and Pleasure and bodily Enjoyments : nor ever come among us, unless it be to ensnare unstable Souls, and entice them into their impious Doctrine. "

" For this end they taught Incontinence to be obligatory, as a Law : and not only lawful, but necessary to Salvation ; not only compatible with the Saviour's Religion, but an essential Part of it : and those were the best Men, who in the common Opinion were the most vicious.

" The Carpocratians grew to that Degree of Madness, that being unable to conceal their Debaucheries, they made Incontinence to be a Law " — " Prodicus added this to the Tenets of Carpocrates, that Fornication ought to be open and public, and the Use of Women common. For which Reason, in their Feasts, the Candles were extinguished, each lay with the Women, as Chance appointed; and they called this Lasciviousness a mystical Initiation, a mystical Communion. "

" Clemens Alex. gives a long Passage from the Writings of Epiphanes, contending for a Community of Women, as being the Law of Heaven; and that Men and Women ought no more to be confined in their Amours than other Animals. ' For ', says Epiphanes, ' he hath implanted a strong and vehement Desire in Man of propagating his Species ; which neither Law, nor Custom, nor any Thing else, can abolish ; for jt is the Decree of God. '

" The Ophites, or Cainites, say, that Cain was the Progeny of a higher Principality than Abel; and they confess that Esau, Corah, and the Sodomites, and all such, were their Relations : — That Vulva was the Creator of the Universe ; and that none could be saved, unless he passed thro' all. So also Carpocrates taught. — Most of the Gnostics, with wonderful Artifice of Improbity, taught what is not fit to be named, in the promiscuous Use of Women, and to roll in all manner of filthy Communication. The Banquet being over, says the Man to the Woman, Arise, and shew thy Love to a Brother. So they proceed to Copulation ". — " Some of them, by a most horrible Abuse of Scripture, apply the Words, Give to every one that asketh thee, towards enticing the Women. " — " Take hold, says Isidorus, of some robust woman, that you be not plucked away from Grace ; and when you have spent your seminal Fire, you may pray with a good Conscience. ".

" Both Epiphanius, and Irenoeus before him, say of the Founder of the Nicolaitans : ' Being ashamed of his own Remissness, he audaciously pronounced, that no one, who was not lascivious every Day could be Partaker of eternal life. ' •— " Therefore those Gnostics, after a Debauchery, were used to boast of their Happiness, as having done a meritorious Thing : and when they had their Will on a complying Female, they told her ' she was now a pure Virgin' ; though she was daily corrupted, and for many Years together. "

" This may be a proper Place to introduce The Confession of Epiphanius; who in his Youth had fallen into the Gnostic Heresy ; whence he received what he writes concerning them, from the professed Teachers' own Mouths : when their Women, one in particular, used all their Arts to debauch him. But by the Help of the divine Grace he overcame their temptations. I was then, says he, reproached by those pestilent Women, who thus scoffingly talked with each other, ' We would have saved this Youth, but not being able, we have suffered him to perish in the Hands of the Principalities. ' For the most beautiful among them makes herself the bait; and those whom she enticeth, she is said not to destroy, but to deliver. Whence the handsomest are used to upbraid those who are less so ; ' I am an elect Vessel, able to save those whom I attempt; which you have not Power to do. '

The most beautiful of them were employed to seduce me ; but God delivered me from their Wickedness ; so that, after reading their Books, I escaped from among them, and discovered the several Names of them to the Bishops of those Parts ; and near eighty of them were sent into Banishment. "

" The Valentinians, says Irenoeus, being in Love with certain Women, would, without a Blush, seduce them from their Husbands, and make them their own Wives. Others of them, seemingly modest at first, pretended to live with them as Sisters ; and in Process of Time were discovered, Sister being found pregnant by Brother. "

" And to aggravate their wickedness, they esteemed Copulation as a most sacred Mystery, known only to themselves ; and which the Profane were not allowed to put in Practice : What was abominable in others being highly meritorious in themselves. For, saith Irenoeus again, ' They have this Grace descending to them from the unspeakable and unnameable Copulation above. For which Reason they ought always to be meditating on the Mystery of Copulation.' And thus they persuade silly People, addressing them in Discourse, ' Whoever is in the World and of the World, and mingleth with a Woman is not of the Truth, nor shall pass into the Truth ; because he mingleth in Concupiscence. ' Therefore Continence, say they, is necessary to us natural Men ; but by no means to themselves, who are spiritual and perfect; among whom the Seed, small from above, is perfected here. " Compare Tertullian, p. 261.

" To quote Clemens Alexandrinus. ' I will bring in to open Light your most secret Mysteries : not ashamed to speak what you are not ashamed to worship " i. e. the secrets of both Sexes. ' For I may well call them Atheists, who impudently worship those Parts, which modesty forbids to mention. "

CHAPTER XIV

LAMAISM

Lamaism was founded about 407 A. D. by a Bodisatva called, it is said, Chomschim, in Chinese Boyan-chi-yin, (the voice which reflects the world) on the mountain Bouthala around which was built the sacred city of Lhassa.

Lamaism is not only a religion, it is a theistic government.

In 1206, when Tibet was conquered by Ghengis Khan (Mongol), Buddhism became the established religion but in 1368 when Tibet fell from the hands of the Mongols into those of the Chinese, Lamaism, losing its temporal power, became merely a religion, its spiritual power remaining however the same and the religion of more than 250 million men.

The Lamas are Priests of Buddha among the Mongols and Tibetans, but Lamaism is not orthodox Buddhism.

Gautama Buddha, the founder of Buddhism, laid down the following laws governing the attainment of Nirvana (state of not being). Their enumeration will serve to show how Buddhism and Lamaism differ.

According to that great teacher the ten obstacles which prevent people from attaining the supreme liberation are : —

1. The belief in the " Ego ",
2. Doubt,
3. The belief in the efficacity of rites and ceremonies,
4. Sensual desires,
5. Anger,
6. The wish to live in a world less coarse than our own,
7. The wish to live in a more subtle world than our own,
8. Pride,
9. Agitation,
10. Ignorance.

The few quotations given hereafter from the very remarkable books of Madame Alexandra David-Neel can only serve to show students of these subjects the great value of the books themselves.

Quoting Bhagavad Gita, she writes :

" Orthodox Buddhism denied the existence of a permanent soul which transmigrated, and considered this theory as the most pernicious of errors but the great majority of Buddhists have fallen back into this old belief of the Hindus concerning the ' jiva ' (self) which periodically changes its old body for a new one, as we cast off old clothes for new. " [2]

The Tibetan clergy comprises a theocratic aristocracy the members of which are called Lamas, " tulkous ".

" According to popular belief, a tulkou is either the reincarnation of a saint or dead sage or else the incarnation of a superhuman being, a god or a demon.

In answer to a question she put to the Dalai-Lama on the definition of the word " tulkou " Madame David-Neel quotes him as saying : — "A Bodhisatva is the base from which can spring numberless magical forms. The force he engenders by a perfect concentration of thought enables him simultaneously to show a phantom similar to himself in thousands and thousands of worlds. He is not only able to create human forms, but every other kind as well, even to inanimate objects such as houses, enclosures, forests, roads, bridges, etc. etc. and he can produce atmospheric phenomena, as well as the elixir of immortality which quenches all thirst. (This expression, he explained, was to be taken both in a literal and symbolic sense.)[3]

" In fact, concluded the Dalai-Lama, his power to create Magic forms is limitless. "

" The Kandhomas are reincarnated women, fairies, and may either be married or in holy orders. "[4]

The usual method employed for locating the new body appropriated by an old soul is the following : —

" A child answering to the prescribed conditions is discovered and a lama diviner is consulted. Should he pronounce in favour of the candidate the following form of trial takes place : — Some personal belongings of the deceased lama are mixed with other similar ones, and the child must point out the first, thus proving that he recognizes the things that were his in his former existence.[5]

" This system assumed its present form towards the year 1650 when the fifth Grand Lama Lobzang Gyatso, having become sovereign of Tibet, but wishing to acquire a higher dignity, proclaimed himself the reincarnation (avatar) of Tchenrezigs, a dignitary of the Mahayanist Pantheon. Simultaneously he established his master as Grand Lama of the monastery of Trachilhumpo, proclaiming him the reincarnation of Eupamed, a Mystic Buddha of whom Tchenrezigs was the spiritual son.

[5] Ibid., p. 118.

" The example thus given by the lama-king stimulated the creation of tulkous. Soon all monasteries made a point of having at their head the incarnation of some celebrated personage. Thus the Dalai-Lama, the political head of Tibet today, is said still to be a reincarnation of Tchenrezigs and the present Trachi Lama one of Eupamed. " [6]

The palace of the Dalai-Lamas is the monastery of Gahlden situated some twenty kilometres from Lhassa. It was founded by Tsong Khapa in the XV century. Tsong Khapa, the reformer, forbade marriage and the use of fermented beverages to the clergy. His followers called Gelougspas are known as the Yellow Sect and their favourite God is Jigsdjied, the destroyer (the terrible), another version of the Hindu god Siva. The Red Sect, the Sakyapas, those distinguished by their red hats, are their religious opponents.

As regards the Tibetan gods and the ritual pertaining to their worship Madame David-Neel gives us the following most illuminating description :

" To the respiratory exercises repeated several times a day the recluse often joins meditation-contemplation assisted by Kyilkhors.

" A Kyilkhor, or magic circle, is a kind of diagram drawn on paper or stuff or engraved on metal, stone or wood... Deities or lamas are generally represented on them by little pyramids of paste called ' torma. ' [7]

" Kyilkhors are also designed with coloured powder on boards or on the floor, but only such persons as have received a special initiation may compose or draw them. Each Kyilkhor, moreover, requires a particular initiation and that erected by a non-initiate would remain a dead thing impossible to animate and powerless. An advanced student, wishing to evoke a Bodhisatva or deity, seeks to animate the Kyilkhor which has hitherto only served as a focus for concentration.

" The Hindus endow magical diagrams as well as the statues of deities with life before worshipping them. The object of this rite, called prana-pratishtha, is to convey to the inanimate object, by means of psychic currents, the energy of the worshipper. The life thus infused into the latter is kept up by the daily cult which is rendered it, for it lives on the concentration of thought which has given it birth. Should it suddenly be deprived of this subtle food, the living soul within it will perish and die of inanition the object reverting to its former condition of inert matter. "[8]

The Tibetan mystics animate their Kyilkhor by a similar method, but they do not aim at making it an object of worship and the material representation of the Kyilkhor is abolished when, after a certain amount of practice, it becomes purely a mental image.

A tradition of the Kahgyudpas relates that the founder of their sect, Marpa, was blamed by his master (guru) Narota for having paid homage first to the Kyilkhor.

" It is I who constructed the Kyilkhor ", declared Narota. " Its life and energy were infused in it by me. Without me, those figures would be only inert objects. The gods that inhabit it are born of my spirit therefore, it is to me that homage is primarily due. "[9]

8. David-Neel, op. cit., p. 260.

9. David-Neel, Initiations Lamaiques, p. 59.

" According to Tibetan occultists, these beings, (the gods) have acquired a kind of real existence due to the innumerable thoughts which have been concentrated on them [10].

" According to the Tibetans, during the celebration of a rite, the thoughts of the officiating evocator, concentrated on the deities who ' exist already ', cause these to become more powerful and more real for him. By identifying himself with them the evocator establishes contact with an accumulation of energy infinitely greater than that which he alone might generate. "[11]

Thus we must conclude that the gods of Eastern Magic correspond to what our occidental scientists call thought-forms. That these thought-forms can be projected and reabsorbed into the person of their creator is a theory with which all students of spiritism and psychic science are familiar, but that they can detach from their makers and lead separate existences, empowered for good or evil by the collective thought-force of their worshippers, is an idea with which the western world is still unfamiliar.

" Gods, Demons, the whole universe is a mirage, a fantasy of the brain issuing therefrom and resolvant thereto. " [12]

" Thus the aim of the teaching is to bring the student to understand that the world and all its phenomena are but phantasms born of our own imagination. This in short is the fundamental teaching of the Mystics of Tibet. " [13]

Among the various tricks taught to initiates and described by Madame David-Neel in her books are: —

	Pages
Yoga breathing exercises	119	in	Initiations Lamaiques.
Levitation	209	in	Parmi les Mystiques et les Magiciens du Thibet.
Loung-gom (fast walking)	211		»
Toumo (self heating)	219		»
Telepathy	231		»

Buddha who, after a thorough investigation of them, rejected the physical practices of the Brahmins, pays little heed to the breathing exercises of Yoga, in his spiritual teaching.[14]

Madame David-Neel tells the following anecdote of the Great Master.

" One day Buddha, travelling with one of his disciples, met an emaciated Yogi alone in a hut in the middle of the forest.

The master stopped, enquiring how long the ascetic had lived in that place practising such austerities. " Twenty-five years ", answered the Yogi.

" And what results have you obtained after such dire efforts " ? queried the Buddha further.

" I am able to cross a river walking on the water ", proudly declared the anchorite : —

" Ah 1 My poor friend! " answered the Sage sympathetically, " have you really wasted so much time for that, when for a pittance you can get taken across it on the ferry ! "

On page 157 of her remarkable book Initiations Lamaiques Madame David-Neel explains further the existence of another school of curious rites, presumably a development of degenerate Hindu Tantric Buddhism, to the practice of which may be ascribed much that seems objectionable in the Oriental occultism, which has filtered through to the Western world. There we are told that : — "A certain class of Tibetan occultists teach a method of semi-physical semi-psychic stimulation, which consists in such singular practices as that of causing the seminal flow, ejected in the course of sexual union, to be reabsorbed etc. etc. "

Tibet is indeed the land of Demons where Official Lamaism competes with Unofficial Sorcery, and Magic, white and black, still remains the law of the land.

CHAPTER XV

THE YEZIDEES (DEVIL WORSHIPPERS)

The sect of the Yezidees was founded by Sheik Adi in the fifth century.

Mr. W. B. Seabrook's observations on the Yezidees, as recorded in his book, Adventures in Arabia, form a basis for the study of the beliefs of this sect.

According to his informant, the Yezidee faith is briefly this :[1]

" God created seven spirits ' as a man lighteth one lamp after another ', and the first of these spirits was Satan, whom God made supreme ruler of the earth for a period of ten thousand years. And because Satan was supreme master of the earth, those who dwelt on it could prosper only by doing him homage and worshipping him.

" Since the true name was forbidden ", Mechmed Hamdi told me, " they referred to Shaitan as Melek Taos (Angel Peacock) and worshipped him in the form of a brass bird . . . ."

" While the name of Shaitan was forbidden ", he said, " so much so that if a Yezidee hears it spoken, their law commands him either to kill the man who uttered it or kill himself — yet we could talk as freely with them about Melek Taos as we could to a Christian about Jesus. "

A priest of the cult also volunteered the following information to Mr. Seabrook on the Yezidee divinity.

" Our difference from all other religions is this — that we know God is so far away that we can have no contact with Him — and He, on his part, has no knowledge or interest of any sort concerning human affairs. It is useless to pray to him or worship Him. He cares nothing about us.

" He has given the entire control of this world for ten thousand years to the bright spirit Melek Taos, and Him, therefore, we worship. Moslems and Christians are wrongly taught that he whom we call Melek Taos is the spirit of evil. We know that this is not true. He is the spirit of power and the ruler of this world. At the end of the ten thousand years of his reign — of which we are now in the third thousand — he will re-enter paradise as the chief of the Seven Bright Spirits, and all his true worshippers will enter paradise with him. "

The Grand Priest of the order, the " Mir ", receives one-seventh part of the harvests of the land. He is the arbiter of all religious matters and under him rank seven ecclesiastical orders.

The doctrine of the Yezidees is contained in three sacred books The Black Book, The Revelation and The Contract with the Devil; but a knowledge of reading and writing is restricted to the priests of the first order and is classified by the sect as a serious sin.

CHAPTER XVI

ORTHODOX ISLAM

The Arabian peninsula was the home of nomads and mountaineers when, in the seventh century, Mahomet arose as a self styled Prophet and the creator of Islamism. The doctrine of Islam has three dogmas : —

1. Monotheism.
2. Belief in the Prophet, namely Mahomet.
3. The law of retribution.

The sacred book of Islamism, the Koran, was devoid of mystic teaching. The Figh, for every believer, is the code of morals and obligations such as fast, prayer, pilgrimage to Mecca, etc. Mysticism was interjected into Islamism by Sufism.

Mahomet aimed at the establishment of a religion which, he declared, was revealed to him during periods of trance which he frequently underwent. He was determined to impose this religion on all the Arabs and, through much bloodshed, he succeeded in stamping out the Koraishites from whom he took Mecca.

The death of Mahomet was the signal for disruption among his followers and innumerable divisions both political and religious, from the history of the Arabs during their periods of conquest which began immediately after the death of Mahomet during the Khalifate of Omar (634-644).

CHAPTER XVII

UNORTHODOX ISLAM, THE ISHMAELITES, THE LODGE OF CAIRO

Manicheism was not the only secret association that sprang from the initiations of the Magi. In the seventh century of our era we meet with similar societies, possessing an influence not limited to the regions in which they arose, variations of one single thought, which aimed at combining the venerable doctrines of Zoroaster with Christian belief. Of these societies or sects the following may be mentioned : the followers of Keyoumerz; the worshippers of Servan, certain Zoroastrians, so-called " Dualists " ; Gnostics and, lastly, the followers of Mastek, the most formidable and disastrous of all, preaching universal equality and liberty, the irresponsibility of man, and the community of property and women.

The Arabs having rendered themselves masters of Persia in the seventh century, the sects of that country set to work to spread their tenets among Islam in order to undermine it.

This is corroborated by Heckethorn who writes : " The Persian sects examined the Koran, pointed out its contradictions, and denied its divine origin. And so there arose in Islamism that movement which attacks dogmas, and destroys faith, and substitutes for blind belief free enquiry. "[1]

In Persia and in Mesopotamia had spread the new rationalism, the philosophical heresy of the Mutazilites (schismatics) exposed by Hassan al-Basri.

The Jew Abdallah Ibn Saba [2] presented himself as the prophet of the future Imam, who was to manifest. He meant to overthrow the caliphate and to uphold the rights of Mahomet al-Hanafi, the son of Ismael, the descendant of the prophet by his daughter Fatima, the wife of Ali. Thus was founded the Shi'a sect.

The Fatmite dynasty (from Fatima, daughter of Mahomet) was founded in 909 A. D. when Ahmed-Said, the son of a Jewess who had married the Shi'a chief al-Hussain,[3] conquered Egypt and Syria, establishing the centre at Cairo. Declaring himself to be the long expected Imam, Said, on coming to power, assumed the name of Obaid Allah el-Mahdi. [4] The Fatmite dynasty lasted from 909 to 1171. Heckethorn informs us that " The Doial-Doat, or supreme missionary or judge, shared the power with the prince. [5]

" Meetings were held in the Lodge at Cairo, which contained many books and scientific instruments; science was the professed object, but the real aim was very different. The course of instruction was divided into nine degrees... the ninth degree... as the necessary result of the teaching of all the former, taught that nothing was to be believed, and that everything was lawful.

" Egypt, especially, seems as if predestined to be the birthplace of secret societies, of priests, warriors and fanatics. It is the region of mysteries... Cairo has succeeded the ancient Memphis, the doctrine of the Lodge of Wisdom that of the Academy of Heliopolis... The throne of the descendants of Fatima was to be surrounded with an army of assassins, a formidable body-guard; a mysterious militia was to be raised, that should spread far and wide the fame and terror of the caliphate of Cairo, and inflict fatal blows on the abhorred rule of Bagdad. The missionaries spread widely, and in Arabia and Syria, partisans were won, to whom the designs of the order were unknown, but who had with fearful solemnity sworn blind obedience. "

The Fatmites had received from the sect the mission of destroying, or at least of disrupting Islam. The successor of Obaid-Allah continued this work, having himself proclaimed a Shi'a while in reality he was sceptic. It was under the Caliph Hakim that the Druses came into being.

The Shi'a sects who recognized Mohammed al-Hanafi as the last living " Imam " were called Ismaelites or Septimans. From their midst sprang a secret body, the Khoja, which, in spite of persecution still exists in Persia and India, where its exoteric chief is the Anglicised Indian, the Aga Khan, whose followers are the moneylenders of Islam, a profession forbidden by Mahomet.

Still another Shi'a sect, the Duodecimans or Imanites, recognize Mohamed al-Muntazar the twelfth Imam.

Under the Fatmite Caliph Hakim, a new religion sprang out of Ismailism, that of the Druses, so called from its inventor, a certain Darosi. This religion differs little from Ismailism, except that it introduces the dogma of the incarnation of God himself on Earth, under the form of the Caliph Hakim.

When the Fatmite Caliph Mostansir ascended the throne, he re-established the Ismailian belief : and the Druses, driven from Egypt, took refuge in Lebanon, where they still exist.

CHAPTER XVIII

THE DRUSES

The Druses, as afore stated, are a gnostic sect among the Ismaelite Mahommedans. It was founded in the tenth century during the reign of the Fatimite Caliph al-Hakim Biambellalu.

The founder is usually recognised as Mohammed al Darazi or al Druzi (Nouchtegin ben Ismail al Bokhari) born near Bokhara cir. 960. He adopted the doctrine then preached by al-Hakim of the successive reincarnations of the divinity under human form [1] and wrote a treatise in which he established the continuous series of divine incarnations ending with the statement that the last living manifestation was al-Hakim, the Caliph of Egypt. So pleased was al-Hakim with the book that he called Mohammed al-Druzi to him, and gave him great authority in the conduct of affairs. From that time, al-Hakim who hitherto had been known as Biambellalu that is " the one governing by the order of God, changed his name to Biam-Eh meaning " the one governing by his own right. " He then caused himself to be worshipped as God. The public reading of Mohammed al-Druzi's book, in one of Cairo's mosques, •caused popular riots and its author was obliged to flee from Egypt. He took refuge in the mountains of Syria and made many proselytes by allowing his adepts the use of wine, condoning licentiousness and encouraging the propagation of ideas tending to the confiscation of property. Later, he returned to Egypt but was confronted by the power gained by one of his disciples, Hamza al-Hadi, who had become leader of the Druses there. In the conflict that ensued, Mohammed al Druzi took up arms against his rival and adversary and was killed in 1019.

[1] Compare with Lamaism.

Hamza, later, went to Syria and Lebanon and preached to the Druses the doctrine of al-Hakim such as prevailed in Egypt. Hamza was declared the prophet, the Imam of al-Hakim who, being the divine incarnation, will yet manifest himself to the Druses, be their Messiah and give them all earthly power. The sect is divided into three degrees: Profanes, Aspirants and Wise.

The Druses, from a political point of view, are divided into two parts, the Djumblatiehs and the Yezbekiehs and religiously they have their own rites, mysteries, and exoteric and esoteric doctrines. The high initiates or priests rule the people and through religious fanaticism have reduced the Druses to a state of theocrasy with all its attendant law of fear and numerous restrictions upon which theocratic power can alone be edified.

In his book on Secret Societies, Heckethorn comments on the similarity existing between the law of the Druses and that of the Jews whereby " to a brother, perfect truth and confidence are due but it is allowable, nay, a duty, to be false towards men of another creed. "

Subsequently, he draws yet another comparison between the Druses and the Freemasons and mentions the Masonic degrees of " The United Druses " and " Commanders of Lebanon ".

CHAPTER XIX

THE ASSASSINS

The Judeo-Shi'a sect of the Assassins or Hashishims was founded in 1090 by Hassan Sabah, a Persian, who had been initiated into Ismailism at Cairo, in the household of the Fatimite Caliph, al-Mostansir. He was known as " The Old Man " or rather " The Lord of the Mountain ". His influence in Egypt having excited the envy of many, he was sent into exile. Caliph al-Mustansir's " vizir was a Jew named Abu Mansur Sadakah ibn Yussuf ", [1] under whose protection Hassan traversed Persia as a missionary, preaching and making proselytes, and, having seized the fortress of Alamut, on the borders of Irak and Dilem, which he called the " House of Fortune ", he there established his rule.

The history of his time is full of his name. Kings in the very centre of Europe trembled at it; his powerful arm reached everywhere.

According to Heckethorn, " he reduced the nine degrees into which the adherents of the Lodge of Cairo were divided to seven, placing himself at the head, with title of Seydna or Sidna, whence the Spanish Cid, and the Italian Signore. The term Assassins is a corruption of Hashishim, derived from Hashish (Indian hemp) with which the chief intoxicated his followers when they entered on some desperate enterprise.[2]

[1] Von Hammer, History of the Assassins.

" To regulate the seven degrees he composed the Catechism of the Order. The first degree recommended to the missionary attentively to watch the disposition of the candidate, before admitting him to the order. The second impressed it upon him to gain the confidence of the candidate, by flattering his inclinations and passions ; the third, to involve him in doubts and difficulties by showing him the absurdity of the Koran ; the fourth, to exact from him a solemn oath of fidelity and obedience, with a promise to lay his doubts before his instructor ; and the fifth, to show him that the most famous men of Church and State belonged to the secret order. The sixth, called ' Confirmation ', enjoined on the instructor to examine the proselyte concerning the whole preceding course, and firmly to establish him in it. The seventh finally, called the ' Exposition of the Allegory ', gave the keys of the sect.

" The followers were divided into two great hosts, ' self-sacrificers ' and ' aspirants '. The first, despising fatigues, dangers, and tortures, joyfully gave their lives whenever it pleased the master, who required them either to protect himself or to carry out his mandates of death. "

According to the legend " the man selected by the lord to perform the dangerous exploit was first made drunk, and in this state carried into a beautiful valley where he was, on waking, surrounded by lovely sylph-like women who made him believe he was in Elysium ; but ere he wearied or became satiated with love and wine, he was once more made drunk, and in this state carried back to his own home. When his services were required, he was again sent for by the lord, who told him that he had once permitted him to enjoy paradise, and if he would do his bidding he could luxuriate in the same delights for the rest of his life. The dupe, believing that his master had the power to do all this, was ready to commit whatever crime was required of him. "

" Several Christian princes were suspected of conniving at the deeds of the Assassins. Richard of England is one of them ; and it has been the loyal task of English writers to free him from the charge of having instigated the murder of Conrad of Montferrat... There also existed for a long time a rumour that Richard had attempted the life of the King of France through Hassan and his Assassins. The nephew of Barbarossa, Frederick II, was excommunicated by Innocent II for having caused the Duke of Bavaria to be slain by the Assassins ; and Frederick II, in a letter to the King of Bohemia, accuses the Duke of Austria of having by similar agents attempted his life. "

The corruption of the Order of The Templars which brought about its downfall has been imputed by most historians to this sect which was suppressed in 1256, when the Mongolians, led by Prince Hulagu, attacked and overthrew them.

CHAPTER XX

THE KNIGHTS TEMPLAR

The first Knights Templar Order, founded in 1118 by Hugh de Payens, had 13 degrees. So has its modern successor; these are : —

BLUE DEGREES

1. Entered Apprentice.
2. Fellow Craft.
3. Master Mason.

CHAPTER DEGREES

4. Mark Mason.
5. Past Master.
6. Most Excellent Master.
7. Royal Arch.
8. Royal Master.
9. Select Master.
10. Super Excellent Master.
11. Knights of the Red Cross
12. Knights Templar.
13. Knights of Malta.

It is chronicled that several of the founders of the Templar Order were initiates in the sect of The Assassins.

Blanchard, writing of it, says : —

" During the middle ages, the most eminent warriors and noblemen of Europe entered its ranks. The Knights of the Temple became the bulwark of the Holy Land against the Saracens. France, England and other countries formed associations (Priories) of Templar Knights, each with its own Grand Master and other officers. Such great wealth was accumulated in the treasuries of the order that in the year 1185 its annual income represented a sum equal to thirty millions of dollars. The Templars were bankers and loaned money on their own terms. But wealth and prosperity naturally led to licentiousness, neglect of Templar law and in the end destruction. "[1]

Having embraced Gnosticism while in Palestine, and in touch with the sect of the Assassins, the Templar order degenerated, and some of its members, under the influence of that sect, were said to practice Phallicism or sex-worship and Satanism and to venerate " The Baphomet ", the idol of the Luciferians. The crime of Sodomy was a rite of Templar initiation.

It is here interesting to note that the Phallus holds the lowest rank in Brahmin theology for, in countries where the people are virtually enslaved by superstition, this kind of heresy is useful to the ruling classes.

Morris thus summarizes the fall of the Templars. " In the year 1307, the Grand Master of the order, Jacques de Molay, was arrested in Paris with sixty of his knights and imprisoned upon charges of idolatry and other crimes. Shortly afterward, all the Knights Templar in France were put in prison in Paris. May 12, 1310, fifty-four of them were burnt alive. March 18, 1314, the Grand Master, with three of his most eminent officers, suffered in like manner. The great possessions of the order were now confiscated and the society suppressed both by the Pope and the leading monarchs of Europe. "[2]

In England, the Knights Templar were dissolved in the reign of Edward II, and after the grant of their properties to the Knights Hospitallers, these in their turn were dissolved by Henry VIII.

After the death of Molay, the Knights Templar found a protector in King Dinis II of Portugal who reformed the order in 1317, under the name Knights of Christ.

A complete bibliography of literature both in print and in manuscript, dealing with the subject of the Knights Templar has been compiled by M. Dessubré and the student is referred to his book : Bibliographie de I Ordre des Templiers.

KNIGHTS OF MALTA

The Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, or Hospitallers of St. John, afterward called Knights of Rhodes and finally Knights of Malta, were founded about the commencement of the Crusades, as a military and religious order.[1]

CHAPTER XXII

THE ROSICRUCIANS

Speculation has been rife as to the origin of the Rosicrucians, and the many fables and legends connected with the subject have but little historical value.

Owing to the great discrepancy between the information contained in the following article and that given in the more modern editions of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, it has been deemed advisable to reprint the former. (See Enc. Brit., 3rd Edition, Vol. 16, year MDCCXCVII (1797) Edinburgh. Bell and Macfarquhar.)

" Rosicrucians, a name assumed by a sect or cabal of hermetical philosophers ; who arose, as it has been said, or at least became first taken notice of in Germany, in the beginning of the fourteenth century. They bound themselves together by a solemn secret, which they all swore inviolably to preserve : and obliged themselves, at their admission into the order, to a strict observance of certain established rules. They pretended to know all sciences, and chiefly medicine : whereof they published themselves the restorers. They pretended to be masters of abundance of important secrets, and, among others, that of the philosopher's stone : all which they affirmed to have received by tradition from the ancient Egyptians, Chaldeans, the Magi, and Gymnosophists.

They have been distinguished by several names, accommodated to the several branches of their doctrine. Because they pretend to protect the period of human life, by means of certain nostrums, and even to restore youth, they were called Immortals ; as they pretended to know all things, they have been called Illuminati; and because they have made no appearance for several years, unless the sect of Illuminated which lately started up on the continent derives its origin from them, they have been called the Invisible Brothers. Their society is frequently signed by the letters F. R. C. which some among them interpret fratres roris cocti; it being pretended that the matter of the philosopher's stone is dew concocted, exalted, etc. Some, who are no friends to free-masonry, make the present flourishing society of free-masons a branch of Rosicrucians ; or rather the Rosicrucians themselves, under a new name or relation, viz. as retainers to building. And it is certain, there are some free-masons who have all the characters of Rosicrucians ; but how the aera and original of masonry, and that of Rosicrucianism here fixed from Nadaeus, who has written expressly on the subject, conflict, we leave others to judge.......... Notwithstanding the pretended antiquity of the Rosicrucians, it is probable that the alchemists, Paracelsists,[1] or fire-philosophers, who spread themselves through almost all Europe about the close of the 16th century, assumed about this period the obscure and ambiguous title of Rosicrucian brethren, which commanded at first some degree of respect, as it seemed to be borrowed from the arms of Luther, which were a cross placed upon a rose. But the denomination evidently appears to be derived from the science of chemistry. It is not compounded, says Motheim, as many imagine of the two words rosa and crux, which signify rose and cross, but of the latter of these words, and the Latin ros, which signifies dew. . . . At the head of these fanatics were Robert Fludd, an English physician, Jacob Behmen, and Michael Mayer ; but if rumour may be credited, the present Illuminated have a head of higher rank. The common principles, which serve as a kind of centre of union to the Rosicrucian society, are the following : They all maintain that the dissolution of bodies, by the power of fire, is the only way by which men can arrive at true wisdom, and come to discern the first principles of things. They all acknowledge a certain analogy and harmony between the powers of nature and the doctrines of religion ; and believe that the Deity governs the kingdom of grace by the same laws with which he rules the kingdom of nature ; and hence they are led to use chemical denominations to express the truth of religion. They all hold that there is a sort of divine energy, or soul, diffused through the frame of the universe, which some call the argheus, others the universal spirit, and which others mention under different appellations. They all talk in the most superstitious manner of what they call the signatures of things, of the power of the stars, over all corporeal beings, and their particular influence upon the human race, of the efficacy of magic, and the various ranks and orders of demons — These demons they divide into two orders, sylphs and gnomes. "[2] [2] Whereas the article mentions only two kinds of demons tne Rose Croix are credited with recognizing four different species accredited to each of the four elements : Earth spirits 77 Gnomes, Fire spirits — Salamanders, Water spirits — Undines, Air spirits — Sylphs.

This article having been written in 1747 only hinted at what the Rose Croix might have been. Subsequent research upon the organization of the Fraternity, its tenets and its achievements, shows it to have been a medium for the propagation of Gnosticism and a centre for political activities. Before it conquered Freemasonry, which was officially instituted in 1717, many names were already associated intimately with this esoteric organization. Among others were Faustus Socinius, Cesare Cremonini, Michael Maier, Valentin Andrea, Thomas Vaughan (Philaletes), Charles Blount, Frederich Helvetius, Richard Simon, and Theophilus Desaguliers.

It is claimed that Faustus Socinius, named after Faustus, the Manichee, nephew of Lelius Socinius, whose teacher was Camillo Renato, was an intimate of Rosicrucianism and the founder of the Socinians.

Catholics and Protestants alike opposed Faustus Socinius in his efforts to graft a secret cult on the existing orthodox religions, and in 1598, the people of Cracovia, revolted by his doctrines, pillaged his house, burned his books and manuscripts and almost massacred their author. He had sworn hatred to the church and busied himself in founding an association the aims of which were to be subversive to all its teachings, and two years before his death, he was obliged to take refuge from his enemies with one Abraham Blonski.

The membership of the Rose Croix was composed of Alchemists, Astrologers and Spiritists whose quest was the search for a process for transmuting base metals into gold and the secret of life. To most of these " generation was the root principle of Achemy. "[3]

The order of the Rose Croix revealed itself in 1614 with the appearance of two books, Fama Fraternitatis and the Confessio attributed to Valentin Andrea giving the legend of the travels of Christian Rosenkreutz.

According to Charles T. MacClenachan 33°, Historian, Grand Lodge State of New York, this same legend had appeared as the work of Raymond Lulli, who died in 1315.

In this legend, translated into English in 1616 by Robert Fludd, a symbolic personage called Christian Rosenkreuz, destined to live 106 years on earth, travelled in the East where he studied the Cabala and, on his return to his native Germany, he revealed to three disciples the secret of secrets, the great secret of theosophy. [4] Finally, he retired to a cave to finish his days in solitude, dying in 1484 at the age of 106. His disciples came, enshrouded him and disappeared. His grave was to be unknown for six times twenty years at the end of which period it was to become the hearth of the light destined to illuminate the world at the time appointed by God. In 1604, chance brought men to this cave. On entering, great was their surprise to find it resplendent with a bright light. It contained an altar bearing upon a copper plate the inscription " Living, I reserved this light for my grave. " One mysterious figure was accompanied by this epigram " Never vacant ". A second figure " The Yoke of the Law ". A third figure " The Liberty of the Gospels ". A fourth " The Glory of the Whole God ". The hall still contained lamps burning without fuel, mirrors of various shapes and boks. Upon the wall was written " In six times twenty years I will be discovered ". The prophecy was fulfilled, adds the fable, by way of conclusion.

• Fire, alias Kundalini, alias sex-force.

The movement was greatly furthered by the impulse given it when, after the appearance of the Fama Fraternitatis and Confessio, a German Alchemist, Michael Maier, an English Physician, Robert Fludd and a Pietist, Julius Sperber, wrote treatises in defence or explanation of the order of the Rose Croix.

It has repeatedly been stated that Michael Maier, who frequently visited England, was a friend of Robert Fludd. He was the author of Themis Aurea and Silentium post Clamores, both Rosicrucian works. His political influence may be judged from his career. Physician to Rudolf II, he was created by him Count of the Palatinate, and acted as adviser to his sovereign. In 1609, Rudolf II issued an Imperial Charter granting religious liberty to the Moravians.[5]

Masonic authorities state that Maier, as a Rosicrucian, changed his official title to Summus Magister, Sovereign Master, which is that used by all his successors and borne by the principal Socinian Rose-Croix documents, dating from the time of Faustus Socinius to that of Johann Wolff, which are preserved in the Sovereign Patriarchal Council of Hamburg. (That is the Supreme Jewish Lodge secretly affiliated to International Masonry.)

In his book Themis Aurea, written in 1616 and 1617 and printed in 1618, Maier, the Grand Master, refers to a resolution passed at a meeting in 1617 in which it was formally agreed that the Brotherhood of the Rose Croix must maintain the strictest secrecy for a hundred years. On October 31 1617, the Convention of the Seven at Magdebourg had indeed agreed to qualify its members during the ensuing one hundred years of secrecy as " The Invisibles ". It had renewed its oath to destroy the church of Jesus Christ and had decreed that, in the year 1717, it would transform the fraternity into an association which could carry on a more or less open propaganda, while adopting such meassures of prudence as might then be deemed expedient by the leaders of the sect. Finally, the Seven adopted definitely, as being sufficiently original to appeal to the popular imagination, Valentin Andrea's curious story of the Rose Croix which had been secretly printted in Venice towards 1613.

Robert Fludd was the author of Tractatus Apologeticus (1617) and Clavis Philosophiae et Alchymiae (1633). He was greatly helped in the foundation of the Rose Croix order in England by Francis Bacon, author of Nova Atlantis [6] (1624).

Valentin Andrea to whom, as we have seen, are ascribed the works Fama and Confessio, as well as Chemycal Nuptials, had, in 1640, been appointed preacher to the Duke of Brunswick Wolfenbuttel, who was soon to make him his chaplain.

To those who know the important part played by a Duke of Brunswick during the French Revolution, this entrance of the Brunswick family into the sect is very interesting. As a Rosicrucian, Andrea was the teacher of Comenius (Amos Kominsky), who frequently visited England during his mysterious political career. Bishop of a Moravian community, Comenius was the leader of the Moravian Brethren, a sect pledged to achieve the extermination of the Catholic church and which, being considered heretical, was also suspected of practising secret satanism. The Moravians were imbued with Socinianism, that is the doctrine of Lelius

Socinius which had been spread among them by his. nephew Faustus Socinius who had found refuge in Moravia when persecuted by the Church. Their link with Rosicrucianism had already been established in the person of the pietist, Julius Sperber, who was also one of their leaders. When Kominsky was persecuted, he first went to London in 1641 and, early the next year, went to Sweden where he was granted refuge and help by the powerful Swedish Minister, Count Axel Oxenstiern, himself a Rosicrucian adept and protector of another initiate, Ludwig van Geer from Holland.

The combination of the pursuit of alchemy and hermeticism with political aims was frequently evidenced even before the official appearance of Rosicrucianism. The influence of adepts on the destinies of nations was immense.

To Queen Elizabeth, the advice of John Dee, her alchemist, was always considered in matters affecting national policy, and to Dee, his crystal gazer, Edward Kelly, was indispensable as a medium.[7]

Ludwig van Geer, (one of the Seven present at Magdebourg) had settled in Sweden and had won over the chancellor, Count Axel Oxenstiern, then the real regent, in view of the minority of Queen Christina. A great industrialist of Dutch birth, with a colossal fortune made in the manufacture of cannon, he had become a Baron, and as owner of 20 ships of the Swedish fleet, he was an indispensable man.

Another striking Rosicrucian figure was Thomas Vaughan, (Eugenius Philaletes) not to be confused with his pupil, George Starkey, known as Irenius Philaletes.

It is said that it was Thomas Vaughan who, inspired by the writings of Nick Stone, conceived the idea of subverting to the ambition of the sect to which he belonged, the guild of the Freemasons which, owing to its universal character, lent itself better than any other to the realization of his project.

Nick Stone was one of the Seven of the Convention of Magdebourg. As an architect, belonging to the guild of the Freemasons, he had helped Inigo Jones, the grand-master of the English Lodges which, at this period, were nonsectarian. On the other hand, as a Rosicrucian he had grasped, in the Luciferian sense, the idea given by Faustus Socinius, and he had composed, for the nine grades of the fraternity, rituals which the chiefs declared remarkable. His ritual of the eighth degree (Magister Templi) was really Satanic.

Thomas Vaughan, struck by these manuscripts wondered whether it would be possible to extend the teaching of the Rose Croix to all " accepted masons ", who were then admitted to the lodges in an honorary capacity ; the Freemasons received in their guild, under the name of " accepted masons ", peers and men of letters or professional men, as well as rich bourgeois, who enhanced the brilliancy of their meetings and patronized their entertainments. These honorary members were their protectors and benefactors.[8] Vaughan believed that this element, gifted with certain intellectual qualities, would lend itself better to the propagation of the principles of occult Socinianism than the workers of the Fellow Craft, and, having made up his mind that this was the solution of the problem, he hastened to put it into practice.

8. This is still customary. Many of the English Guilds of today such as the Goldsmiths have honorary members who, for attending their dinners receive a box of chocolates and £3 in cash.

Some brothers of the Rose Croix were already mingling with the Freemasons. Among the members of the Warrington Lodge were Richard Penkett, James Collier, Richard Sankey, Henry Littler, John Ellam and Hugh Brewer and in London, the Whartons and their friends had slipped into a lodge as " accepted masons ".

Thomas Vaughan encouraged them to spread the principles of Socinius. Finally, at a meeting on the 14th May 1643, he announced that their desultory efforts at restrained proselytizing should be supplanted by a definite programme of entering the guild lodges with the object of using them as instruments to an end.

The account of this meeting of the 14th May 1643, is given in full in the Memoirs of Philaletes and the whole plan of the Freemasonry of today is therein revealed.

So blended are truth and fiction in the active career of this adventurous adept that Vaughan must always remain one of the most mysterious characters of Rosicrucianism.

" When the plague of 1665 drove the Court from London to Oxford, Thomas Vaughan went thither with his patron (the king) and, a little later, took up his residence with the Rector of Albury, the Rev. Sam. Kem, at whose house, on February 27th of that year, he was killed by an explosion in the course of chemical experiments. "[9]

His work in Masonry however has remained as his monument. Together with Elias Ashmole, pupil of Rabbi Solomon Frank and protege of James Pagitt, Thomas Vaughan worked up the masonic system of the first three degrees. These degrees, those of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason were devised for the temptation of the masses, while outside and above them continued the former secret system of the Rose Croix, four degrees of which belonging to the Gold Cross were known as : 1st, Zelator ; 2nd, Theoricus; 3rd, Practicus ; and 4th, Philosophus; teaching merely the principles of alchemy, while the degrees of the Rose Croix were : 5th, Adeptus Minor; 6th, Adeptus Major ; 7th, Ademptus Exemptus, 8th, Magister Templi and 9th, Magus.

Contemporaneous with the evolution of free thought against revealed religion broke the revolution against civil authority plunging England into the throes of civil war, Oliver Cromwell was successful at the head of the Parliament troops while Charles I was everywhere betrayed by men on whom he relied. Henry Blount[10] was among the traitors accruing to Cromwell after the battle of Edgehill; at least the defeat of the king was his pretext, for treason was everywhere premeditated. The word of order was given by the Rose Croix, which had spread rapidly among the Puritans.

The year 1644 ended with the destruction of the Royal power, and Feb. 9, 1649, the day on which the head of Charles I fell at Whitehall, consummated its ruin. The Royal power had in fact been wrecked when the troops of Parliament were victorious, when the queen was obliged to take refuge in France, when the Prince Palatine, Robert, had been defeated, when York had been taken, and when the Commons had obtained against Laud, the Protestant Episcopal Bishop of London, Archbishop of Canterbury, the bill of attainder which declared him guilty of the crime of treason. Laud had stood for resistance to the Puritans.

The connection of the Cromwell family with that of the celebrated Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, whose political ideas, formed in Italy, under the guidance of Machiavelli, had so greatly affected the trend of English history, is here not devoid of interest.

In 1767, a document was discovered which revealed the existence of a society of Freemasons in Italy with about 64,000 members. "[11]

The document said : — " At last the great mine of the Freemasons of Naples is discovered, of whom the name, but not the secret, was known. Two circumstances are alleged by which the discovery was brought about : — a dying man revealed all to his confessor, that he should inform the king thereof ; a knight, who had been kept in great state by the society, having had his pension withheld, betrayed the Grand Master of the order to the king. This Grand Master was the Duke of San Severo. The king secretly sent a confidential officer with three dragoons to the duke's mansion, with orders to seize him before he had time to speak to any one, and bring him to the palace. The order was carried out; but a few minutes after, a fire broke out in the duke's mansion, destroying his library, the real object being, as is supposed, to burn all writings having reference to Freemasonry. The fire was extinguished, and the house guarded by troops. The duke having been brought before the king, openly declared the objects, system, seals, government, and possessions of the order. He was sent back to his palace, and there guarded by troops, lest he should be killed by his former colleagues. Freemasons have also been discovered at Florence, and the Pope and the Emperor

"have sent thither twenty-four theologians to put a stop to the disorder. The king acts with the greatest mercy towards all implicated, to avoid the great dangers that might ensue from a contrary course. He has also appointed four persons of great standing to use the best means to destroy so abominable a sect; and has given notice to all the other sovereigns of Europe of his discovery, and the abominable maxims of the sect, calling upon them to assist in its suppression, which it will be folly in them to refuse to do. For the order does not count its members by thousands, but by millions, especially among Jews and Protestants. Their frightful maxims are only known to the members of the fifth, sixth, and seventh lodges, whilst those of the first three know nothing, and those of the fourth act without knowing what they do. They derive their origin from England, and the founder of the sect was that infamous Cromwell, first Bishop, and then lover of Anne Boleyn, and then beheaded for his crimes, called in his day ' the scourge of rulers. ' He left the order an annual income of £10,000 sterling. It is divided into seven lodges : the members of the seventh are called Assessors ; of the sixth, Grand Masters ; of the fifth, Architects ; of the fourth, Executors (here the secret ends); of the third, Ruricori (!) ; of the second and first, Novices and Proselytes. Their infamous idea is based on the allegory of the temple of Solomon, considered in its first splendour, and then overthrown by the tyranny of the Assyrians, and finally restored — thereby to signify the liberty of man after the creation of the world, the tyranny of the priesthood, kings and laws, and the re-establishment of that liberty. "

As for Oliver Cromwell, Lord Protector of England, there is no record of his having been an " accepted mason ". He was however on the best of terms with Richard Penkett and is supposed by many to have been secretly affiliated to the Rose Croix but whether an adept or not he served the purpose of the sect, destruction of the Royal and Ecclesiastical Christian Power !

After the death of Charles I, Cromwell appointed an assembly of lawyers and divines to consider the petition of Manasseh ben Israel (1604-1657) demanding the abolition of the legal exclusion of the Jews from England. In December 1655 the legal prohibition was removed. Eleven years after (1666) occurred the great fire of London.

Does the following letter help to solve the mystery of this historical disaster ? It was one of many written by the Secretary-Interpreter of the Marquis de Louvois, an English spy, to his chief in England, published in London in 1697 by D. Jones, Gent.

Of the firing of the City of London, in 1666.

MY LORD,

I am fully satisfied by what I have both seen and heard at Paris and elsewhere, that the Duke of York[1] was in the Year 1666 brought quite over to the French Interest; and I have heard strange Stories related concerning his conduct at the time of that dreadful conflagration of the City, looking upon it Janus-like, with one face seeming concerned for the lamentable disaster, and with the other rejoycing to see that noble pile reduced to ashes, and its citizens ruined ; who had at all times been the greatest propugnators for liberty and property, and opposers of that religion which he now not only secretly protest, but was even ready publickly to own, and rewarding those incendiaries at St. James, who then were suspected generally to be Frenchmen, as your Lorship well may remember ; but by our Minutes it does appear they were not such ; but they were persons, at least many of them set on work by French councils, and such as at that time were of all men least suspected ; I mean Jews, of which they had then several in pay, not only in England, but all over Christendom ; not only to give them Intelligence in which they are wondrous active, but likewise to promote and act the worse of mischiefs, as which they make no baulk. By these, fires have been kindled, not only in England, but in Germany, Poland and elsewhere, which the Germans imputed to Turkish Emissaries, though they were Jews hired with French money, the Turkish Policy not being so refined in mischief, these sorts of Jews put on the shape of what Christians they pleased, and of this sort imploy'd by France, there were and are still several in England, the names of one or two of which I think I shall be able to give your Lorship in sometime, though they go by several, as time and occasion doth require, and so at present I remain.

My Lord,
Your Lordship's most Humble Servant,
Paris, April 7 1676. N. St.

More shadows of the past! More strange suggestions to shake the foundations of our belief in things as they seem !

The last of the Grand Masters of the Rose Croix was Johann Christian Wolff. [13] Masonry, which as a secret association had maintained its existence for years had uncovered itself and become an avowed organization with the proclamation of the Anderson Constitution. [14] Once in the open it was to be the universal screen behind which all secret societies, whether theurgic or political, would operate clandestinely. Masonry with its proclamation of three philanthropic and altruistic degrees, with no apparent real secret, declaring itself Christian and non-political, would become the centre in which ignorant men, recruited and duped, could act like puppets animated by unseen hands pulling unseen strings.

[14] Grand Lodge of England.

Thus it came about that all blows dealt to Christianity and States were prepared by the secret Societies-acting behind the veil of Masonry.

CHAPTER XXIII

CATHARES, ALBIGENSES, WALDENSES

Manicheism, with its hierarchy and missionary system, had taken root in Europe and, with its chief seat in Bulgaria, had thus found its way into Northern Italy and the southern part of France.

Unquestionably Manicheans in their beliefs and teachings, the Cathares (purifiers or pure) held the unadulterated tradition of Manes. Their hierarchy was that established by their founder. In the 12th century, their supreme chief was in Bulgaria having under him, bishops, priests, deacons and simple Perfects. These composed the class of Perfects who were distinguished from the second degree of Believers.

As to the Albigenses, their name derived from Albi, a town of Languedoc, covered not one but many sects issued from Manicheism and Arianism, and counted also many Jews or judaised Christians. Under this appellation of Albigenses, historians, whether political or religious, have almost unanimously included the Cathares.

A revolt against the then existing Church power of the 12th century is only too comprehensible, when one recollects the excesses of which popes, bishops and almost all dignitaries of the Church were guilty. The pioneers of the rebellion had been Peter of Bruys (died 1126) and the monk Henri (died 1148).

They had openly attacked the vices of the clergy and fallen victims, the first to his own fanaticism (he was killed by the mob whose anger he had aroused by pulling down a wooden cross to be used as burning wood for the purpose of cooking meat on a Good Friday); the second was imprisoned by a bishop against whose vices he had raised his voice. Both had attacked the beliefs and practices of the Church ; like the Baptists of today they rejected the practice of baptism for children, and denied the dogmas of transubstantiation and redemption through Christ.

They gained many adherents and left numerous disciples whose Manichean opposition to the Church was identical with that of the Cathares. Upon such grounds fell the preaching of Peter Waldo who, although he repudiated the dualist doctrine of the Manicheans, formed a serious opposition to the Church. He created the sect of the Waldenses divided in two degrees, Perfect and Believers. The former made a vow of Poverty and as such took the names of Poor Brethren, the latter formed the Outer or Third Order. From the South of France and Northern Italy, persecution drove the Waldenses to the Central and Northern provinces of France, thence to England, then from Lombardy into Germany and Bohemia. John Wickliffe (1324-1384) in England and John Huss (1369-1415) in Bohemia, were their foremost representatives and in the latter country they formed the Bohemian Brethren who later also took the name of Moravian Brethren or Religious Masons.

CHAPTER XXIV

THE MORAVIANS

OR THE MORAVIAN BROTHERS OF THE ORDER OF RELIGIOUS FREEMASONS, OR ORDER OF THE MUSTARD-SEED, OR THE CHURCH UNITAS FRATRUM, OR THE HERRENHUTER.

Margrave Albert expelled the Jews from the town of Iglau, in Moravia, on the ground that they had been in league with the Taborites, the subversive element among the Hussites. The Taborites were Bohemians.

The Moravian Brothers or Unitas Fratrum, a Gnostic sect, were founded in 1457 at Kunewald, near Seftenberg, by Gregory ; the nephew of the Calixtine leader Rokyzana. They were an offshoot of the Bohemian Brethren said to represent the religious kernel of the Hussite movement.

At the Synod of Lhota near Reichenau, in 1467, they constituted themselves into a Church separate from the Calixtine or National church of Bohemia.

The constitution of the society was revised at a second Synod held at Lhota under the direction of Luke of Prague, who may be regarded as their second founder. This reorganization enabled the society to grow rapidly. In the early years of the 16th cent, the Unitas included nearly 400 congregations in Bohemia and Moravia, with 150,000 members, and, including Poland, embraced three provinces — Bohemia, Moravia, where the Jews are the best educated of the inhabitants, and in a few small towns form a full half of the population, and Poland. Each province had its own bishops and synods, but all were united in one church and governed by the general synod.

The Lutheran movement in Germany awakened lively interest among the Brethren, and some unsuccessful attempts were made under the leadership of Agusta to unite with the Lutheran Church (1528-1546); but when the Calvinist reformation reached Bohemia, the Brethren found themselves more in sympathy with it than with the Lutheran. The Jesuit anti-reformation, instigated by Rudolf and his brothers Matthias and Ferdinand, found the Brethren a prosperous church, but the pitiless persecution which followed the unsuccessful attempt at revolution crushed the whole Protestantism of Bohemia, and in 1627 the Evangelical churches there had ceased to exist. About the same time, the Polish branch of the Unity, in which many refugees from Bohemia and Moravia had found a home, was absorbed in the Reformed Church of Poland. A few families, however, especially in Moravia, held religious services in secret, preserved the traditions of their fathers, and, in spite of the vigilance of their enemies, maintained some correspondence with each other. In 1722, some of these left home and property to seek a place where they could worship in freedom. The first company, led by Christian David, a mechanic, settled by invitation from Count Zinzendorf [1] on his estate at Bertheldsdorf near Zittau, in Saxony. They were soon joined by others (about 300 coming within seven years), and built a town which they called Herrenhut. The small community at first adopted the constitution and teaching of the old Unitas. The episcopate had been continued, and in 1735, David Nitschmann was consecrated first bishop of the Renewed Moravian Church. The new settlement was not, however, destined to be simply a revival of the organization of the Bohemian Brethren. Zinzendorf, who had given them an asylum, came with his wife, family, and chaplain to live among the refugees. He was a Lutheran who had accepted Spener's pietism, and he wished to form a society distinct from national churches and devoted to good works. After long negotiations, a union was effected between the Lutheran element and the adherents of the ancient Unitas Fratrum. The emigrants at Herrenhut attended the parish church at Berthelsdorf, and were simply a Christian (Gnostic) society within the Lutheran Church. (Ecclesiola in ecclesia). This peculiarity is still to some extent preserved in the German branch of the church, and the Moravian Brethren's Congregation within the Evangelical Protestant churches, which enables them to do evangelistic work without proselytizing. The society adopted a code of rules in 1727, and ordained twelve elders to carry on pastoral work. This was the revival of the Unitas Fratrum as a church.

[1] Said to have been head of the Rose Croix, succeeding Theophilus Desaguliers ; he was Spener's godchild.

Besides congregational work, special home missions were and are carried on in each province. In the German province there is a peculiar home mission called the Diaspora,[2] which dates from 1829.[3]

The Moravians came to England in 1724, brought by Count Zinzendorf. The following extract from the work of an Anglican Bishop, written in 1751, shows that they were not particularly appreciated in that country as a force for good !

" Of what dangerous Consequence the Moravian System is to Government and Civil Society, appears by their progressive Multiplicity of Prevarications, Lies, Frauds, Cheats, and juggling Impostures, (Greatly detrimental to Princes and States, as well as ruinous to private Persons) which have so plainly been proved by Mr. Rimius, and others, particularly in ' the History of the Moravians, very lately published, from the public Acts of Budingen, and other authentic Vouchers. ' Of this Nature are their devouring the whole substance of any wealthy Convert, and declaring that the Society may say to a young rich Brother ' Either give up all that thou hast, or get thee gone. ' — Sending away any of the Society to the remotest Parts of the World, at a Minute's Warning, by the Authority of the Saviour, who will have it done Post-haste : ' Whereby any, though his Majesty's Subjects, whom they suspect, or that dislike their Proceedings, or, for prudential Reasons, must be married up, or may discover any of their Iniquities, are instantly sent into Banishment, and condemned to Transportation ; not for any Crime, but for their Virtue and Duty, Which is more than all the Authority of Great Britain can do, for any Crime, without an open and legal Trial, Making Marriages void, though before contracted, unless the carnal Cohabitation has been performed in the Presence of the Elders. — Seducing Men's Wives and Daughters, and then keeping them by Force, or sending them out of the Way ; and allowing no Power of Earth to reclaim them, though the Parents beg it on their Knees : —

Taking away the natural Authority of the Parents, and making their Children disobey and renounce them, under Pretence of obeying the Saviour, the Father that created them : ' thereby making the Fifth Commandment of no Effect. — Sometimes bribing, and sometimes threatening States, as Occasion serves, and denouncing Argumenta Regum, if they are opposed ; and telling Princes, that such or such a Place in their Dominions, was founded by the Saviour for his Theocracy ; which he won't fail to maintain. ' — These Things have been proved upon the Moravians, both as to Doctrine and Practice, by divers Instances. And that in Fact they claim an Independency on Government appears from the ' Letter to the Regency of Budingen, from the Count (Zinzendorf) and his Brethren, wherein it is said, in plain Terms, ' That all the Sovereigns on Earth must consent to the Theocracy in the Moravian Brotherhood, or have no Brethren in their Dominions. ' I need not add, that Theocracy signifies an immediate Government by God, which of Course excludeth all Civil Authority. "

The Moravian dogma was Spiritism which generally means Black Magic.

As for their moral code, it can be summarized in the few following words of Count Zinzendorf in a dialogue with Mr. Wesley. " We reject all Self Denial, we trample it under Foot. We Believers do what we please, and no more. "

Claiming to be free from all law by their Marriage with Christ, they refuse to be bound by any law at all : either of the Old Testament or the New.

To bring all Sects under his sway, Roman Catholics, Socinians, Fanaticks, Chiliasts, Anabaptists etc., Count Zinzendorf made a new translation of the New Testament... "This was the practice of almost all the Gnostic Heretics, in order to deceive, and draw disciples. Nor did they make any Scruple of Omissions, Expungings, or any Corruptions that might serve their Purpose...

" Missionaries were sent abroad, everything being done by the Saviour's Injunction...

" Heaven, for them, is to consist in their being metamorphosed into Female Angels, for a carnal Enjoyment of Christ in his human Nature, in the eternal Bed-chamber...

" Where in the Scriptures do you find panegyrical Hymns in Honour of your Phallus ? "[4] asks Lavington.

For what follows we refer the reader to page 140 of the Bishop's book.

Count Zinzendorf is said to have been the head of the Rose Croix from 1744 to 1749. He was on intimate terms with John Wesley, the founder of Methodism.

Of all its names, that of " The Order of Religious Freemasons " is the most significant today. It should also be remembered that the head of this order was also the head of the " Esoteric Rosicrucians " of the time !

CHAPTER XXV

THE ANABAPTISTS

The Anabaptists were founded in 1521 by Nicolas Storch, Mark Stubner and Thomas Muncer.

Their Heresies were founded on the following Lutheran maxim interpreted subversively : A Christian man is master of everything and is subject to no one. They further claimed that infant baptism is null, therefore adults only can be baptized.

" If the Anabaptists ", writes Hoeninghaus, a German Protestant writer, in La Réforme contre la Réforme, were not all equally intolerant, they were nevertheless all equally detested, hated, and persecuted by the Protestants much more than by the Catholics. "

Queen Elizabeth ordered them to be excluded from England.

Madden, in Phantasmata, describes their religion in the following terms :

" We find among them claims to intercourse with God and angels — to the gift of prophecy — to the power of driving out evil spirits — to the right of persecuting opponents — to visions, ecstasies, trances, convulsive seizures attributed to supernatural influences — and all these evidences of epidemic religious mania in countries which were Protestant. "[1]

At certain periods in its history, this sect wielded great power and Madden further writes that in Westphalia " for a length of time, the entire senate was composed of theomaniacs. As the republic was composed alone of fools and madmen, it is incredible to what a length they carried their excesses in Munster : each magistrate proposed for the rule of government the wild chimeras of his own imagination, disguised under the imposing name of revelation. It was a sad spectacle to hear the deliberations of a senate composed altogether of fanatics : some being inspired in a perfectly contrary way to that suggested to others : nevertheless, each one adhering to the dictates of his inspiration, because he believed that a special revelation had been made to him. When such things, says Calmeil, take place in a country, where pseudo-prophets are tolerated who disseminate terror, and run about the streets without any clothing, when the multitude set these things down as super-human phenomena ; when the inspired of both sexes walk about thus in public places in the midst of their disciples and apostles, the will of the Supreme Being is supposed to serve as a rule and direction to all the extravagances that mortals fall into, and it is difficult to say where will end the excesses of this religious delirium... The Anabaptists, when they fell into the hands of their enemies, allowed their fingers, tongue, nose and ears, to be cut off, nay, even suffered themselves to be drowned by hundreds in torrents, rather than desist or depart for a moment from the orders they imagined came from God. "[2]

2. Ibid., vol. II, p. 450.

In 1525, Luther headed an alliance of the Princes and governments to repress these excesses, and they were defeated at the Battle of Frankenhausen in that year, their leader Thomas Muncer being seized and beheaded.

In 1536, John of Leyden proclaimed himself King of the New Jerusalem but his glory was of short duration. He was taken by " the ungodly " and put to death.

The principal leaders of the sect were John Mathias, John Bockhold, David George, William Hacket, Kotterus, Kuhlmann and Dabricius.

" The principal offshoots of the Anabaptist fanaticism in Germany, Holland, and Switzerland, were the Adamites, the Apostolics, the Taciturn, the Perfect, the Impeccable, the Liberated Brethren, the Sabbatarians, the Clancularians, the Manifestarians, the Bewailers, the Rejoicers, the Indifferent, the Sanguinarians, the Antimariens. CHAPTER XXVI

GRAND LODGE OF ENGLAND

John Valentin Andrea, the Rosicrucian, having elaborated a plan to merge all the existing religious Societies into one organization, published in 1614 a book Universal and General Reformation of the Whole Wide World, in which he advocated the foundation of a secret society of all classes, pledged to work quietly for the benefit of their fellows.

To this period also belongs the legend of Christian Rosenkreutz (see page 151).

Andrea, however, failed in his endeavours but Jan Amos Komensky (Comenius) joined actively in his efforts and, as early as 1628, begged leave to share in this work of which he presently was given sole charge.

About this time, Comenius wrote his renowned work on All-wisdom, the Pansophia, which embodied his ideas on the foundation of humanity's Utopia.

This Moravian school-master, Comenius, while doubtless an idealist, was also interested in spiritism, prophecies, revolution, Antichrist, the Millenium and such like whims of a dangerous fanaticism. He collected the visions of the Anabaptists, Kotterus and those of Dabricius and published them at Amsterdam. Those visions promised such wonders as the extermination of the Pope, the House of Austria, Gustavus Adolphus, Gustavus, King of Sweden, Cromwell and others and were of a most disturbing character. [1]

When Anderson undertook the task of uniting the old traditions of practical Masonry with the more recent development and broadened ideas of the new world-league, he incorporated in his book of constitution a reproduction of the main part of the plans and ideas of Comenius. Their true meaning was faithfully adhered to, and important and decisive passages were adopted almost literally.

The transformation of the Lodge was actually carried out in 1663 when, in the General Assembly of Masons, the masters of operative masonry, feeling themselves supplanted and overruled, realized that if they did not wish to forsake their Lodge they must unite with its new masters and subordinate themselves to their designs — Henry Jermyn, Lord St. Albans, was elected and installed Grand Master, Sir John Denham became his deputy and Sir Christopher Wren and John Webb, wardens.

The English Grand Lodge, as we know it, was founded on June 24, 1717, by Anderson, Desaguliers (an expatriated Frenchman said to have been the head of the Rose Croix), Calvert, James King, Elliot, Lumden Madden and George Payne.[2] It works only the first three degrees, Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Mason (Blue Masonry) and constitutes the nursery for the selection of initiates for the higher or so called " spurious " masonry. Masons desirous of rising in the ranks of the Fraternity are therefore obliged to enter Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites, (in England Ancient and Accepted Rites) Grand Orient, Memphis and Mizraim, Swedenborg or some other International order which works the higher grades and selects its members from graduates of the original English system.

English masonry claims to be a purely charitable institution.

It is Blue Masonry which answers to the lesser mysteries of the ancients wherein, in reality, nothing but the exoteric doctrines were revealed, whilst spurious masonry, or all subsequent degrees (for no one can be initiated into them who has not passed through the first three degrees) answer to the greater Mysteries. [3]

" According to Anderson's own showing", stater, Freemasonry Universal, " previous to the formation of Grand Lodge in 1717 the ceremonies of the Freemasons were purely Christian, but soon after that important change it was decided to widen the basis of the Craft so that men of all religious persuasions could enter her portals and benefit by her teaching. " [4]

On page 303 of The Rosicrucian and Masonic Record can be found the " Articles of Union ", dated 1813, of the two Fraternities of Free and Accepted Masons of England ; the " Society of Free and Accepted Masons " and " The Grand Lodge of the Society of Freemasons ". At the same time, Grand Lodge agreed to recognize a fourth degree, that of Holy Royal Arch.

In these articles it is specified that the representation of a Lodge in Grand Lodge shall be by its actual Master, Wardens and one Past master only.

Prior to the revival in 1717, and the reconstruction of Masonry in its present symbolic form we find in another article in The Rosicrucian and Masonic Record (page 167) that :

> " Very little is known of the proceedings of Masonic bodies, from the fact that very few written documents were permitted to be recorded, and of these few, owing to the jealousy or over-caution of their rulers, many were burnt in London in 1721. "

We can accept the causes given above for the destruction of these documents with a smile!

On initiation, Masons receive an alias by which name they are henceforth known in the Lodge.

All Masonry is founded on the usual system of sectarian help. " Help a Mason " supplants the Christian teaching of " Help everyone ".

Until the last few years this rule had not assumed a subversive character. Lately however, it is said that " to get anywhere in business in the City (London) one must be a Mason ". This has stimulated Masonic recruiting, implying as it does a virtual business boycott against non-masons. Each new recruit weakens the forces of those whose free, unhampered judgment could serve the cause of real liberty, democracy, and humanity.

Masonry, English and Continental, has been very useful to persons with political ambitions and minor mental and moral capacities.

In Maçonnerie Pratique, Corns d'Enseignement Supérieur de la Franc-Maçonnerie, Rite Ecossais Ancien et Accepté, published 1885, in Paris, page 206, and attributed to Paul Rosen,[5] we are given the following as the esoteric explanation of the Ritual of Master Mason, Third Degree. It is an interesting fact that very few of the editions of certain works quoted herein are accessible to the profane public in museums and libraries.

" The Temple, being emblematic of the human body, the Master's Lodge is known as the Middle Chamber within which the most intimate mysteries of Freemasonry are celebrated. It represents the Uterus wherein is accomplished the reproduction of all beings [6].

" The two parts, separated longitudinally by a dark curtain, represent, — one side, the West, dark, and lighted only by a single light, the abode of death, of the sterile seed, is the ovary. That of the Eastern side, brilliantly illuminated, is the seed fertilized by the fulfilment of the act of generation and absorbed by the Uterus [7].

" The Master holds the mallet, the two Wardens each holding a roll of cardboard nine inches in circumference by 18 inches long. These rolls represent the membrum virile [8].

" In the middle of the Lodge is a mattress, coffin or ditch, which symbolises the bed, the Pastos of the Antients, upon which are performed the mysteries of human generation[9].

" This mattress, coffin or ditch, also represents the Arch of Noah, and the antient Arch of the Old Testament, these two Arches being again the symbols of the place where the generation of beings is accomplished.[10]

" The acacia, the initiatic emblem of the Gauls and Scandinavians, and the fig tree, the initiatic emblem of the Syrians and the Orientals, signify that all the mysteries are derived from one source and rest on one base, that of India.

" The Phallus is used by the Freemasons in the degree of Master where it is designated by the word Mahabone.

" This fecundation is supposed to take place as follows :

" In the early period of initiation the seed of the unfertilized grain is dead. The Candidate, bearing within him this inert seed, is a male as he only wears upon his breast the Compass emblem of the membrum virile. He is stretched upon a mattress, or in a coffin or ditch, emblematic of the bed of the Pastos or the mysteries of generation.[11]

" Neither the second, nor the first warden can endow him with life. Alone, the Worshipful Master, wearing upon his chest the Square, symbol of the genitalia mulieris representing the female, (the Lodge) can fertilize this seed by leaning over the Candidate, who, representing the male, unites with him by the five points of perfection [12].

" The seed is fertilized by the Union of the male and the female, and the Lodge becomes pregnant of the Candidate, which she brings into the world nine months later, as Perfect Master, fourth degree, it being established that nine full months must have passed since the aspirant had received the degree of Master Mason. In summing up : — The basis on which are founded the first three degrees of practical masonry are : —

" That the Apprentice, Bohaz, the personification of Osiris or of Bacchus, coming to search for Truth in the Lodge, finds that he is a Male-God and incomplete for the generation of beings. [14]

" That the Companion Jackin, personification of Isis or Venus, the Female-God, completes the Male-God by rendering possible the generation of beings. [15]

" That the Master Mahabone or MacBenac is the Hermaphrodite, complete son of Loth and his daughter, son of the sun and the earth.

" And that because :

1. All originates by Generation, and not by Creation, which is only the simple induction of Generation.
2. Corruption or destruction follows generation in all its works.
3. Regeneration restores, under other forms, the effects of destruction.

" The formula of the three first degrees of Freemasonry is therefore :

" The Incomplete man, the Profane, by initiation in Freemasonry, becomes Bohaz and is completed by Jackin in the Lodge which restores his corrupted divinity in Mahabone ".

The special masonic significance of the Flamboyant Star, or Seal of Solomon, in Masonry ✡, is essentially the creative element.

Man reclining presents a protuberance in the middle.

Woman reclining, on the contrary, presents a cavity in the middle.

The two enlaced form the Flamboyant Star.

Small wonder that Mackey states that " no eunuch can be initiated a mason ! " [16]

Unfortunately, many corrupt and vicious persons seek Masonic protection and it is to the interest of all such aspirants to power thus to encourage vice and corruption through blackmail, using their votaries in the sect to further their own private ends. This is the fundamental danger inherent in all secret societies, whatever their reputation, where Power is the object.

" A Mason is said to demit from the order when he withdraws from all connection with it. It relieves the individual from pecuniary contributions and debars him from pecuniary relief, but it does not cancel his Masonic obligations, nor exempt him from that wholesome control which the order exercises over the moral conduct of its members. In this respect the Mason is once a Mason and always a Mason. " [17]

' The fact that a Mason not a member of any particular lodge, but who has been guilty of immoral or unmasonic conduct, can be tried and punished by any lodge, within whose jurisdiction he may be residing, is not to be doubted. "[18]

This obligation on the part of an individual clearly implies a power in the lodge to investigate and control his conduct in all things which concern the interest of the Institution. "

The clipping from the Daily Telegraph of Oct. 15th, 1930, which we reproduce herewith, shows the organization of a Masonic bureaucracy within our midst, an Imperium in Imperio of political office holders and magistrates, pledged first to Freemasonry, then possibly to the people.

CHAPTER XXVII

'HE GOSPEL OF REVOLUTION

Apart from the Rosicrucians already mentioned, we see the foundation and growth of such societies as :

1. The Strict Observance of the Baron Hund and the notorious Jew Leucht who had assumed the name of Johnson, and several other aliases. It recruited its members in the Lodges and went from occultism into political intrigue, later even formulating a plan of economic and financial rule.
2. The Martinists, which, founded by a Portuguese Marrano Jew, Martinez Depasqualy, united political intrigues, fomented for the overthrow of the monarchy, together with magical practices. It numbered among its members the chief politicians who prepared the French Revolution. These were Savalette de Lange, William Law and Mirabeau.
3. The Scottish Rite.
4. The Moravian Brothers.
5. The Alta Vendita.
6. The Egyptian Rites of Cagliostro (Mizraim).

The adepts of all these different rites knew but little beyond the fact that they had shaken off the yoke of Christian principles which were replaced by the cult of nature, and in almost all cases licentiousness. They 'Were but mere puppets manipulated by unseen men whose sinister aims were the destruction of Christianity and disruption of States and to whom all the above named orders or organizations were but so many recruiting grounds. It was only when each and all had gathered sufficient strength that the " Invisible Masters " attempted to unite them all under one supreme sway, namely that of Illuminism at the Convent of Wilhelmsbad in 1782.

Illuminism represented the efforts of the heads of the powerful Jewish Kahal which has ever striven for the attainment of political financial, economic and moral world dominion. The movement had been founded in 1776 by Adam Weishaupt. Bernard Lazare, himself a Jew, has written that " There were Jews behind Weishaupt ", and upon a close study of Illuminism, we find that the destructive forces which culminated in the French Revolution were of three kinds ; financial, intellectual and anti-christian.

In the first class, we come upon the names of Jewish Financiers such as : — Daniel Itzig, Friedlander, Ceerfbeer, Benjamin and Abraham Goldsmid, Moses Mocatta, Veitel Heine Ephraim.

In the second category, we find Moses Mendelssohn, Naphtali Wessely, Moses Hersheim — who are the inspirers of Lessing — Frederic Nicolai, Weishaupt, Mirabeau, l'Abbe Grégoire, the Duke of Brunswick-WolfenbutteL and Anacharsis Clootz.

Lastly, the third class is composed mostly of the group known as the Encyclopedists : d'Alembert, Diderot, Rousseau, Voltaire and of all the Cabalists practising magic and among whom we find : Martinez Depasqualy, Leucht, the enigmatic Count of Saint Germain, Falke and Joseph Balsamo surnamed Cagliostro.

The objects of this powerful organization of the Bavarian Illuminati, were :

1. The destruction of Christianity and of all Monarchical Governments ;

2. The destruction of nations as such in favour of universal internationalism ;

3. The discouragement of patriotic and loyal effort branded as narrow minded prejudice, incompatible with the tenets of goodwill to all men and the cry of " Universal Brotherhood " ;

4. The abolition of family ties and of marriage by means of systematic corruption ;

5. The suppression of the rights of inheritance and property.

Moses Mendelssohn, himself the head of the Haskalah, (Jewish Illuminati) cooperated with the Bavarian Illuminati of Weishaupt and with the prominent members of the other revolutionary secret societies aspiring to political power, but, in 1784, the Elector of Bavaria made an abortive effort to stamp out the conspiracy which, being international, was necessarily impervious to local measures. The poison of subversion was working in France where on January 21, 1793, it culminated in the death on the scaffold of Louis XVI, an event that in masonic jargon is known as " The second cannon shot ". The capture of Rome by Cadorna in 1870 was the third.

As a further confirmation of concerted masonic action let us bring yet another illustration :

In the first days of the French Revolution (1848), 300 Freemasons, with their banners flying over brethren of every rite representing French Freemasonry, marched to the Hotel de Ville, and there offered their banner to the Provisional Government of the Republic, proclaiming aloud the part they had just taken in the glorious Revolution.

M. de Lamartine made them this answer, which was received with enthusiasm by the Freemasonry Lodges: " It is from the depths of your lodges that the ideas have emanated, first in the dark, then in the twilight, and now in the full light of day, which have laid the foundations of the Revolutions of 1789, 1830, and 1849. " [1]

Fourteen days later, a new deputation of the " Grand Orient ", adorned with their Masonic scarfs and jewels, repaired to the Hotel de Ville. They were received by A. Crémieux [2], and Garnier Pagès, attended by pages, who also wore their Masonic emblems. The Representative of the Grand Master spoke thus : — " French Freemasonry cannot contain her universal burst of sympathy with the great social and national movement which has just been effected. The Freemasons hail with joy the triumph of their principles, and boast of being able to say that the whole country has received through you a Masonic consecration. Forty thousand Freemasons in 500 lodges, forming but one heart and one soul, assure you here of their support happily to lead to the end the work of regeneration so gloriously begun ". Brother Crémieux, a Jewish brother, member of the Provisional Government, replied : " Citizens and brothers of the Grand Orient, the Provisional Government accepts with pleasure your useful and complete adhesion. The Republic exists in Freemasonry. If the Republic do as the Freemasons have done, it will become the glowing pledge of union with all men, in all parts of the globe, and on all sides of our triangle. " [3]

If the wielding of power and their national political economic and financial strength over the peoples by a few hidden hands can result in such calamitous upheavals as the French Revolution, the World War of 1914 and the Russian Revolution of 1917, were it not wise to apply the lesson of experience to ascertain whether the supposed harmless Masonry of today does not again serve as a screen or curtain behind which thrive secret societies no less subversive, revolutionary and demoralising than those which we have just so briefly sketched ?

We know that most of them such as the Martinists, the Illuminatis, the Scottish Rite and the Egyptian Lodges of Memphis and Mizraim still exist today, so, on what grounds can we base our assumption of a change of their revolutionary and anti-christian principles? In the face of late events, namely, the Peace Conference, the creation of the League of Nations, the amalgamation of international resources, the confiscatory inheritance taxes, the development of international finance, the proposed establishment of an international non-christian cult, have we the right to refrain from lifting the veil of Masonry behind which subversive movements are so conveniently hidden?

It is necessary to give a brief review of the history of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites. This society originates from the rite called Scottish of Perfection or of Heredom, in twenty-five degrees, worked in the eighteenth century in Europe by Masons devoting themselves to occultism. The following statement with regard to the introduction of this rite in America is made in a report by Albert Pike :

" We can soon learn how it was that the Council degrees came, about 1766, from France, and not from Prussia. In 1761, the Lodges and Councils of the superior degrees being extended throughout Europe, Frederic II (Frederic the Great), King of Prussia, as Grand Commander of the, Order of Princes of the Royal Secret, or 32 degrees, was by general consent acknowledged and recognized as Sovereign and Supreme Head of the Scotch Rite. " [1]

" On the 25th Oct. 1762, the Grand Masonic Constitutions were finally ratified in Berlin and proclaimed for the government of all Masonic bodies working in the Scotch Rite over the two hemispheres; and in the same year they were transmitted to the Jew, Stephen Morin, who had been appointed, at the request of Lacorne, in August, 1761, Inspector General for the New World by the Grand Consistory of Princes of the Royal Secret, convened at Paris, under the presidency of Chaillon de Joinville, representative of Frederic (the Great) and Substitute General of the Order. [2] It will be remembered that the 33rd degree was not then created; and under Frederic the Great, there was no rank higher than the 32nd degree nor anybody superior to a Consistory. " [3]

••• " He (Morin) probably — ignorant charlatan as he was — mistook Frederick II, Grandson of Barbarossa, an actual King of Jerusalem, for his contemporary Frederick II of Prussia. "

Morin went to Santo Domingo where he was joined by Moses M. Hays and Henry Andrew Francken. The latter founded a branch of the rite in Jamaica, while to the former was entrusted the task of founding lodges in North America. The Jew Hays established a Sublime Lodge of Perfection in Boston, of which he constituted himself Grand Master and charged one of his co-religionscs, and brother Mason, Isaac Dacosta, who, in 1758 had founded the St. Andrew Lodge in Boston, with the mission of introducing Masonry into South Carolina.

Though on August 27, in 1766, Bro. Morin's patent was revoked by the Grand Body in Paris for " propagating strange and monstrous doctrines " exercising bad faith etc., etc. [4], and given to Bro. Martin, Morin continued constituting chapters and councils and, with Sovereign Grand Inspector General, The 33rd and ultimate degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. It is not known when or where this grade originated. The theory which ascribes it to the King of Prussia has long since been discarded by intelligent Masons. The number of Inspectors in a kingdom or republic must not exceed nine. These, organized in a body, constitute the Supreme Council, which claims jurisdiction over all the Ineffable and Sublime degrees. The presiding officer is styled Sovereign Grand Commander.

See also Blanchard 33, Scottish Rite Masonry, vol. II, p. 484.

" And though made within the memory of men now living, we read, in the same Note by Macoy : It is not certainly known, when or where this degree originated ; that is to say, its origin is concealed. This is the most infamous Masonic act, next to burning their records of fifty-nine years before the war, (American Civil War) to hide treason. But slavery then ruled the country, and this 33rd Charleston degree ruled the lodge. And the Southern lodge-rooms worked up the most unjustifiable and infamous war on record. The Southern people "were dragooned into it, by leaders secretly sworn to obey Masonic leaders, or have their throats cut. "

Dacosta, in 1783, seventeen years after his patent had been annulled, he erected in Charleston " The Grand Lodge of Perfection ".

Dacosta was its Grand Master. Joseph M. Meyers was his eventual successor, and " when the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem was established in Charleston, February 20, 1788, he, as one of the Deputy-Inspectors who established it, deposited in the archives certified copies of the degree of Royal and Select Masters from guidance and government of that new body. "[5]

The two Masonic powers of Boston and Charleston created numerous lodges and inner shrines in the United States and gave themselves the title of Mother Lodges of the United States.

In view of the historical fact that the American War of Independence broke out in 1773, it is interesting to find that the Lodge of Perfection, at Albany (New-York), was directed as early as 1770 to transmit reports to Berlin.[6] This indeed becomes significant when considered with the circumstances surrounding the " Boston Tea Party ", which are so ably described in The History of Freemasonry and Concordant Orders by Stillson and Hughan, that we take the liberty of here transcribing some lines from this remarkable publication :[7]

" Grand Master (Joseph) Warren was appointed on March 3, 1772, by the Grand Master of Scotland, Grand Master of Masons for the Continent of America.

" Tradition says that the ' Mohawks ', the ' High Sons of Liberty ', met at the lodge at the ' Green Dragon Tavern' which was denounced by the Tories as a nest of traitors '. General Joseph Warren and other leading Masons made it the headquarters of the Revolution. On November 30, 1773, the Lodge of St. Andrew's (that founded by Dacosta and of which Warren was a member) was closed without the transaction of any business, in consequence of the fewness of the brethren present, the consignees of tea having broken up the brethren's nerve. On the 16th of December following, it is said the line of march was taken from the lodge-room to destroy the tea on the then arriving ships.

" On April 8, 1776, the Grand Lodge was convened for the performance of a sad and solemn duty, that of attending the funeral of Grand Master Warren, who was killed at Bunker Hill. "

In 1738, Pope Clement XII had excommunicated the Freemasons.

We extract the following instructive points from Adriano Lemmi by Margiotta :[8]

" Sovereign Princes of Jerusalem was the title born by the deputies of the Grand Master when they received missions to found lodges and visit regions where they had high jurisdiction. The name was that of a function and not a degree of initiation and there was one deputy only for each region. On May 15, 1781, at a convention of Deputy Inspectors convoked by Hays and Meyers at Philadelphia, Moses Cohen was named deputy inspector of Jamaica, as Francken, originally appointed by Stephen Morin to found lodges there, had neglected his mandate. Soon another Jewish Freemason came to Jamaica. This was Hyman Isaac Long who derived his powers from Morin, through Francken, Hays, Spitzer and Moses Cohen, and who was to play a great role in the sect.

Isaac Long was the son of Isaac Long, a Dutch writer, one of the foremost Moravian brethren, and closely connected with Count Zinzendorf.

" The convention of Philadelphia had decided that, in the future, there might be several Sovereign Princes of Jerusalem per region. By virtue of this decision, Moses Cohen conferred this title on Isaac Long who, finding his sphere of action too restricted at Jamaica soon went to Charleston. He was an active man who had formed great plans. Not only did he create other Lodges, but he brought other rites (such as that of Royal Arch) under the obedience of the Mother Lodge at Charleston. The Mother Lodge at Boston however did not prosper.

" Nevertheless, when one thinks of the immense territory of the United States, one understands that the Lodges, at the start, could only be very few and far between, so masonry vegetated for a long time in North America. In 1795, Isaac Long went to Europe, leaving Colonel John Mitchell the direction of the Mother Lodge of Charleston.

" When he returned to the United States, six years later, he brought the plan of his great idea, which was the creation of a rite of 33 degrees destined to become universal. With Colonel John Mitchell, Doctor Frederic Dalcho, Abraham Alexander, Isaac Auld and Emanuel de la Motta, all Sovereign Princes of Jerusalem, he constituted this rite, taking twenty-five degrees of the system of Heredom, six Templar grades in which were merged four degrees borrowed from the German Illuminism[9] of Adam Weishaupt, and two grades called grades of administration, the last of which supplanted the function of Deputy Inspector (Sovereign Prince of Jerusalem) and took the title of Sovereign Grand Inspector General 33rd and last degree. This was his crowning achievement. Isaac Long gave the institution the name of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites, and the first great constitutions were signed at Charleston, on May 31st 1801. "

[9] The 9th, 10th, 11th and 21st degrees.

It was Isaac Long who created de Grasse and his father-in-law, de la Hogue, Deputy Grand Inspectors General.

" In order to insure great popularity for the rite, he linked it directly with the Templars by a mysterious legend. The high grades of other rites had already thought of pretending to avenge the Templars, condemned in the Middle Ages by the Papacy and the Monarchy. In the ceremonial of certain initiations, a pretext was thus contrived for swearing hatred and death to royalty and the church.

But Isaac Long had found better than that.

According to the tradition, the Knights Templar, convicted of secret conspiracy and maleficent occultism, had taken refuge in Scotland where they succeeded in eluding their pursuers. It was said that they had succeeded in buying the head of the Grand Master Jacques Bourgignon de Molay from the executioner, after it had been severed from the body and that they had contrived to place in safety the monstrous idol called Baphomet which they worshipped in their secret assemblies.

When Long arrived in Charleston in 1801, he brought with him this Baphomet which he claimed to have recovered as well as a skull which he declared to be that of the Grand Master Molay. They were signal relics, holy things! Long affirmed that he had been assured by the Good God in person that victory over the Church was contingent on these precious relics, and that the Templar Baphomet was the Palladium which would lead Freemasonry to victory ".

To this other authors have added that this skull is known as the relic of Saint Jacques and is placed upon a high pedestal in the Hall of the Supreme Council of Scottish Rites, in the temple at Charleston, where annually, on the 11th of March, it talks and vomits flames.

Its conversational propensities were however not revealed until Gallatin Mackey, who claimed to be the reincarnation of Jacques de Molay, developed the proclivity for going into an annual trance on the 11th of March. This trance lasted about one hour, during which the skull conversed volubly about itself and all sorts of other things."

Pursuing the subject further, Margiotta states that:

" The Mother Lodge of Boston had ceased functioning for some years but that of Charleston, reconstituted according to the new Scottish System in 33 degrees, became the root of the tree which was to spread its branches over the entire world. The Superior Lodge of the Grand Sovereign Inspectors General, in each country, was to be called the Supreme Council, and it is from the Supreme Council of Charleston that all the others were to emanate. It is thus the first Supreme Council of the Globe.

" Such is the history of the origin of this rite which attracted Mazzini's attention for, during the years which preceded the taking of Rome by the army of Piedmont, he could see that the previsions of Isaac Long had been realized. So it was in Pike, the successor of Long, himself the Sovereign Commander Grand Master, that the great revolutionary conspirator sought an ally in his work the object of which was the total destruction of the church. "[10]

The following address, [11] issued from Paris by Giuseppe Mazzini[12] to his friends in Italy, October 1846, fully sets forth the deep laid plans by which Freemasonry sought to engage all classes.

" In great countries, it is by the people we must go to regeneration ; in yours, by the princes. We must absolutely make them of our side. It is easy. The Pope will march in reform through principle and of necessity ; the King of Piedmont through the idea of the crown of Italy; the Grand Duke of Tuscany through inclination and irritation ; the King of Naples through force ; and the little princes will have to think of other things besides reform. The people yet in servitude can only sing its wants. Profit by the least concession to assemble the masses, were it only to testify gratitude.... Fetes, songs, assemblies, numerous relations established among men of all opinions, suffice to make ideas gush out, to give the people a feeling of its strength and render it exacting... Italy is still what France was before the Revolution ; she wants, then, Mirabeau, Lafayette, and others. A great lord may be held back by his material interests, but he may be taken by vanity. Leave him the chief place whilst he will go with you. There are few who would go to the end.

" The essential thing is, that the goal of the great revolution be unknown to them ; let us never permit them to see more than the first step. In Italy, the clergy are rich in money and the faith of the people. You must manage them in both those interests, and as much as possible make their influence of use.

[12] See Larousse: Grand Dictionnaire Universel du XIX^{e} siècle. Mazzini. 1808-1872. He had become the chief of a particular sect much given to mysticism. Without being a catholic he was profoundly religious... In Oct. 1871, he organized in Rome a congress of workmen which attracted little attention. " I am not a christian.", he wrote to Daniel Stern.

" Learned discussions are neither necessary nor opportune. There are regenerative words which contain all that need be often repeated to the people. Liberty, rights of man, progress, equality, fraternity, are what the people will understand above all when opposed to the words, despotism, privileges, tyranny, etc., etc.

" Nearly two thousand years ago, a great philosopher, called Christ, preached the fraternity which the world yet seeks. Accept, then, all the help offered you. Whoever will make one step towards you must be yours till he quits you. A king gives a more liberal law ; applaud him, and ask for the one that must follow. A minister shows intention of progress ; give him out as a model. A lord affects to pout at his privileges ; put yourself under his direction if he will stop, you will have time to let him go : he will remain isolated, and without strength against you, and you will have a thousand ways to make unpopular all who oppose your projects. All personal discontent, all deceptions, all bruised ambition, may serve the cause of progress by giving them a. new direction. The army is the greatest enemy to the progress of socialism. It must be paralysed by the education of the people. Clerical power is personified in the Jesuits. The odium of that name is already a power for the socialists. Make use of it. Associate! Associate! everything is in that word. The secret societies give irresistible strength to the party that can call upon them. Do not fear to see them split: the more the better. All go to the same end by different ways. The secret will be often violated ; so much the better ; the secret is necessary to give security to the members, but a certain transparency is needed to inspire fire to the stationary.

Courage, then and persevere! "

That Freemasonry has not always enjoyed immunity the following quotation will serve to show.

" In the year 1735, the States General of Holland proscribed the secret Masonic League, and the French government imitated the example in 1735. In 1757, in Scotland, the Synod of Stirling adopted a resolution debarring all adhering Freemasons from the ordinances of religion.

" The Great Council of Berne proscribed Freemasonry in 1748, Bavaria followed in 1799, and its total suppression took place in 1845, The Regency of Milan and the Governor of Venice acted in a similar manner by it in 1814. John VI, King of Portugal, prohibited Freemasonry in the strictest manner in 1816, and renewed it in 1824. In 1820 several lodges were closed in Prussia for political intrigues ; and in the same year Alexander I banished the order from the whole Russian Empire. A similar occurrence took place four years later in Modena and Spain... Yet today, some men boast of belonging to a secret society, the members of which were declared, by an Act of George III, felons, and liable to transportation for life ! "[13]

Speaking of Masons, in 1876, Richard Carlile wrote : " Let them not wait to be disbanded by the Legislature, as a useless and mischievous association : but let them anticipate the spirit of a coming age... The deluge of mystery has not only overwhelmed Babylon but Egypt, Greece, Rome, and will, if we do not light up the spirit of revelation in time, most assuredly overthrow this British nation. It is even now in danger, from the dissension of its internal mysteries, of becoming an easy prey to some more barbarously mysterious power. Thus fell Babylon, Egypt, Jerusalem, Greece,

"Rome, and why not Britain, if Britain retain those seeds of disease and weakness? Tell me not that the safety of a country is in its superstition, or in its secret and mysterious bands." [14]

This warning however passed unheeded. During the time that has elapsed between the publication of Carlile's book and the present day, we see England honeycombed with societies, subversive of law, order and morals.

Numerous are the homes which have become resorts where, today, the shameful orgies of Medmenham are enacted anew. They are the secret haunts of social cliques and associations, and behind such screens as art, antiques and dressmaking thrive, as though they were highly protected, the white slave traffic, the dope traffic and gambling which serve as a drag-net and decoy for the service of the Great God Pan.

CHAPTER XXIX

GENERAL PEPE AND THE " ONE BIG UNION "

At the present moment, when we are surfeited with the words unions and mergers, to say nothing of cartels, a new interest is awakened by the perusal of Thomas Frost's book on Secret Societies, from which we extract the following :

" Two results of great importance in the progress of the European revolution proceeded from the events that occurred at Naples in 1820-21. One was the reorganization of the Carbonari, consequent upon the publicity given to the system when it had brought about the revolution, and the secrecy in which it had hitherto been enveloped was no longer deemed necessary ; the other was the extension of the system beyond the Alps. When the Neapolitan revolution had been effected, the Carbonari emerged from their mystery, published their constitution and statutes, and ceased to conceal their patents and their cards of membership. In the Papal States, in Lombardy, and in Piedmont, the veil of secrecy was maintained for a little time longer, partly through the adoption by the Carbonari in those portions of the peninsula of symbols and pass-words different from those of the Neapolitan lodges, partly by the formation of the various societies of the Adelphi, the Guelphs, the Brother Protectors, and the Italian Federati, which were similar, and yet not the same, though all holding the same principles, and having a common object. But after the collapse of the Piedmontese revolution, so much doubt and fear existed among the leaders as to the extent to which the secrets of the system were known that they were all effaced, and consigned to oblivion. The scattered directors of the movement drew together the broken threads of the conspiracy as soon as they were able, but with a new nomenclature and a new symbolism.[1]

" The dispersion of the Carbonaro leaders had, at the same time, the effect of extending the system in France, where it had been introduced towards the end of 1820 and creating centres of revolutionary agitation in the foreign cities in which they temporarily located themselves.

General Pepe proceeded to Barcelona when the counter-revolution was imminent at Naples, and his life was no longer safe there ; and to the same city went several of the Piedmontese revolutionists when their country was Austrianized after the same lawless fashion.

Scalvini and Ugoni took refuge at Geneva ; others of the proscribed proceeded to London. This dispersion, and the progress which Carbonarism was making in France, suggested to General Pepe the idea of an international secret society, which should combine for a common purpose the advanced political reformers of all the European States.

Shortly after his arrival at Madrid, to which city he proceeded from Barcelona, he propounded to two or three ultra-Liberal deputies the plan of this society, the object of which, he says,

> ' was to enable the members to correspond and by these means preclude the possibility of a renewal of that want of union which had been experienced amongst the most noted patriots of Spain and Portugal, Naples and Piedmont. Several deputies of the Cortes were inclined to regard such an association as extremely beneficial to the public cause, more especially in their own peninsula, where a great want of concord existed between the Portuguese and the Spaniards. The society was accordingly founded; several members of the Cortes formed part of it, as well as General Ballesteros, Councillor of State. I still preserve the regulations of this society, the great object of which was to open a communication between the most enlightened patriots of the different cities in Europe. It was decided that I should exert myself to give it extension in Lisbon, London and Paris ; and that, in the event of my success, other members should proceed to propagate it over Italy and Germany. '

" Having organized in Madrid the first circle of the Constitutional Society of European Patriots, Pepe proceeded to Lisbon, where he was even more successful in his efforts than in the Spanish capital. Two of the Ministers, and several Councillors of State and members of the Cortes signified their adhesion, and, before Pepe left, a flourishing circle was formed, under the direction of Almeida-Moraes, the president of the Cortes. From Lisbon the general proceeded by sea to London, where, as he says, he soon found that ' a secret society in England among men of mind is a thing quite out of the order of probability '. He mentioned the society to a few, but met with no encouragement. The Duke of Sussex and Sir Robert "Wilson read the statutes and regulations of the society, but only as a matter of curiosity. "

This curiosity is doubtless responsible for the creation of what was later known as The International Committee of London. The particular Duke of Sussex, here referred to was Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England from 1813-1843, and this interview with the Italian revolutionary is of great significance showing as it does the effort, at this date, to subvert English Freemasonry to the aims of The International. According to the system which worked out later, English Freemasonry retained, to all appearances, its original autonomy.

But to proceed with the statement of Frost :

" Pepe next opened a correspondence with Lafayette, who hailed the proposed international organization of the secret societies as ' a Holy Alliance opposed to that of despotism, ' and at once associated himself with it. He, with Manuel and Argenson, the triumvirate that was supposed to have directed the Associated Patriots of 1816, were earnestly engaged at that time in the reorganisation of the Carbonari of France, upon a new system, which promised more perfect impenetrability ; and Buonarotti was similarly engaged at Geneva, with a view to renewed operations in Italy. "

" It has been doubted whether Lafayette, Manuel[2], and Argenson[3], with others who were supposed to be the leaders of the Carbonari in France, were actually the chiefs of the society; and, with regard to Manuel at least, the point is not susceptible of positive demonstration. There are, in all countries, men of superior station who, when a collision between the people and the Government is impending, are aware of what is going on, and hold themselves prepared to step to the front when the movement has advanced to a point at which they can do so with advantage to the cause and safety to themselves ; but who take care not to commit themselves to it prematurely, or to allow any trace to exist of their connexion with it. This has been thought by some to have been the real position of the individuals whom others have asserted to have been the actual leaders of the Carbonari, as they had previously been held to be of the Associated Patriots ; but though there is no absolute proof that they were the Grand Elect there can be very little, if any, moral doubt upon the point. "

The Author of Secret Societies of the European Revolution writes the foregoing paragraph but fails to explain it.

Who and what are the men he refers to ?

Such indeed are the political principles adopted by the leaders of Freemasonry. Therein lies its power. As soon as any political movement becomes inevitable, as soon as public pressure on an existing government becomes too strong, this sect, in the name of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity, takes the secret leadership of the opposing faction. Through the new government which becomes the subservient tool of its capricious master, who, at any moment, may suppress its fledgling, by creating and backing a new opposition, it holds, not the balance of power but all the power.

And Frost further adds :

" In 1831, the French Government had not only proclaimed a policy of non-intervention, but had expressly declared that France would not permit intervention on the part of any other Power in the affairs of any nation in Europe. Lafayette was deceived by these professions, and assured Misley (the agent of the Masonic Revolutionary Committee) that the Italians had nothing to fear. "

In that year Masonry made an attempt to cast off the Austrian yoke in Italy by using France as its base of operations. Owing however to French non-cooperation the revolution failed.

" A few days afterwards, Misley and Linati arrived at Marseilles and chartered a vessel, aboard which they put a couple of cannon and twelve hundred muskets. They were joined by General Pepe, Count Grilenzoni, the advocate Mantovani, Dr. Franceschini, and Lieutenant Mori; but, at the last moment, the Prefect received a telegraphic order from Paris to prevent their embarkation and lay an embargo on the vessel. General Pepe evaded the vigilance of the police, however, and contrived to reach Hyères, where he heard of the entrance of the Austrians into Bologna, and thereupon abandoned his intention of giving the aid of his reputation and experience to the revolutionary cause. "

In connexion with the agitation provoked in Piedmont, during the reign of Charles Albert, by Mazzini's " Young Italy " movement in 1848, the veteran General Pepe again comes into prominence. On March 29, 1848, he arrived at Naples, and was sent for by King Ferdinand who invited him " to form a Ministry, of which he should have the Presidency, with the Ministries of War and Marine. " Every difficulty however was thrown in the way of Pepe's projected military operations, " the Naval Department insisting that the fleet could not convey troops, the King interposing various delays and the Pope refusing permission for more than one battalion or squadron to pass daily. Seventeen thousand troops at last started, but with orders not to cross the Po until the King commanded the passage ! "[4]

. Thomas Frost, op. cit., vol. II, p. 174.

There was much marching and countermarching but the secret societies had not yet won.

The tangled history of the " Young Italy " movement in its early stages is well explained by Thomas Frost in Secret Societies of the European Revolution, and anyone particularly interested in that phase of political history would do well to refer to this book. Due allowance must however be made for certain omissions and inaccurate deductions on the part of the author who, in 1876, could not have access to information which is now available to anyone seeking it.

ALBERT PIKE AND GIUSEPPE MAZZINI

This Chapter is compiled largely of extracts, some transcribed verbatim and others elaborated to include information necessary to the reader, from :

Adriano Lemmi wrote : " The anniversary of Sept. 20, the day on which Rome became the capital of Italy, when the temporal power of the Pope was overthrown, concerns Freemasonry exclusively. It is an anniversary, a purely masonic festival, which marks the date of the arrival of Italian Freemasonry in Rome, the aim for which it had for many years been striving. "

The date of Sept. 20, 1870, is not only an Italian date, it is above all a great masonic date, for it marks the organization of a supreme rite, introduced into Freemasonry, to lend a satanic character to the vague divinity more or less well known by the name of " The Great Architect of the Universe ".

During the last years preceding the capture of Rome, Mazzini had established relations with the Masonic chief of Scottish Rites, Albert Pike, President of the Supreme Council of Charleston, United States.

Pike was a great student of the Cabala and the occult.

Mazzini had understood that Freemasonry was a powerful lever with which to revolutionize the world, but he saw it divided into numerous rites, often rivals, and even hostile to one another. Aspiring to Italian Unity as a means of breaking the temporal power of the Holy See, he dreamt of a union of masonry throughout the world to destroy the church itself as a spiritual power.

He addressed himself to Pike in preference to another Grand Orient or Supreme Council chief because of the many international ramifications of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites, as Pike, its recognised chief, had succeeded in gaining considerable influence over all the Supreme National Councils of this rite which had hitherto been of a purely dogmatic and liturgic character.

Mazzini, who was very practical, said that it would be inadvisable to favour one rite only to the exclusion of all the others. In a letter to Albert Pike, dated Jan. 22, 1870, he writes. " We must allow all the federations to continue just as they are, with their systems, their central authorities and their divers modes of correspondence between high grades of the same rite, organized as they are at present, but we must create a supreme rite, which will remain unknown, to which we will call those Masons of high degree whom we shall select. With regard to their brothers in masonry, these men must be pledged to the strictest secrecy. Through this supreme rite, we will govern all Freemasonry which will become the one international centre, the more powerful because its direction will be unknown. "

Thus at the time when Mazzini formed the scheme of unifying Freemasonry by creating one central universal direction reserved to a small number of high masons chosen with the greatest care, he selected Albert Pike as an ally.

Pike was born in Boston on Dec. 29, 1809.

His parents, in modest circumstances, succeeded in giving him a course at Harvard College. He then went to join his family at Newbury port. There, for a while, he taught in a primary school till he moved to Fairhaven where he continued his career of pedagogue.

In 1833 he went to Little Rock.

From 1830 to 1840, Masonry in the United States had fallen into disrepute and almost ceased to exist. After the torture and death of William Morgan in 1826, many lodges faded into oblivion to resuscitate only after the storm of public censure had abated.

During the Civil War, Pike served as brigadier-general in the Confederate army. The Confederate government named him Indian Commissioner and charged him with the conduct of negotiations with the most powerful savage tribes, to raise an army of their warriors. To facilitate his organization of this army he was made Governor of Indian Territory, and once these hordes were united, they were placed under his command. What followed can be easily understood as his troops were composed of Chickasaws, Comanches, Creeks, Cherokees, Miamis, Osages, Kansas and Chocaws, with all of whom he personally was on the best of terms. Among them, he was known as " the faithful pale-face friend and protector ". It was no longer war — it was an orgy of murder and atrocities so terrible that the foreign powers interfered. Representations made by England, threatening intervention in the name of humanity, finally compelled Jefferson Davis to disband his auxiliary Indian troops.

Mrs. Liliana Pike Room gives us the following chronological history of her father's early Masonic career. She says that he became an Oddfellow, some time in the forties, and in 1850 entered the Masonic Fraternity. After that he gradually ceased to be active as an Oddfellow. Soon becoming prominent in Masonry he advanced rapidly to the highest honours. His Masonic record is as follows :

" He was initiated in Western Star Lodge at Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1850.

" Raised to the degree of Worshipful Master, in Western Star Lodge No. 1, Little Rock, Arkansas, in July 1850.

" He became Charter Member of Magnolia Lodge, No. 60, Little Rock, Arkansas, and was Worshipful Master ad vitam of that lodge in 1853.

' Exalted in Union Chapter No. 2 R. A. M. Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1850.

" Greeted as Royal and Select Master at Washington, D. C, 1852.

" Created Knight Templar 1858 Washington Commandary No. 1. K. T. in Washington.

" Elected Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter of Arkansas, in 1853.

" In 1856, met Brother Theodor S. Parvin of Connecticut and received degrees of A. A. (Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite) from 4° to 32° inclusive, on March 20th, 1853.

" Coroneted Honorary Inspector General, April 25th, 1857. Crowned Active Member of Supreme Council, Southern Jurisdiction March 20th, 1858, at Charleston, South Carolina, and on the resignation of Brother John Honour as Grand Commander, was elected M. P. Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, January 2nd, 1859. "

Mrs. Room further adds " I will state here what he told me himself, that Sovereign Grand Commander Honour, his predecessor, resigned that office expressly that he might be elected Sovereign Grand Commander. "

The secretary of the Supreme Council at Charleston, at this time, and its ruling power was Pike's great friend, Gallatin Mackey.

On the other hand, Margiotta gives the following particulars :

" Towards this epoch, Pike and Mackey received the visit of Longfellow. This Longfellow was a Scottish Rites Mason who, in 1837, had taken up his residence in the United States, becoming the intimate friend and private secretary of Moses Holbrook, then Sovereign Commander of the Supreme Council of Charleston. The intimacy between Longfellow and Holbrook became quickly serious as both had thoroughly studied the occult sciences and enjoyed discussing the mysteries of the Cabala.

' When Longfellow asked his Grand Master's permission to join the order of the Oddfellows for the purpose of studying its organization, his request was granted.[1]

" Oddfellow is the name adopted by the members of a society founded in London towards 1788. Their meeting places were called Lodges, as in Masonry, and many were dissolved under the suspicion that their character was subversive, though the visible aims of the fraternity were simply mutual help and diversion. But the society, changing its location and its name, continued a precarious existence till, in 1809, several members founded a new lodge at Manchester. Then some of them separated in 1813 and formed the independent Order of Oddfellows (I. 0. 0. F.) the members of the general council of which were all to reside at Manchester. The order was introduced in America, in 1819, by the blacksmith (Thomas) Wildey, who founded Washington Lodge No. 1, at Baltimore. This town became the headquarters of the American and Canadian Oddfellows and, thanks to the energy of Wildey, the order made great headway and spread with rapidity.

" Longfellow and Holbrook, while exchanging views on the Cabala, had formed the project of creating a Satanic rite in which the adepts would be instructed in Black Magic, but Holbrook, the Grand Master of the Supreme Council of Charleston, who had already composed a suitable ritual and sacrilegious mass called Adonaicide Mass, died, retarding the fulfilment of the project. " He was succeeded by John Honour, after whose death the dream of the Jew, Moses Holbrook, to subvert Masonry, was fulfilled by Albert Pike on a gigantic scale.

" Longfellow left Charleston after the death of his patron and, in 1854, went to Hamilton, Canada. There, with the authorisation of Wildey, he submitted the rituals of Holbrook to this flourishing society and it was decided to graft a second and separate class of adepts, practising secret Satanism, on to the original body. But Wildey, becoming suddenly jealous, refused the use of his premises. "

"Undiscouraged by obstacles placed in his way by Wildey, Longfellow returned to Charleston in 1857, where he had interviews with Pike and Mackey to whom he revealed his plan. The innovation of Longfellow was declared to be marvellous, but Pike, who had himself already thought of introducing Luciferianism into the inner shrines of Scottish Rites Freemasonry, would not take a definite stand, so Longfellow addressed himself directly to the Grand Master John Honour. He seemed indifferent to the subject on the grounds that one could not introduce Satanism into the Supreme Council of Scottish Rites without the knowledge of his lieutenant-commander, Charles Furman, who was opposed to changes of this kind. Finally Longfellow obtained from Wildey the authorisation secretly to use the Order of the Oddfellows for the initiations of the second class, which was to form an absolutely secret rite and to have its centre at Hamilton. The adepts of the second class Oddfellows, practising Satanism, then took the name of Re-Theurgist-Optimates [2] (used by the Palladists also) and Longfellow became the Grand Priest of the ' New Evocative Magic

As a consequence of the intrigues and manoeuvres of some members of the Masonic organization, the Translation : " Several philosophers of this period followed Quintus Aucler in this revival of the ideas of the school of Alexandria. It is towards the same period that Dupont (de Nemours) published his Philosophy of the Universe, founded on the same elements of adoration of planetary intelligences.

Likewise, he established, between man and God, a chain of immortal spirits which he called " Optimates " and through whom any illuminé can have communication. It is always the doctrine of the " ammoneans " gods, the " eons " or " eloims " of antiquity.

office of Grand Master had become an elective position which was now destined to be filled by the particular member of the Fraternity selected by the conspirators. Among these was Gallatin Mackey, a Luciferian, who proposed Albert Pike, another Luciferian, for the post of Grand Master of the Supreme Council of Charleston to which he was duly elected on January 6th 1859, his candidacy being unopposed.

Margiotta adds :

" Once Grand Master, Pike reestablished the supremacy of his Supreme Council and succeeded gradually in becoming an important Masonic personage and the real chief of Scottish Rites ".

In 1806, a jeweller, Joseph Cerneau, founded a rival rite in New York composed of the same 33 degrees of initiation as the order of which he himself was chief. This rite, which was later worked by F. Foulhouze, an American, excited the ire of the Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Freemasonry who waged a ceaseless warfare of excommunication against it.

From letters scattered through different masonic archives, it is evident that Mazzini formed his great project after 1866. The grand patriarch of the sect in Europe, Lord Palmerston, had died. Convinced that the power he had wielded was purely the result of personal influence with the different chiefs and that, not being based on an efficient organization it was unlikely to endure, Mazzini set himself to study the problem of the international organization of Freemasonry, and in 1870 reached an agreement with Pike for the creation of the Supreme Rite.

The Franco-Prussian war, which, enabled the King of Piedmont, already called King of Italy, to take Rome, favoured the abolition of the temporal power of the Pope, and at this time the constitution of central high masonry was decreed and signed between Albert Pike and Giuseppe Mazzini. The act of creation is dated Sept. 20, 1870, the day upon which the army of invasion, commanded by the Freemason, General Cadorna, entered the Eternal City.

The two founders divided their powers according to the following plan. To Pike was given dogmatic authority and the title of Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Freemasonry, while Mazzini held the executive authority with the title of Sovereign Chief of Political Action. Mazzini evinced great deference towards the views of the Patriarch of Charleston and begged him to draw up the statutes of the grades of the Supreme Secret Rite which would thus be the liturgic bonds of the members of centralized high masonry.

Albert Pike, in honour of his Templar Baphomet, which was in the keeping of his first and historic Supreme Council, named the order the New and Reformed Palladian Rite or New and Reformed Palladium. [3]

" It was agreed ", continues Margiotta, " that the existence of this rite would be kept strictly secret and that no mention of it would ever be made in the assemblies of the Lodges and Inner Shrines of other rites, even when by accident, the meeting might happen to be composed exclusively of brothers having the perfect initiation, for the secret of the new institution was only to be divulged with the greatest caution to a chosen few belonging to the ordinary high grades. *

[3] In his Cyclopædia of Fraternities Stevens writes that the ' Order of the Palladium' was founded in 1730 and soon afterwards introduced in Charleston where it remained inactive until 1886, It blossomed anew under the name of ' Reformed Palladium ' and gave a new impulse to the traditions of High Masonry. Stevens adds that the Palladium is little known as the number of its members is strictly limited and the deepest secrecy surrounds all its deliberations.

" To recruit adepts, they planned to use some members of the other rites, but in the beginning they meant to rely principally on those among the initiates of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites who were already addicted to occultism.

" Everyone knows that in masonry from the degree of Master, a mason may, without being a member of a lodge, assist at sessions as a visitor, at Lodges not belonging to his own rite or even to his own national federation, provided he is a regular active mason and presents himself at a lodge working at a degree equal to, or below the highest degree of which he is possessed. Thus a Rose Croix (18th degree Scottish Rites), travelling in any country, may, if he frequents assiduously his lodge and chapter, present himself at any lodge of a degree equal, to or inferior to his own and assist at a seance, but he cannot enter an areopagus of Knights Kadosch (30th degree), even one of his own rite. A 33rd would be well received everywhere, in any country, in any rite the existence of which is acknowledged. Thus it was particularly the initiates of the thirty-third degree Scottish Rites, who, owing to their extensive international ramifications, were privileged to recruit adepts for Palladism. That is why the supreme rite created its Triangles (the name given to Palladian Lodges) by degrees, but these were established on a firm base, the lowliest of its initiates being brothers long tested in ordinary masonry.

" One will better understand these precautions knowing that Palladism is essentially a Luciferian rite. Its religion is Manichean neo-gnosticism, teaching that the divinity is dual and that Lucifer is the equal of Adonay, with Lucifer, the God of Light and Goodness struggling for humanity against Adonay the God of Darkness and Evil. In stating this principle of the secret cult of the triangles, Albert Pike had only specified and unveiled the dogmas of the high grades of all other masonries, for in no matter what rite, the Great Architect of the Universe is not the God worshipped by the Christians.

4. Margiotta, op. cit., p. 97 et seq.

" For other reasons these precautions were still necessary, in order to render possible the exercise of a supreme central directing power, reaching all the rites through the personal influence of the Elects and Perfect Initiates, these being invested with privileges, and giving the impulse, which emanated from the source of the highest universal authority. If Brothers, not fully initiated, had suspected the existence of this supreme organization, it is evident that, in the ordinary Lodges there would always have been a tendency to resist the motions of such privileged persons.

" To insure the creation and good working of this formidable machine of Palladism, Mazzini had reserved for himself the office of Chief of Political Action nor had he hesitated in bowing to the will of the Patriarch of Charleston who, by his preponderance in Scottish Rites, could easily penetrate all countries of the globe with "the new institution. That is the reason for Mazzini giving supremacy to the dogmatic over the political authority in International Freemasonry.

' The Holy See of the Dogma for the whole masonic world was set up at Charleston, the sacred city of the Palladium. Pike, the Sovereign Pontiff of Lucifer, was the president of the Supreme Dogmatic Directory, composed of ten brothers of the highest grades who formed his Supreme Grand College of Emeritus Masons. The Sovereign Executive Directory of High Masonry was established at Rome under Mazzini himself who, knowing the rivalry between the different Supreme Councils in Italy, seldom appeared at the official meetings of the Grand Orient of Rome, and, so as not to awaken suspicion in the minds of ordinary high grade Italian Masons in whom he had not confided the secret of the new institution, pretended to be occupied with socialism only ".

Rut was this interest, plan or pretence ?

In the following paragraph on the International in World Revolution by N. Webster, page 179, we find a link, if not the link, between Mazzini and Karl Marx. Mazzini and his International Masons are already preparing the subversion of the Socialist Labour movement.

" At the meeting in St. Martin's Hall, on September 28, 1864, when the ' International' was definitely founded, Marx played no part at all. ' I was present', he wrote Engels, ' only as a dumb personage on the platform'. Rut he was named nevertheless a member of the sub-committee, the other members being Mazzini's secretary— a Polish Jew named Wolff — Le Lubez, a French Freemason, Cremer, the secretary of the English Masons' Union, and Weston, the Owenite. At the first meeting of this committee, Wolff placed before it the statutes of Mazzini's Working-men's Association, proposing them as the basis of the new association; Le Lubez suggested amendments described by Marx as ' perfectly childish '. ' I was firmly resolved ', he wrote, 'not to leave a single line if possible of all their balderdash'. In a few weeks he had succeeded in establishing his authority. ' My propositions were all accepted by the commission.' "

As to whether Marx thus manoeuvred himself into a dominant position in the movement, or Mazzini's agents manoeuvred Marx into this position to suit their own ends, is left to our imagination, but the fact of someone, not an outstanding personality, being elected or nominated on a committee for no particular reason, generally means, to anyone versed in the technique of political tricks, that the nomination or election was something arranged " behind the scenes ".

On page 46 in La Theologie Politique de Mazzini et l'Internationale, Bakounine, the celebrated Russian anarchist, refutes certain statements said to have been current in London about himself at the time, in the following terms :

"But in 1864, while on my way through London, he (Karl Marx) came to see me, and assured me that he (Mazzini) had never taken any part direct or indirect in these calumnies against me which he himself had considered most infamous. I had to believe. "

It is a fact that for a certain length of time Mazzini and Marx were closely associated.

An eminent Mason, the atheist leader of the Italian Socialists, Alberto Mario, husband of Miss Jessie White, an ardent Mazzinian and the authoress of a history of her hero — Delia vita di Giuseppe Mazzini — was moreover a tool of Pike whom he generally consulted on all important matters. Thus, in order to divert the attention of the imperfect initiates, Mazzini organized a congress of working men in Rome, in October 1871. A close examination of the work of this congress shows however that it was only pretence for nothing practical was attempted or accomplished. On the other hand, he busied himself with grouping all the political elements of the sect in which occult manoeuvre his agent, Adriano Lemmi, helped him more than anyone else.

" When Pike sent him a copy of his Luciferian rituals, Mazzini was full of an enthusiastic praise for his colleague's work which he expressed in his articles in La Roma del Popolo. The public however failed to understand the sentiment that inspired him to proclaim the existence of a divinity and denounce materialism and atheism. One was puzzled to find this man a mystic. He showed himself extremely religious yet he declared himself the sworn enemy of the Church ! "[5]

Pike's literary achievements were numerous. These were, Ariel, Morals and Dogma, The Sacred Hymns, The Sephar H. Debarim, Book of the Word[6], Legenda Magistralia, Ritual of the New and Reformed Palladium (4 grades out of 5) The Book of Revelations, The Supreme Verb, The Ritual of Elect Magus, and The Book of Apadno, which latter contains the prophecies concerning the reign of the Anti-Christ from the Satanic point of view.

The theological dogma of Albert Pike is explained in the ' Instructions ' issued by him, on July 14, 1889, to the 23 Supreme Councils of the world and have been recorded by A. C. De La Rive in La Femme et l'Enfant dans la Franc-Maçonnerie Universelle (page 588) from which book we translate and quote as follows :

" That which we must say to the crowd is — We worship a God, but it is the God that one adores without superstition.

" To you, Sovereign Grand Inspectors General, we say this, that you may repeat it to the Brethren of the 32nd, 31st and 30th degrees — The Masonic religion should be, by all of us initiates of the high degrees, maintained in the purity of the Luciferian doctrine.

" If Lucifer were not God, would Adonay (The God of the Christians) whose deeds prove his cruelty, perfidy, and hatred of man, barbarism and repulsion for science, would Adonay and his priests, calumniate him?

" Yes, Lucifer is God, and unfortunately Adonay is also God. For the eternal law is that there is no light without shade, no beauty without ugliness, no white without black, for the absolute can only exist as two Gods : darkness being necessary to light to serve as its foil as the pedestal is necessary to the statue, and the brake to the locomotive.

" In analogical and universal dynamics one can only lean on that which will resist. Thus the universe is balanced by two forces which maintain its equilibrium : the force of attraction and that of repulsion. These two forces exist in physics, philosophy and religion. And the scientific reality of the divine dualism is demonstrated by the phenomena of polarity and by the universal law of sympathies and antipathies. That is why the intelligent disciples of Zoroaster, as well as, after them, the Gnostics, the Manicheans and the Templars have admitted, as the only logical metaphysical conception, the system of the two divine principles fighting eternally, and one cannot believe the one inferior in power to the other.

" Thus, the doctrine of Satanism is a heresy ; and the true and pure philosophic religion is the belief in Lucifer, the equal of Adonay ; but Lucifer, God of Light and God of Good, is struggling for humanity against Adonay, the God of Darkness and Evil. "

One must not lose sight of the fact that Pike occupied simultaneously the positions of Grand Master of the Central Directory of Washington, that of Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of Charleston and that of Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Freemasonry.

In 1880, a charter was granted him by the Royal Order of Scotland for the foundation of Lodges in America appointing him Provincial Grand Master of the order of H. R. M. He was indeed a great organizer.

Margiotta further writes:

" The two secret chiefs, Pike and Mazzini, finally completed the organization of high masonry, establishing four Grand Central Directories for the world, functioning thenceforth to gather information for the benefit of their political policy and dogmatic propaganda. These were, The Grand Central Directories for North America at Washington, for South America at Montevideo, for Europe at Naples, and for Asia and Oceania at Calcutta. Later, a central Sub-Directory for Africa was founded at Port Louis, Island of Mauritius, and after the death of Mazzini, the supreme chief constituted a Universal Sovereign Administrative Directory at Berlin which ranked in the hierarchy after the Sovereign Executive Directories and before the four Great Central Directories. "

Gallatin Mackey, the confidant of Albert Pike, died in Charleston on June 20, 1881. He was the author of many works on masonry, namely The Lexicon of Freemasonry, published in New York in 1845, The History of Freemasonry in South Carolina, The Manual of the Lodge, The Masonic Ritualist, The Symbolism of Freemasonry and The Encyclopedia of Freemasonry, the authorship of which is generally now attributed to Albert George Mackey.

According to the fundamental constitution of the Palladium, the nomination of the Chief of Political Action, the President of the Sovereign Executive Directory, was not an elective office. Its incumbent was an appointee of the Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Freemasonry.

When Mazzini felt himself to be dying, he designated Adriano Lemmi as his successor. He died on March 11 1872, at Pisa, and Albert Pike, deferring to his wishes, named Adriano Lemmi as his successor.

Pike was not only an organizer and a politician, he was also, in his religious capacity, as Cabalist and spiritist, a mystic on whose personality the following anecdote sheds a flood of light.

" Speaking before the Supreme Council of Charleston, on October 20, 1884, he gave an account of his recent travels through the United States and some incidental experiences. One of these, he described as follows : — 'At Saint Louis, we operated the grand rites, and through Sister Ingersoll, who is a first class medium, received astonishing revelations during a solemn Palladian session at which I presided, assisted by Brother Friedman and Sister Warhnburn. Without putting Sister Ingersoll to sleep, we saturated her with the spirit of Ariel himself, but Ariel took possession of her with 329 more spirits of fire and the seance from then on was marvellous. Sister Ingersoll, lifted into space, floated over the assembly and her garments were suddenly devoured by a flame which enfolded, without burning her. We saw her thus in a state of nudity for over ten minutes. Flitting above our heads, as though borne by an invisible cloud, or upheld by beneficent spirits, she answered all questions put to her. We thus soon had the latest news of our very illustrious brother Adriano Lemmi. Then, Astaroth, in person, revealed himself, flying beside our medium and holding her hand. He breathed upon her and her clothes, returning from nowhere, clothed her again. Finally Astaroth vanished and our sister fell gently on to a chair where, with her head thrown back she gave up Ariel and the 329 spirits who had accompanied him.

We counted 330 exhalations in all at the end of this most successful experiment. "[7]

A number of books of this period refer to what must have been a wireless telephone in the possession of the heads of the Masonic organization. A translation of the detailed description of this instrument, given in Bataille's book, is quoted herewith as being of interest in these days when magic sometimes becomes experimental science. At the date on which this description was first printed (1894) wireless was unknown.

" In his house, Gallatin Mackey once showed me that Arcula Mystica (the Mystic Box), of which there are only seven examples in existence, at Charleston, Borne, Berlin, Washington, Monte Video, Naples and Calcutta.[8]

" The exterior of this small box resembles a liqueurs receptacle. A spring catch opens simultaneously its two doors and lid. Inside, in the middle, stands a telephone mouthpiece in silver, which, at first sight, one would take for a very small trumpet or hunting horn. At the left is a little rope made of twisted silver threads, one end of which is attached to the machine while the other extremity ends in a, kind of little bell which one holds to one's ear to hear the voice of the person with whom one is speaking, just like the telephone of today. At the right is a toad, -in silver, with its mouth open. Placed around the opening of the mouth-piece, stand seven statuettes in gold, each on a small separate silver pedestal representing symbolically the seven cardinal virtues of the Palladian Ladder.

" Each of these seven statuettes designates one of the Directories. The statuette Ignis (sacred fire) divine endeavour, stands for the Supreme Dogmatic Directory of Charleston ; Ratio (Reason, triumphant over superstition), the Sovereign Executive Directory of Rome ; Labor (Labour) the Sovereign Administrative Directory of Berlin ; Ubertas (fecundity), Caritas (Masonic Charity), Emancipatio (the emancipation of humanity shedding the yoke of all despotisms) and Felicitas (Happiness derived from virtuous practices) representing the four Grand Central Directories of Washington, Naples, Monte Video and Calcutta.

" "When the Supreme Dogmatical chief wishes to communicate, for example, with the head of political action, he presses his finger on the Statuette Ignis and on the Statuette Ratio : these sink into their sockets and at the same instant, a strong whistling is heard in Rome, in the office where Lemmi keeps his Arcula Mystica ; Lemmi opens his box and sees the statuette of Ignis sunk, while tiny, harmless flames issue from the throat of the silver toad. Then he knows that the Sovereign Pontiff of Charleston wishes to speak to him. He presses down the statuette of Ratio in his box and from then on, the conversation between the two chiefs proceeds, each one speaking directly into the mouthpiece described above, while at the same time holding to his ear the small silver bell.

" At the end of the conversation, each chief replaces the golden statuettes by pulling them up by the head.

" Every Sovereign Grand Master of a Directory travels with his Arcula Mystica. This box is personally confided to him. That of the Administrative Directory of Berlin is kept by the Sovereign Finance Delegate... who is actually Bleichroeder (1893).

" It is evidently necessary to detach the memory of Albert Pike from the great number of exaggerated legends which cling to his name, but with a man of this type one never knows just what to think. His. reputation as an Occultist had overstepped the doors of the lodges and inner shrines. Everyone knew from hearsay that he gave himself up to Luciferian practices. "

Owing to the discredit cast upon Bataille's writings, we now quote in corroboration of the existence of such rites as described above from the well known theosophist Mrs. Alice A. Bailey's book, Initiation Human and Solar, (published 1922 by the Lucifer Publishing Co., New York), which has never been challenged : —

Such quotations touch upon the following subjects :

Description of the Deity.
Description of Initiation and fire.
Description, of Sex and fire.
Description of the Seven Rays.

1. " The Lord of the World, the One Initiator,. He Who is called in the Bible ' The Ancient of Days ', and in the Hindu Scriptures the First Kumara, He, Sanat Kumara it is, Who from His throne at Shamballa in the Gobi desert, presides over the Lodge of Masters, and holds in His hands the reins of government in all the three departments. Called in some Scriptures ' the Great Sacrifice ', He has chosen to watch over the evolution of men and devas until all have been occultly ' saved '. He it is Who, four times a year, meets in conference with all the Chohans and Masters, and authorises what shall be done to further the ends of evolution.. " [9]

Call it Lucifer, Satan or the Devil, it is always the same old manifestation revamped now as Sanat Kumara and, while he may indeed seem to be a very good god, his presence alone is our only concern at the moment.

2. As to initiation, — " The Hierophant utters the word, and the force is literally thrown into the initiate's bodies and centres, passing down through the centres on the mental plane, via the astral centres, to the centres on etheric levels, which finally absorb it. This is the stupendous moment for the initiate, and brings to him a realisation of the literal absolute truth of the phrase that ' God is a consuming fire '. He knows past all gainsaying that fiery energy and electric force constitute the sum-total of all that is. He is literally bathed in the fires of purification ; he sees fire on all sides, pouring out through the Rod (of initiation) circulating around the Triangle, and passing through the bodies of the two sponsoring adepts. For a brief second, the entire Lodge of Masters and initiates, standing in their ceremonial places without the Triangle, are hidden from view by a wall of fire. The initiate sees no one, save the Hierophant, and is aware of nothing but a fiery blaze of pure, blue-white flame, which burns, but destroys not, which intensifies the activity of every atom in his body without disintegrating, and which purifies his entire nature. The fire tries his work, of what sort it is, and he passes through the Flame.[10]

" At the fifth initiation the great secret which concerns the fire or spirit aspect is revealed to the wondering and amazed Master, and He realises in a sense incomprehensible to man the fact that all is fire and fire is all. "[11]

3. " Let the disciple transfer the fire from the lower triangle to the higher, and preserve that which is created through the fire of the midway point.[12]

[12] Ibid., p. 204.

" This means, literally, the control by the initiate of the sex impulse, as usually understood, and the transference of the fire which now normally vitalises the generative organs to the throat centre, thus leading to creation upon the mental plane through the agency of mind... "

4. As to the seven rays :

Groups of Egos are formed :

1. According to their ray.
2. According to their sub-ray.
3. According to their rate of vibration.

They are also grouped for purposes of classification :

1. As Egos, according to the egoic ray.
2. As personalities, according to the subray which is governing the personality. [13]

" All are graded and charted. The Masters have Their Halls of Records, with a system of tabulation incomprehensible to us owing to its magnitude and its necessary intricacies wherein these charts are kept. They are under the care of a Chohan of a Ray, each Ray having its own collection of charts... These Halls of Records are mostly on the lowest levels of the mental plane and the highest of the astral, as they can be there most fully utilised and are most easily accessible. "

" While the ray business may be an excellent scientific, though little known, method of keeping in touch with the adepts it has one very serious disadvantage, namely, that whoever is attuned to a ray is, in case of revenge or evil intent on the part of a superior, (shall we say scientist ?) vulnerable on this ray! "

One is almost astonished at the frankness displayed by Mrs. Bailey in her revelations concerning the secrets of Initiation, when one remembers the tragic fate of William Morgan, the secret condemnation, kidnapping and sequestration, torture and final assassination of this New York Journalist who had published for the profane public the principal masonic rituals of the period.

Carlile, in his Manual of Freemasonry, gives the following particulars : — " My exposure of Freemasonry, in 1825, led to its exposure in the United States of America; and a Mason there, of the name of William Morgan, having announced his intention of assisting in the work of exposure, was kidnapped, under pretended forms and warrants of law, by his brother Masons, removed from the State of New York to the borders of Canada, near the falls of Niagara, and there most barbarously murdered. This happened in 1826. The States have been for many years much excited upon the subject; a regular warfare has arisen between Masons and anti-Masons. Societies of anti-Masons have been formed, newspapers and magazines started, and many pamphlets and volumes, with much correspondence, published ; so that before the slavery question was passed amongst them, all parties had merged themselves into Masons and anti-Masons. Several persons were punished for the abduction of Morgan : but the murderers were sheltered by Masonic Lodges, and rescued from justice. "

" The story of the murder of William Morgan for the crime of violating Masonic secrecy has long been a well known historical fact ; but in August, 1875, the full particulars were brought to light by the publication of two letters from the Venerable Thurlow Weed. The facts were as follows :[14]

" In the year 1826, Morgan, who had passed through all the degrees of Masonry and held a very high position in the Order, conceived the idea of publishing a book disclosing all the secrets of the sect. What his motive may have been is only conjectural. Mr. Weed was living at that time in the town of Rochester, New York, and Morgan requested him to publish the projected book. Mr. Weed declined, and Morgan went to the adjoining town of Batavia, where he arranged with another person for the publication.

" He had written a portion of the book, and was engaged in completing it when he was arrested on a false charge of larceny, on the 10th Sept., and conveyed to the jail of Ontario county. The sheriff and officers of this prison were Masons. His house was searched, and his manuscripts were seized and destroyed.

"On the evening of the 12th Sept, he was discharged by the interference of some of the conspirators, and, as he passed out of the door of the jail, was seized by them, taken a short distance, and then forcibly put into a carriage. He was carried, in the course of that night, on to the ridge-road about two miles beyond the village of Rochester. During the next day, he was taken to Lewiston, a distance of seventy or eighty miles, and from thence to Fort Niagara, at the mouth of the Niagara river. His benevolent captors had decided on bringing him here in the hope that their brother Masons of Canada would aid them in disposing of him. His murder was not then contemplated ; but it was hoped that the Canadian Masons would take charge of him and send him to end his days among the Indian tribes, in the north-west of Canada. Placing their prisoner in Fort Niagara, his captors crossed the river into Canada to attend a meeting of a lodge there ; but the Canadian Masons, after much deliberation, refused to become parties to the business. The American Masons returned to Fort Niagara, and in a few days afterwards a large number of men, high in the order, assembled a short distance off to open an Encampment of Knight Templars, the additional power of the 'sealed obligation' being necessary for such a case. At night they dined together, and, after dinner, the chaplain gave a sentiment so significant that all thoughts were turned towards Fort Niagara. The 'sentiment' was, in fact, 'death to all traitors' and immediately afterwards one of the company, Colonel King, arose from the table and called four of the others to accompany him. These were Whitney, a stonemason; Chubbuch, a farmer; Garside, a butcher; and Howard, a bookbinder. 'They were all' says Mr. Weed, 'men of correct habits and good character, and all, I doubt not, were moved by an enthusiastic but most misguided sense of duty'. King told them that he had an order from the Grand Master, the execution of which required their assistance, and they replied that they would obey it. The five murderers were then driven in a carriage to the fort where Morgan was confined. It was just midnight. They told the doomed man that his friends had completed their arrangements for his removal to Canada, where his life would be safe. He consented to go with them, and they walked to the wharf where a boat was waiting for them; they embarked and rowed away into the darkness. When the boat reached the point where Niagara River empties itself into Lake Ontario, the murderers threw off all pretence, and with some horrible mummeries ordered Morgan to prepare for death. They wound a rope around him, attaching to each end of it a heavy weight, and threw him overboard. He sank like a stone, and the murderers returned to tell their comrades that the traitor had met a traitor's doom. One of the murderers, Whitney, told all these particulars to Mr. Weed a few months afterwards, but it is only now, when all the criminals are dead, that he makes the fact public. The body of Morgan was found a year afterwards, identified by his wife and friends, and buried ; and although the Masons tried to dispute the identification, their efforts were futile. None of the murderers was ever brought to justice. "[15]

So much for the oath of secrecy and brotherhood I

Nowadays, greater precautions are observed in getting rid of the enemies of the sect. Some little study and the cooperation of a few culpable doctors, its auxiliaries and affiliates, enable the terrible sect to dispose easily of their enemies. The victim of their vengeance, swallowing some disease germ, meets a fate that none can prove to have been artificially contrived. This is the secret of secrets, denied again and again ! And yet the charge remains ! For plague, cholera and all epidemics can be let loose on the world at a word from the Hidden Masters !

But to return to the organization of Freemasonry.

It is necessary here to say that in many instances, where a masculine lodge has a feminine annex, its existence is frequently completely ignored by the majority of the brothers. No mutual visiting is allowed among the female members of the lower masonic degrees, for a sister may enter lodges other than her own, only after she has herself attained the fifth degree. As well

" In his address before his Council in 1878, Albert Pike said :

' I am often asked why we do not publish our old transactions, to which I am compelled to reply, that we have none to publish. We have no records of the transactions at Charleston from 1801 to 1860. What records we had were destroyed... during the war. (American Civil War.)' " as masculine General Inspectors on permanent missions, in direct communication with Charleston, there are General Inspectresses, high grade women masons belonging to ordinary Masonry who, while not necessarily affiliated to palladism, serve the purpose of its leaders, their good offices being much appreciated when they furnish useful information to headquarters. These women are privileged to enter the lodges and inner shrines of masonry only, but are not admitted to Palladian triangles. As for men belonging to an adoptive lodge where brothers and sisters work together they must have at least attained the 32nd (Prince of the Royal Secret) or a corresponding grade in another rote before they can enter an Areopagus of Sublime Ecossaise.

As regards the position of women in Masonry, we think that this cannot be better explained than in the words of Albert Pike himself. In La Femme et l'Enfant dans la Franc-Maçonnerie Universelle page 578, A. C. De La Rive states that on July 14, 1889, Albert Pike, Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Freemasonry, addressed to the 23 Supreme Confederated Councils of the world the following instructions, which we quote herewith in part.

" To the science of Faust, the real Mason will join the impassibility of Job. He will eradicate superstition from his heart and cultivate decision of character. He will accept pleasure only when he wishes it and will wish it only when he should do so.

" We earnestly recommend the creation of Lodges of Adoption. They are indispensable to the formation of Masons who are indeed Masters of themselves. The pnest tries to subdue his flesh by enforced celibacy... The real Mason, on the contrary, reaches perfection, that is to say achieves self mastery, by using his zeal in the Lodges of Adoption in submitting to all natural ordeals. Commerce with women, belonging to all brethren, forms for him an armour against those passions which lead hearts astray. He alone can really possess voluptuousness. To be able, at will, to use or to abstain, is a twofold power. Woman fetters thee by thy desires, we say to the adept, well, use women often and without passion; thou wilt thus become master of thy desires, and thou wilt enchain woman. From which it must perforce result that the real Mason will succeed in easily solving the problem of the flesh.

" It is evidently not absolutely necessary that the man whom you are leading towards the high grades be immediately perfect and have understood our secret on his entrance into Masonry. That which we ask you is first to observe him with the greatest care during his apprenticeship and afterwards, when he enters the Lodge of Adoption as Companion to use that as your criterion, your instrument of infallible control.

" The Lodge of Brothers which has failed to annex a Lodge of Sisters is incomplete and destined inevitably never to produce anything but Brethren, with whom politics are the chief concern, men who will be chiefly preoccupied with intrigue and rivalry, who will do bad work and whose politics will be incoherent. "

Dr. Bataille elucidates this point in the following terms :

" Concerning androgynous lodges, Masons generally give the same answer. They either say 'Yes, once upon a time there were sister masons but there are none any longer ' or, if forced to make a concession say, ' Lodges admitting women are irregular and function entirely outside of Masonry proper, unrecognized by Grand Orients and Supreme Councils '. "

" Having referred to the great care exercised to hide the existence of the sister masons, it is now opportune to expose the ruse employed in stifling further investigation. From time to time, one of the semi-initiates is urged to bring a resolution suggesting the establishment of feminine lodges, and a petition is drawn up and sent in to the Grand Orient or Supreme Council, whereupon the chiefs gravely insert a decree in the official bulletin rejecting the petition, and emphasising the point that ' the constitution is opposed to the creation of regular female lodges '. Then, whenever the question of sister masons is raised in the profane press, — quick! The Grand Orients and Supreme Councils publish these famous decrees. "[16]

In certain cities where masonic secrecy is less carefully guarded, a part of the masonic premises is available for the use of the profane public and daily lectures or instructions of the brother professors. In these rooms, every evening, accounting, stenography, foreign languages and other popular professional accomplishments are taught, a great activity is thus created around masonic headquarters and the entrance of a woman more or less attracts no attention. The sister masons, however, know to which room they must go and, once past the threshold of the building, it is not to the professorial lecture room that they wend their way.

In connection with Eastern occultism and its organization Dr. Bataille made the following statement and curious deduction : " A number of Satanic monasteries are concealed today under the guise of Musulman harems or annexes to Lama, or Brahmin monasteries, but it is possible that some day these institutions might take root in Europe where, under a deceptive exterior, one of these communities might be established. When one knows the true mission of the 'Pink Serpents' one wonders if Christianity will not presently assist at this crowning abomination — a convent of so called Christians practising luciferianism.

" The 'Pink Serpents' are sister masons. They are the luciferian missionaries and operate as individuals and under conditions of the greatest secrecy. No records of the money appropriated for these religious spies are shown. "

But let us resume the subject of Palladism as explained by Dr. Bataille.

" This super-rite, which is masonic luciferian spiritism, must not be confused with the machinery of high masonry. Palladism is the cult of Satan in the inner shrines of a rite superposed to ail the rites. It is a cult, a religion. High masonry is a supreme administration involving an organization much more highly developed than Palladism whose secret leaders, some of whom are not luciferian, act in concert and accept a superior central authority in order that their work may be the more effective [17].

" In founding the New and Reformed Palladian rite, General Pike did not create masonic occultism. Anderson, Desaguliers, Weishaupt, Swedenborg, Lessing, Frederic II of Prussia, Mesmer, Pernety, Cagliostro, Martinez Pasqualis and his disciple Saint-Martin,. Francia (the dictator of Paraguay) Lord Palmerston, General Contreras, Mazzini, and many other distinguished Freemasons practised occultism and worked at the Great Work of the Cabala,[18] but before the year

" Importuned by his friends Ch. Fauvety and Caubet, 1870, the inner shrines all operated without other direction than that of the theurgic rituals of Swedenborg, Saint-Martin, Laffon, Landebat, and the Vicomte de la Jonquière, etc. and the Masonic initiates of Hermeticism were widely dispersed in different schools which were local and not international.

" While Pike laid the foundation of Palladism at Charleston, Mazzini organized the centralization of Political action in Rome, and two years after the founding of the Sovereign Executive and the Supreme Dogmatic Directories, a third, the Sovereign Administrative Directory, was instituted in Berlin. This latter functioned by means of a constantly renewed committee of seven taken from the Supreme Councils, Grand Encampments, Grand Orients, and Grand Lodges of the world. By means of an ingeniously contrived system of rotation, these representatives act by virtue of their mandate for three months only. Each of the existing rites, with the exception of the Palladian, send annually to Berlin two of its members of the Superior degrees, drawn from any country except Germany, which alone, of all those represented, is who both belonged to the Grand Orient, Eliphas Levi became a Mason on March 14, 1861, being initiated in the Lodge Rose du Parfait Silence of which Caubet was the Venerable. The ceremony was performed in the presence of many brothers.

" In his reception speech, Eliphas Levi, to the great astonishment of his auditors, little inclined to paradoxes, made the following statement.

I come to bring you your lost traditions, the exact knowledge of your signs and emblems, and in consequence to show you the aim for the attainment of which your association has been constituted. '

He then tried to demonstrate to his coreligionists that Masonic symbolism is borrowed from the Cabala. It was time wasted. No one believed him."

entitled to one permanent member whose quarterly-term of office expires at the end of the time allotted to the particular lodge of which he is a delegate... The members of the Sovereign Administrative Directory are always given 120 days notice of their appointments in order to enable them to plan what would appear to be a pleasure trip or a holiday, when, in fact, they are going on the business of the association.

" Two special delegates are permanently attached to the Directory of Berlin, one for finance and one for propaganda. At the present date, (1894) Bleichroeder fills the first mentioned position and Findel, a non-luciferian, the second. These officers are obliged to live in Germany and to be in a sufficiently independent position to be able to go to the seat of the Directory at a moment's notice.

" The business of the Propaganda agent is to furnish information to the chiefs at Rome and Charleston... He receives monthly, by secret messenger from Berlin, the report of all measures formulated at the Sovereign Administrative Directory relating to means and methods judged useful in spreading the principles of the association.

" After a meeting he examines, coordinates and frames a report of the decisions upon which, three months later, the seven members of the Berlin Directory will vote. Of these seven members, thanks to the system of rotation explained above, there are always at least two who, having belonged to the Directory at the time of the submission of the resolution under consideration, are able to furnish commentaries and explanations to the new comers. Only resolutions having obtained a favourable vote of five or seven voices can be registered by the delegate recorder, and these can be finally adopted only on the second following month, if they pass unanimously.[19] In the event of one or more persons opposing a measure, the matter is referred to the Chief at Rome after which, failing his approval, it is settled arbitrarily by the chief at Charleston from whose decision there is no appeal.

" The business of the financial agent is not a matter of funds, it consists in drawing up a general balance sheet of all rites, in all countries with the brother accountant working under his orders as a sworn expert.

" As above said, the Palladian rite has no share in the functioning of the Sovereign Administrative Directory. This should again prove that Palladism is superposed to all the other rites. It is the luciferian religion and only need concern itself with the triangles which have a separate budget. Being the real hidden power, known only to the perfect initiates, it need not unveil itself even to this permanent committee which constitutes the highest expression of the administrative power of the great international association. One must also not lose sight of the fact that among the masonic powers, there are several countries where the Symbolic Grand Lodges recognize only three grades of which that of Master is the third and highest degree. These lodges, like the others, are entitled to send two delegates from time to time to Berlin, and, as a consequence of having suppressed the high grades for their adepts, these Federations are necessarily kept in complete ignorance of the existence of Palladism. The Supreme chiefs of Charleston and Rome appear to them solely as earnest, active brothers who should be consulted because of their great personal experience — but that is all. "

19. Such a system, owing to its apparently democratic character would admirably serve the purposes of an autocracy. After five months it is obvious that none of the original members who proposed a resolution would be present and five months gives plenty of time for manipulation of nominees pledged to vote according to the dictates of invisible masters.

" Finally the Palladists have no need to be officially represented in Berlin, as most of the members of the Supreme Councils, Grand Encampments and Grand Orients are their men and any important proposition is immediately communicated to them.

" Under the Sovereign Directory, the Executive at Rome and the Administrative at Berlin, come the Grand Central Directories which are bureaus of registration in the different parts of the world. These are located in North America, South America, Europe, Asia and Oceania. There is as well a sub-Directory for Africa. At their heads are the high grade trusted brothers by whom everything that emanates from the Supreme Councils, Grand Encampments, Grand Orients and Grand Lodges of their jurisdiction is centralized. Independent of the Sovereign Administrative Directory of Berlin, they operate directly under the chiefs of Rome and Charleston and it is by these central Directories that these two great intriguers are kept informed of the trend of world affairs.

" As everything comes to the Grand Central Directories so everything emanates from them. Five messengers to Washington, Montevideo, Naples, Calcutta, and Port Louis will put in motion the formidable machinery of Freemasonry the world over. "

If the organization described in the foregoing pages which were written by Bataille forty years ago has progressed along the lines above indicated, one can easily conjecture the degree of perfection which has doubtless been attained to-day.

CHAPTER XXXI

PRACTICAL POLITICS

The game of politics is the pursuit of power. In all democracies, there are two separate organizations playing the political game. The open and visible one, the members of which hold office as members of a government, and the invisible one composed of individuals who control this visible organization and in whom is vested the real power, the essence of which is finance, controlling the publicity which makes or unmakes its tools.

This financial power may be used to promote truth or fallacies, good or evil, national prosperity or national ruin, but so long as human nature is what it is, so long as jealousy, greed, personal ambition and expediency can sway the lives of men, so long will the rule of the invisible power prevail by methods inimical to the best interests of a nation. The strength of a democracy thus lies at the mercy of invisible leaders who, being nationally irresponsible, cannot be called to account for the consequences of the acts of the governments they control. This at the same time constitutes the inherent weakness of any form of government, the apotheosis of which is the control of both parties in the state, right and left, radical and conservative, by the same forces. Then, only the puppets change while the rule of the individuals controlling the machine continues unhindered. Voters who wonder why their efforts have failed, wonder in vain. As the dupes of a controlled publicity their privilege of the vote is a farce.

If all factions in a state can be controlled from one source, why should International Control be impracticable? Italy, if one follows its history for the last hundred years, gives a sequence of good illustrations of such possibilities and affords us a chance to follow the progressive stages of masonic centralization and imposition of Internationalism upon nations, as conceived by Mazzini, Pike, Palmerston and Bismarck.

International control was Mazzini's dream. His cynical remark " We aspire to corrupt in order to rule " leaves one little faith in the idealism of this Patriarch of International Freemasonry. That he applied his motto is shown by the use he made of Francesco Crispi.

As Palamenghi-Crispi writes :[1]

" Crispi became personally acquainted with Mazzini in London, in January, 1855, but they had corresponded since 1850, when, their golden dream of liberty and independence banished by the return of all the tyranny of the past, the bravest of the patriots had once more begun to conspire.

" While pondering the idea of founding a National Committee in which the various regions of Italy should be represented, Mazzini also determined to form a fund for the carrying out of great enterprises. And ' as it is impossible to obtain large sums secretly and from a few people ' he wrote, he worked out a plan for a National Loan, to be raised by the issue of bonds to be redeemed by a liberated Italy.

[1] Thomas Palamenghi-Crispi, The Memoirs of Francesco Crispi, vol. I, p. 75.

" The first act of the National Committee was to authorise the issue of such bonds to the amount of ten million lire. "

In his youth, Francesco Crispi made a mistake, and blackmail made him a ruler of men. As the tool of Mazzini, he ruled Italy for many years, and as the ruler of Italy, he wielded the secret power of International Masonry in accordance with the policy of his masters.

According to Crispi 33° by D. Vaughan, " Crispi, in Palladism, Brother v Serafino-Chiocciola, was born at Ribera, in Sicily, on Oct. 4, 1819. His father, Tommaso Crispi, a lawyer, destined him to the church, but in 1837, he married Felicita Valle, a pretty young girl with whom he was infatuated. In 1856, he abandoned her for Rosalia Montmasson, deserting the latter in 1878 to marry Lina Barbagallo, widow Capellani. At this period, he was openly accused of bigamy and though challenged to do so, he never produced the documents necessary to prove the death of his first wife, Felicita Valle.

" After his marriage in 1837, he practised law and in 1838 joined one of the numerous secret societies which in those days infested Sicily. Presently he started his career as a political intriguer and conspirator travelling over the world on his sinister business under different aliases and false passports provided for him by Mazzini, who, in view of his confidential position as friend of the King of Naples, had bought his services as a spy. "

Domenico Margiotta states in Francesco Crispi, son (Euvre Néfaste, that he found among the papers of his grandfather — a member of Young Italy who had been condemned to death as the head of the conspiracy, which penalty he however successfully escaped — a telegram from Mazzini, instructing the organization to " give Crispi promptly thirty thousand ducats to begin with on the account of the Neapolitan Committee of Young Italy and let him get to work. "

"While at Malta in 1855, he joined the masonic lodge, " Zetland", under English jurisdiction from which he was shortly expelled for the theft of 800 francs from one of its members. He went to London shortly afterwards. There, Lord Palmerston had returned to power. By becoming an ardent admirer and fanatical follower of Mazzini, Crispi simultaneously entered the good graces of Palmerston who was on the very best of terms with the Italian leader.

In 1856, believing that Napoleon III, in cooperation with Cavour, was the secret arbiter of the destinies of Italy, and the greatest obstacle to the realization of his own republican schemes, Mazzini induced Crispi to go to Paris.

While he was there, a number of attempts were made on the life of the Emperor, among others that of Orsini on Jan. 14, 1858, but, though strongly suspected of participation in these conspiracies by the police or Paris, no evidence for a direct charge of complicity against Crispi was ever obtained. However, it is known that he and Orsini had previously met in London where the latter had shown him how to make the famous bombs, the use and manufacture of which Crispi afterwards taught his followers in Sicily.

By August 3, 1858, he was back in London, the Paris police having developed too great a zeal on his behalf during his sojourn in the French capital.

At last by 1860, the various Italian conspiracies crystallized into one. Everything was ready for the fulfilment of Mazzini's dream of United Italy. Bertani, Bixio and Crispi decided to go to Turin themselves to see General Garibaldi and, after the British Minister, Sir James Hudson, had confirmed certain information on conditions in Palermo, which had been furnished by the Genoese deputies, the General seemed at last inclined to take action. He ordered Bixio to Genoa to charter a ship and Crispi to Milan to receive from Enrico Besana the arms and the money already subscribed. This subscription was begun by General Garibaldi himself and, in view of later developments, it is a significant fact that one of the contributions he received for the famous expedition of the One Thousand, was the sum of fifty thousand francs from the Jew, Cornelius Herz.

Twelve thousand guns were in the hands of Massimo d'Azeglio, then governor of Milan who, by order of the government, surrendered them to the rebels.

Finally, General Garibaldi arrived in Genoa on April 14. On the 16th, Crispi returned to Turin where he saw the Minister of the Interior, Farini, who, having by that time changed his mind concerning the Italian expedition, had ceased to be a dictator and had assumed the attitude of a diplomatic satellite of Cavour. He proved quite intractable. Back in Genoa, Crispi found La Farina again, this time with orders to report all developments to Cavour. Cavour, warned not to interfere with Garibaldi, raised no obstacles to the progress of the plot. He only advised waiting for better news from the Island of Sicily, and promised to cooperate with a million guns, as soon as the time for the expedition seemed propitious.

Still Garibaldi hesitated. The Sicilian news was contradictory. On April 26, Crispi received from Niccola Fabrizzi a message from Malta reading " Failure in the provinces and in the town of Palermo. Many exiles arriving at Malta on English ships. " Luckily a few days later, a communication from Palermo, published by the Gazette of Turin, told of the great proportions assumed by the insurrection in Sicily, This communication had been invented and written at Genoa by Crispi for the purposes of overcoming the last scruples of Garibaldi !

One day, the second of May, Crispi and Garibaldi were alone in a room looking seaward, in the Villa Spinola Quarti. They were talking about the expedition. Crispi as usual, was fighting the vacillations of Garibaldi. Suddenly, the General interrupted him saying, " You are the only one to encourage me in this enterprise, Everyone else tries to dissuade me. Why ?"

"Because I am profoundly convinced that it will be helpful to the fatherland and that it will cover you with glory. I fear only one thing : The uncertainty of the sea. "

" I answer for the sea " said Garibaldi.

" And I answer for the land " said Crispi.

Garibaldi was persuaded and the die was cast.

After the victorious expedition of the One Thousand had placed the group of conspirators in power in Sicily, each was rewarded according to his merits, Crispi becoming Minister of Foreign Affairs. Cavour had died on June 6, 1861, poisoned, it is said, on May 28, by order of Mazzini.

Until 1861, Crispi had cooperated wholeheartedly with the revolutionaries but, as time wore on, he began to think that it might be more to his personal advantage to serve the King than Mazzini.

His plan was discovered by Mazzini's spies and in 1862, the deputy of Castelvetrano found himself facing death for treason at the hands of his former friends and accomplices, under conditions that enslaved him body and soul forever after, to the International Sect.

Early in April 1862, he attended a Freemasonic dinner of the Associations Emancipatrice at Turin. Suddenly he felt ill, very ill, fire seemed to be burning within him. He was in the throes of the most appalling agony. Instead of offering assistance, the other guests began to laugh, then, one of them rising, spoke to him severely in the following terms :

" Francesco, you went to visit King Victor Emmanuel, without telling us of your intention and you offered him your secret services. You let him know that you were ready to go over at the first opportunity. Till then your opinions had been republican. Well, that is treason. We have condemned you. You are poisoned. You are a dead man. "

The poison had indeed been administered in the bread. Among the organizers of the banquet was the baker Dolfi, who had formerly contributed to the expulsion of the Grand Duke of Tuscany and who had become one of the members of the Radical Directing Committee. On this occasion, Dolfi had kneaded the bread himself, and each guest had found his place at the table marked by a small roll bearing his name, traced on its golden crust by a fillet of whitish dough. All the guests, agreeably surprised, had congratulated the baker for his delicate attention, but the piece of bread marked Crispi had been separately kneaded and contained the poison.

Crispi realized full well that he was lost. He knew there was no escape and that all the exits to the banquet hall were closed, moreover, he was too weak to tight. Without recrimination and in the throes of acute pain, he dropped into a chair upon which, writhing in agony, he awaited a lingering death.

The others surrounded him, watching him in silence with profound contempt. Suddenly, a door opened, a curtain was raised and a man appeared. He advanced slowly. It was Mazzini.

" Poor wretch ! " said he to the dying man. " I pity you. "

At these words, Crispi looked up. His dim eyes gleamed suddenly and he murmured feebly.

" Yes, ambition made me betray... It is true ... I was going to sell myself... But I die... Do not insult my agony... Do not mock me... 1 suffer too much ! "

" I do not speak to you in derision, " answered the grand master, " Francesco Crispi, I forgive you... Drink this and you are saved. You will be reborn... "

So saying, he forced his teeth apart and pressing a small vial to the lips of the dying man poured the counter-poison down his parched throat.

After his last words, Crispi had collapsed. Some time passed. Was he still alive ? He seemed a corpse. Little by little, sweat gathered on his face and hands then, slowly, his livid countenance regained some colour.

For a long time he seemed inert. Then his eyelids opened and, looking around with a stunned expression of incomprehension, he asked.

" Where am I ? "

" You have returned from the realm of the dead " murmured Mazzini gravely.

" Oh ! Yes, I remember now, Mercy ! Mercy ! " he added suddenly, recalling realities and clinging desperately to life. " I live indeed, Master. Is it not a dream ? "

"You live, yes, Francesco; but henceforth you are more completely enslaved than the last of the negroes for whose freedom they are fighting over there in America... You live again and your ambition will be gratified... You will be minister, minister of the Monarchy ;

You will hold in your hands the reins of government but, without betraying us, without selling yourself !... You will part from us, not privately but publicly... We will denounce you, and while denouncing you, we will push you to power. It is the monarchy that you will betray by executing our orders, when we shall have made you minister of the crown... And you will obey us in all things, even should the orders we give you seem contradictory, even should their execution cause you to pass for a madman in the eyes of Europe ! Yes, Francesco Crispi, from this day forward, you belong to us, for you must never forget that, should you place us in a position where it might be expedient to cut short your own existence a second time, no power in the world could save you from the death, the sufferings of which you have known today. Live then for Masonry. Fight Royalty and the Church. You will be the gravedigger of this house of Savoy. It is only an instrument for us and we have condemned it to disappear after it has served our purpose. "

This plan of action was carried out. In 1864, Crispi, on orders from his master, became a Royalist and duly denounced Mazzini. That is the explanation of his often incoherent and erratic policies in after life. Mazzini's promise was fulfilled and Crispi became Minister of the Interior in 1878.

In 1877, he had been on a tour to Paris, Berlin, London and Vienna. In Paris, he had seen Thiers, Jules Favre and Gambetta; in Germany, Prince Bismarck, with whom he already had an acquaintance of some years standing, and who shared his aversion for France and the Roman Catholic Church ; in England, Lord Derby and Mr. Gladstone ; but the true purpose of his mission in these lands is still unknown. As a consequence of his interview with Bismarck, at Salzbourg, Italy, fearing France, threw herself into the hands of the Iron Chancellor. Germany henceforth was to hold her as a dog ready to be set at either against Austria or France when it suited her purpose. The Triple Alliance was formed on May 20, 1882.

Crispi's accession to the ministry was therefore a victory of prime importance to the sect.

After the death of Mazzini, in 1872, Adriano Lemmi took over his masonic heritage and, along with the rest, his slave Francesco Crispi, who, with the Jew Barozilai, became his right hand man.

King Victor Emmanuel died on Jan 9, 1878, and was succeeded by Humbert I. That same year saw the death of Pope Pius IX and the accession to the papacy of Leo XIII.

In 1884, Humbert I was initiated into masonry as Knight Kadosch, under conditions of the greatest secrecy and a lodge, that of Savoia Illuminata, was founded in his honour.

In spite of his exalted masonic position the monarch's political information was always strictly censored by his masonic superiors.

From 1887 to 1891, and again from 1893 to 1896, Crispi acted the part of Prime Minister.

In order to enable him to curry favour with the common people, Lemmi occasionally authorized him to execute political turnovers. The Grand Master Lemmi once said to Humbert " Fear not; The socialism of Crispi will not last; it will provoke no riots, it is simply an electoral manoeuvre " and the king was much gratified at being so well informed. There at least, the 33° King was not deceived. If now and again Crispi resumed his revolutionary complexion, it was only to obtain the votes of those whom he persecuted mercilessly once he had obtained power. To him, a change of opinion was as easy as a change of shirt.[2]

In 1889, came the scandal of the Banca Romana, revealed as such through the efforts of Giovanni Giolitti[3] and in 1892, that of Panama involving another, namely the Grand Cordon of Cornelius Herz, any one of which would have swamped the political career of any unprotected individual. Crispi, though seriously implicated, was supported through an impossible situation by the masonic brotherhood.

The Abyssinian War, itself the result of masonic intrigue, was the terrible manoeuvre calculated to ruin the House of Savoy in the eyes of the Italian people.

It was known that, at the time of the disaster of Adowa, the succession of Adriano Lemmi to the Grand Mastership of the Grand Orient of Italy was open, and that competition for the position was keen. Some favoured the candidacy of Bovio, others that of Nathan, later Mayor of Rome. But Crispi had promised General Baratieri,[4] a masonic dignitary, that he should have the preference above all others, on condition that he win a victory over the Negus. Such an achievement would give Italy another Garibaldi, a popular hero, while simultaneously providing Crispi himself with a useful tool and the position of " top dog " which had never been his before.

But the disastrous defeat of his candidate by Menelek, at the Battle of Adowa on March 2, 1896, resulted in the fall of Crispi, not that of the king.

The agent of Lemmi had played his part but the great game of the Federated Secret Societies had only suffered a temporary setback.

The fate of Italy is the fate of all nations governed by political rings. Italy in the 19th century seems to have been the vortex of the intrigue directed against Christianity which today ravages the world, carrying in its wake a general disregard of all ideals, decency, duty and loyalty.

Liberty is corrupted into licentiousness, marital fidelity into perversion, equality into equality of low standards and fraternity into a brotherhood based on mutual slavery under the yoke of International Finance.

And the monster grows apace! Today it bestrides the world under the name of Bolshevism, but it is the same old monster, the heresy of the first centuries of the Christian era and the Middle Ages, namely — Gnosticism.

CHAPTER XXXII

ADRIANO LEMMI

This Chapter is compiled largely of extracts, some transcribed verbatim and others elaborated to include information necessary to the reader, from :

Adriano Lemmi
by Domenico Margiotta 33°

Adriano Lemmi was born of Roman Catholic parents, at Leghorn, Tuscany, on April 30, 1822. He was the son of Fortunato Lemmi and Teresa Merlino, his lawful wife.

At an early age, he became the despair of his parents. He was dissolute, frequented evil haunts and formed undesirable friendships.

Running away from home on December 29, 1843, he forged a letter stating, under the letterhead of Falconet and Co., that a credit for his account was to be opened on Pastre Bros., Bankers, at Marseilles, where, shortly after his arrival, he scraped acquaintance with Monsieur and Madame Grand Boubagne whom he was soon accused of having robbed of 300 francs. The evidence against him was overwhelming, and he was condemned to a year in prison for that and other minor offences, and also sentenced to five years on probation.

He served his term and bolted to Constantinople,

Arriving there early in April 1845, he eked out a precarious existence, first as a kitchen hand, then as the assistant in the shop of an old apothecary, whose preparations he peddled in the streets of Galata.

His employer had a friend, a Polish rabbi who, having been condemned for conspiracy in Russia, had taken refuge in Constantinople. This man took a fancy to him and in an effort to curry favour with the Jews, Lemmi presently asked if he might be received into the religion of Moses. As a diplomatic move, the suggestion was a great success for the apothecary and the rabbi, proud and jubilant to have secured a neophyte, taught him the Talmud, while another rabbi, Abraham Maggioro, instructed him in the mysteries of the Cabala. Together, they initiated him into the secrets of magic, in which he proved an apt pupil and his lot was much improved, but the old apothecary died in 1847, and Lemmi found himself without employment. The Polish rabbi having left Constantinople, he stayed on a while under the protection of his friend Maggioro.

In those days, the few Freemasons coming to Pera were English. Freemasonry had been introduced into Turkey in 1738, but until the Crimean war it suffered many vicissitudes. The English saw their lodges fade away for want of active members, for the government did not favour them. Adriano Lemmi was supposed to have been initiated into Freemasonry in 1848 by an English Mason, but this ceremony seems to have somehow been irregular as it had to be repeated at a later date.

Finally, the era of his trials seemed to end. In 1849, some of his English masonic friends gave him a letter of introduction to the great Magyar, Kossuth, who had come to Constantinople, a fugitive from public opprobrium in his own country.

To save him from starvation, Kossuth took him as his servant at low wages, but he gradually succeeded in ingratiating himself with his patron till finally he became his secretary on the recommendation of Mazzini with whom he was already in correspondence.

When Kossuth went to the United States in 1851, he was accompanied by Lemmi. They were forced to travel via Gibraltar and London as the French authorities refused Kossuth permission to land in France, and Lemmi, knowing that he was wanted by the French police, knew better than to try to do so. In Lodge No. 133 in Cincinnati, U. S. A., Kossuth received the masonic initiation.

On the 2nd of December 1851, Prince Louis Napoleon, then President of the French Republic, announced to the people and the army his intention of submitting to a referendum the plan of a constitution founded on the system favoured by his uncle. It was a Coup d'Etat. At this news Lemmi left Kossuth in America and went to join Mazzini and Ledru Rollin in London.

By this time, Mazzini had already established his reputation as an international intriguer. The " Youth Movement" of the day was already organized : —

The societies composing it were : —

Young Italy — founded by Mazzini................ 1831
Young Poland — founded by Simon Konarski.... 1834
Young England — founded by Benjamin Disraeli______1834
Young Europe — founded by Mazzini............... 1834
Young Switzerland — founded by Melegari (Emery).. 1835
Young Ireland — founded by Smith O'Brien........ 1843
Young Germany — founded by Hecker & Struve.... 1848

The oath taker. by the members of Young Italy reads as follows :[1]

" In the name of God and of Italy — in the name of all the martyrs of the holy Italian cause, who have fallen beneath foreign and domestic tyranny — by the duties which bind me to the land wherein God has placed me, and to the brothers whom God has given me — by the love, innate in all men, I bear to the country that gave my mother birth, and will be the home of my children — by the hatred, innate in all men, I bear to evil, injustice, usurpation, and arbitrary rule — by the blush that rises to my brow when I stand before the citizens of other lands, to know that I have no rights of citizenship, no country, and no national flag — by the aspiration that thrills my soul towards that liberty for which it was created, and is impotent to exert ; towards the good it was created to strive after, and is impotent to achieve in the silence and isolation of slavery — by the memory of our former greatness and the sense of our present degradation — by the tears of Italian mothers for their sons dead on the scaffold, in prison, or in exile — by the sufferings of the millions —

"I———, believing in the mission entrusted by God to Italy, and the duty of every Italian to strive to attempt its fulfilment — convinced that where God has ordained that a nation shall be, he has given the requisite power to create it; that the people are the depositaries of that power, and that in its right direction, for the people, and by the people, lies the secret of victory — convinced that virtue consists in action and sacrifice, and strength in union and constancy of purpose — I give my name to Young Italy, an association of men holding the same faith, and swear —

" To dedicate myself wholly and for ever to the endeavour with them to constitute Italy one free, independent, Republican nation — to promote, by every means in my power, whether by written or spoken word, or by action, the education of my Italian brothers towards the aim of Young Italy ; towards association, the sole means of its accomplishment; and to virtue, which alone can render the conquest lasting — to abstain from enrolling myself in any other association from this time forth — to obey all the instructions, in conformity with the spirit of Young Italy, given me by those who represent with me the union of my Italian brothers, and to keep the secret of these instructions, even at the cost of my life — to assist my brothers of the Association both by action and counsel —

" NOW AND FOR EVER !

" This do I swear, invoking upon my head the wrath of God, the abhorrence of man, and the infamy of the perjurer, if I ever betray the whole or a part of this my oath. "

The fusion of Young Italy and Carbonarism evidently did not take place till after April 8, 1839, for in a letter of that date, Mazzini writes to L. A. Melegari at Lausanne " It is a mixture of Young Italy and Carbonarism. They have had me approached indirectly to know if I accept the fusion. " [1]

After 1851, Lemmi began playing an important part in all politico-masonic assassinations and in all the popular insurrections of which Italy was the scene. On behalf of Mazzini, he kept up relations with the revolutionaries of Tuscany and it was he who inspired the attempt to assassinate the councillor of the Grand Duke's minister, Baldasseroni, in broad daylight, on Oct. 21, 1852.

A letter from which we quote, written from Malta by Francesco Crispi to Mazzini, dated Nov. 13, 1853, [2] gives a most interesting sidelight on the relations then existing between the Great Italian Revolutionary, his ally Crispi and Adriano Lemmi whom Crispi already recognizes as the agent of an organization inimical to his ideals.

" Brother, — the die is cast! At the present moment, an uprising in Sicily is imminent, if, indeed, it has not already taken place. God grant it may not prove a second sixth of February !

" Knowing that I was here you should have forewarned me. Those to whom you have seen fit to entrust the initiative will not be able to exert any influence whatsoever in the provinces of Palermo and Messina ! their names, indeed, may even be greeted there with hostility, and bring about a reaction. Now without Palermo and Messina every attempt in Sicily will prove vain. But what is done is done, and our plain duty now is to work together in helping on the undertaking, and, as far as is possible, in warding off evil consequences. Let me know the plan of action and what orders you have issued to the leaders. Although I have little regard for them, I intend to do my duty, and this for the good of our country and party, upon whose already tarnished reputation another failure would bring utter ruin. You will remember that ever since 1850, I have been ready to hasten to Sicily. At that time we were working to form the National Committee and raise the loan that should provide funds for any great emergency. Then the Sicilian Committee was formed and speedily dissolved, while you worked to prepare an uprising in northern and central Italy, forgetting Sicily entirely. But not so my friends and I, who were convinced that the greatest possibility of success lav in this island. Nor was this all. After your misfortunes in Lombardy you forgot your old friends, and flung yourself into the arms of men who, up to that very moment, had held you and your theories up to ridicule, but who had been clever enough to deceive you through Signor Lemmi, to whom they had declared their intention to act.

" I am no more their enemy than are any of the friends who belong to the party opposed to Calvi. "

On February 6, 1853, an incipient insurrection broke out in Milan, then under Austrian dominion, as the result of a proclamation signed by Mazzini and Kossuth. That it was sent by Lemmi from Switzerland to the revolutionary Lombards is a fact well known in Italian masonry.

Though implicated, the Swiss and Piedmontese governments tried to appear unconcerned. Numerous refugees from Northern Italy went to Switzerland or Piedmont following the instructions transmitted by Lemmi.

Piedmont, assisted by England, (who was secretly helping Mazzini's masonry) tried to induce the Emperor of Austria to issue a decree confiscating the properties of the revolutionary refugees, but a bloody protest was made against the measure on the 18th of February when, by order of Kossuth and Mazzini a revolutionary fanatic made a,n attempt against the life of the Emperor. Lemmi was chosen to arm the assassin who was a Hungarian and a mutual friend of both Kossuth and himself.

Switzerland, under threat of severance of diplomatic relations, was then obliged to banish indiscriminately all political refugees.

Then came the Crimean war, the real causes of which were known only to the chiefs of Freemasonry.

England and Piedmont worked up a quarrel with Russia about Turkey, over the respective spheres of influence of the Christian Greek and Catholic churches at Jerusalem. This rivalry was of little real consequence either to England or Piedmont but it served to turn France against Russia on the pretext of protecting Turkey.

The truth was that for a long time, long before the Hungarian insurrection of Kossuth, the secret chiefs of masonry, headed by Lord Palmerston, had made a plan according to which Prussia was to be exalted at the expense of Austria, German unity was to be achieved to the advantage of the Prussian monarchy, as well as that of Italy to the benefit of the house of Savoy, and a Polish Magyar state was to be created.[3]

Fearing that the Hungarian insurrection might spread to his Polish provinces, a community of monarchic interests had impelled the Tsar to reach an understanding with the Austrian Emperor which had helped to hinder the success of the Magyar revolutionaries. Until this " Entente " could be broken up, the masonic chiefs knew that German and Italian Unity would remain a dream.

[3] It is a curious fact that the book from which the above is translated was written in 1894 and that these points were actually achieved in 1919 at the Treaty of Versailles. The machinery which the German monarchical power thought it was using for its own ends, was already, in reality, being guided by the unseen Jewish power controlling Freemasonry.

Austria was the dupe in this war. As for France, she had to fight with the army of Piedmont so as to prepare public opinion in both countries for the next move against Austria.

All this had been combined by Lord Palmerston who knew how to get his way with all the other secret chiefs, not excepting Mazzini. Kossuth naturally favoured the masonic programme. He wished death to the Tsar for having caused him to lose his position in Hungary. It is also easy to understand how Napoleon III was drawn into the affair. The chiefs of the sect only had to remind him of his oath as Carbonaro and show him the laurels to be won.

" Mazzini and Kossuth urged on the Crimean war, and English diplomacy prevented Austria from joining Russia. From then on, that power, being opposed by France, England, Piedmont and Turkey, faced inevitable defeat, which happened after a war lasting two years. Austria was separated for ever from Russia and was punished for her ingratitude, for, without even waiting for the end of hostilities, the Mason chiefs, who had used her so successfully, started the work of revolution on her territory.[4]

This war served a great purpose for Adriano Lemmi. It enabled him to get rich.

Through his relations with Mazzini and Kossuth, he obtained contracts for Italian ambulances for the Crimea. These he sent from Geneva. Pocketing a large part of the money, he paid the rest with bad chequees and fled to Malta. This was his first big theft, but his flight did not prevent him and his two accomplices from being condemned by default by the Swiss judge.

" On Jan. 4, 1855, Mazzini, chief of the Central European Committee, —• the title Mazzini assumed as leader of ' Young Europe ' — called a meeting of his accomplices in London at which F.·. Felix Pyat, the president of the branch group known as the Communist Revolutionaries, was present. These two committees were in correspondence with one in Brussels, one in Jersey and one in Geneva. At this meeting, the death of Charles III, Duke of Parma, was unanimously voted, and Mazzini sent Lemmi a passport in the name of ' Lewis Broom ' under the protection of which he immediately left Malta for the Duchy of Parma. During the one day he spent there, he organized a secret meeting at Castel-Guelfo for March 25, during which lots were drawn and a man called Antonio Carra was thus duly selected by fate to do the deed. Lessons in stabbing were then given on a dummy and Adriano, who presided at the assembly, adressing the assassin-elect said " This day is the feast of the Jesuits and nuns when they celebrate the apparition to their Madonna of an angel announcing the advent of the Messiah as her son. Brother, I announce to thee that thou wilt be the Messiah of the Revolution of Parma. I consecrate thee liberator of the oppressed, saviour of tyrannized men. Strike the despot! Let not thy hand falter. Our God, who is not the God of the priests, will protect thee ! "

Two days later, Charles III fell under the attack of an alleged fanatic who made good his escape. The circumstances of the plot are known because Lemmi often boasted of the part he played in it to Frapolli and others who repeated the story.

Mazzini often acknowledged that his " little Jew " was worth ten good men, so clever was he at choosing the right men for important jobs, and so able at inspiring them with the energy necessary for doing their duty.

The Parma business greatly enhanced the value of Lemmi in the eyes of the principal chiefs. He remained incognito for several days at Sant'Ilario, but the revolution did not come off, for the crime was received by the people with horror, and the widow of Charles III, the daughter of the Duc de Berry, was proclaimed regent for her son Robert, a child of six.

Still under the false name of Lewis Broom, Lemmi went to Reggio, then to Modena, returning to the duchy of Parma in the last days of June, where he prepared the abortive insurrection of July 22, which was quickly suppressed.

In January, 1855, the Piedmontese government suppressed 334 religious institutions at the instigation of the revolutionary societies which, thanks to complicity under the guise of tolerance, were unhindered in the development of their criminal resources.

Lemmi, who had at his disposal as many false papers as might be necessary for his secret missions, again changed his name. Armed with a Hungarian passport, belonging to one of the henchmen of Kossuth, he went to Rome under the name of " Ulrick Putsch ", professional cook, and on June 12 there was an attempt to kill Cardinal Antonelli! He immediately reappeared at Genoa where, on the thirteenth of the month, a manifesto was published by Mazzini, inciting the people "to insurrection. This was spread by Lemmi in several towns, notably even in Rome where, by a curious coincidence, on July 9, the same day on which he returned to the city of the popes, an attempt was made on the life of Father Beckx, the General of the Jesuits.

In all these movements, in all these crimes where Lemmi's hand is not visible, those of his associates always were.

Lemmi and Orsini — the latter also an agent of Mazzini, had transmitted to the revolutionary committee of Milan their chief's instructions in view of an imminent uprising. Having received their instructions, Lemmi went to Switzerland with his Hungarian passport, and Orsini, under the name of George Hernash, went to Austria where an insurrection, timed to occur simultaneously with that in Lombardy, was to be fomented. Orsini was arrested at Hermanstadt, in Transsylvania, brought back to Vienna and transferred to Mantua where he was judged and condemned to death for high treason on August 20, 1855.

Locked up in the castle of San Giorgio, he succeeded in escaping on the night of March 29th, 1856.

On November 13 of the same year, two other agents of Mazzini were taken at Rome.

Under the pretext that the King of Naples was not observing strict neutrality towards Russia, Lord Palmerston obtained the disgrace of Mazza, the Neapolitan Director of Police. In this move, he was aided by Mazzini, who, having caused certain confidential papers to be stolen, knew some things that were none of his business. Mazza, devoted to the King, had been his protector against the machinations of the secret societies.

Napoleon III, too, allowed himself to be influenced by Palmerston who, as patriarch of European Freemasonry, favoured one of his pet projects. This involved the appointment of Prince Murat, Grand Master of the Grand Orient of France, to the throne of Naples and the two Sicilies, and the elimination of the house of Bourbon. England and France presently threatened to send a squadron to Naples but owing to the protest of Russia, the threat was never carried out.

In September, "1856, the European Committee decided that the King of Naples should be assassinated and that at the same time there should be an insurrection in Sicily. A man named Baron de Bentivegna, who had been introduced by an English high mason, Henri Misley, to Mazzini in London, was entrusted with the task of fomenting the trouble, while Lemmi took charge of the murder. According to the plan, Ferdinand II was to be blown up by a bomb thrown under his carriage by some fanatic selected by Lemmi.

Armed with two bombs, Lemmi went to Sicily. He now travelled under a French passport, provided for him by a friend through Ledru-Rollin, and made out under the name of " Jacques Lathuile ", merchant.

Everything was ready both in Palermo and Naples. The dates of the assassination of the king and the outbreak of the revolution were fixed for November 22, but the individual chosen to perform the deed, Filippo Carabi, suddenly lost interest in the project when he realized that the bomb destined for the king would also inevitably prove fatal to himself.

Lemmi was angry over this unexpected check. It was then too late to recruit another executioner but the disobedient Sicilian was eventually punished, for, five years later he was murdered in a Neapolitan lodge where he had gone without apprehension. The archives of the Directory of Naples contain the details of the affair, the sequestration of Carabi in 1861, his accusation before a secret tribunal, the terrible tortures to which he was subjected and his last horrible agony, shrouded in mystery.

Lemmi, now unable to have the assassination and the plot coincide, stayed on nevertheless in Naples, as he hoped to find a substitute for the defaulting murderer.

On the appointed day, November 22, Bentivegna raised the banner of revolt at Cefalú, near Palermo.

" Jacques Lathuile ", finding himself obliged to substitute another for the bomb method of assassination, induced a soldier called Agesilas Milano to attempt the life of the king, so, while Ferdinand II was reviewing his troops, Milano stepped forward and struck him twice in the chest with his bayonet. Luckily for the king, the instrument bent, failing even to wound him. Milano was arrested, judged and shot, but Mazzini, qualifying him as a martyr, had a commemoration medal struck in his honour.

As for the insurrection in Sicily, it was suppressed, Bentivegna was captured and shot on December 20, but Lemmi-Lathuile left the country as soon as he realized that things were not going well. His identity was never revealed and can today only be definitely established by the records of the secret masonic trial of Filippo Carabi in the archives of the Directory of Naples.

In 1857, a splendid farce was enacted by Piedmont. It has since been repeatedly proved that Cavour and Rattazzi were in agreement with the Mazzinians and the Garibaldians with regard to the scheme for a United Italy, under the house of Savoy — that is to say, they favoured the dispossession of the legitimate sovereigns of the duchies of Tuscany, Parma, Modena, the Papal States and the Kingdom of the two Sicilies, and the wresting of Lombardy and Venice from Austria. In the eyes of the European monarchs who were not in the secret, Piedmont wished to appear innocent of any connivance in the plot, and to have been forced only reluctantly to acquiesce. The secretary and faithful friend of Count Cavour was the Piedmontese

Isaac Artom,[5] while l'Olper, later rabbi of Turin and also the friend and counsellor of Mazzini, was one of the most open advocates of Italian Independence.

A few Freemasons in English, French and Prussian diplomacy alone knew what was being plotted, so the International Committee of London decreed an upheaval in Tuscany for the year 1857 and, in order that Piedmont might not be suspected of complicity, it -was arranged that an insurrection should be staged in that kingdom at the same time as the one in Tuscany. That was the comedy !

The insurrection occurred but failed in its object.

In London, the same year, Mazzini hatched a plot against Napoleon III. It was not the first.

As the French Emperor did not seem sufficiently active on behalf of Italian Unity, it was decided to stimulate him by terror. Mazzini, Kossuth and Ledru-Rollin were reinforced in the committee of London by Herzen, Bakunin, Turr and Klapka and, early in the year 1857, Paolo Tibaldi, Giuseppe Bartolotti and Paolo Grilli were chosen by Mazzini and Ledru-Rollin to kill Napoleon. Massarenti, another tool of Mazzini's, gave them fifty golden Napoleons when they left for Paris to perpetrate the crime and, addressing them before their departure, Mazzini said " You will study the habits of the Emperor and you will strike when you find the opportunity favorable. " Massarenti, Campanella, Tibaldi, Grilli and Bartolotti, the active tools of the plot, were all personal friends of Lemmi. To quote the words of the Imperial Attorney at the hearing of the Court of Assizes at Paris, August 7, 1857, when Grilli was sentenced to deportation, Mazzini and Ledru-

Rollin were the chiefs of all plots the object of which was assassination.

On January 14, 1858, at the door of the Opera House in Paris, another attempt was made on the life of the French Emperor. Three bombs killed eight and wounded 156 persons. Some of the guilty were arrested but others, among whom was our hero, Adriano Lemmi, now masquerading under the name of James MacGregor, escaped. Lemmi had come to Paris ostensibly to visit Giuseppe Mazzoni, his Tuscan compatriot, then professor of languages in the French capital. Orsini, who had taken the pseudonym of Alsop on reaching Paris, Pierri, and Rudio the principal actors in the drama were caught and condemned to death. The first two were executed, Rudio's sentence being commuted to hard labour for life. Orsini was not unknown to Napoleon III. Together, they had belonged to the Lodge of Cesna as members of the Carbonari. In 1874 the Giornale di Firenze published the account of Napoleon's visit to his imprisoned assassin who warned him that, unless he showed a disposition to help the Unity of Italy, other bombs were reserved for him. Napoleon acquiesced, and one saw the famous will of Felice Orsini published by the Imperial official journal which enabled the French deputy Monsieur Keller to remark before the legislative body on March 13, 1861, that "the Italian war was the execution of the will of Orsini. "

We must here be permitted a somewhat lengthy digression unfolding the progress of political corruption and its affinity with secret societies.

As a result of the Orsini conspiracy, Palmerston sponsored " The Conspiracy to Murder " Bill, a measure framed to hamper International Assassins in the free use of English territory for hatching plots against foreign potentates. The Bill passed its first reading in Parliament, Disraeli voting for it, but at the second reading, Milner Gibson, a Radical, moved an amendment which was in effect a vote of censure on Palmerston and a challenge to the French. " This was eventually carried by 19 votes, Disraeli's support being, of course, the decisive factor. An explanation of this change of front is afforded in Ashley's Life of Lord Palmerston. Seated in the Peers' Gallery, Lord Derby listened to the debate, and watched the tide rising against the Prime Minister. Convinced that he could be overthrown, he " sent hasty word to his lieutenant that they should take it at the flood which led to office, " and thereupon Disraeli " plunged into the stream. "[6]

Lord Palmerston fell and was succeeded by Lord Darby.

Where does Disraeli — Lord Beaconsfield — come into the scheme ? We know him as the author of many novels that, while not being evidential, serve to show the knowledge of their author on subjects of International significance: He knew how things were done and, like a naughty boy, told tales out of school.

Young Italy, Young Ireland, lastly Young England with Disraeli as its founder. What do we really know of Young England beyond what the Primrose League would have us think ?

We know that Disraeli was always in debt, always short of money and we know that people under such conditions are seldom their own masters. Who were his masters ?

Disraeli's father, Isaac d'lsraeli, was offered the leadership of their sect by the Jews of London. He refused. Was it also offered to his son ?

Writing of Lord Beaconsfield, A. A. B. passes a casual remark in the (London) Evening Standard of Monday, October 29, 1928 — " The name of the heroine of Lothair, the work of his meridian, is that of his wife. Mary Anne ruled the underworld of secret societies. " Are we to search there for the invisible masters ?

A further light is thrown upon this epoch of English history by no less an authority than the Encyclopaedia Britannica, 9th Edition. In an article on Prince Metternich it says : — Metternich " in one of his most earnest writings places side by side, as instances of evil sought for its own sake, the action of the secret societies in Germany, the Carbonaria of Italy and the attempts of the English to carry the Reform Bill! "

We do know that the Reform Bill was one of Disraeli's victories !

Again one wonders at Metternich. That great reactionary might well have disliked the Reform Bill but this remark does not just indicate dislike — it is a positive indictment when read with the knowledge available to the historians of today.

Therein lies a singular coincidence of facts. On the one hand, we have one of two statesmen, Metternich, decrying the English Reform Bill and on the other, Disraeli getting it passed in the English Parliament. Yet, both men, ever impecunious, were ruled by money coming from the same source, namely, the Rothschilds who, in Austria as well as in London, were actively becoming the masters of the national finances of both countries.[7]

In 1862, the First International came into being and the part played in it by such Freemasons as Karl

But to return to the programme of Young Italy.

The Piedmontese were not quite satisfied with the results of the hasty treaty of Villafranca (1859), but the revolutionaries had attained their object as far as Tuscany, the Duchies of Parma and Modena and the Pontifical States were concerned, though they did not dare to dispossess the Pope without some preliminary political manoeuvres. The revolution in the kingdom of the two Sicilies had failed again but it was soon to succeed.

By way of retaliation, the International Committee of London began a propaganda in Lombardy among the students in the colleges as a result of which the University of Pavia was forced to close. This movement which started in December was the precursor of the coming war. Lord Palmerston's plan was in process of realization.

To Francesco Crispi, a tool of Lemmi, was now assigned the task in which he and Bentivegna had failed. He was in London when the news of the death by poison of Ferdinand II reached the International Masonic Committee. Mazzini's tool in the poison plot was Monsignor Caputo, a priest who had succeeded in winning the confidence of the king as his confessor. He was a Freemason, and a Sublime Maître Parfait, belonging to one of the most evil branches of the sect. The poison was administered in a slice of melon and. the king died in agony, on May 22, 1857.

Freemasonry had won, for Francis II, who now succeeded his father, was too young and inexperienced to be able to cope with any serious political situation alone.

At this period, the states of Tuscany, Parma and. Modena were trying to form a coalition but Dr. Farini, a Freemason, had become dictator, and dictated regardless of popular sentiment. Lemmi was continually running back and forth from England with instructions from the London Committee to the local revolutionary chiefs and, in his secret capacity, was very active through the different assemblies where the votes of the sold or terrorized members went for annexation to Piedmont, regardless of the wishes of the majorities in their constituencies.

Travelling under the assumed names of Emmanuel Pareda and Toby Glivan, Crispi spent much of his time during the next two years in Sicily as an agitator fomenting trouble. A great uprising was planned for Oct. 12, but, though Lemmi was there to help, their combined efforts on that date were futile.

Still they persisted, and by propaganda and underground work, they prepared for the great event of 1860. When Garibaldi, Grand Master ad vitam of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites, at Palermo, landed at Marsala with his famous " thousand " on the 11th May, he found everything ready. His expedition would, however, have failed had it not been for the Piedmontese gold which bought the chief functionaries of the King of Naples, one of whose ministers, Liborio Romano, was chief of Sicilian Masonry and presided at the Scottish Consistory at Naples. Francis' friend and confidant, General Nunziante, Duc of Mignano, was bought by Cavour for four millions !

Organized at Genoa by Dr. Bertani, this supposedly spontaneous act of the famous general which the government of Victor Emmanuel publicly disavowed, was organized by Cavour who furnished the money by drafts on Mr. Bombrini, director of the bank, as proved by a letter, written by the King himself to the American Commodore, William de Rohan.

June 27th 1860.

Commander;

I enclose herewith Medici's [one of Garibaldi's generals] two letters which you will put into other envelopes and give to Cavour.

I have already given three millions to Bertani.

Return immediately to Palermo to tell Garibaldi that I will send him Valerio instead of La Farina, and that he is to advance at once on Messina, as Francesco [the King of Naples] is on the point of giving the Neapolitans a constitution.

Your friend,

VICTOR EMMANUEL.

This letter which was published in Rome, in 1881, by the son of Victor Emmanuel in the Fanfulla with an article by Commodore William de Rohan was never challenged. Margiotta then adds — " there is little more to be said concerning the connivance of Cavour and Garibaldi. Victor Emmanuel did nothing against his wish as the official newspapers allege, for everything that happened in 1860 was settled in advance. It was necessary to save appearances and to deceive Russian and Austrian diplomacy which was not in the secret, so that was Cavour's reason for allowing Garibaldi to play the part of an undisciplined revolutionary, taking on himself alone the responsibility of his adventures."

The policies of the Grand Master Cavour and the Grand Master Mazzini, each representing two different Masonic currents emanating from different sources, met on the issue of the destruction of the Papacy which it was hoped to submerge through the unification of Italy.

Cavour aimed at unity in the form of a constitutional monarchy under the house of Savoy and Mazzini, aiming at a republic, found himself forced into a compromise which obliged him to accept, temporarily at least, a Piedmontese monarchy for United Italy.

The captain of Freemasonry was Garibaldi, the tool of Palmerston, Cavour and Mazzini.

While working thus together and helping one another, Mazzini and Cavour each followed an occult personal and distinct line of action, the secrets of which they did not share. Each in his mysterious work had his chief agent, the man he trusted. The chief agents of Cavour were his Jewish secretary Isaac Artom and Carletti and the chief agents of Mazzini were his Jewish secretaries, Wolf, Lemmi and L'Olper.

After the flight of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, Lemmi went to Florence where, to better mask his play, he became a banker. His patrons Mazzini and Kossuth were never in want of money furnished either by England or Masonry. He made money, practising usury as a good Jew, charging it is said up to 200 and 300 per cent, but, in politics, he continued as a valuable auxiliary to Mazzini.

Garibaldi and Mazzini wished to push on to Rome but Victor Emmanuel thought it more prudent to leave well enough alone for the time being, and the Piedmontese government finally overruled the revolutionaries. Mazzini and Crispi were even asked to leave Naples by the authorities though Lemmi was not molested.

Cavour knew him to be the secret agent of Mazzini and had him watched and his record investigated but, though he did not trouble himself much about him, he wanted to insure himself against all anti-monarchist action on his part.

During this inquiry, he came across the records of Lemmi's youthful exploits at Marseilles in 1844, so he asked the government of Napoleon III for an official copy of this document which lay in the archives of the Ministry of the Interior of the Italian government for 31 years and proved a powerful weapon in the hands of Victor Emmanuel, and Humbert I. Chafing under the menace of the existence of this document however, Lemmi induced Crispi in 1893 to arrange for its disappearance, but this move was forestalled by an implacable enemy of Lemmi who succeeded in getting possession of the famous paper.[8]

In 1867, Lemmi entered into negotiations with the Freemason Graf von Bismarck and the first projects of alliance between Prussia and Italy date thenceforth. Lemmi hated France as much as did Mazzini, so it is not surprising to find them both intriguing with Bismarck to bring about a Franco-Italian estrangement.

Napoleon III, by the convention of Sept. 15, 1864, had established Rome and its surrounding territory as distinct from the Kingdom of Italy, so that till 1870, the church still retained this last fragment of its temporal possessions but, towards 1865, Mazzini organized an association for Italian Unity, the object of which was the Union of these States with the rest of Italy, with Rome for the capital, according to Garibaldi's programme. Mazzini however was afraid to go to Rome without the consent of France, thinking that the destruction of the temporal power of the Pope, in the face of French opposition, could only be obtained by means of a revolution.

No one is ignorant of the negotiations between France, Austria and Italy in 1867, fruitless, because of Napoleon's refusal to accede to the proposal of the Austrian minister de Beust to allow " United " Italy freedom to march on Rome. France, subsequently abandoned by Italy, met her fate at Sedan in 1870 and Bismarck used Mazzini and Italian Freemasonry to break the Franco-Italian alliance and to force Victor Emmanuel to take Rome in spite of the wishes of the French people.

When the Franco-Prussian war broke out in 1870, the time for revolution was ripe. In July, shortly after the declaration of hostilities, the Italian revolutionaries held a mass meeting in the theatre at Milan, organized by the most notorious and dreaded agitators in Italy. After this public meeting, there was a secret political one attended by 15 high masons. Those present, according to Oreste Cucchi, who was told of it by Fabrizi himself, were : Doctor Timoteo Riboli, Francesco Crispi, Colonel Cucchi, Asproni, Bertani, Fabrizi, Frapolli, Cairoli, Rattazzi, Seismit Doda, Morelli, Sineo, Cosentini, Mancini and General Raffaelo Cadorna. The object of this conference was to determine the line of conduct to be adopted in the event of the defeat of Napoleon's army, and it was decided to send Cucchi to Bismarck to obtain from the Prussian government the necessary arms to go to Rome should Victor Emmanuel persist in his attitude of vacillation. Cucchi accomplished his mysterious mission, and Bismarck concluded a deal whereby Prussia was to furnish guns and money to the Italian revolutionaries, in return for which they were to keep up agitation to prevent an Italian alliance with the French nation.

Everything was ready. Still, Victor Emmanuel hesitated.

Public opinion was rapidly being manufactured with the assistance of Bismarck's money, so the deputies of the Left who signed a petition for the occupation of Rome, on being asked what they would do if the ministry refused their demand answered " We will make barricades and with the people we will go to Rome without you ! "

The government then decided to act, and General Cadorna, who had already been selected by Freemasonry to lead a popular army should the government not wish to send him there in an official capacity, marched on Rome.

The operations of war began on September 15, 1870, and on September 20, at five o'clock in the morning, the cannon of Cadorna settled the Roman question. The Porta Pia was forced. The sacrifice was accomplished. Freemasonry had triumphed.

But Freemasonry had won again when, according to Mr. George d'Heylli, writing in February 1871,[9] " Mr. Gambetta, who was the arbitrary master of that country's (France) destiny during the three months that his dictatorship lasted, was able, without anyone daring to oppose his conduct, to misuse his power in order to unsettle the country and satisfy his own ambitions. He trampled the country's laws under foot, by slighting the most elementary rules of civilised society, by hunting from their benches magistrates immovibles, and from the council chambers those who had been elected by suffrage, by taking the war into his own hands, by promoting and depriving officers of their rank, by suddenly changing , according to his own whims and fancies or those of his advisers, his opinions, schemes and plans. "

Such indeed is the example given by all the demagogues who act in the name of " The People " !

In the discussion concerning the fate of the fomen-ters of the Commune, Gambetta made one of his most eloquent speeches, the result of which was that a vote of amnesty was passed in their favour.

In 1871, he further consolidated his power by issuing a decree declaring that the former servitors of the Empire would be ineligible to membership in the National Assembly which was convened to ratify the treaty with Prussia.

By this time, Adriano Lemmi had attained prosperity and become the owner of vast estates near Florence.

Mazzini died on March 11, 1872, and, at his request, Lemmi was appointed by Albert Pike to succeed him as chief of the Sovereign Executive Directory.

In 1870, the Marquis of Ripon, who had succeeded the Earl of Zetland as Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England, resigned his office and became a Roman Catholic. He was succeeded by the Prince of Wales, later to be Edward VII, King of England, received Knight Kadosch in 1882 on Jan. 28, and Affilié Supérieur, Grand Orient, in 1883.[10]

Adriano Lemmi, a Palladist, though not yet a member of the Supreme Council of Rome, soon concluded that the secret superior authority conferred on him could best be enhanced in Italy by smashing the various Supreme Councils for the benefit of one. Unity of Italian Masonry was then his aim. Success in this project depended on slow, deliberate manoeuvring, secrecy concerning his palladist affiliation, temporary restriction of the number of triangles in the peninsula and, above all, forbearance in dealing with the rival powers established in the ordinary rites.

In 1875, the scene of Masonic intrigue had shifted to England. The Khedive of Egypt, being at the time financially embarrassed offered his shares in the Suez Canal Co. for sale.

[10] Rosen, L'ennemi social, for oath taken by Edward VII.

" The Duc Decazes, French Minister of Foreign Affairs, failed to inform the French authorities of the Khedive's predicament, while the Rothschilds ", (on the information of their Egyptian agent, Ambroise Cinadino) " secretly advanced to Disraeli, then Prime Minister of England, the necessary funds to deliver the controlling interest of the canal to Britain, thus striking an International Coup d'etat, the significance of which was only dimly appreciated when, in the following year, Disraeli had Queen Victoria proclaimed Empress of India. "[11]

Thus the controlling interest of the great waterway to the East was vested in England to have and to hold, till the British Empire, about to be created, should cease to serve the purpose of its makers.

In June 1877, Adriano Lemmi[12] became an ordinary member of the Grand Orient of Italy at Rome, of which Giuseppe Mazzoni was Grand Master, keeping this affiliation secret till 1883, when he let it be known that he was joint Grand Master with Giuseppe Petroni.

" At this date, the rivalry for supremacy in Scottish Rites had become acute, for the Roman Grand Orient wished to dominate over the Supreme Council of Italy at Turin, of which Timoteo Riboli was Grand Master. The Grand Commander of the Roman Supreme Council was Senator Colonel George Tamajo, though its real chief was Luigi Castellazzo. With the secret aid of the latter and the further assistance of Count Piancini, Tamajo was induced to abdicate his rights for 50,000 francs, and on January 21, 1885, the Supreme Council of Rome was absorbed by the Grand Orient of Italy.

[12] Margiotta, Adriano Lemmi, op. cit., pp. 104-105.

All Lemmi now required to complete his victory was to absorb the Supreme Council of Turin, but Riboli, the only real and legitimate representative of Italian Freemasonry, recognized by the Convention of Universal Scottish Rites at Lausanne, in 1875, and by all the Masonic powers of the world, had no wish to part with a source of revenue or to defer to the little Jew at Rome who was invested with no recognized superior authority.

Lemmi, who well knew that his secret title of Palladist chief assured him eventual supremacy, addressed himself to the Sovereign Pontiff at Charleston, Albert Pike, to whom he explained the danger to Italian Masonry of such intense dissensions and the necessity for fusion in the great struggle against the Vatican, stating further that the authority of Rome, the capital of Italy since 1870, must be recognized by the foreign Masonic powers.

His reasons appealed to the Sovereign Pontiff of Universal Freemasonry who, in November 1886, entirely disarmed Riboli by promising him an indemnity of 30,000 francs. Riboli acquiesced and the money was handed out from the central fund of the order.

In the Supreme Administrative Directory of Berlin, the payment of this sum is recorded in the balance sheet of 1887 under the heading of exceptional expenses in the following terms :[13]

" Suppression of the Supr.·. Cons.·. of Italy sitting at Turin. Extraordinary indemnity allowed to F.·. T. R. on the proposal of the F.·. A. L. and approved by the secret committee of Feb. 28th, 30,000 francs.

Before pocketing his 30,000 francs, Riboli raised a great row, abusing Lemmi and objecting to the fusion of the Supreme Council of Turin with that of Rome. Ignoring the fact that in 1885 Tamajo had received 50 000 francs for the same reason, he sent protests broadcast in the shape of balustres demonstrating the legality of the supreme Council of Turin and the illegality of that of the Roman Centre.

Many Freemasons rallied to his assistance. A great movement was started to do away with the despotism of Lemmi, and numerous Lodges were founded under the " obedience of Turin. "

Lemmi however, being Chief of Political Action in high masonry, had a great advantage over his opponents, but he could not make good his title before the lodges, nine-tenths of whose members ignored the very existence of Universal Central Masonry, the secret of which was to be kept under penalty of death. On the other hand, this was solely a matter concerning Scottish Rites for the protection of which the Supreme Council of Switzerland existed as the Executive power of the Scottish Confederation. This council is distinctly separate from the secret executive of Central high masonry whose one concern is international politics, so no confusion was possible.

During a nine months' campaign, Lemmi's opponents gained many adherents for Riboli, who, suddenly reversing his position, capitulated on the intervention of Albert Pike. Thirty thousand francs had done the trick.

For the benefit of his dupes, Pike had deceitfully declared in the fundamental constitution of high masonry that the Constitution, Statutes and Regulations of each rite would always be respected by Charleston. In order to propitiate Lemmi, he tore up that rite of which Riboli believed him to be the Patriarch and President !

The Supreme Council of Lausanne was much embarrassed inasmuch as, where Scottish Rites was concerned, it was obliged to admit that Lemmi's opponents were in the right, and that as a Scottish Rites Mason he, as Petroni's successor, the Chief of Political Action of secret high masonry, was a rebel.

In an effort to beat the devil around the bush, Riboli and Tamajo, pretending to take Lemmi as their temporary delegate, accepted for themselves the empty honorary title of Sovereign Grand Commander ad vitam, while Lemmi became Sovereign Grand Commander delegate invested with the real power.

Italian Freemasonry was united. A meeting was convened at Florence in January 1887, by Tamajo and Riboli at which seven brothers from Rome and seven from Turin, under orders from Charleston, ratified this agreement.

Lemmi misappropriated masonic funds and profited by his position to exploit everyone, during which period of frenzied finance, he pocketed over four hundred thousand francs. Many complaints of his conduct were sent to the Supreme Directory at Charleston but while passing through the hands of Phileas Walder who shared in the loot, anything to Lemmi's discredit was suppressed, never reaching Pike who trusted him till the end.

It was in 1881 that Lemmi had embarked on his campaign for the dechristianization of Italy, giving, under his invisible direction, an organization to the scattered forces of anticlericalism. Mazzini had made no mistake for Lemmi persecuted the church with a savage hatred.

Measures are to be taken to counteract the work of the institutions known as " Œuvres Pies " (Charitable Works) which were founded by Clericalism to corrupt the people under the misnomer of Charity. The morals of the country thus endangered need reforming as well as the laws.

Women are henceforth to be eligible for Freemasonry and feminine lodges are to be founded as soon as possible.

It is deemed necessary by the congress to establish workmen's lodges in the city as well as in the country. These lodges to be free, except for a nominal fee to cover unavoidable expenses.

It is decided to institute a corps of secret masonic messengers whose mission is to transmit to all lodges the orders and instructions of the chief. These messengers are to be chosen from among Masons having no personal encumbrances and whose devotion to the order has been of long standing. They are to be registered at no particular lodge deriving their powers directly from the central authority of Italian masonry.

A corps of brother propagandists, themselves unknown as Masons, is to be created. They are to travel from town to town as peddlers and merchants of all kinds, spreading everywhere, notably among the rural populations, opinions favourable to masonry. In the course of their peregrinations hey are to abstain from visiting local masonic lodgss and are to be known as " Travelling Brothers. "

Should the order wish to initiate a personage of very high social rank or one who, in the opinion of the Grand Master should happen to be in a position demanding the strictest secrecy, his initiation need be known only to the Assistant Grand Master or the Grand Secretary and the Grand Treasurer.

The congress declares the solution of the social questions and the winning for the legitimate workers of their rights to be its chief concern. The Lodges are authorized to hold debates on the most practical means of obtaining governmental support for all measures tending to abolish pauperism and the improvement of the lot of the working classes.

This, the seventh resolution of the Congress, to be made public.

The liberal forces of Italy are to be secretly organized and the lodges are to act in such a way as to gain for Freemasonry a majority of the national representation in Parliament.

The Congress adopts for Italy the rule passed by the Grand Orient of France in 1848, under the title "Masonic rules to be followed with regard to elections. "

The Congress declares the chief object of the efforts of Italian Freemasonry to be, for the present, to obtain from the government : —

a — The regulation of the ecclesiastical patrimony, the property of which belongs to the state and the administration of which belongs to the civil powers :

b — The strenuous application of all existing laws guaranteeing to the civil society its independence with regard to clerical influence :

c ---- The enforcement of existing laws by virtue of which religious congregations are to be suppressed, and the suggestion of measures calculated to prevent these laws from being evaded :

d ---- The promulgation of the law relating to the property of religious bodies (confiscation) :

e ---- The suppression of all religious instruction in the schools :

j —. The creation of schools for young girls where the pupils can be protected from any kind of clerical influence.

Finally the Congress decided to create by masonic initiative one great, politically non-partisan, anti-clerical party whose object would be to fight and destroy clericalism by any and all means.

Adriano Lemmi promptly obeyed Pike's orders and the resolutions of the Congress which he himself had dictated, by establishing in Rome on July 13, 1881, ten anticlerical auxiliary lodges, the foundation expenses of which were paid by the Supreme Directory of Rome. By his order, similar lodges were founded in almost every important town of the peninsula.

Lemmi is a Satanist and he organized the anticlerical movement as a Satanist. [14] Besides his effort to destroy the church, he led a movement to spread " The Nature Cult " well knowing that the secret protection of this sect would always be afforded him in the event of that of the anti-catholic government of Italy being withdrawn. This sect does not as yet dare to reveal its supreme aim as, say the chiefs, " the world is not yet ready to receive enlightenment by the true light. "

• The reader must remember that at the date when the above was written by Margiotta, Lemmi was still alive.

So Lemmi first preached Lucifer and then fought Christianity by combating the idea of the supernatural!

All his discourses and manifests were composed either by Ulisse Bacci, an atheist, or Umberto dal Medico, a Luciferian.

His instructions to the Italian anticlericals were also put into operation by the Freemasons of other countries, for the supreme object of the sect is the suppression, by a terrible social upheaval, of the religion of God, and its substitution by that of Satan, known to the dupes of Masonry as " The Great Architect of the Universe. "

On November 21, 1888, Lemmi wrote Pike a letter appealing for help in his fight against the Vatican. The letter closed with the following paragraph : —

" Help us in our struggle against the Vatican, thou whose authority is supreme, and under thy impulse all the lodges of Europe and America will rally to our cause. "

Pike needed little urging and immediately fell in with Lemmi's plans.

On March 30th, 1889, the Mother Lodge Archimede took the initiative in an effort to shake off Lemmi's tyrannical yoke by announcing the formation of " The Masonic Federation of the Independent Lodges of Italy. " Lemmi was much perturbed by this effort at secession which he finally succeeded in crushing by the use of the power of gold. After the Federation had called a second congress, he sent one of his secret agents to Palermo with ten thousand francs to buy off the Scelsi brothers. Discord was thus sown in the ranks of the Federation. Soon, the disintegration was complete, the centre of Palermo vanished and opposition was crushed.

Towards this period, Lemmi got control of the Italian tobacco monopoly through which he succeeded, by swindling methods, in acquiring several millions. The whole affair was aired in Parliament but the intimidated deputies voted to save the reputation of the sect and in order to suppress the scandal, although Colonel Achille Bizzoni, Depute Matteo Renato, Impriani Poerio and several newspapers took up the matter and made a great row which ended in the usual way when the public gets tired of a subject.

As a result of Lemmi's politics in the elections of 1890, no decent honest and independent candidate for political position had a chance of being elected against one of his hand-picked nominees. Italian politics became a Freemasonic monopoly and the people were mercilessly exploited by the dregs of society backed by Lemmi and his money, much of which was extorted from the Banca Romana.

On April 2, 1891, Albert Pike died and was succeeded in the supreme Grand College of Masons by Albert George Mackey, who held the post for two years and five months. There were great rivalries between the members of Pike's staff, and Albert George Mackey was chosen as a compromise candidate who was unlikely to interfere seriously with any of the others.

With neither strength of character, energy nor activity, he was no match for Lemmi who aspired to the supreme Masonic power as well as to the handling of the Masonic central funds for the expenditure of a large part of which no account was required by the Supreme Directory at Berlin.

The International organization was now a formidable machine composed of 77 triangular provinces, the archdiocese of high masonry and 33 Lotus Mother Lodges, the founder lodges and generators of Palladism.

With Phileas Walder as accomplice, Lemmi lost no time in starting to undermine the power of Charleston, but to realize this project it was first necessary to create a movement in the triangular provinces. To this end, he employed his secret political agents of the Executive Directory of Rome, practically all of whom were Jews. These agents were registered in the central directory only by a number and a special Masonic name and were unknown even to the Grand Masters of the provincial lodges as well as to the brothers and sisters at the head of a Lotus Mother Lodge.

His particular agent in London in 1893 was supposed to be an old Piccadilly Jew called Daniel Mold. The came under which he was registered for this Triangular province, in the Grand Central Directory at Naples, was Adam-Kadzmoun, the magical value of the letters of which, when added, give the total of 244 exactly as do the letters of his real name.

Lemmi was not forced to rely solely upon his special agents, for he also had the unanimous support of the powerful secret Jewish lodges.

By the decree of Sept. 12, 1874, which confirmed a treaty signed by Armand Levi for the Jewish B'nai B'rith (brothers of the Alliance) of America, Germany and England and the supreme authority of Charleston, Albert Pike authorized the Jewish Freemasons to form a secret federation functioning side by side with the ordinary lodges. This secret society was to bear the title of Sovereign Patriarchal Council and its Universal centre was to be at Hamburg, Valentinskamp Strasse. In subscriptions alone, it collected one million four hundred thousand francs a year which were used for general Jewish propaganda.[15]

15. At that date the franc was at 5 to the dollar.

Under the terms of this document (given in full on p. 225 of Adriano Lemmi by D. Margiotta), Jewish Masonry, unlike Gentile Masonry, was not to be graded, its members were exempt from belonging to any other official rite and " the secret of its existence " was to be most strictly kept by those members of High Masonry who had been informed by the Supreme Dogmatic Directory of its existence. [16]

The latter clause in the agreement is. undoubtedly responsible for the equivocal attitude of all High Masons with regard to the past and present, national and international, secret political activities of the B'nai B'rith. In the interests of humanity, the conspiracy of secrecy should be revealed, for the control of the international balance of power and the possibilities of the international spy system thus established, are a menace to the welfare and peace of the peoples of the world.

" A Jew of French descent, this Armand Levi, above referred to, had attached himself to the Napoleons at an early time and was employed by them in various ways... As a member of the " International " he represented the possibilities of an Imperial Socialism... and when the barricades were built, his name was in the Commune and his voice was raised for the extremist counsels. He it was who rose in the Hotel de Ville, to ask that all the deputies of Paris should be summoned from Versailles, and if they would not come should be deposed, convicted, and condemned to death. "[17]

It was indeed in the heart of the Jewish lodges that the plans to manufacture the public opinion necessary to the success of Lemmi's ambitious project were made, and what actually happened was the result of a plot of the Sovereign Patriarchal Council of Hamburg against the Supreme Dogmatic Directory of Charleston.

Hamburg won in the end and the secret Jewish control of the powerful machine of International Masonry was assured.

The Jewish Lodges were Lemmi's willing tools, and fifty thousand Masons, simultaneously Palladists and members of the Hamburg federation, under orders given by the Jewish agents in the pay of the Chief of Political action, made over a period of three months, in the triangles and secret Jewish lodges, a splendid propaganda calculated to induce discussion and approval of the transfer of the Supreme Dogmatic Directory of Charleston to Rome. Everywhere, by every means, the agents of Lemmi worked indefatigably to create a demand for the removal of the headquarters of the order from Charleston to Rome, on the pretext that the power of the Vatican could be better fought at close quarters. These reclamations of a noisy minority were then magnified for the benefit of the Grand Council of Masons at Charleston into a threat of imminent secession and, after much manoeuvring, Phileas Walder succeeded in inducing George Mackey and the American Masons to sign the decree convening the Sovereign Convention. Walder, having remarked that Lemmi was not to be a candidate for the Supreme Grand Mastership in case of the passage of a vote of transfer of which he maintained there was no danger, seeing that the majority of the triangles favoured Charleston as the seat of High Masonry, the American Masons, over confident of the outcome of the convention, overlooked the importance of the choice of the town in which it was to meet.

On May 20, 1893, after all the delegates had been elected, Lemmi suddenly launched his decree of chief organizer appointing Rome as the convention city.

Had everything been straight, Charleston would have come out of the trial of the secret Convention with a majority of 52 votes, for only 25 provinces favoured the move to Rome, but to Lemmi, all ways, including bribery and crime, were good.

On the eve of the opening of the Convention, fourteen of the delegates favouring Charleston were suddenly taken ill, and elections for substitute delegates were held in five of the Grand Triangles but in the remaining nine, the provincial Grand Masters, owing to lack of time or some other reason, referred the matter by telegram to Charleston. George Mackey answered " Send Bovio proxy to provide a European substitute. "

It was suicide. Bovio, Grand Master General of the Grand Central Directory of Naples, and his lieutenants were entirely devoted to Lemmi in whom George Mackey continued blindly to confide. The nine sudden illnesses of the American delegates (the only ones he knew of) had failed to open his eyes and he continued counting 52 votes against the transfer !

Apart from two or three American delegates, all those who landed in England in August and were entertained by the Mother Lodge of the Lotus of England in the secret temple at 32, Oxford Street (Frascati's) were oblivious of the imminent crisis.

When the Grand Central Directory of Naples received these proxies, nine Italian delegates were named to represent Cleveland, Memphis, Guatemala, Havana, Caracas, Lima, La Paz, Treinta-y-Tres and Port Louis, one of whom abstained from voting while the rest cynically voted against the wishes of the province they represented.

The count of the ballots gave the following result out of 77 delegates :

48 delegates for the transfer to Rome,
25 delegates against the transfer to Rome,
4 delegates not voting the transfer to Rome.

After this essentially fraudulent transfer of the real masonic power from Charleston to Rome, the rest was easy.

The ten Masons of Charleston retained their empty titles in an honorary capacity while Lemmi, now self-styled Sovereign Pontiff, named ten other active Masons, but owing to the difficulties attendant on the meetings of these widely dispersed magnates, he created a Supreme Triangle, with two assistants Carducci and Ferrari, the members of which were : —

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, Germany, Findel (Kether-368) at Leipzig.

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, of India, Hobbs (Khokhma-926) at Calcutta.

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, Hungary, Antal de Berecz (Binah-721) at Budapest.

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, Australia, W. J. Clarke (Khesed-409) at Melbourne.

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, England, David Sandeman (Din-476) at London.[18]

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, France, Floquet, (Tiphereth-1255) at Paris.

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, Egypt, Gerasimos Poggio (Netzakh-1165) at Alexandria.

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, Spain, Miguel Morayta (Hod-816) at Madrid.

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, Chili, B. Alamos-Gonzales (Iesod-1152) at Valparaiso.

Patriarch Emeritus Mason, Belgium, Goblet d'Alviella (Malkhuth-697).

International Masonry under Lemmi becomes Satanic and Jewish,

International Jewry has much to explain !

Lemmi died in 1896 and was succeeded by Ernesto Nathan, an English Jew, who, in view of the intimacy which had existed between his mother, Sarah Nathan and Mazzini, was said to have been the latter's natural son.

Lemmi left a son called Silvano Lemmi.

In 1895, a schismatic masonic group calling itself the Grand Orient of Italy was founded. On March 5, 1899, it held a meeting at which it adopted a constitution of its own after which Lemmi's Grand Orient and the new one settled down to a state of secret civil war.

Secrecy was imperative for, prior to 1895, the row between the various Masonic factions had become so acute that the profane public had begun to get seriously interested in the Political Masonic affairs of the contending factions.

[18] According to " The Royal Blue Book " for January 1895, p. 1065, Mr. Hugh David Sandeman's London address was 33, Golden Square. In Devil Worship in France, Mr. Waite refers to 33, Golden Square as the address of the Supreme Council of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite.

Until two years ago, this address was that of the Faculty of Arts, where lectures and concerts were given in a Masonic Temple.

The outcome of this dispute was the exposures made in the following books :

Mémoires d'une Ex-Palladiste and Le 33° Crispi, by Diana Vaughan.

Le Palladisme and Y a-t-il des femmes dans la franc-Maçonnerie, by Leo Taxil.

Adriano Lemmi, by Domenico Margiotta.

Le Diable au XIX^e Siècle, by Dr. Bataille.

La Femme et I'Enfant dans la Franc-Maçonnerie and La Franc-Maçonnerie Universelle, by A. de la Rive.

L'Ennemie Sociale, by Paul Rosen.

Satan et Cie, by Paul Rosen.

To inaugurate a policy of suppression these revelations were shown to have been a hoax, a mystification. The manoeuvre was successful. On the 19th of April, 1897, the author, writing under the pseudonym of Diana Vaughan, mysteriously disappeared and Leo Taxil publicly repudiated his own allegations against Freemasonry.

Once again the public heard, believed and forgot.

What happened to Palladism, the super rite ? [19].

... " Doctor Domenico Margiotta has given us the following details which complete the telegram which, thanks to him, we published two days ago, on the discovery of the Temple of Satan at Rome : —

" Naturally the agents of the Borghese family were admitted without hindrance to all the halls and rooms of the palace, with the exception of one which was closed, and which the satanic keepers refused obstinately to open. Then the agents

At the foot of page 76 of Mrs. Nesta Webster's Secret Societies, we find the following note : " Thus Hastings, Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, omits all reference to Satanism before 1880 and observes :

' The evidence of the existence of either Satanists or Palladists consists entirely of the writings of a group of men in Paris. '

" It then proceeds to devote five columns out of the six and a half which compose the article to describing the works of two notorious romancers, Leo Taxil and Bataille. There is not a word of real information to be found there. "

Indeed we owe Mrs. Webster a debt of gratitude for thus drawing our attention to this curious effort in an otherwise presumably reliable work, to eliminate certain phases of religious history. Those phases are the personal histories of Albert Pike, the Great Freemason and Giuseppe Mazzini, the Great Revolutionist.

of the proprietor of the premises, (Prince Borghese) insisted on being allowed entrance to that room and threatened finally to have the door forced.

" In the face of such a threat, the guards of Lemmi were compelled to give in and the representatives of the lessor entered the palladian temple.

" Its lateral walls were hung with magnificent red and black damask draperies. At the further end was a great piece of tapestry upon which was the figure of Satan at whose feet "was an altar. Here and there were arranged triangles, squares and other symbolic signs of the sect as well as books and masonic rituals. All around stood gilt chairs. Each of these, in the moulding which capped its back, had a glass eye, the interior of which was lighted by electricity, while in the middle of the temple stood a curious throne, that of the Great Satanic Pontiff.

Owing to the state of terror into which this unexpected sight plunged them, the visitors beat a hasty retreat without further examination of the premises. "

The photostats and documents here appended show the re-organization of the super-rite under the general name of Illuminism, linked as we know with " Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia ". Patents of the Ancient Order of Oriental Templars, then in its embryonic stages (1902) are also shown.

In 1917, this organization unobtrusively declared itself the super rite.

The history of the Ancient Order of Oriental Templars is given on a subsequent page.

CHAPTER XXXIII

THE INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATE

Freemasonry, as the average mason sees it, teaches brotherhood and many worthy and exalted principles. It is primarily a charity organization and only good men are eligible to its ranks. To them the G in the Pentagon means God, but needless to say, if its teaching were not of a noble idealistic character it would make few proselytes.

Within the lodges, and among the members thereof, are members of other rites which the British Mason is deliberately taught contemptuously to refuse to acknowledge as Masonic. Many of these are the recruiting sergeants for the secret societies who make their selection at leisure, choosing only such initiates as seem to them likely to serve their ends.

Once in the higher grades, a man who has, too late, been found to be intractable, can continue to the highest visible point of initiation along the track prepared by those who mean him to know nothing. All is beautiful, all is noble, he sees only the best, and for ever advertises the goodness of Freemasonry.

Though in this capacity he may do nothing else, he becomes an important factor in recruiting.

It is frequently alleged that no English Mason is permitted to attend a Lodge meeting of the Grand Orient or of any other so called irregular masonry.

This is nonsense !

If such a statement is to be considered, how are we to reconcile the fact that Wm. Wynn Westcott, an English Mason, appointed Junior Grand Deacon to the Grand Lodge of England in 1902 and the head of the " Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia " and " Golden Dawn, " was also the Secretary of the Rite of Swedenborg, Knight Kadosch in Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites, Grand Standard Bearer, Royal Arch, Grand Lodge of England, and Regent of the Illuminati and on intimate terms with one of its founders, the German, Theodore Reuss 33° 90° 96°.

Among his other titles, Theodore Reuss included the following : — Magus Supremus in Mundo of the Esoteric Rosicrucians, Fra. Superior and Outer Head in Mundo of the Ancient Order of Oriental Templars (O. T. O.); Sovereign Grand Master General ad vitam of the Ancient Rites of Masonry, Memphis and Mizraim Rites of Masonry for the German Empire and its dependencies ; Terniasimus Regens of the I.·. O.·. ; S∵ I∵ 33°, etc., etc.

To further emphasize the interlocking character of this organization, we print herewith a partial list of the Masonic offices held by John Yarker, quoted from an article published in The Equinox Volume X, 1913 under the title : " In Memoriam ".

May this end for ever the oft repeated fable of British Masonic isolation !

IN MEMORIAM — JOHN YARKER

He also was interested in many of the concordant orders, and held office in several. He was appointed President of Sat Bhai of Prag, and was co-sponsor from 1871 to 1912.

Head of the Rite of Ishmael in England in succession to Dr. Mackenzie and Major F. G. Irwin.

Chief of the Red Branch of Eri in succession to Major F. G. Irwin.

High Priest of the 7th degree of Knight Templar priests, Manchester, revived from 1868 to 1875.

More over from the correspondence of Theodore Reuss, we find that John Yarker was also the Delegate from the Supreme Conseil Martiniste de France.

Again we find that this same Theodore Reuss, above mentioned, seems to become eligible in the eyes of Wm. Wynn Westcott and John Yarker to be the founder of the six Swedenborg Lodges in Germany, chiefly on the grounds that he was an English Mason!

Presently, we find that Theodore Reuss, English Mason, is the Delegate of the A. and P. Rite of Memphis from Spain and Bulgaria to Germany, and from Germany to England. Later we find him on intimate terms with Papus, the head of the Martinist order in France.

Turning to the photostat of a patent which we reproduce we find a document which speaks for itself. It is signed Theodore Reuss 33° 90° 96°. John Yarker 33° 90° 96° Franz Hartman 33° 90° 95° and Henry Klein 33° 95°.

In his testimonial as special War-correspondent, Theodore Reuss includes the following letter: —

Kaiserlich Deutsches Konsulat fur Griechenland.

Athenes, le 10/22 Avril 1897.

> Le Consulat Imperial d'Allemagne pour la Grèce requiert par la présente toutes les autorités militaires et civiles de laisser passer librement le porteur Monsieur Theodore Reuss, correspondant du Bureau tele-

Le Consul General d'Allemagne, (Signed) LUDERS.

While casually perusing the Masonic Year Book for 1922 (English Grand Lodge), we find on page 522 under the following heading : —

Grand Master — Gustavo Canti
Deputy Grand Master — Carlo de Andreis
Director of the Grand Secretary's office.
Ulisse Bacci.

Then, turning to page 286 of our book, we find that, many years ago, Ulisse Bacci was one of Adriano Lemmi's most efficient assistants !

All this belongs to the realm of history and research, but at least, let us base the future on knowledge of the past and not build the Temple of Solomon on the ruins of the British Empire !

From this point onward, the articles on the various fraternal organizations dealt with in this book are arranged in chronological sequence according to the dates at which they are said to have been founded.

THE ILLUMINATI OF SPAIN

The Illuminati, a Spanish sect called the Alombrados was founded about 1520.

Ignatius Loyola, while a student at Salamanca (1527), was tried by an ecclesiastical commission for alleged sympathy with this sect but was acquitted with an admonition.

CHAPTER XXXV

THE ORDER OF THE JESUITS

We give the following quotations from the Encyclopaedia Britannica, in spite of its marked anti-jesuit bias, solely to register certain historical facts, leaving their interpretation to the personal judgment of the reader. [1]

" The Company of the Jesuits was founded by Don Inigo de Loyola (Ignatius Loyola), a Spanish nobleman and soldier, on April 5, 1541, at the church of Saint Paul without the Walls, near Rome, under the sanction of the Pope, Paul III.

" It has six grades. These are novices, scholastics, temporal, coadjutors, professed of the three vows, and professed of the four vows, the latter two grades being the only ones which confer a share in the government and eligibility for the offices of the society. Its head, virtually a commander-in-chief, is known as The General. He wields absolute power over the members who are pledged to blind obedience. The General claims his authority from The Pope.

[1] Enc. Brit., Ninth Edition, Art. Jesuits.

The " fourth vow " is one of special allegiance to the Pope promising to go in obedience to him for missionary purposes whensoever and whithersoever he may order, — a pledge seriously qualified in practice, however, by the power given to the general of alone sending out or recalling any missionary.

" The question has long been hotly debated whether, in addition to these six avowed grades, there be not a seventh, answering in some degree to the Tertiaries of the Franciscan and Dominican orders, secretly affiliated to the society, and acting as its unsuspected emissaries in various lay positions. This class is styled in France ' Jesuits of the short robe ', and some evidence in support of its actual existence was alleged during the lawsuits against the company under Louis XV. The Jesuits themselves deny the existence of any such body, and are able to adduce the negative disproof that no provision for it is to be found in their constitutions. On the other hand, there are clauses therein which make the creation of such a class perfectly feasible if thought expedient. One is the power given to the general to receive candidates secretly, and to conceal their admission, for which there is a remarkable precedent in the case of Francis Borgia, duke of Gandia, afterwards himself general of the society; the other is an even more singular clause, providing for the admission of candidates to the company by persons who are not themselves members of it. ... The general, who should by the statutes of the society reside permanently at Rome, holds in his hands the right of appointment, not only to the office of provincial over each of the great districts into which the houses are mapped, but to the offices of each house in particular, no shadow of electoral right or even suggestion being recognized.

" The superiors and rectors of all houses and Colleges in Europe must report weekly to their provincial on all matters concerning the members of the society and all outsiders with whom they may have had dealings of any sort. The provincial, for his part, must report monthly to the general, giving him a summary of all details which have reached himself. But, as a check on him, all superiors of houses in his province are to make separate reports directly to the general once in three months, and further to communicate with him, without delay, every time any matter of importance occurs, irrespective of any information which the provincial may have forwarded. Nor is this all; an elaborate system of espionage and delation forms part of the recognized order of every house, and, in direct contrast to the ancient indictment and confession of faults in open conventual chapter, every inmate of a house is liable to secret accusation to its superior, while the superior himself may be similarly delated to the provincial or the general.

" Nor is the general himself exempt from control on the part of the society, lest by any possible error he be unfaithful to its interests. A consultative council is imposed on him by the general congregation, consisting of six persons, whom he may neither select nor remove, — namely, four assistants, each representing a nation, an admonisher or adviser (resembling the adlatus of a military commander) to warn him of any faults or mistakes, and his confessor. One of these must be in constant attendance on him; and, while he is not at liberty to abdicate his office, nor to accept any dignity or office outside it without the assent of the society, he may yet be suspended or deposed by its authority.

" There would seem at first to be an effectual external check provided, however, in the fact that, while all the officers of the society, except the council aforesaid, hold of the general, he in turn holds of the Pope, and is his liegeman directly, as well as in virtue of the fourth vow, which he has taken in common with the other professed. But such is the extraordinary skill with which the relations of the society to the papacy were originally drafted by Loyola, and subsequently worked by his successors, that it has always remained organically independent, and might very conceivably break with Rome without imperilling its own existence. The general has usually stood towards the Pope much as a powerful grand feudatory of the Middle Ages did towards a weak titular lord paramount, or perhaps as the captain of a splendid host of ' Free Companions ' did towards a potentate with whom he chose to take temporary and precarious service; and the shrewd Roman populace have long shown their recognition of this fact [by styling these two great personages severally the ' White Pope ' and the ' Black Pope '. In truth the society has never, from the very first, obeyed the Pope, whenever its will and his happened to run counter to each other.

" The merited odium which has overtaken the Inquisition, usually officered by Dominicans, has induced the Jesuits, whose own controversial methods had been different, to disclaim all connexion with that tribunal, and to represent their society as free from complicity in its acts. But, in truth, it was Ignatius Loyola himself who procured its erection in Portugal in 1545-6, and F. Nithard, one of the very few cardinals of the society, was inquisitor-general of that kingdom in 1655.

" The first successes of the Indian mission were entirely amongst the lowest class ; but when Robert de'Nobili, to win the Brahmins, adopted their insignia and mode of life in 1605, a step sanctioned by Gregory XV, in 1623, the fathers who followed his example pushed the new caste-feeling so far as absolutely to refuse the ministrations and sacraments of religion to the pariahs, lest the Brahmin converts should take offence, •— an attempt which was reported to Rome by Norbert, a Capuchin, and by the bishop of Rosalia and was vainly censured in the pontifical briefs of Innocent X in 1645, Clement IX in 1669,Clement XII in 1734 and 1739, and Benedict XIV, in 1745. The ' Chinese rites ', assailed with equal unsuccess by 9 popes, were not finally put down until 1744, by a bull of Benedict XIV... By these rites the Jesuit missionaries had virtually assimilated Christianity to heathenism> and their practical reply in opposition to a papal decree in 1700 was to obtain an edict from the emperor of China declaring that there was nothing idolatrous or superstitious in the inculpated usages, while in 1710 they flung Cardinal Tournon, legate of Clement XI, into the prison of the Inquisition at Macao, where he perished. Finally, they disobeyed the brief of suppression issued by Clement XIV in 1773, which enjoined them to disperse at once, to send back all novices to their houses, and to receive no more members. It is thus clear that the society has always regarded itself as an independent power, ready indeed to co-operate with the papacy so long as their roads and interests are the same, and to avail itself to the uttermost of the many pontifical decrees in its own favour, but drawing the line far short of practical submission when their interests diverge. '

The Jesuit power, much weakened in England by the rise of the Jewish Power with the advent of Cromwell, persisted nevertheless in its efforts to recapture its former status in that land. During the reign of James II, it schemed and intrigued incessantly through its representatives Father St. Germain[2] and his successor Father Columbière.[3] After the enactment of the limitation of the English throne to Protestant succession the Jesuit diplomatists were hard put.

To quote the Encyclopœdia further :

" After many difficulties they had succeeded in getting a footing in France, through the help of Duprat, bishop of Clermont, who founded a college for them in 1545 in the town of Billom, besides making over to them his house at Paris, the Hotel de Clermont, which became the nucleus of the afterwards famous college of Louis-le-Grand, while a formal legalization was granted to them by the states-general at Poissy in 1561. "

From the Jesuit College at Ingolstadt is said to have issued the sect known as " The Illuminati of Bavaria " founded by Adam Weishaupt under the guidance of Nicolai, in 1776. Weishaupt, its nominal founder, however, seems to have played a subordinate though conspicuous role in the organization of this sect. (See page 370).

On July 21, 1773, the Pope had abolished the order of Jesuits but Frederic II of Prussia encouraged and protected them with a view no doubt of using their political knowledge and skill against the Bourbons, the Hapsburgs and the Pope.

The well-known authority on theocratic organizations, Heckethorn, writes the following concerning the Jesuits :

' There is considerable analogy between Masonic and Jesuitic degrees ; and the Jesuits also tread down the shoe and bare the knee, because Ignatius Loyola thus presented himself at Rome and asked for the confirmation of the order.

" Not satisfied with confession, preaching, and instruction, whereby they had acquired unexampled influence, they formed in Italy and France, in 1563 several ' Congregations ', i. e. clandestine meetings held in subterranean chapels and other secret places. The congregationists had a sectarian organization, with appropriate catechisms and manuals, which had to be given up before death, wherefore very few copies remain. " [4]

To show the further similarity of the Jesuit-Judaic-Masonic-Gnostic-Brahmin-Illuminati theology we now quote from a MS. in the library of the Rue Richelieu at Paris entitled Histoire des congregations et socialites jésuitiques depuis 1563 jusqu'au temps présent (1709). [5]

" Initiation. — From this, as well as other works, we gather some of the ceremonies with which aspirants were initiated into the Order. Having in nearly all Roman Catholic countries succeeded in becoming the educators of the young, they were able to mould the youthful mind according to their secret aims. If then, after a number of years, they detected in the pupil a blind and fanatic faith, conjoined with exalted pietism and indomitable courage, they proceeded to initiate him; in the opposite case, they excluded him. The proofs lasted twenty-four hours, for which the candidate was prepared by long and severe fasting, which, by prostrating his bodily strength, inflamed his fancy, and, just before the trial, a powerful drink was administered to him. Then the mystic scene began — diabolical apparitions, evocation of the dead, representations of the flames of hell, skeletons, moving skulls, artificial thunder and lightning, in fact, the whole paraphernalia and apparatus of the ancient mysteries. If the neophyte, who was closely watched, showed fear or terror, he remained for ever in the inferior degree ; but if he bore the proof well, he was advanced to a higher grade.

" At the initiation into the second degree (Scholastici) the same proofs, but on a grander scale, had to be undergone. The candidate, again prepared for them by long fastings, was led with his eyes bandaged into a large cavern, resounding with wild howlings and roarings, which he had to traverse, reciting at the same time prayers specially appointed for that occasion. At the end of the cave he had to crawl through a narrow opening, and while doing this, the bandage was taken from his eyes by an unseen hand, and he found himself in & square dungeon, whose floor was covered with a mortuary cloth, on which stood three lamps, shedding a feeble light on the skulls and skeletons ranged around. This was the Cave of Evocation, the Black Chamber, so famous in the annals of the Fathers. Here, giving himself up to prayer, the neophyte passed some time, during which the priests could, without his being aware of it, watch his every movement and gesture. If his behaviour was satisfactory, all at once two brethren, representing archangels, presented themselves before him, without his being able to tell whence they had so suddenly started up, — a good deal can be done with properly fitted and oiled trap-doors, — and, observing perfect silence, bound his forehead with a white band soaked with blood, and covered with hieroglyphics; they then hung a small crucifix round his neck, and a small satchel containing relics, or what did duty for them. Finally, they took off all his clothing, which they cast on a pyre in one corner of the cave, and marked his body with numerous crosses, drawn with blood. At this point, the hierophant with his assistants entered and, having bound a red cloth round the middle of the candidate's body, the brethren, clothed in bloodstained garments, placed themselves beside him, and drawing their daggers, formed the steel arch over his head. A carpet being then spread on the floor, all knelt down and prayed for about an hour, after which the pyre was secretly set on fire ; the further wall of the cave opened, the air resounded with strains, now gay, now lugubrious, and a long procession of spectres, phantoms, angels, and demons defiled past the neophyte like the ' supers ' in a pantomine. Whilst this farce was going on, the candidate took the following oath : —' In the name of Christ crucified, I swear to burst the bonds that yet unite me to father, mother, brothers, sisters, relations, friends ; to the King, magistrates, and any other authority, to which I may ever have sworn fealty, obedience, gratitude, or service. I renounce... the place of my birth, henceforth to exist in another sphere. I swear to reveal to my new superior, whom I desire to know, what I have done, thought, read, learnt, or discovered, and to observe and watch all that comes under my notice. I swear to yield myself up to my superior, as if I were a corpse, deprived of life and will. I finally swear to flee temptation, and to reveal all I succeed in discovering, well aware that lightning is not more rapid and ready than the dagger to reach me wherever I may be. '

" The new member having taken this oath, was then introduced into a neighbouring cell, where he took a bath, and was clothed in garments of new and white linen. He finally repaired with the other brethren to a banquet, where he could with choice food and wine compensate himself for his long abstinence, and the horrors and fatigues he had passed through. "

" In 1614, there was published at Cracow what purported to be the Secret Instructions given to members of the Society of Jesus. It is said that Hieronymus Zahorowski, who had recently severed his connection with the society, published the book with the co-operation of Count George Zbaraski and other Polish enemies of the order but the repudiation of the work by the society is no conclusive evidence of its spuriousness as it has been its policy from the beginning to deny all discreditable reports and to take the chance of being proved unveracious. "[6]

It will suffice to give the headings of the chapters forming the Book of Secret Instructions of the Society of Jesus.[7] " The Preface specially warns superiors not to allow it to fall into the hands of strangers, as it might give them a bad opinion of the Order. The Chapters are headed as follows : — I. How the Society is to proceed in founding a new establishment. — II. How the Brethren of the Society may acquire and preserve the friendship of Princes and other distinguished Personages. — III. How the Society is to conduct itself towards those who possess great influence in a state ; and who, though they are not rich, may yet be of service to others. — IX. Hints to Preachers and Confessors of Kings and great personages. — V. What conduct to observe towards the clergy and other religious orders. — VI. How to win over rich widows. — VII. How to hold fast widows and dispose of their property. — VIII. How to induce the children of widows to adopt a life of religious seclusion. — IX. Of the increase of College revenues. — X. Of the private rigour of discipline to be observed by the society. — XI. How ' Ours ' shall conduct themselves towards those that have been dismissed from the society. — XII. Whom to keep and make much of in the society. — XIII. How to select young people for admission into the society, and how to keep them there. — XIV. Of reserved cases, and reasons for dismissing from the society. — XV. How to behave towards nuns and devout women. — XVI. How to pretend contempt for riches. — XVII. General means for advancing the interests of the society.

" The intermeddling of this society in the affairs, political, ecclesiastical and civil, of many countries, is related in numerous works, and repeatedly produced the suppression and expulsion of the order, though it constantly reappeared with new names. In 1716 the French army was infested with Jesuitical and anti-Jesuitical societies. The Parliament of Paris suppressed them in 1762.

" They were abolished by papal bull in 1773 at the demand of France, Spain, Portugal, Parma, Naples and Austria. They are, however, still to be found everyhere, and they hold considerable property in England. A modern writer justly calls them the ' Black International. ' "

Historically, the Jesuits are given credit for the Gunpowder Plot of 1605, fomenting the Thirty Years war, the encouragement of the aspiration of Mary Stuart which led to her execution, the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis XIV, 1685, and numerous other great events of history.

The Sanfedesti. was founded at the epoch of the suppression of the Jesuits for the defence of religion, the privileges and jurisdiction of Rome and the temporal power of the popes. Their successors were the Calderari, referred to in Chapter LXX.

THE DEFENDERS

(ROMAN CATHOLIC)

This Irish Catholic organization, similar to that of the Spanish Guarduña, was founded in 1562 by Roger Moore behind whom were French and Spanish Jesuits.

According to Captain Pollard, author of The Secret Societies of Ireland, " The nominal function of the Defenders was the protection of the fugitive priests during the period of proscription and the holding of the passes while Mass was celebrated in some mountain glen. The enemies of the faith being the Protestants, and the Protestants standing for the Constitutional authority of Britain, the Defenders soon became a criminal association of law-breakers and banditti. "[1]

In 1641 they rose and massacred many Protestants, but were duly crushed by Cromwell in 1649.

This Irish Catholic element was already opposed by the Roman Catholic Archbishop Plunket, of whom Captain Pollard writes : " Archbishop Oliver Plunket, Roman Catholic Primate of Ireland, who had attempted to put down the criminal association of Defenders in the South of Ireland, was accused by the infamous Oates; and at his trial at Westminster certain of these Irish priests, who had been censured by him, gave false evidence against him. The Archbishop, though innocent, was, through the false evidence of these members of the secret society, sentenced and duly hanged at Tyburn. "

ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS (A. O. H.)

(ROMAN CATHOLIC)

In The Secret Societies of Ireland Captain Pollard writes that, founded in 1641, "The notorious modern society known as The Ancient Order of Hibernians is the direct successor of the original society of Defenders ; in common with its ancestor it attempts to enable the clerics to exercise control in politics.[1] It claims in its own official history, published in 1910, to be the oldest secret society in Ireland. Independent researches show that the claim is sound and that the present A. 0. H. is the descendant of certain criminal organizations of the past. The open admission of this chain of descent by its own historian is important. American sources trace the A. 0. H. to 1565 but the date 1641 is that more commonly accepted. "[2]

" The Jesuit influence in the development of the Defenders was reinforced, and their ceremonies and symbolism slowly changed to an elementary ritual closely modelled on that of the ceremony of initiation to the Society of Jesus of the period. This ritual has descended with many accretions and modernisations to the present time ; and the American branch of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, misled by it, traces its origin back, not to 1641 and the Guarduña, but to 1563 and the foundation of the Society of Jesus. [3]

1. Pollard, op. tit., p. 3.
2. Ibid., p. no.

" The A. 0. H. of America is powerfully organized and has over six thousand lodges, and it is said by Heckethorn to be divided into two degrees ; in the first no oath is exacted and no real secret communicated. The second or inner degree is confined to officials, who receive their passwords and signs from the Board of Erin in Ireland, who send an emissary every three months. " [4]

In 1878, the American order split into two groups. Shortly afterwards the Irish followed suit.

" In America the breach was later healed, but in Ireland it continued until 1902, when a conference was called and both parties agreed to work under a joint board of control representing both sections. This board was termed the A. 0. H. Board of Erin. " [5]

Another split, occurring in 1905, lasted two years.

" Ten years ago, the real A. 0. H. of Ireland represented a powerful Nationalist weapon, hostile to the forces of extremism and devoted to the Irish Parliamentary party, but the Board of Erin A. 0. H. was revolutionary. " [6]

CHAPTER XXXVIII

JANSENISM

This was a peculiar form of Calvinism inaugurated by Cornelius Jansenius (1585-1638) from Louvain in the Netherlands.

The doctrine of Jansenism is exposed in a work called Augustinus, written by Jansenius, and published after his death in 1640.

According to Jansenius' theory of Predestination, man was either saved or damned according to God's own will, regardless of his merits or demerits.

From the Low Countries, Jansenism penetrated into France and its chief centre was in the Port Royal abbey near Paris. It was Duvergier de Hauranne who had been a great friend of Jansenius during their student days who, as abbot of Saint Cyran, introduced Jansenism into Port Royal.

Antoine Arnauld was the leader of the Jansenists and was followed by Pasquier Quesnel. Many great minds of the seventeenth century were Jansenists, among them Le Maitre de Sacy, Blaise Pascal, Lancelot, Nicole and Fontaine, Secretary of State of Louis XV.

Jansenism, which had undergone severe treatment in France under Louis XIV, revived under the Regency in 1715, and found supporters among the learned and the high clergy against the policy of the Pope.

It is during this period that among the Jansenist sectarians there arose the strange occurrences practised by what is known as the Convulsionaries of St. Médard.

The Jansenist party was very rich thanks to the boîte à Perrette (Perrette's box). This was a special fund whence Jansenism took out all the money for its political and other needs. It had taken its name from the servant of Mr. Nicole, a leading Jansenist, who had started the fund and confided the care of it to his servant. In 1778 it amounted already to 1100 livres and in 1865 was still very substantial.

Modern Jansenism, which, since the 18th century, had its chief seat in the Netherlands, principally Utrecht, joined in 1889 the German party of the Old Catholics founded in 1871 which, supported by Bismarck, had been one of the elements leading him to his Kulturkampf policy against the Catholic Church and institutions.

CHAPTER XXXIX

CAMISARDS OF THE CEVENNES

(Originating 1688)

The Camisards were actually a survival of the Waldenses and the Pastoureaux.

Calmeil, an authority on mental aberrations quoted by Madden in Phantasmata[1], thus describes the characteristics of the Camisard movement: — " The prophetic madness (of the Camisards) made its appearance in Dauphiné and Vivarais in 1688 ; it very soon spread itself over a vast number of places, and continued without any interruption among the Calvinists for nearly twenty years.

" It was especially in the course of the year 1689, that the phenomena of theomania excited the greatest astonishment and rose to the height of its violence. The theomaniacs could then be counted by hundreds ; men, women, girls, boys, young children, all of them believed they were inspired and imbued with the breath of the Holy Spirit.

" The punishment of fire, the rack, the torture of the pendaison, even the massacres performed by armed troops, whose efforts were directed to the extermination of the pretended prophets, the military executions, all the torments that it was possible to invent, to repress the violence of this religious fanaticism, only augmented the force of the evil which they were employed to abate or suppress.

[1] Madden, Phantasmata, vol. II, p. 530 ; quoting De la Folie, by L. F. Calmeil (1845), vol. II, p. 304.

" When, towards the beginning of the eighteenth century, the Calvinists rose up in good earnest to constitute small bodies of troops, and to dispute inch by inch the soil which had given them birth, with the king's soldiery, by whom they were confronted, this war of extermination was preceded by the apparition of a sort of swarm of pretended prophets and prophetesses. Towards 1701, at one time two hundred of the inspired, who had fallen into the hands of their enemies, were sent to the galleys.

" The madness of the theoma,niacs was less talked of during the years 1703 and 1704 than it had been previously; but it is certain that all the armed bands who contended with the royal troops for those two years, never took the field except at the instance of some inspired celebrities. And it is certain that the words of those prophets were listened to as if they had emanated from the mouth of the Holy Spirit; that the inspirations of these monomaniacs habitually decided either the life or death of the Catholics who fell into the power of the Protestants ; and there was often at that time to be seen the same person fulfilling among the Camisards the functions of a prophet, and the functions of a commander.

" It was not till the year 1704 that the Marechal de Villars had the charge of the command in Languedoc; this Marechal saw, nevertheless, entire cities infested with theomania. " [2]

" It was towards the latter end of 1706 that they (the Camisards) came to England, from the mountains of the Cevennes, where their countrymen had for a considerable time maintained a contest with the troops for the persecuting Louis XIV. As exiles for conscience ' sake, they were treated with respect and kindness ; but they soon forfeited all claim to respect by the folly or knavery of their conduct. Of this group Elias Marion was the prominent figure ; the others acting only subordinate parts. He loudly proclaimed that he was the messenger of Heaven, and was authorised to denounce judgments, and to look into futurity. All kinds of arts were employed by Marion and his associates to excite public attention — sudden droppings down as though death-struck; sighs and groans, and then shrieks and vociferations, on recovering; broken sentences, uttered in unearthly tones ; violent contortions ; and desperate strugglings with the spirit, followed by submission and repentance ; were all brought into play. The number of the believers in their power soon became considerable...

" After a time the sect which they had formed died away, but its ruin was less to be attributed to the punishment of the prophets, or the recovery of reason by their votaries, than by a report which was spread that they were nothing more than the instruments of designing men, who wished to disseminate Socinianism, and destroy orthodoxy. THE RITE OF SWEDENBORG OR ILLUMINATI OF STOCKHOLM

Emmanuel Swedenborg was born on Jan. 29, 1688, at Stockholm. His father, Jasper Swedberg, was the son of Daniel Isaksson of Fahlun, Sweden. In 1719, Jasper Swedberg's family was ennobled by Queen Ulrika and his name was altered from Swedberg to Swedenborg.[1]

Emmanuel Swedenborg was initiated at Lund in 1706 and progressed to the higher degrees of the Templars as practised in Sweden.

In 1718, Colonel Baltzer Wedmar, in a Stockholm Lodge Lecture, said that Swedenborg was a Mason and that he had seen his signature at the Lodge at Lund. These assertions were confirmed by King Gustavus III.

Founded in 1721,[2] the Rite was first introduced into England by Chastanier, Springer (Swedish Consul), C. F. and August Nordenskjold and others who were members of the first Swedenborgian Society in London known as the Theosophical Society of the New Jerusalem, not to be confused with the Rite of French Theosophists.

The rite was carried from London to the Americas by a Swedenborgian Minister, Brother Samuel Beswick. He lived at Strathroy, Canada, and was the author of a work upon the Swedenborgian Rite. This rite, called the Illuminati of Stockholm, was well known until the middle of the 18th century when it amalgamated with that of Zinnendorf.

What is properly known as the rite of Swedenborg was another modification of the order of the Illuminati of Avignon effected by the Marquis de Thome, in 1783, wherein he endeavoured to restore the true meaning of the doctrine of the Swedish mystic. [1]

CHAPTER XLI

SUPREME CONSEIL AND GRAND ORIENT DE FRANCE

(Founded 1725)

SOVEREIGN GRAND COMMANDER,
SUPRÊME CONSEIL 1929,
M. RENE RAYMOND.

Freemasonry was introduced in France in about 1730, some say 1725.

Its implantation bore a singular character. Due to the time of exile spent in France by Queen Henrietta, widow of Charles I (1649), English ways and customs had become fashionable among the members of the French aristocracy. The exiled English Royal Family and their adherents, warmly welcomed by the Jesuits of France, plotted in secret to regain the throne for Charles II. Later, when the Catholic King James II was also overthrown in 1688, he found refuge in France and his son, The Pretender, and later his grandson, Charles Edward, headed numerous plots fomented to enable them to regain their father's and grandfather's throne from William of Orange.

Meanwhile Masonry had been instituted in England (1717) and introduced in France in 1730. The Jacobites, partisans of the Pretender, secretly plotting as they constantly were, found the newly created Masonic lodges a ground no less well adapted to serve their ends than the Jesuits' colleges whence all their schemes emanated.

Lodges, having thus become fashionable resorts for French aristocrats, presented a double aspect, one which might almost be termed theatrical, inasmuch as the comedy of equality between the lord and his varlet was enacted in the Lodge, and the other far more serious was of a political character. This latter aspect of budding English symbolic Freemasonry in France was anxiously watched by the minister Cardinal de Fleury who ordered its suppression in 1737. Up to that time the French lodges that had been formed considered themselves as depending from the English Grand Lodge, had an English Grand Master and were confining their activities to the practice of the three grades of Blue Masonry.

Then appeared the would-be reformers of Masonry. At their head, in France, was the Chevalier de Ramsay, and with their advent came the innovation of a fourth grade followed by others. This was the beginning of Scotch Masonry whose unavowed aim seems to have been to interpose itself between the existing Lodges and the governing Grand Lodge of France.

De Ramsay, who was one of the foremost exponents of Scotch Rites and already dreamed of the Universal Masonry of Albert Pike, exposed some of his theories in his famous Discourse made in 1740.

By that time, the Grand Lodge of France, known as the Grand English Lodge of France, was no longer headed by an English Grand Master, but by the Duc d'Antin who was succeeded by Louis, Prince de Bourbon, Comte de Clermont, who held the office of Grand Master from 1743 until 1771. During his Grand Mastership, in 1754, the name Chapter of Clermont was given to what might be called an offshoot of the Primitive French Masonry on which, later, the Chevalier de Bonneville grafted some additional degrees. This name " Chapter of Clermont " has been the cause of much confusion arising from the fact that a Jesuit college founded in Paris, in 1550, also bore the name of Clermont College and had been a centre for Jacobite secret plotting against the Protestant rulers of England.[1]

This grafting of higher degrees on those of Symbolic or Blue Masonry gave Scotch Masonry its vitality and strength and a continual superposition and absorption of one rite, to and by another, took place.

The period during the Grandmastership of the Comte de Clermont was eventful for the craft. A masonic writer, William H. Peckham, in his work on Scottish rites, gives a succinct but clear sequence of some of the changes undergone by Masonry in France mentioning Thory, Le Blanc, de Marconnay, Ragon and Clavel as his sources. Thus we learn that the English Grand Lodge of France became the " Grande Loge du Royaume " in 1756, and declared itself independent; further, that an inner body known as the Supreme Council of the Emperors of the East and West had been founded in 1754 by the Chevalier de Bonneville. It had its chamber in the Grand Lodge of France and, likewise, was under the authority of the Grand Master

[1] Rev. E. Cahill, S. J., Freemasonry and the Anti-Christian Movement, p. 213, definitely refutes the story of certain Masonic authorities by whom it has been alleged that The Chapter of Clermont was founded in the Jesuit College of that name. He states that it was " founded in 1754 and was named the Chapter of Clermont' manifestly borrowing its name from the title of the Masonic Grand Master who in fact became its head. "

Comte de Clermont whose substitute Chaillon de Joinville was also that of the Council.

The Supreme Council of the Emperors of the East and West practised twenty-five degrees.

As to the disorders in the bosom of Masonry they are attributed to the negligence of the Comte de Clermont who, in 1744, had ceased to take much interest in the Lodges and delegated his authority to two appointees, one a banker named Baure and the other a dancing master by the name of Lacorne who sold charters and degrees. The latter caused a scission in the Grand Lodge whose members rejected him and he formed an independent Grand Lodge. Both these Grand Lodges, as also the Council of the Emperors of the East and West, constituted Lodges and granted charters throughout the kingdom, but in 1772, the Council united again with the primitive Grand Lodge as of yore, and becoming one body they practised the right of perfection of twenty-five degrees. At that time, the Grand Master was the Duc de Chartres, later Philippe Egalité, Duc d'Orleans, who had succeeded the Comte de Clermont in 1771.

But ten years previously, on August 29, 1761, a Jew, Stephen Morin, had obtained a charter from the Council of the Emperors of the East and West and had gone to America as Grand Inspector General. There he founded what is now known as Scottish Bites. Morin held his authority from the Comte de Clermont who, at the request of Lacorne, charged him with establishing Masonry in all parts of the world. His patent was signed by Chaillon de Joinville, Prince de Rohan, Lacorne, Savalette de Buckolay, Taupin, Brest De La Chaussée, Count de Choiseul, Chevalier de Lenoncourt and D'Aubertin[2].

[2] Wm. Peckham, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite.

The early history of French Freemasonry is a maze of quarrels, but finally, in 1766, under the auspices of a new Grande Loge Nationale de France, afterwards called the Grand-Orient, a representative system was at last adopted but the quarrels continued, the Orient and the original Grand Lodge being each supported by a separate Rosicrucian organization besides its own proper lodges. [3]

In contradiction to other masonic authorities, Yarker makes the assertion that the primitive Scottish Rite of 33 degrees was established at Namur in 1770 by Marchot and in 1787 united with the Grand Orient.[4]

In he Culte de la Nature dans la Franc-maçonnerie Universelle (page 143) D. Margiotta states that Adam Weishaupt and his favorite, Baron von Knigge, introduced the organization of the Holy Vehm as well as certain legends of Illuminism into Masonry in 1783. The only persons exempted from the jurisdiction of this terrible court of " Justice ", the Holy Vehm, were the clergy, women and children, Jews and heathens and certain members of the higher nobility.

The Revolution issued from the Masonic Lodges, said Lombard de Langes. France, in 1789, counted over 2,000 lodges affiliated to the Grand Orient : The adepts numbered over 100,000. The first events of 1789 were but Masonry in action. All the Revolutionaries of the Constituent Assembly were 3rd degree initiates.

In the Viennese Freemasonic newspaper of December 1927, the Freemason Arthur Singer of Budapest publishes the following interesting document which he claims to have taken from a book by Comte Vogt d'Hunolstein, which appeared in 1864 under the title Unpublished letters of Marie-Antoinette.

It is a letter from the unhappy queen to her sister Marie Christine.

Translation.

" I believe that as far as France is concerned, you worry too much about Freemasonry. Here, it is far from having the significance that it may have elsewhere in Europe ; here everything is open and one knows all. Then, where could the danger be ?

" One might well be worried if it were a question of a political secret society. But on the contrary the government lets it spread, and it is only that which it seems : an association, the objects of which are union and charity. One dines, one sings, one talks, which has given the king occasion to say that people who drink and sing are not suspect of organizing plots. Nor is it a society of atheists, for, we are told, God is on the lips of all. They are very charitable. They bring up the children of the poor and dead members, they endow their daughters. What harm is there in all that ?

" A short time ago the Princess de Lamballe was named Grand Mistress of a Lodge. She told me all the charming things they said to her. Many glasses were emptied, many verses sung. Then two good young maidens were endowed. Admitted. One can do good without all that fuss : but one must let everyone act according to their wishes, the more so when good only only results. "

The letter sounds as if it had been written yesterday by one of our good English Masons concerning English Freemasonry.

Masonry in France became dormant during the French Revolution, but in 1799, a national union was effected by Roettiers. No sooner, however, was this done, and the statutes, originally based on the English constitutions thoroughly revived, than French masonry again suffered from an invasion of mysticism, — first in the form of the Scottish Philosophic Rite (including such profundities as the luminous ring and the white and black Eagle), and secondly in the American Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of 33 degrees, which the charlatan De Grasse-Tilly expounded with great success but which in 1804 was amalgamated with the Grand Orient, the great Marshals Massena and Kellerman being then the leading members of the two bodies. The union did not last, as Napoleon disliked the constitution of the Supreme Council which was largely influenced by the aristocracy. His brother, Joseph, assisted by Murat and Cambacérès, was allowed to take office in the older organization. During the reactionary Catholic policy of the Grand Master Murat the younger (1852-62), the liberties of the Orient were greatly interfered with and its funds almost exhausted. Since then it has slowly recovered.[5]

Murat was succeeded by General Magnan who had been appointed by Napoleon III to group all Masonic bodies into one. This he succeeded in doing in 1862 with the exception of Scottish Rites, then under Jean Baptist Viennet, which still held aloof.

In 1868, the Supreme Conseil (of Scottish Rites) and the Alliance Israelite Universelle became merged in the person of the Jew Adolphe Crémieux who was president of both.

We must not omit to mention that Crémieux was also a member of the Rite of Mizraim which in 1862 was absorbed by the Grand Orient of France.

[5] Enc. Brit., op. cit.

On attaining the 18th degree, a Grand Orient Mason automatically becomes a member of the Alliance Israelite Universelle.

The Grand Orient ceased to require belief in a personal God as a test of membership in the year 1877.

From the political movements, the origins of which can be traced to the influence of the Grand-Orient de France, one is forced to believe it to be a political organization.[6]

The following quotations from the speech made by Domenico Anghera, Grand Master of the Supreme Council of Scottish Rites when conferring on General Giuseppe Garibaldi the 33rd degree and administering his oath of allegiance, are here of interest in view of the connection of the two masonic powers in France.

Translation :[7]

"... Our first step, as builders of the new temple to the felicity of human glory, must be destruction. To destroy the present social state, we have suppressed religious teaching and the individual rights of persons. As we have overthrown the temporal power of the Pope, our most terrible and infamous enemy, by means of France and Italy, we must now break France, the strongest prop of the spiritual power. That we must do with the help of our own power and that of Germany. " (This speech was made before the Franco-Prussian War of 1870).

" Brother, thou hast finished thy instruction as chief of Freemasonry. Pronounce thy supreme oath.

' I swear to recognize no fatherland but that of the world. I swear to work hard, everywhere and always, to destroy frontiers, borders, boundaries of all nations, of all industries, no less than of all families. I swear to dedicate my life to the triumph of progress and universal unity and I declare to profess the negation of God and the negation of the soul'.

" And now, Brother, that for thee, fatherland, religion and family have disappeared for ever in the immensity of the work of Freemasonry, come to us, illustrious, most puissant and very dear Brother and share with us the boundless authority, the infinite power that we hold over humanity.

(For the Esoteric explanation of the Masonic Motto " Deus Meumque Jus " and the Masonic three dots ∴ see chapter on Symbolism).

On the 4th Sept. 1870, the Second Empire fell at the battle of Sedan. The International and Freemasonry seized power, calling their government " The Government of National Defence ", and that same day the handpicked ministry of Freemasonry was constituted with Leon Gambetta as Minister of the Interior. Its eleven members, all deputies of Paris had, according to him, been acclaimed by the people. They were : — Emmanuel Arago, Crémieux, Jules Favre, Ferry, Gambetta, Garnier-Pagès, Glais-Bizoin, Pelletan, Picard, Rochefort, Jules Simon.

Nine of them at least were Freemasons, three were Jews — Crémieux, Glais-Bizoin and Gambetta. The Mayor of Paris, Etienne Arago, nominated twenty other mayors to provincial posts, twelve of whom were prominent Freemasons, the others being merely nonentities.

The fourth of September was the nominal proclamation of the Republic, but that date marked the actual seizure of power in France by Freemasonry just as the 20th of September of the same year marked its seizure of power in Italy.

Then came the " Commune ", famous through history for its revival of the atrocities of the first French Revolution of 1793.

Slaughter, ruin, torture, all again perpetrated in the name of the people who mutely suffered and died that the Men of Destiny might rule upon the earth I

CHAPTER XLII

THE CONVULSIONARIES OF ST. MÉDARD

(Founded 1731)

St. Médard was the name of a cemetery in Paris wherein was the tomb of a famous Jansenist, the deacon François de Paris, and it was said that miracles of all descriptions took place there.

The first recorded case of convulsions in the St. Médard cemetery occurred in August 1731.

On this subject, Madden tells us the following : —

" The tomb of the deacon Francois became the scene of wonderful cures, and some very remarkable conversions, which were reputed miraculous. People who came there, especially afflicted with nervous disorders, appear to have been affected in a singular manner, some with cataleptic, others with hysteric and convulsive symptoms. [1]

" The convulsionnaires exhibited not only occasionally, but frequently, all the phenomena which are ascribed by mesmerists to animal magnetism, somnambulism, ecstasies, raptures, submission of the will and the senses to the power of the volition of another person, connected in some way with the dominant idea which possessed their minds at the time of falling into the trance. Increased subtlety of thought, quickness of perception, heightened powers of imagination, a vivid energizing influence, fraught with enthusiasm and even eloquence ; claims to clairvoyance, to communion with another world, to ' spirit life ' ; all these phenomena were to be found too, though not all in the same individual, in occasional instances in this epidemic of convulsive theomania...

[1] Madden, Phantasmata, vol. II, p. 541.

" Till the month of August, 1731 ", says Picart, " the wonders wrought at the burying place of the deacon Paris were not accompanied with any considerable difference from those mentioned in Scripture or ecclesiastical history. Those who were afflicted with sickness, and begged the holy deacon's intercession, were laid upon or under his tomb-stone, which was raised from the ground, and were cured. But in August, 1731, God was pleased to work his miracles in a different manner ; violent pains, agitations of the body, extraordinary convulsions, were the means by which the sick were healed, not all at once, but gradually. This happened to one Abbe Becheran, to Chevalier Follard, an ancient officer in the army, and to several others. The number of people afflicted with convulsions increased so fast, and consequences of the meetings at the tomb appeared, or were represented to the King, so dangerous, that on the 27th of January, 1732, he issued an order to shut up the little churchyard belonging to St. Medard's parish, where M. de Paris was buried, and to open it only when necessary for burials. Some weeks afterwards, the Abbe Becheran was arrested and confined at St. Lazare, and set again at liberty about three months after in June. But the miracles and convulsions did not cease upon these oppositions ; on the contrary, they daily spread further, and gained ground.

" Towards the end of the year 1732, those who were jn convulsions began to foretell what was to happen, to discover secrets, to make speeches, pathetic exhortations, sublime prayers; even those who at other times were wholly unable to perform any such things.[2]

" Montgeron informs us : ' There is nothing which the convulsionnaires did not undertake to mortify themselves, to break down and to enfeeble their bodies. The most of those from the time they had convulsions, hardly made use of a bed; they laid down with their clothes on, winter and summer, with only one covering, some lying on planks, and others on the bare ground, others on logs of wood, and some of them on bars of iron. '

" The fact is, not only the means used for effecting cures were evil in themselves, but many of the leading persons by whom the remedy of the Grand Secours was administered or superintended were persons of ill repute.[3]

" Montgeron reckons that four thousand enthusiasts were employed to kick, and to strike without cessation the infirm, and all those young girls who begged for the violence of their blows. ' They were not ashamed to maintain' says Calmeil ' that it was to be ignorant of pious and charitable duties, not to obey under these circumstances the desires of the convulsionnaires whilst the reasonable Jansenists repeated aloud, that it was only a frantic madness which could suggest to these young women to encounter such dangers, and make an excuse for the criminal barbarity of those who had the audacity to boast of the advantages of so scandalous a mode of mortification, or rather martyr dom, and the wickedness to consent to take on them the office of executioners'.

" An observer has recounted that a young girl named Jeanne Mouler, had insisted upon their administering to her as many as a hundred blows with an andiron, on the stomach, and that a brother, who had one day given her sixty, had caused a breach in a wall at the twenty-fifth blow, and then went on repeating the same violence on her person which had been previously inflicted upon her. Montgeron, acknowledging that he was the person designated ' the brother', who inflicted the blows, adds : ' The convulsionnaire continued to complain that the blows that I was giving her were so slight that they did not bring her any relief, and she forced me again to put the andiron into the hands of a large strong man... This person in no way spared her. Having seen, by the proof that I had already given, that he could not administer too violent blows, he bastinadoed her in so frightful a manner, always in the hollow of the stomach, that they shook the wall against which she was leaning. [4]

" The convulsionnaire made them immediately give her, with all their force, the hundred lashes that she had already asked for, counting as nothing, those sixty which I had already given her. '

" A physician, hearing an account of these things, maintained that they could not be true, as according to him it was physically impossible. He objected, amongst other things, that the flexibility and the softness of the skin and flesh, and all the other fibrous parts of which the skin and the flesh are essentially composed, are incompatible with a force and resistance so extraordinary... They allowed him to make an anatomical demonstration, to set forth all his proofs, and in the end, for reply, they said to him — Come and verify the facts — He hastened to do so, and at the very sight he was struck with astonishment. Scarcely believing his eyes, he begs to administer himself the secours... They immediately put into his hands the iron instruments, the strongest and the fittest to beat effectually ; He spared nothing, he struck with the greatest violence, he thrust into the flesh the instrument with which he was armed, he made it penetrate beyond the surface... Notwithstanding which, the convulsionnaire laughed at all his vain efforts ; all the blows which he gave her only served to do her good, without leaving the slightest impression, the least trace, or any vestige whatever, not only in the flesh, but even on the skin itself ".

[4] Madden, op. cit., vol. II, p. 579.

Among other duly attested cases of torture to which the Convulsionnaires submitted the most astonishing are those of crucifixion and burning.[5]

Like the Fakirs of India, these people seemed to have achieved invulnerability and the power to defy nature ! Science, so far, has still to find a satisfactory explanation of this phase of phenomena.

Hippolyte Blanc, another writer, records the following observations : —

" The girl Sonet, nicknamed 'The Salamander', was seen to rest in the flames for 36 minutes on one occasion without sustaining any burns.[6]

" The mania of the convulsionnaires broke out at St. Medard, in the spring of 1731. The royal order, which caused the cemetery of St. Medard to be closed and the pretended miracles to cease, was issued in January, 1732. "

[6] Ibid., p. 114.

In 1733, the Duc d'Anjou, the infant son of Queen Marie Leckzinska and Louis XV, fell a victim to a Jansenist plot which caused his death.

In Phantasmata, already quoted, we read further :___.

" From 1732 onward the delirium of theomania began to manifest itself more signally than it had hitherto done, by ecstatic phenomena, and cataleptic symptoms, by predictions, and pretensions to miraculous operations, in the same way as the Calvinist convulsionnaires progressed in their fanaticism in the Cevennes, when they were interfered with by the civil authorities ; and many of their chiefs were imprisoned, as those of the Jansenists of St. Medard were immured in the Bastille, and the Bicetre. The plea or the pretext of persecution, and the consequent assemblage of the convulsionnaires of Paris in secret, concurred greatly and rapidly to augment the evils which it was intended to prevent by those governmental measures. And those evils were not effectually repressed during the following ten years. Nor were they totally then put a stop to. It was of no avail that, in the year 1762, the ' Grand Secours ' was forbidden by act of parliament.

" The insanity of the convulsionnaires ", says Hecker, " lasted without interruption until the year 1790. "

The convulsionnaires of St. Medard and the Camisards were only manifestations of Gnosticism such as have existed in the esoteric branches of various sects, religious and secret societies ever since the days of Paganism.

Among others can be mentioned :

The Albigenses, The Moravian Brethren,
The Anabaptists, the Baptists, the Quakers,
The Waldenses, the Shakers, the Methodists etc.

Their name is legion!

Sects rise, sects fall or fade away, but God remains.

CHAPTER XLIII

THE ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND

The Royal Order of Scotland is composed of two degrees — HRDM and RYCS — or those of Heredom and Rosy Cross.

The antiquity and origin of " Mother Kilwinning " is a favourite theme with Masonic authors according to whom the degree of Heredom of Kilwinning was founded in the reign of David I, King of Scotland, and that of Rosy Cross by Robert Bruce in 1314.

Robert Freke Gould, however, places the date of the foundation of the Royal Order of Scotland in " the middle of the last century ", and gives us the name of William Mitchell, a Scotsman who obtained his patent as its founder from the Provincial Grand Master of South Britain on July 22, 1750. [1]

CHAPTER XLIV

THE STRICT OBSERVANCE

The following main facts concerning the Strict Observance are mostly gathered from the profusely documented work of R. Le Forestier who, having made a comprehensive study of the subject, took as one of his chief authorities Nettelbladt.

The Templar rite of the Strict Observance was founded in 1751 by Charles Gotthelf, Baron de Hund (born 1722) Chamberlain and Councillor of the Elector of Saxony, King of Poland, as well as Councillor of the Empress Maria Theresa.

In 1764, the Anglo-Jewish adventurer Leucht, variously known as Johnson, de Martin, Robert de Leichten, Becher, Despocher, de Bousch, Somery, Scheel and Koenig, made an attempt to amalgamate the Templar System of Clermont, the control of which he had seized the previous year from Rosa, with that of von Hund, with the view of dominating the latter also. In this he failed.

Rosa had been the Legate for Germany, Holland and the kingdoms of the north while, in Paris, the Comte de Clermont occupied a similar position with regard to France, Spain, Portugal and Italy.

The legend of the Strict Observance is very much involved. Stating that the Stuarts were the unknown superiors of the Order it claimed descent from Pierre d'Aumont, Banneret d'Auvergne, at the time of the death of the Grand Master Jacques de Molay and the successor of Beaujeu, Molay's nephew who, with two Commanders and five Knights had escaped to the Island of Mull where they encountered George Harris, the Grand Commander of Hampton Court, likewise a refugee. They elected d'Aumont Grand Master and adopted the costume and customs of Masons in memory of d'Aumont and his companions who, for two years, had lived thus in disguise while exercising the trade to earn a livelihood. Not daring to recruit openly, the Templars were eventually permitted to marry to perpetuate the order. For over 250 years, admission to the degree of Scotch Master had been restricted to the sons of Templars and only within the last 150 years had the secrets of this order been available to Scotch Masters born of free parents. D'Aumont was succeeded as Grand Master by Harris. " [1]

According to Le Forestier, again quoting Nettelbladt, the initiation ceremony ot the Strict Observance included the presentation to the postulant of a ribbon to which was appended a small cross which had been in contact with the Baphomet.[2]

At the Convent, sitting from June 4 to 24, 1772, at Kohlo in the Basse Lusace, it was decided to refuse further obedience to the illusive " Invisible Superiors" continually referred to by Hund, and the Duke Ferdinand of Brunswick (Luneburg) (1721-1792) was, with the consent of the Banneret, elected Magnus Superior Ordinis per Germaniam Inferiorem and Grand Master of the United Lodges of Scottish Rites, the name of Strict Observance being abandoned as objectionable to Masons of other systems. From that time forward Hund's position in the order was purely an honorary one.[3]

CHAPTER XLV

THE MARTINIST ORDER

Martinez Paschalis first founded in Paris an order called the Elus Cohens or Priests, then in 1754 that of the Martinists. This order was reformed by Louis Claude de Saint Martin in 1775. It had ten degrees.

St. Martin was on intimate terms with the Illumine Jean Willermoz who presided at two of the Great Masonic Conventions — that of Les Gaules in 1768 and that of Wilhelmsbad in 1782 at which was voted the death of the King of France.

The Modern Martinist Order was established with three degrees in Paris in 1887 and was constituted in England in 1902.

Its Grand Master, Marquis Stanislas de Guaita, died in 1897 and was succeeded by T. Ch. Barlet whose successor was Dr. Encausse, generally known as Papus, who became the occult adviser of the ill-fated Czar Nicholas II.

Mr. A. E. Waite tells us that, while Papus was its Grand Master, a Martinist " Supreme Council " was founded with power for the formation of regular lodges, male and female members being admitted on equal terms. This was in 1894. By the year 1899, there were general and special delegations of the Order established in a number 'of European Countries — Great Britain included — in the United States, the Argentine and Guatemala and even in more than one Oriental land.

As regards the Martinist relations with Masonry, Mr. Waite tells us on page 161, Vol. II, of his New Encyclopaedia of Freemasonry that Martinism " had of course shut its doors against Masons under authorized obediences. " Yet we are able to reproduce (see Appendix IV) a private letter, dated March 26, 1906, written by " Dorec " to Theodore Reuss 33° 90° 96°, English Mason, etc. in which the latter is incidentally informed " that John Yarker is our (' the Martinist') delegate in London. "

Another private letter in which Papus refers to himself as the Delegate of John Yarker for the Swedenborg Rite in France is also in existence. Such a correspondence with one of the most noteworthy Masons of their day does not look as if Mr. Waite's information concerning the alleged feud between Masonry and Martinism can have been very reliable !

The Martinist sign is :⁚:

By 1920, Mr. Waite states that Martinism had abandoned the Rituals of 1887 and appeared to have become a clandestine organization!

CHAPTER XLVI

THE ILLUMINATI OF AVIGNON

The Illuminati of Avignon were founded in 1760 by Antoine Joseph Pernety, an unfrocked Benedictine, a Cabalist and alchemist. Modified in 1766 by Chastanier, one of the founders of the English Rite of Swedenborg, this rite was introduced into Paris in the Lodge Socrates of Perfect Union under the name of Theosophical Illumines. In 1770, Pernety, founded La Grande Loge Ecossaise du Comtat Venaissin. This Lodge was raided in 1774 and its papers confiscated by order of the Pope. It was revived in 1789 [1].

Among its members were Cagliostro and his friend Baron de Corberon, Mesmer, Marquis de Thome and the Marquis de Puysegur, self-styled Professor of " Mesmerism ".

In Les Illumines d' Avignon by Joanny Bricaud (page 103) we read that " today, its members having become affiliated to Martinism, the society has ceased to exist ". This author also states that the degree of Knight of the Sun, founded by Pernety, which is divided into two degrees, forms now the 27th and 28th grades of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites.[2]

"White Masonry is Administrative and consists of three degrees conferred by the Supreme Councils : —

31. Grand Inquisitor Commander
32. Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret
33. Sovereign Grand Inspector General [1]

In A sketch of the Philosophy, Traditions, and records of the Masonic Order of the Red Cross of Constantine by the Editor, (see The Rosicrucian and Masonic Record, page 204) we read : —

" The Premier Conclave of England, which has existed from time immemorial, gave rise, it is said, to the foundation of the Council of ' Emperors of the East and West ', a body which was established in Paris about the year 1758 and is considered as the parent of the Antient and Accepted Scottish Rite. (Compare with page 336).

" The Scottish Rite ", according to Le Forestier, " issued from the Chapter of Clermont, as a development of the Ramsay Rite. Its foundation dates from

[1] Encyclopaedia of Freemasonry, The Speculative Mason, vol. 19, Jan. 1927.

1748 at which period it was introduced into Germany by Count de Schmettau. "[2]

The Supreme Council is the arch-stone of this edifice of degrees. It is composed of a minimum of nine and a maximum of thirty-three members, Grand Inspectors General of 33°. Is that a secret 33 ?[3]

In its present form, the Rite in France dates from 1804. " At that date the pecuniary situation of the Grand Central Lodge was however not up to its pretentions. It was already in debt. Brother de Grasse had personal debts and Brother Abraham was a man of venal character. The Grand Orient paid the debts of the Grand Scottish Lodge and of Brother de Grasse, making a life pension of 800 francs to Brother Abraham and proposing the annexation of the Grand Central Lodge to the Antient and Accepted Scottish Rite among those recognized by the Grand Orient. "[4]

[3] Blanchard, Scottish Rite Masonry Illustrated, 33°, vol. II, p. 451.

" But the one ' mission and object' (Mackey) of Masonry is kept steadily in view ; which is the worship of the god of this world, who is Satan, as the ' Grand Architect of the Universe ; ' and to accomplish this by inventing ' a religion in which all mankind agree ; ' and this, by putting all earth's religions upon a level, and uniting them together in Masonic worship, which is boldly avowed in rituals, lexicons, and philosophical degrees. This is (in Revelation, XIII, 14) called the image of the beast, made by ' them, that dwell on the earth' that is, everybody ; every creed, and no creed ; all who join the secret lodges. But this world-religion must have some form, and shape, to hold together ; and be taxed ; hence, it takes the form, or image, of the beast. Lodge despotism is as absolute as Romish despotism and is the image of it...

" Note now the profound craft, by which this is to be accomplished, viz., Masonry promises men salvation by ceremonies invented by men, administered by priests, and inhabited by devils. This is the sum and substance of all the false religions on earth, and will ultimately unite them against Christ. But the only opponent Masonry dreads is Christ, who refused to worship Satan, and his followers. "

In 1804, in France, a Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the 33rd degree of the Antient and Accepted Scottish Rite was duly constituted. In the construction of this Council, Comte Alexandre F. A. de Grasse-Tilly, (the son of the Admiral) played a leading part. He had been initiated in Paris several years before he went to America where we find him a colonist of San Domingo.

His successor was the Duc Decazes.

As regards the development of Scottish Rites in England, Stillson and Hughan state that : —

" After the Antient and Accepted Scottish Rite had been established in England, the Templar body resigned control over the degrees of the ' Rose-Croix ' and ' Kadosch, ' which then became incorporated with the rite, as the 18th and 30th ; it was therefore necessary to suppress the old ceremonies and relegate them to Templar history, but they were still retained in some of the older English encampments.

A revised ritual was issued in 1851 consequent on the omission of the ' Rose-Croix ' and ' Kadosch '.[5]

Another authority, Paul Rosen, makes the following comment : —

" The philosophy of the degree of Kadosch (30°), the apotheosis and real aims of Masonic teaching, can be summed up in the following words : — I, I alone, All mine, All for me, by any and every means.

---

[5] Stillson and Hughan, History of Freemasonry and Concordant Orders, p. 774.

There are seven different ways of carrying out this programme and consequently seven different grades of Knight Kadosch which are : —

N° 1. The Jewish Kadosch
N° 2. The Primitive Christian Kadosch
N° 3. The Kadosch of the Crusades
N° 4. The Kadosch of the Templars
N° 5. The Kadosch of the Puritan
N° 6. The Kadosch of the Jesuit
N° 7. The Scottish Kadosch (alone true Freemasonry). [6]

Presidents of the United States are honoured by being made 33rd degree Masons, Scottish Rites. King Edward VII and countless other magnates were 33rd degree Masons. What does this prove ? — Unfortunately nothing!

This is the great deception. The success of the entire system depends on the solid integrity and political and social prominence of its affiliates whose virtues make them valuable as decoys.

" Antient and Accepted Scottish Rites " runs its own Secret Service which cooperates with the national Secret Services of all countries thus serving the aims and purposes of Internationalism.

Blanchard, himself a high Mason whose masonic studies were induced by a keen desire to fathom the truth and impart the result of his discoveries to those whom he feared might also be duped, thus sums up Scottish Rites : —

" Let the authoritative teaching of Dr. Mackey be continually borne in mind, that : — 'the mission and object of Masonry is the worship of the Great Architect of the Universe '. It follows that the lodges must have something for their dupes to do, called worship. And what could wicked men and devils invent craftier or better suited to deceive the simple, than this very-scheme of ' the Ancient Scottish Rite ', which now rules the rites of the world. It seizes and appropriates all of religion but its holiness and justice ; and all of Christ but his truth and his atonement. It mixes things sacred with things profane, till the whole compound is profanity ; and quoting the Bible' as if it believed it true, which notoriously it does not, it has furnished a dark system, which angels flee from and which devils inhabit[7]. Every Lodge is a Synagogue of Satan and its ritual is Sorcery. " [8]

[6] Paul Rosen, Satan et C^{ie}, p. 142.

Anyone interested in the rituals etc. of this rite will find much that is interesting in D. Margiotta's Le Culte de la Nature dans la Franc-Maçonnerie Universelle.

Masonic philosophy is well summarised in the following exposé made of it by a Jewish mason, Paul Rosen, in Satan et C^{ie}. —

Official ritual of the 33rd and last degree of Antient and Accepted Scottish Rites

" For the Sovereign Grand Inspector General the 33rd is the last degree of the Rite. The Order is the Great Avenger of the assassinated Grand Master and the grand champion of humanity, for the innocent Grand Master is man, man who is Master, King of Nature, man who is born innocent and unconscious.

" Our innocent Grand Master was born for happiness and for the enjoyment of all rights without exception.

"But he has fallen under the blows of three assassins, three scoundrels have thwarted his happiness and rights and have annihilated him.

" The three infamous assassins are Law, Property and Religion.[9]

" Law, because it is not in harmony with the rights of the individual man and the duties of social man in society, rights which belong to all. Duties are but the immediate consequence of the right inherent in all, for the enjoyment of all rights.

" Property, because the earth belongs to nobody and its fruits belong to all in proportion as they are required by each for the needs of his own well being.

" Religion, because religions are but philosophies evolved by men of genius and adopted by the people in the belief that they would increase their well being.

" Neither law, property nor religion can be imposed on man and as they annihilate him by depriving him of his most precious rights they are assassins on whom we have sworn to wreak vengeance, enemies against whom we have declared war to the death and without quarter.

" Of these three infamous enemies it is on religion that we must concentrate our most deadly attacks, because no people has ever survived its religion. Once Religion is dead, Law and Property will fall to our mercy, and we shall be able to regenerate society by founding on the corpses of the assassins of man, Masonic Religion, Masonic Law, and Masonic Property ".[10]

Who will not see therein the dreaded theories of Marxism and Bolshevism and their results, as they are practised in Russia ?

THE ORDER OF THE MOPSE

Pope Clement XIV having excommunicated the Freemasons in 1763, many German Catholics, frightened by the Papal Bull, definitely renounced the society.

They formed however another association which, while restoring their former organization, should not expose them to the censure of the Vatican and, having found a protector in the person of one of the most august German Sovereigns of the day, they secured an influential German nobleman as Grand Master. Many distinguished persons joined the " new " order which, like the Freemasons, had laws, words, signs of recognition, reception ceremonies and appointed officers.

One of the principal lodges was at Frankfort.

Adherence to the Roman Catholic faith was declared a requisite of membership, but the rule was not enforced and as a protection from papal excommunication a promise, instead of an oath of secrecy, was exacted from candidates.

Women were eligible to any dignity in the order, excepting that of Grand Master, which position was held for life. There were two Lodge Masters or Grand

Mopses in each lodge, one of which was a man and one a woman, while the lodge was governed six months by a man and six months by a woman alternately,[1]

In Italy, the Mopses called themselves Xerophagists.[2]

The following is quoted from an article in Freemasonry Universal Vol. 2, part 4, Spring Equinox, 1927 : —

" Mingled with points clearly stolen from the Masonic ritual, such as the use of the square and compasses, was the veneration of a sort of mascot which was a dog, known as the Mopse, and resembled a rather large pug dog with a curly tail.

" During the ceremony the candidates were admitted blindfolded and were instructed to kiss something. This was nothing more nor less than a life sized model of a mopse, and on the bandage being removed the initiate found that he or she had kissed the tail end of the dog. Whether the ceremonies were merely boisterous fooling, or whether they had any esoteric significance it is difficult to say, as students differ on the point.

" The Order was certainly at one time wide spread and popular, but seems to have entirely died out. Probably its death blow was given by the Revolution, which swept away so many of the aristocrats of France and brought secret societies into disrepute, owing ta the supposed share of the Illuminati in starting that tremendous upheaval. "

The statement in the last paragraph can hardly be accurate as certain official papers are in existence bearing, as letter head, under the insignia of the double headed masonic eagle, the following words : —

THE RITE OF ZINNENDORF

This rite was founded in 1766 by Zinnendorf, the chief surgeon of the general staff of Berlin and a Knight Commander in von Hund's Strict-Observance. Zinnendorf received the rituals and instructions for this order from a Swede named Cklack.

On Dec. 27 1770, Zinnendorf formed a Grand Lodge in Berlin with the cooperation of twelve lodges which had adopted his opinions. On March 29 of the following year, he demanded a constitution from the Grand Lodge of London. This he finally obtained in 1773 through the influence of Prince Louis George Charles of Hesse-Darmstadt, the Grand Master of the Lodges following his system.[1]

The Rite of Zinnendorf was absorbed at the Convent of Wolfenbuttel in 1778 into the Lodge of the Three Globes of Berlin.

THE PHILALETES

(CHERCHEURS DE LA VÉRITÉ)

The Philaletes, an offshoot of the Martinists, was founded in Paris on April 28, 1773, within the Lodge of Les Amis Reunis, by Savalette de Langes, Keeper of the Royal Treasury, M. de St. James, Comte de Gebelin, Condorcet and others.

This order was divided into 9 degrees, which were, Elu, Chevalier Ecossais, Chevalier d'Orient, Chevalier Rose-Croix, Chevalier du Temple, Philosophe Inconnu, Philosophe Sublime, Initie, Philalèthe ou Maitre a tous grades.

Among its members were Frederic-Louis de Hesse-Darmstadt, Baron de Gleichen, Willermoz and l'Abbe Siéyès. [1]

CHAPTER LI

THE ILLUMINATI OF BAVARIA

(Founded 1776)

The sect of the Illuminati of Bavaria was founded on May 1, 1776 by Adam Weishaupt, a professor at the University of Ingolstadt, educated by the Jesuits.

It was composed of three classes of adepts, each of which was again subdivided into degrees, in the following manner : —

Nursery	Preparation
	Novice
	Minerval
	Illuminatus Minor
Masonry	Symbolic	Apprentice
		Fellow Craft
		Master Mason
	Scotch	Illuminatus Major, or Scotch Novice
		Illuminatus Dirigens, or Scotch Knight
Mysteries	Lesser	Epopt, or Priest
		Prince, or Regent
	Greater	Magus, or Philosopher,
		Rex, King, Homme Roi, or Areopagite

This society seems to have borne a close resemblance to the Order of the Golden Cross which was reorganized in 1767.

According to Le Forestier, Illuminism was just as much Masonry as the system of the Rose Croix, that of the Templars or the crowd of Masonic French degrees, and it is wrongfully accused of having taken in Bavaria the cloak of Masonry.[1]

The intention of the Founder was to constitute a Protestant organization to fight Jesuitism, using Jesuitical methods. He was ably assisted in his efforts by Adolph, Baron von Knigge, Massenhausen, Bode, Anacharsis Clootz, Fischer, Zwack, Merz, Hertal, the Marquis de Constanza, Count Saviola, Bassus, Baron de Montgelas and Nicolai.

Behind Nicola'i was Moses Mendelssohn, and behind Mendelssohn the Jewish Kahal, the Jewish International World Government.[2]

" Nicola'i had established about the year 1765 at Berlin a literary review with the object of propagating the pernicious doctrines of a shallow Illuminism, and, in that, the infancy of German literature, when this periodical had scarcely a rival to encounter, the influence it exerted was more extensive than can at present be even conceived. Bahardt and Basedow, at the same time, in cheap and popular tracts, scattered among the lower classes the poison of infidelity ; and they, as well as Nicola'i, were in close communication with Weishaupt, carrying on with the most reckless violence, and with the weapons of a most shameless ribaldry, the warfare against Christianity.

2. Samuels, Memoirs of Moses Mendelssohn, p. 159, appendix, Published by Longman & Co.

The great critic Lessing, the founder of the modern German literature, lent his powerful support to the anti-Christian League. While librarian at Wolfenbuttel he edited a work, composed by Reimarus, consisting of various irreligious essays entitled Fragments of Wolfenbuttel, and which, from the tone of earnestness and dialectic acuteness wherein they were written, exerted a very prejudicial influence over public opinion. "[3]

As the organization of the Illuminati developed, so did its ambitions, which ended in a plot to subvert Freemasonry to its aim of world dominion by any and all means.

Politically speaking, its tendencies were republican ; religiously, it was anti-christian. Its members were pledged to blind obedience to their superiors and this was insured by a strict system of secret confessions, and monthly reports checked by mutual espionage. Each individual used a pseudonym instead of his own name to help disguise his identity.

But for the Freemason Baron Adolph von Knigge, a Templar, who succeeded in having it absorbed by Freemasonry, the order would have perished soon after its creation.

After obtaining control of certain Masonic Lodges, Weishaupt and his associates recklessly vaunted their growing power. Their organization then, soon becoming permeated by the agents of their enemies, the Jesuits and Rose Croix Orders, they were denounced to the Elector of Bavaria, Charles Theodore, by the Duchess Marie-Anne of Bavaria (Princess Clementine), his cousin whose secretary, Joseph Utzschneider, had, as an Illuminatus, become acquainted with certain methods of the order.

[3] J. A. Moehlen D. D., Symbolism, translated by James Robertson, pp. 34-36, introduction.

Constanza had ordered him to hand over certain letters written by Frederic II to the Duchess Marie-Anne and, suspecting blackmail, instead of complying with the request, he denounced the order.

On March 2, 1785, the Elector wrote his second and final edict, suppressing the order of the Illuminati, but it was not until July 10, 1785 that incriminating evidence was obtained on the activities of the sect when one of its members, a priest, Jacob Lang, was struck dead by lightning while walking with Weishaupt at Ratisbon. His body was placed in the chapel of Saint-Emmeran and a Benedictine found some documents and a list of the members of the Illuminati sewn in his clothes. These he handed over to the Councillor of the Government of Upper Bavaria.

More papers were found when the authorities, who were watching Zwack's relations with a certain Jew, Mayer, the superintendent of Bassus' chateau of Sandersdorf, near Ingolstadt, decided to raid the place, and in 1787 the judge charged with the inventory of the succession of the valet of Baron Maendl, the Chamberlain of the Elector, found among his effects an iron box full of papers concerning the Illuminati.

This discovery, Maendl, himself an Illuminatus, was summoned to explain. Among the details of his evidence is the statement that the Lodge Bader had 97 degrees. The coincidence of this number becomes of interest when compared with the 97 degrees of Memphis sent to England in 1762 by the Grand Orient of France.

When Weishaupt was banished from Bavaria by his sovereign, he was received at the court of the Duke Ernest-Louis de Saxe-Gotha who, besides a pension, gave him the title of Honorary Councillor.

The Marquis of Constanza, his secretary, and Count Saviola, the Keeper of the Archives of the order, two Italian accomplices, were also banished with pensions of 400 and 800 florins respectively, and as Illuminism was already said to have found its way into Italy, there is no reason to suppose that these gentlemen failed in their administration of the subsidy.

In 1788, after the suppression of Illuminism in Bavaria, Bahrdt and Knigge attempted to revive it in the " German Union " but it was not till 1810 that it really reappeared in Germany, this time under the name of The Tugendbund.

The introduction of Illuminism into Prance was effected by the Marquis de Mirabeau who, during his residence in Germany, was initiated by Mauvillon, a professor of the Caroline college at Brunswick. He rose high in the order, and, on his return to France in September 1788, initiated the Duc d'Orléans, who was Grand Master of the Freemasons of that country, and also Talleyrand.

Frost, in Secret Societies of the European Revolution refers to Barruel as asserting " that the whole of the Masonic lodges comprised in the Grand Orient, 266 in number, were ' illuminated ' by the end of March 1789 and there is no doubt that, with the ground so well prepared by the works of Voltaire and Bousseau, d'Alembert and Diderot, and with the example and influence of the Duke of Orleans, and the exertions of men such as Mirabeau, Talleyrand, Sieyès, and Condorcet, the system spread with rapidity. foucauld, Payne and Fau:het were also members of the sect for France.[5]

The following curious piece of information is furnished by Le Grand Dictionnaire Universel du XIX^{e} Siecle by Larousse in the article on " Illuminisme " : —

" The Illuminati did not disappear after the last century. They are still to be found in Germany, England and Russia where they have formed a queer sect in which castration is one of the features of initiation. The taste for the supernatural, the passion of the marvellous constantly urge these mentally unbalanced men in whom the imagination is fanaticised, to throw themselves into the fantastic visions which constitute Illuminism. CHAPTER LII

THE TUGENDBUND

The name of Tugendbund or Union of Virtue was first given to the association of men and women who met at the house of the Jewess Henrietta Herz whose husband, Marcus Herz, a Jewish Illuminatus, was the disciple, friend and successor of Moses Mendelssohn. Noted Illuminati were frequenters of this abode of licentiousness about which Graetz, the Jewish historian, wrote :

" The salon of the beautiful Henrietta Herz became a sort of Midianite tent. Here a number of young Jewish women assembled whose husbands were kept away by their business. The most prominent male member of this circle was Frederick von Gentz, the embodiment of selfishness, licentiousness, vice and depravity whose chief occupation was the betrayal of women.[1]

" A so-called Band of Virtue (Tugendbund) was formed of which Henrietta Herz, two daughters of Moses Mendelssohn[2] and other Jewesses together with Christian profligates were members. "

1. H. Graetz, History of the Jews, vol. V, p. 422.
2. Dorothea and Rebecca Mendelssohn.

He also adds that " Mirabeau, in whose mind the storm-charged clouds of the Revolution were already forming, and to whom the Jews owed so much during his secret diplomatic embassy (1786) to Berlin, was more in the society of Henrietta Herz than in that of her husband. "

Other frequenters of this salon were William von Humboldt, Jean Paul Richter, Schleiermacher, a foremost Moravian brother, and his friend Frederick Schlegel.

Later, in 1807, a second Tugendbund or Union of Virtue was formed, a purely political league of which Thomas Frost wrote : —

" The nucleus of the Association devised by von Stein which received the name of the Tugendbund, or League of Virtue, was formed during the latter months of 1807. His colleagues, Hardenberg and Scharnhorst; Generals Wittgenstein and Blucher ; Jahn, a Professor of the Berlin Gymnasium, and Arndt, the popular author, were amongst the earliest members. The initiations multiplied rapidly, and the League soon numbered in its ranks most of the Councillors of State, many officers of the army, and a considerable number of the professors of literature and science. By the active and zealous exertions of Stein, Hardenberg and Jahn, its ramifications spread quickly from the Baltic to the Elbe, and all classes were drawn within its influence. A central directorate at Berlin, presided over by Stein, had the supreme control of the movement, and exercised, through provincial committees, an authority all the more potent from emanating from an unknown source, and which was obeyed as implicitly as the decrees of Emperor or King. "[3]

[3] Thomas Frost, Secret Societies of the European Revolution, vol. I. p. 183.

With Heckethorn, we follow the Tugendbund further, for he tells us that after its suppression by the police of Napoleon I, the Tugendbund continued " concealing itself however more strictly than before in the masonic brotherhood. " [4]

One of its first acts " was to send auxiliary corps to assist the Russians in the campaign of 1813. Prussia having, by the course of events, been compelled to abandon its temporizing policy, Gneisenau, Scharnhorst and Grollmann embraced the military plan of the Tugendbund. A levy en masse was ordered. The conduct of these patriots is matter of history. But, like other nations, they fought against Napoleon to impose on their country a more tyrannical government than that of the foreigner had ever been. They fought as men only fight for a great cause, and those who died fancied they saw the dawn of German freedom. But those who survived saw how much they were deceived. The Tugendbund, betrayed in its expectations, was dissolved ; but its members increased the ranks of other societies already existing, or about to be formed " such as the ' Black Knights ' under Jahn, ' The Knights of the Queen of Prussia ', ' The Concordists ' under Dr. Lang and the Deutscher Bund, founded in 1810."

The Tugendbund was revived in the Burschenschaft, or associations of students of the universities, where they introduced gymnastics and martial exercises, but the organization was broken up and its objects frustrated, after the stabbing of Kotzebue by a student. It revived between 1830-33. It is said to have failed again.

THE JACOBINS

(THE CLUBS OR LODGES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION).

The Bishop of Autun (Talleyrand), Mirabeau, and the Duc d'Orléans, Grand Master of the Grand-Orient de France founded a Lodge in Paris in 1786 which was duly " illuminated " by Bode and Guillaume Baron de Busche. This was the Club Breton which afterwards became known as the Jacobin Club, a name of Templar origin, recalling that of Jacques de Molay.

Le Forestier in Les Illumines de Baviere et la Franc-Maçonnerie Allemande gives the substance of a book written by Girtaner, quoting the latter as to the funds available at that date for revolution.

" In his Nouvelles Historiques et considerations politiques sur la Revolution Française (1793) the Swiss Girtaner, an ex-freemason who had joined the ranks of the enemies of the sect, states that, from 1786, there had existed in Paris a Propaganda Club whose chiefs were then the Duc de la Rochefoucauld, Grand Master of the Lodge in the rue Coq-Heron, Condorcet and Sieyes and that the aim of the organization was to further the triumph of dogmatic Atheism and create a great social upheaval.

" The members charged with spreading the proganda of the subversive principles of the club numbered 50,000. In 1790, it had twenty thousand livres at its disposal, but by the end of 1791, these had increased to thirty millions. "[1]

The conspiracy formed by Philippe of Orleans (Duc de Chartres, Masonic name, " Egalite ") to overthrow Louis XVI, was directed by Sillery and Mirabeau and, of the 605 elected members of the Tiers Etat, 477 deputies were Freemasons.[2]

Revolutions cost money. " L'Or de Pitt" (Pitt's gold) had to go through some channel that would not compromise the English government and, in dealing with such a delicate matter as the fostering of revolution in a foreign country, it was good policy to organize a similar movement at home which however should remain abortive, being led by Lord Stanhope, Pitt's brother-in-law.

In this connection, the history and failure of Wolfe Tone's Bantry Bay expedition is interesting.

The history of the Terror in the French Revolution of 1793 is the history of lodges such as that of the Philaletes, among whose members the following Jacobin leaders are known to us chiefly for their uncompromising bestiality.

Among the members of the " Club de la Propagande "

Condorcet, Duc de la Rochefoucauld, Sièyès, de Beauharnais, Charles Theodore Lameth.

Among the members of the Lodge " Les Amis Beunis "

Babeuf, Ceruty, Marat, Hébert, Dupont.

Among the members of the Lodge "Les Neuf Sœurs"[3]

Condorcet, Jean Sylvain Bailly, Emmanuel Joseph Siéyès, Dom Gerlé, Claude Fauchet, Jean Pierre Brissot, Benoit Camille Desmoulins, Cerutti, Danton, Nicolas de Bonneville, Rabaud Saint Etienne, Lalande, Duc de la Rochefoucauld.

Among the members of the " Amis des Noirs "

Brissot, Siéyès, Condorcet, Mirabeau (the elder) Due de la Rochefoucauld, Pelletier de St. Fargeau, Lafayette, Gorsas, Valadi, Carra.

Other prominent Jacobin Freemasons of the Revolution of 1793 were :

Guillotin. Dupui, Fouche, Robespierre, Collot-d'Herbois,

According to Barruel (Histoire du Jacobinisme, vol. II, page 446 et seq.) the last mentioned lodge of the " Amis des Noirs " appears to have been only the cover name behind which operated the Comité Regulateuf or Central Committee of the combined lodges and clubs. An international organization with foreign branches in America and Europe, the deliberations of this group of conspirators were sent to the Central Committee of the Grand Orient from where they were relayed to the provinces, addressed to the various Worshipful Masters or Presidents of the Lodges. This group according to Barruel, was the central guiding committee of the Revolution. The " Club Regulateur " is said to have numbered at least 500,000 brothers.

sumably, fully informed of Dupont's plan of revolution which he himself and Mirabeau had approved at a session of the " Amis Reunis " early in June.

While remarking that the vote for the death of the King of France, Louis XVI, was carried by a majority of one, Pignatel[4] further states that, in consequence of certain irregularities in the balloting, some five votes for death were cast by unqualified persons while four others voted twice.

After the storm of revolution had subsided, the power in France seems to have been vested in the Comite de Salut Public, but the 300 who controlled France and of whose power we read in Memoirs of the time [5] were the 300 masonic leaders. That they in turn were controlled by a small clique is obvious. Even the 300 masonic leaders of the French Revolution of 1793 seem to have had their successors in modern history — Rathenau mentioned them in his works.

One of the most interesting episodes of the French Revolution was that known as the Conspiracy of Babeuf. Babeuf formed the Society of the Pantheon which, according to Professor Laski, [6] was operated by " a secret committee of direction. Among them were some extraordinary men, Darthe, Sylvain Marechal, Germain and Buonarroti, who was to survive them all and be their historian. "

The particular brand of communism favoured by the conspirators was based on the theory that the poor could not help themselves or improve their position, that the rich must be suppressed and that the ideal state could only be reached by class war, and a dictatorship of the proletariat led by the Babouvists. Prof. Lasky remarks that anyone who reads the voluminous literature of this period " with attention and compares the habits it postulates with the operations of Bolshevism, cannot help being impressed by the resemblance. "

The Babouvist movement though suppressed by the Directory in 1796 survives today having successfully penetrated an English Literary Society called the Fabians where its predatory principles pass for Socialism.

THE KNIGHTS TEMPLAR AMERICA

(Founded prior to 1790)

In an address by Col. W. J. B. Macleod Moore, of the Grand Cross of the Temple Royal Arch, Grand Prior of the Dominion of Canada, published in The Rosicrucian and Masonic Record, page 167, we find that, in America, Templarism is founded on the craft degrees of Masonry and that one is inseparable from the other.

The earliest records in the United States of a Templar Lodge meeting are dated 1790.

THE UNITED IRISHMEN

In 1791, the Society of The United Irishmen was founded by Theobald Wolfe Tone and Napper Tandy, both of whom were high in rank in the Masonic lodges. The organization sought to unite Catholics, Protestants and Dissenters in order to throw off the oppressive yoke of England or, to use the graphic language of Tone himself, " to subvert the tyranny of our execrable government, to break the connection with England, the never-failing source of all our political evils, and to assert the independence of my country — these were my objects. To unite the whole people of Ireland. "[1]

The priesthood and the nobles however stood solidly behind the English power ; but the social conditions imposed by England on its Irish-Catholic subjects rendered that country a fertile soil for the sowing of the Revolutionary seed. These disabilities are described by Lecky in the following article which appeared in Macmillan's Magazine, January, 1873.

" To sum up briefly their provisions, they (the English) excluded the Catholics from the Parliament, from the magistracy, from the corporations, from the university, from the bench and from the bar, from the right of voting at parliamentary elections or at vestries of acting as constables, as sheriffs, or as jurymen, of serving in the army or navy, of becoming solicitors or even holding the position of gamekeeper or watchman. They prohibited them from becoming schoolmasters, ushers, or private tutors, or from sending their children abroad to receive the Catholic education they were refused at home. They offered an annuity to every priest who would forsake his creed, pronounced a sentence of exile against the whole hierarchy, and restricted the right of celebrating the mass to registered priests, whose number, according to the first intention of the Legislature, was not to be renewed. The Catholics could not buy land, or inherit or receive it as a gift from Protestants, or hold life annuities, or leases for more than thirty-one years, or any lease on such terms that the profits of the land exceeded one-third of the rent. A Catholic, except in the linen trade, could have no more than two apprentices. He could not have a horse of the value of more than £5, and any Protestant on giving him £5 might take his horse. He was compelled to pay double to the militia. In case of war with a Catholic Power, he was obliged to reimburse the damage done by the enemy's privateers. To convert a Protestant to Catholicism was a capital offence. No Catholic might marry a Protestant. Into his own family circle the elements of dissension were ingeniously introduced. A Catholic landowner might not bequeath his land as he pleased. It was divided equally among his children, unless the eldest son became a Protestant, in which case the parent became simply a life tenant, and lost all power either of selling or mortgaging it. If a Catholic s wife abandoned her husband's religion, she was immodiately free from his control, and the Chancellor could assign her a certain proportion of her husband's property. If his child, however young, professed itself a Protestant, he was taken from his father's care, and the Chancellor could assign it a portion of its father's property. No Catholic could be guardian either to his own children or to those of another. "

[1] The Autobiography of Wolfe Tone, p. 51.

The investigations of R. C. Clifford detailed in his book The Application of Jacobinism to the Secret Societies of Ireland and Great Britain led this author to the conclusion that The United Irishmen and The Illuminati bore one another a close resemblance and, in his Diary, Wolfe Tone himself refers frankly to having on " several occasions pressed his friends the Jacobins to try to extend their clubs through the North. "[2]

The history of the United Irishmen is largely the history of Theobald Wolfe Tone.

In a note to page 77 of his Autobiography, we are given the following information concerning the origin of The United Irishmen. "Before Tone's arrival in Belfast a political club, composed of Volunteers, and directed by a Secret Committee, was in existence. Among the members of the club were Neilson,[3] Russell, the Simses, Sinclair, McTier and Macabe after which Tone remarks " Mode of doing business by a Secret Committee, who are not known or suspected of co-operating, but who, in fact, direct the movements of Belfast. "

After also drawing attention to the above, Captain Pollard in The Secret Societies of Ireland, page 14, proceeds to make the following observation : — << The enormous influence of the French revolution had begun to make itself felt in the councils of the secret associations, Jacobin missionaries spread the doctrine of the revolution, and a new spirit of militant republicanism was born. These emissaries from France aimed at bringing England low, and spreading the doctrine of world-revolution by means of an alliance between the Catholic malcontents of the south and the Republican Presbyterians of the north. "

[2] The Autobiography of Wolfe Tone, p. 51.

[3] Samuel Neilson (1761-1803), referred to in Tone's Autobiography as " The Jacobin ". He was the founder of The Northern Star, the first organ of the society in the press.

Suppressed in 1794, the order had reorganized in 1795 as a secret republican revolutionary society with subordinate societies and committees and had absorbed that of The Defenders.

John Keogh was the leader of the Roman Catholic branch of the movement among the other supporters of which were Archibald Hamilton Rowan, Robert Emmett, Thomas Addis Emmett, Arthur O'Connor and Lord Edward Fitzgerald.

In 1795, having become seriously implicated in the treasonable activities of the Rev. William Jackson, an emissary of the French Government to the Irish Revolutionaries, Tone went to America where he saw the French Minister Citizen Adet. With his approval and instructions, Wolfe Tone sailed for France on Jan. 1, 1796 where he spent the remainder of his days planning the downfall of England. He held that " unless they can separate England from Ireland, England is invulnerable. " [4]

From the beginning of his French intrigues, he feared treason to his cause and, in his diary, we find the following entry dated March 21, 1796, quoting General Clark in a conversation he had just had with him :

[4] The Autobiography of Wolfe Tone, op. cit., p. 242.

" Even in the last war when the volunteers were in force " said the General " and a rupture between England and Ireland seemed likely, it was proposed in the French Council to offer assistance to Ireland, and overruled by the interest of Comte de Vergennes, then Prime Minister, who received for that service a considerable bribe from England, and that he (General Clark) was informed of this by a principal agent in paying the money. So, it seems, we had a narrow escape of obtaining our independence fifteen years ago. It is better as it is for then we were not united amongst ourselves, and I am not clear that the first use we should have made of our liberty would not have been to have begun cutting each other's throats : so out of evil comes good. I do not like this story of Vergennes, of the truth of which I do not doubt. How if the devil should put it into any one's head here to serve us so this time ! Pitt is as cunning as hell, and he has money enough, and we have nothing but assignats ; I do not like it at all... "[5]

Six months after his arrival in Paris, Tone received a commission in the French army, and with the assistance of the Directory, General Hoche and others organized the ill fated Bantry Bay expedition of 1796. Every effort to thwart their plans was made by the French navy till, as Tone tells us in an entry dated Nov. 14 to 18, " Villaret de Joyeuse, the Admiral, is cashiered, and we have got another in his place. Joyeuse was giving, underhand, all possible impediment to our expedition. "

His successor, Rear-Admiral Bruix, however, seems to have shared the indifference of his predecessor in Irish matters, and the fact that it was " always in their (the navy's) power to make us miscarry " is mentioned by Tone in his diary.

1. Ibid., p. 290.

On Dec. 15, the expedition finally started and on the 17th, in a fog, the Fraternité with two of the Admirals and General Hoche aboard got separated from the rest of the fleet leaving Tone and General Grouchy with only about half of the original expeditionary force at their disposal.

Tone's efforts to effect a landing at Bantry Bay were frustrated by Grouchy's dilatory tactics and on Dec. 26 we find the following entry in Tone's Diary : " Last night, at half after six o'clock, in a heavy gale of wind still from the east, we were surprised by the Admiral's frigate running under our quarter, and hailing the Indomptable (Tone's ship) with orders to cut our cable and put to sea instantly ; the frigate then pursued her course, leaving us all in the utmost astonishment. "

Did Wolfe Tone think of Vergennes then ? History fails to tell us !

The activities of The United Irishmen ended with the uprising of 1798 and another attempt by the French to land troops on Irish soil. This rebellion was however also crushed, and Wolfe Tone, who was taken prisoner and ordered to be hanged, cut his throat in his cell.

CHAPTER LVI

THE ORANGE SOCIETY

(PROTESTANT AND MASONIC)

(Founded 1795)

The Battle of the Diamond between the Peep-o'-Day Boys and the Defenders took place on Sept. 21, 1795.

We cannot improve on Captain Pollard's documented information in The Secret Societies of Ireland from which we quote :

" On the evening of the battle a number of the delegates of the Peep-o'-Day Boys met at the house of Thomas Wilson at Loughgall. There and then the name of the Society was changed to The Orange Society, and a grand lodge and subsidiary lodges initiated. The ritual was founded on Freemasonry (I° York Rite), and the legend was that of the Exodus of the Israelites.

" The original Peep-o'-Day Society had been confined to the lower orders, but with the change in Orangeism the upper classes began to take place and rank in the organization which was secretly fostered by the Government as a counter-poise against the seditious United Irishmen. [1] "

" Prom 1828, the Orange Society was under the Grand Mastership of the Duke of Cumberland, and in 1835 there were no less than 140,000 Orangemen in England, 40,000 being in London alone. These members were not Irish Orangemen, but purely English, and they were engaged in a plot which recalls the best traditions of the Palais Royal and Philippe-Egalite. The purpose of the plot was to establish the Duke of Cumberland as King of England, on the plea that William IV was still insane and the Princess Victoria a woman and a minor. "[2]

" The revolutionary mechanism staged by the Orangemen was in many ways similar to that of the Orleanist party of Philippe. Wild rumours were set about. Colonel William Blennerhasset Fairman, Deputy Grand Secretary of the Orange Society, was the ruling spirit of the organization, and he conspired to such end that 381 loyal lodges were established in Great Britain. Another thirty were in the army, and branches were in many of the colonies.

" The conspiracy prospered from 1828 to 1835, when it was exposed by Mr. Hume, M. P., and a Committee of Enquiry in the Commons was granted. As the conspiracy, however, implicated half the Tory peers, some of the Bishops and most of the Army, everything passed off quietly; important witnesses vanished, and the Duke of Cumberland as Grand Master decreed the dissolution of the Orange Society in England without recourse to violence. "

" The Volunteer movement began in 1914 in Ulster as the direct consequence of an attempt on the part of the Liberal Government to force the Home Rule Bill on that province. This unfortunate measure had passed the Houses despite the most rigid Unionist opposition, but Ulster had no intention of surrendering to its provisions without a struggle. The situation portended Civil War. A ' Solemn League and Covenant ', to resist it, was drawn up, and Ulster, organizing largely through the Orange Lodges, recruited an Ulster Volunteer Force which was completely organized throughout the North. "

2. Pollard, op. cit., p. 41.

" The Orange Lodges had been reorganized in 1885, when Gladstone introduced the threatening Home Rule Bill. Prior to this the Order had somewhat relapsed and had been little more than a convivial friendly society. The threat of Home Rule brought it once more to the fore as a powerful political organization, and the Ulster electorate, which had until then been predominantly Liberal, became and remained solidly Unionist. The membership of the order expanded enormously, and the existing mechanism adapted itself to the new needs of the old motto, ' No surrender. '

" The Orange Lodges had been legally drilling since January 5, 1912, when application was made to the Belfast Justices for leave to drill on behalf of Colonel R. H. Wallace, C. B., Grand Master of the Belfast and Grand Secretary of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Ulster ; but, the skeleton organization had long been in existence, as was evident by the splendidly disciplined marching of the Lodges at the great Craigavon meeting in Sept. 1911.[3]

The Ulster Volunteers, under Sir Edward Carson, rejected all suggestions for partition and proclaimed their intention of smashing once and for all the whole Home Rule movement.

The Irish Volunteers while claiming Home Rule refused to consent to the exclusion of Ulster on the ground that Ulster being Ireland it should remain Ireland, thus annulling all the efforts of Mr. Asquith, England's Prime Minister, to effect a compromise.

Further quoting Pollard : " Affairs became more and more chaotic and at last John Redmond, the leader of the Home Rule party, realized in some measure what a menace the Irish Volunteer movement was becoming.

" He decided to attempt to control them... He tried to raise funds for the advertised purpose of purchasing arms at some future date, but before this came about the members of the original committee purchased a stock of serviceable weapons with money supplied by the Irish Republican Brotherhood and succeeded in running the cargoes in at Kilcool and Howth. "[4]

Then came the declaration of war between Britain and Germany and the part played by Ireland during the World war is a matter of history.

Interlocked with the history of the Irish Republican Brotherhood, The Clan-na-Gael and Sinn Fein, the activities of this society after 1914 can be followed in the articles on these other organizations.

THE PHILADELPHIANS

(THE OLYMPIANS)

(Founded 1798)

The Philadelphians, a Royalist Anti-Bonapartist Secret Society, was founded on masonic lines about 1798 at Besançon, France, by General Malet and organized by a Freemason, Lieutenant Colonel Oudet.

Using England as a base of operations, it cooperated for a while with the " Chouans " whose chief, Pichegru, was eventually captured and executed by order of the Directory.

After this event, the Philadelphians adopted the name of The Olympians. Most of them however, including Oudet, were shot from ambush the day after the battle of Wagram, the responsibility for their deaths being placed on Napoleon I.

In 1812 General Malet formed a conspiracy to overthrow the Empire. Among those implicated were Generals Moreau, Talleyrand, Trochot, the Comte de Noailles, the Comte de Montmorency and Fouche, who was then under the cloud of Napoleon's displeasure. General Masséna, Grand Master of the Grand Orient, who at that time was in disgrace, was to have been offered the command of the troops. This daring plot almost succeeded and Fouche says that Malet carried with him to the grave " the secret of one of the boldest conspiracies which the Grand Epoch of the Revolution has bequeathed to history. "[1]

General Moreau, who had gone to settle in America returned to France in 1813, the last of the leaders of the Olympians. He died Sept. 2 from a wound received some days earlier.

A few moments after the death of Moreau, the Senate pronounced the deposition of Napoleon and carried out the programme of the Olympians.

THE SCOTTISH PHILOSOPHIC RITE

Rev. E. Cahill, S. J., in his book Freemasonry and the Anii-Christian Movement, page 143, names The Scottish Philosophic Rite as one of the principal divisions of Freemasonry, and he writes :

" The Scottish Philosophic Rite is practised by the Masons subject to the Lodge Alpina in Switzerland. This latter Grand Lodge, which is among those formally recognized by the Grand Lodges of the British Isles, is of special importance, as it is not unfrequently utilised as a kind of liaison body by the different rites and lodges of the several jurisdictions all over the world in their negotiations with each other. MODERN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR ENGLAND

In an address by Col. W. J. B. Macleod Moore, of the Grand Cross of the Temple Royal Arch, Grand Prior of the Dominion of Canada, printed in The Rosicrucian and Masonic Record (page 165), we obtain the following salient points of English Templar history :

" In 1791, we find the Templar Rite styled ' Grand Elect Knights Templar Kadosh, of St. John of Jerusalem, Palestine, Rhodes, and Malta', thus combining the modern and more ancient titles... In 1848 after the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of 33° had been established in England, the Templar body resigned control over the Rose Croix and Kadosh, which had been incorporated into the Ancient and Accepted Rite as the 18th and 30th degrees. It was therefore necessary to suppress the old ceremonies and confine themselves to the Templar alone and to change the name into the degree of ' Masonic Knights Templar '. This title was not used in England before 1851, although the term Masonic appears in the warrants of Admiral Dunkerley between 1791 [1] and 1796... Until 1853 the Order of the Temple and Malta remained combined.

" In 1863 the Grand Conclave again formally revived the Maltese Order, with a considerable ritual, but as a separate degree instead of combined with the Templars as it had been before 1853. "

The following, borrowed from The History of Freemasonry and Concordant Orders, a work by Stillson and Hughan, reputed authorities on Masonic matters, gives us the history of Modern English Templarism.

" In 1867-68 a proposal was promulgated to unite the branches of the Order in England, Ireland and Scotland, under one head ; and H.·. R.·. H.·. the Prince of Wales, who had been initiated into Masonry and the Templar degree in Sweden, consented, in 1869, to assume the Grand Mastership of the Templars of the United Kingdom. On the 7th April, 1873, H.·. R.·. H.·. was installed Grand Master... This assumption by H.·. R.·. H.·. the Prince of Wales, to use the words of the Arch-Chancellor of the Order, Sir Patrick Colquhoun, ' effected a perfect reformation of the Order, and procured for it a status it had hitherto not enjoyed, even under the Duke of Kent, who must be practically regarded as its founder, with the additional advantage of H.·. R.·. H.·. being at once head of the Craft and Temple ; indeed, it may be said that as the Order was reformed in 1804-7 by the Duke of Kent, so it was again refounded under his grandson, the Prince of Wales, in 1873 '. At this date the Order assumed the name of United Religious and Military Order of the Temple and of St. John of Jerusalem, Palestine, Rhodes and Malta. "

[1] The close connection between Grand Lodge and English Templarism, prior to 1791, is established in an article by T. B. Whytehead, in The Rosicrucian and Masonic Record, pp. 317 and 325.

Macleod Moore informs us that in 1813 the Craft degrees, including the.Royal Arch,'were alone recognized as pure and ancient Freemasonry and that the possession of the Royal Arch degree in modern times has been, and is now, considered quite sufficient to preserve the link between the Temple Order and Freemasonry.

CHAPTER LX

MODERN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR
FRANCE

Heckethorn in his well-known book Secret Societies of all Ages and Countries gives the following graphic description of the foundation of this order.

" We read that several lords of the Court of Louis XIV, including the Duke de Gramont, the Marquis of Biran, and Count Tallard, formed a secret society, whose object was pleasure. The society increased. Louis XIV, having been made acquainted with its statutes, banished the members of the Order, whose denomination was, ' A slight Resurrection of the Templars. '

" In 1705, Philippe, Duke of Orleans, [1] collected the remaining members of the society that had renounced its first scope to cultivate politics. A Jesuit father, Bonanni, a learned rogue, fabricated the famous list of supposititious Grand Masters of the Temple since Molay, beginning with his immediate successor, Larmenius. No imposture was ever sustained with greater sagacity. The document offered all the requisite characteristics of authenticity, and was calculated to deceive the most experienced palæologist. Its object was to connect the new institution with the ancient Templars. To render the deception more perfect, the volume containing the false list was filled with minutes of deliberations at fictitious meetings under false dates. Two members were even sent to Lisbon, to obtain if possible a document of legitimacy from the ' Knights of Christ ', an Order supposed to have been founded on the ruins of the Order of the Temple. But the deputies were unmasked and very badly received : one had to take refuge in England, the other was transported to Africa, where he died.

" But the society was not discouraged; it grew, and was probably the same that concealed itself before the outbreak of the revolution under the vulgar name of the Society of the Bull's Head and whose members were dispersed in 1792. At that period the Duke of Cossé-Brissac was Grand Master. When on his way to Versailles with other prisoners, there to undergo their trial, he was massacred, and Ledru, his physician, obtained possession of the charter of Larmenius and the MS. statutes of 1705. These documents suggested to him the idea of reviving the order ; Fabre-Palaprat, a Freemason, was chosen grand master. Every effort was made to create a belief in the genuineness of the Order. The brothers Fabré, Arnal, and Leblond hunted up relics. The shops of antiquaries supplied the sword, mitre, and helmet of Molay, and the faithful were shown his bones, withdrawn from the funeral pyre on which he has been burned. " [2]

This presumably is the particular Templar sect that furnished Isaac Long with all the Templar bric-a-brac that found its way to Charleston in 1804

" As in the Middle Ages, the society exacted that aspirants should be of noble birth ; such as were not were ennobled by it. Fourteen honest citizens of Troyes on one occasion received patents of nobility and convincing coats of arms. "

The order founded its first Lodge on Dec. 23, 1805, deriving from the Grand Orient of France.

From 1805 to 1815, the brother Francisco Alvaro da Silva, Knight of the Order of Christ, secret agent in Paris of John VI of Portugal, was a member of the order. He knew its secret history from its organizers, and in 1812 became its Chief Secretary.

In 1814, Fabré-Palaprat found a Greek manuscript of the 15th century, containing a chapter of St. John the Evangelist which conflicted on many points with the Gospel inserted in the canons of the Roman Church and preceded by a sort of introduction and commentary entitled Leviticon. He forthwith determined to appropriate this doctrine to his order, which was thus transformed from a perfectly orthodox association into a schismatic sect. The author of this work was a monk at Athens called Nicephorus. He was a member of the Sufi sect, one which professes the doctrines of the Ancient Lodge of Cairo.

" Those knights that adopted its doctrines made them the basis of a new liturgy, which they rendered public in 1833 in a kind of Johannite church. "

The Order of the Temple of Paris described by Heckethorn, as stated above, gives a list of the names of the successors of Jacques de Molay as follows. Other Templars, who do not admit the legality of the Grand Mastership of Larmenius, give different lists of Grand Masters :

John Mark Larmenius	1314
Thomas Theobald Alexandrinus	1324
Arnold de Braque	1340
John de Claremont	1349
Bertrand du Guesclin	1357

CHAPTER LXI

MODERN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR
SWEDEN

Stillson and Hughan, giving no date of foundation, state that :

" The Swedish Templars assert that Templary was introduced there by a nephew of De Molay, who was a member of the new Order of Christ in Portugal, and they now, with Denmark and other nationalities of Germany, practised the reformed system of the obsolete Templar rite of the ' Strict Observance '. "[1]

' Strict Observance ' was Templarism.

CHAPTER LXII

RITE OF MIZRAIM

(Founded 1805)

This rite had 90 degrees. It was founded in 1805 at Milan by Le Changeur, Clavel, Marc Bedarride and Joly, and was introduced into France in 1816.

Its trials of initiation were long and difficult, and founded on what is recorded of the Egyptian and Eleusinian mysteries.

Heckethorn states that this rite is essentially autocratic there being no obligation on the Grand Master to account for his actions.

In the Rosicrucian for January 1871 we read the following notice (page 136).

" We have great pleasure in announcing that this philosophic Masonic Rite (Ancient and Primitive Rite of Mizraim) has been recently established in England under authority derived from the Grand Council of Rites for France, and that the Conservators General held a meeting at Freemasons Tavern, on Wednesday, the 28th December. The principal chairs were filled by Ill. Bros. Wentworth Little 90° ; the Rt. Hon. The Earl of Limerick 90°; and S. Rosenthal 90°; by whom the ' Bective ' Sanctuary of Levites — the 33rd of the Rite — was duly opened...

It was then anounced that the following brethren had accepted office in the Rite : The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Bective, Sovereign Grand Master, etc., etc. "

The Rite of Mizraim was amalgamated with that of Memphis in 1775, when John Yarker, as stated by Freke Gould [1] " sanctioned the communication of the degrees of Mizraim to members of the Rite of Memphis, the former having no separate governing body in this country " (England).

" According to an official statement, repeated in every number of the Kneph : " France (having) abandoned the Rite, and the Ill. Gd. Hierophant, J. E. Marconis, 33°, 97°, having died in 1868, Egypt took full possession. The Craft Gd. Lodge, our Antient and Primitive Rite, and the Antient and Accepted Rite, executed a tripartite Treaty to render mutual aid, and restored the Sov. Gd. Mystic Temple — Imp. Council Cen., 96°, presided over by a Gd. Hierophant, 97°, in 1775. "

Essentially Jewish, the historical activities of this order to date are interesting.

Some years ago, a document to which the reader must be referred, The Protocols of the Wise Men or Elders of Zion [2], was brought to light. Abstracted from a Jewish Lodge of Mizraim in Paris, in 1884, by Joseph Schorst, later murdered in Egypt, it embodied the programme of esoteric Judaism. Schorst was the son of a man who, in 1881, had been sentenced in London to ten years penal servitude for counterfeiting.

Before studying these Protocols however, the reader should be made acquainted with a few facts.

This document was first published in 1905 at Tsarskoe

---

Selo (Russia), embodied in a book called The Great Within the Small written by Sergius A. Nilus.

In January 1917, a second edition, revised and documented, was ready, but before it could be put on the market for distribution and sale, the revolution had taken place (March 1917), and the Provisional Government had been replaced by that of Kerensky who himself gave the order to have the whole edition of S. A. Nilus's book destroyed. It was burnt.

A few copies however had been distributed, one of them found its way to England, one to Germany and one again to the United States of America in 1919. In each of these three countries, a few people determined to make a close study of the document with the result that it was soon published everywhere.

In England, it was and still is published by an organization called " The Britons ".

In Germany, a remarkable work was done by Gottfried zum Beck.

In France, it was published by Mgr. Jouin of the Revue Internationale des Societes Secretes and by the fearless M. Urbain Gohier of Vieille France.

In the United States, two anonymous editions were published, one by Small Maynard of Boston, and the other, later, by the Beckwith Company.

Then editions appeared in Italian, Russian, Arabic and even Japanese.

No sooner had the document been made public than loud protests were heard coming from all sections of dispersed Israel. Writers and lecturers were recruited to deny the assertion and shatter the growing belief of a Jewish conspiracy for the political, economic and legislative dominion of the world.

The method of intimidation used to suppress discussion of The Protocols has always been the same. It consists in suggesting that the person guilty of interest in the subject is crazy or becoming so. As the average mortal prefers to be thought sane by his fellow men, the trick generally works.

A short review of the affray must be made. First and foremost came a strong denial made by a Jew, Lucien Wolf, who wrote the pamphlet : The Jewish Bogey and the Forged Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, (1920). Israel Zangwill, another Jew, also wrote against the veracity of the Protocols. Then, in America, followed articles by William Hard, in the Metropolitan, ridiculing belief in the document.

More serious was the painstaking campaign undertaken against the publication of the Protocols by the chiefs of the U. S. Kahal or Kehillah, who intimidated the editor, George H. Putnam, and. forced him to stop the publication of the book by threats to call his loans and thus ruin him financially. The Beckwith Co. was eventually induced by the Jewish Anti-Defamation League to enclose in every copy of the edition they published a small pamphlet containing the denial of the contents of the Protocols.

Among the Gentiles found ready to deny the truth of the Protocols was a certain du Chayla, also a Mrs. Hurlbut and the notorious Princess Catherine Radziwill who had previously reached the pinnacle of self-advertisement by having had herself sentenced to a term of imprisonment in South Africa for forgery in 1902. It seemed as if all the denials against the Jewish authorship of the Protocols had been made, when finally in 1921 the London Times made the sensational discovery through one of its correspondents in Constantinople, a Mr. X. — of a French book which they called the Dialogues of Geneva, published anonymously at Brussels in 1865. It was this book, the Times affirmed, which had been plagiarized by the author of the Protocols.

The publication of this discovery by the Times seemed to have closed all further discussion tending to prove the Jewish authenticity of the Protocols and very little has been heard since on the subject.

Yet, to use the words of the Zionist, Max Nordau, during his violent quarrel with another Zionist, Asher Ginzberg : Audealur et altera pars. It is this other side of the story which the reader is now asked to hear.

The book The Times called The Geneva Dialogues bears in reality the following title : Dialogues aux Enfers entre Machiavelli et Montesquieu. It had been published anonymously in Brussels in 1864. The introduction ends thus : " Geneva, October 13, 1865 ".

It was soon discovered by the police of Napoleon III that the author of the book was a certain lawyer, Maurice Joly, who was arrested, tried, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment (April 1865), as it was averred that he had written his book as an attack against the government of Napoleon III to which he had lent all the Machiavelian plans revealed in the Dialogues.

A short sketch of the author's life is necessary in order to understand the spirit of his book.

Maurice Joly (1831-1878), was born at Lons-le-Saulnier. His mother, nee Florentine Corbara Courtois, was a Corsican of Italian origin and a Roman Catholic. Her father, Laurent Courtois, had been paymaster-general of Corsica. He had an inveterate hatred of Napoleon I.

Joly's father was Philipe Lambert Joly, born at Dieppe, Normandy. He had a comfortable fortune and had been attorney general for the department of Jura for a period of 10 years under Louis Philippe. Maurice Joly was educated at Dijon and began his law studies there, but in 1849 he left for Paris.

There, thanks to his maternal grandfather's masonic associations, he secured, just before the Coup d'Etat in 1851, a post in the Ministry of the Interior under M. Chevreau. In 1860 only, he terminated his law studies, — he wrote several articles, showed a certain amount of talent and ended by founding a paper called Le Palais for lawyers and attorneys. The principal stockholders were Jules Favre, Desmaret, Leblond, Adolphe Cremieux, Arago, and Berryer.

Joly was a Socialist. He wrote of himself: " Socialism seems to me one of the forms of a new life for the peoples emancipated from the traditions of the Old World. I accept a great many of the solutions offered by Socialism but I reject Communism either as a social factor or as a political institution. Communism is but a school of Socialism. In politics I understand extreme means to gain one's ends — in that, at least, I am a Jacobin. "

Friend of Adolphe Cremieux, he shared in his hatred of Napoleon III. He hated absolutism as much as he hated Communism and as, under the influence of his Prime Minister Rouher, the French Emperor led a policy of reaction, Maurice Joly qualified it as Machiavelian and depicted it as such in his pamphlet.

In one of his books he wrote of it :

" Machiavelli represents the policy of Might compared to Montesquieu's, which represents the policy of Right — Machiavelli will be Napoleon III who will himself depict his abominable policy ". (From Maurice Joly — Son passe, son programme — by himself, 1870).

And here comes the important point which the Times omitted to put before its readers when it made the sensational discovery about the Dialogues of Geneva in 1921!

Maurice Joly, who hated Communism and, in 1864, ascribed the Machiavelian policy of Might over Right to the Imperialism of Napoleon III, was evidently ignorant of the fact that he himself was no innovator, for, long before he ever entered the journalistic or political world, the very theory which he had tried to expose and refute had been the guiding principle of a group of ardent revolutionists, promoters of Communism, and worthy followers of Illuminatis and Babouvists, the group of Karl Marx, Jacoby, etc. the agitators of the 1848 revolution.

Long before Maurice Joly's book Dialogues aux Enfers entre Machiavelli et Montesquieu had made its appearance, another book bearing much the same title had been published in Berlin in 1850. It was called by Jacob Venedy and was published by Franz Dunnicker, Berlin. [3]

Jacob Venedy, the author, was a Jew, born in Cologne, May 1805, died February 1871. Owing to his revolutionary activities, he was expelled from Germany and sought refuge in France. "While living in Paris, in 1835, he edited a paper of subversive character called he Proscrit which caused the police to send him away from Paris. He then lived at Le Hâvre. Later, due to the intercession of Arago and Mignet, friends of Adolphe Cremieux, he was once more allowed to return to Paris. Meanwhile, he had published a book, Romanisme, Christianisme et Germanisme, which had won for him the praise of the French Academy. Venedy was a close friend and associate of Karl Marx. He had spent the years 1843-44 in England which at that time was the refuge and abode of all the master minds of the 1848 revolution. In 1847 Venedy was in Brussels with Karl

Marx who had founded there the secret organization called " The Communist League of Workers ", which was eventually brought out into the open under the name of " The International Society of Democracy " (Societe Internationale de la Democratic).

In 1848, after the February Revolution, Venedy returned to Germany, still in the company of Karl Marx. He soon afterwards became one of the chiefs of the revolutionary Committee of Fifty, organized at Frankfort-on-Main in March 1848. Venedy was sent as " Commissar " into the Oberland to stand against Ecker. In Hesse-Homburg he was elected a member of the Left and took his place in the Committee of Fifty. It was at this time that in Berlin he published his book Machiavelli, Montesquieu and Rousseau, upholding the ideas of Machiavelli and Rousseau for the slavery and demoralization of the people.

When order was once more re-established in Germany, Venedy was expelled from Berlin and Breslau.

He was an active member of the Masonic Order Bauhlitte which was affiliated to the Carbonari. (See Die Bauhlütte for Feb. 25, 1871).

It is to be regretted that the Times, which had started an investigation to trace the authorship of The Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion, and lift it off the shoulders of Jewry upon which it rested, should have missed looking into the literary and revolutionary activities of Jacob Venedy.

Following the apparent contradiction between Jacob Venedy and Maurice Joly, one showing the Machiavelli and Rousseau policy as that of triumphant Communism, whilst the other makes it the policy of Reaction and Imperialism, one is apt to overlook the link between the two. The student of the 1830-1848 period of history is here confronted by a remarkable fact.

Fould, the Rothschilds of Paris, London and Vienna, Montefiore, Disraeli, the Goldsmids, were not less Jews than Karl Marx, Moses Hess, Jacoby, Lassalle, Venedy, Riesser. The Liberal Conservatism of Disraeli, the reactionary Imperialism of Fould and the revolutionary Communism of Karl Marx all point towards the same aim, namely, the establishment of Jewish power, whether under a Constitutional Monarchy, an Empire, or a Republic. And although their respective activities seem to stand so far apart, yet they are all linked, all tending towards the same end. One of the most striking instances is the case of Adolphe Cremieux who played a prominent part in the period we are now concerned with, and who was connected with all parties and actually helped form the centre which united them all, viz. The ALLIANCE ISRAELITE UNIVERSELLE, which was, in fact, the central Kahal for Universal Jewry.

The life of Adolphe Cremieux and the activities of his Jewish contemporaries, belonging to widely divergent social spheres, illustrate forcibly the concerted plan of Judaism to reach its secret Messianic hope of world domination.

Until about 1848, it seemed somewhat difficult to show conclusively the link between Judaism and Illuminism, Communism and Capitalism, but a close study of the life of Adolphe Cremieux, and that of his confidential agent, Leon Gambetta, throws full light on the subject.

Whereas in Gentile life, there is an unbridgeable abyss between Conservatism and Anarchy, Religion and Atheism, there is no such chasm in the Jewish mentality. There, all currents, no matter in what direction they may seem to flow, are finally united and channelled in one unique direction.

If it has been somewhat difficult for historians of the French Revolution to see the close link between Judaism and Illuminism, we repeat that no such difficulty exists for the student of the 1848 revolutionary period, after he has followed the life of Adolphe Crémieux and the activities of his Jewish contemporaries. The main difference is that the term " Illuminism " used in the 18th century is replaced by the wide term Freemasonry which embraces all the existent secret societies.

Adolphe Isaac Cremieux (1796-1880) came from a Jewish family of the South of France, that had members in Aix, Nîmes and Marseilles.[4]

In his youth, Cremieux was an enthusiastic admirer of Napoleon I ; yet in 1831, he pronounces the funeral eulogy of the ill famed revolutionist of 1789, the Abbe Gregoire. He chose law as his profession and was admitted to the Bar at Nimes in 1817.

Briefly, Cremieux's life may be viewed from three sides : 1st, his racial Jewish activities, 2nd, his Masonic activities, 3rd, his political influence.

Cremieux's racial Jewish activities are exemplified by the part he took in the Damascus Affair with Moses Montefiore, a Jew of England, when Jewry successfully but unconvincingly silenced the accusation of ritual murder committed upon the Catholic priest, Father Thomas, at Damascus, in 1840. He had a prominent share in the foundation and development of the Alliance Israelite Universelle. Officially founded in 1860, this international union of disseminated Jewry had, as we know, existed for centuries, but after the Damascus affair, the Jewish leaders knew that they had attained sufficient power to feel enabled to show to the whole world that although the civil rights they enjoyed had been granted them by different countries, the real allegiance of each and every one of them was due to their Jewish nationality.

[4] Gaston Cremieux, another member of the same family (1836-1871) was an active Socialist and Revolutionary. He participated in the Paris Commune and was court-martialled and executed in 1871.

The Masonic activities of Adolphe Cremieux were many and powerful. His connection with Louis Bonaparte and his brother, who both were affiliated to the Carbonari, would suggest that he was also connected with this secret society. But it is a fact that Cremieux belonged to the Lodge of Mizraim, the Scottish Rite, and also the Grand Orient. He was in the Supreme Council of the Order of Mizraim and, at the death of Viennet, in whose person the Grand Orient and the Scottish Rite had been united, Cremieux succeeded him as Grand Master.

The political activities of Cremieux are also manifold and varied. In his youth, he had been an admirer of Napoleon I and later became an intimate friend as well as the legal adviser of the Bonaparte family and joined their party which was undermining the government of Louis Philippe, son of Philippe " Egalite "

In 1848, he was one of the most ardent supporters of Louis Napoleon and took an active part in the overthrow of Louis Philippe. He had been one of the foremost speakers in the association known as the Campagne des Banquets which had done so much to promote the Revolution of Feb. 1848.

He became a member of the provisional government and was appointed Minister of Justice. He strongly advocated the candidature of his friend, Louis Napoleon, for the post of President of the French Republic. Cremieux had had hopes of being made Chief Executive under Louis Napoleon and thus play in France the same role which Disraeli played in England, that is ruling the country from behind the scenes. Both Disraeli and Cremieux had the same financial backing, namely the wealth of the Rothschilds and Montefiores who, in London, were friends of Disraeli and, in Paris, friends of Cremieux. Cremieux was therefore keenly disappointed when General Cavaignac was appointed Prime Minister in the Republican Government of Louis Napoleon, and as a revenge, he directed his activities against the Prince President, his former friend. He became so hostile to him, that in 1851, after the Coup d'Etat of December 2, by which Louis Napoleon recreated the Empire and assumed the title of Napoleon III, Cremieux was imprisoned at Vincennes and Mazas. After his release, he made himself the champion and defender of the Communist associates of Karl Marx, the revolutionaries Louis Blanc, Ledru Rollin, Pierre Leroux and others.

His untiring efforts were directed against the Empire in general and Napoleon III in particular, and he consorted with all the Emperor's enemies, among them, Maurice Joly, the author of the Dialogue between Machiavelli and Montesquieu. After the overthrow of Napoleon III and the defeat of France at the hands of Germany in 1871, and the establishment of the Republic, Cremieux once more took an open part in the political affairs of the country.

He pushed to the front his former secretary Gambetta and effectively directed him in his shady negotiations with Bismarck, the latter himself being guided by the Jew Bamberger (1852-1899), a former revolutionist of 1848, but who, having found refuge in France, had been for many years manager in Paris of the Jewish Bank Bischoffsheim and Goldschmidt. He was one of Cremieux's friends, and the war could not affect the ties linking the Jews united in the Alliance Israelite Universelle.

From 1871 until his death, it can be safely asserted that Cremieux as President of the Alliance Israelite Universelle and Grand Master of the Scottish Rile. exercised a tremendous influence upon the anti-religious campaign which followed the Franco-Prussian War. In this as in all his lifelong activities, Cremieux was only obeying the teachings of the Talmud and trying to destroy every religion but that contained in Judaism. His favourite theme was that there should be only one cult — and that cult should be Jewish. At a general assembly of the Alliance Israelite Universelle, on May 31 1864, Cremieux had said : " The Alliance is not limited to our cult, it voices its appeal to all cults and wants to penetrate in all the religions as it has penetrated into all countries. Let us endeavour boldly to bring about the union of all cults under one flag of Union and Progress. Such is the slogan of humanity. "[5]

One cult, one flag ! Are the Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion or the speeches of Machiavelli in Joly's book anything but a lengthy exposition of the ideas briefly expressed by Cremieux ? His activities are one of the clearest examples of Jewish internationalism and Jewish efforts for the realization of the Messianic ideal.

The Alliance Israelite Universelle issued from the Rite of Mizraim plus Universal Freemasonry, subsidized by International Finance, would spell the doom of Christian civilization, the destruction of nationalism, the death of nations upon whose ruin has been erected

5. " Union and Progress " was the name given to several revolutionary associations and also to several Masonic Lodges.

a new Temple of Solomon, containing the treasures and material wealth of the whole world, and over which is placed the six pointed star of ZIONISM.[6]

Leon Gambetta (1838-1882) an Italian Jew, obtained French naturalization on Oct. 29, 1859, and in 1862 became the secretary of Cremieux. He was Depute in 1869, Dictator of National Defence, head of the War Office and Minister of the Interior after the Commune of 1870 and Dictator again after the Coup d'Etat of the President of the Republic Marshal MacMahon in 1877.

The following quotation from a letter which he wrote to his father on June 22, 1863 is interesting.

" My chief, Maitre Cremieux, treats me as if I were his adopted son, and if within three years time he is elected a deputy (which is quite possible) my career will be settled once and for all. I must devote myself to law and politics, and then I may hope to triumph over all obstacles and finally to attain great honours. "[7]

CHAPTER LXIII

THE RIBBON SOCIETY

(ROMAN CATHOLIC)

This society appeared about 1805-1807.

We are again indebted to Captain Pollard for a sketch of its history : " After the suppression of the United Irishmen the society, as such, disappeared, but within a year or two we find a renaissance of the old agrarian Catholic secret societies which had been absorbed into the Defenders and thence into the United Irishmen. The provisions of the Insurrection Act which forbade the possession of arms and enforced a curfew at nightfall were in operation until 1805, when with its relaxation appears the Ribbon Society... In different counties local organizations of Ribbon men called themselves by different titles, such as the Threshers, the Carders, the Molly Maguires, Rockites, Caravats, Shanavests, Pauddeen Gar's men and the like. "[1]

The Ribbon Society " continued the system of organization used by the United Irishmen. A lodge was limited to forty members and they met as a rule in the fields by night, armed sentinels being posted to guard the spot. The lodge was under a Master or Body Master, who controlled three committee-men, each of whom was responsible for twelve members of the lodge. The Masters were represented on divisional committees allocated on the basis of four or more divisions to a geographical county. The divisional committees were controlled by Parish Masters, who in turn were represented on the County Council, which contributed two delegates to the National Board.[2]

" As Whiteboys they certainly were at political and practical war with the Orangemen, and throughout their activities appear to have been criminal and anti-social ; outrage, terrorism and murder being their only methods of political conversion. "[3]

THE CERNEAU RITE

(ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITE)

(Founded 1808)

The following article is quoted in part from an article specifically written by Josiah H. Drummond 33° in The History Of Freemasonry and Concordant Orders by Stillson and Hughan :[1]

" In 1806 Joseph Cerneau appeared in New York; he had been a member of Masonic bodies in the West Indies ; he had a patent from Mathieu Dupotet certifying that he had received the degrees of the Scottish Rite of Heredom, and authorizing him to confer the degrees up to the Twenty-fourth and organize bodies in the northern part of Cuba, and to confer the Twenty-fifth on one person in each year, the Twenty-fifth being then the highest degree of the Rite and the highest Cerneau had received, according to his patent. Cerneau had his patent from Dupotet, who had his from Germain Hacquet, who had his from Du Plessis, who had his from Prevost in 1790, who had his from Francken. "[2]

In 1808 he called a grand consistory of the Rite of Heredom having jurisdiction over 25 degrees.

" But already a controversy had arisen with parties acting under, or deriving their powers from, the Supreme Council at Charleston. We may well believe that Cerneau and his associates soon recognized the impossibility of maintaining successfully a rite of twenty-fwe degrees against one of thirty-three degrees... The Thirty-third degree as now existing originated at Charleston in 1801 ; and no evidence has been found that Cerneau ever received it. "

Cerneau seems however to have overlooked the obvious expedient of creating a 34th degree !

" The Charleston body did not recognize the Cerneau Bodies even by silent acquiescence ; after investigation by a special Deputy, it declared, early in 1814, Cerneau to be an impostor, and his organizations illegal and clearly clandestine. "

" Bitter controversies followed. " Lodges which soon died were opened at Charleston. Others at New Orleans eked out a precarious existence under James Foulhouze. " Foulhouze had received the Thirty-third degree from the Grand Orient of France, which expelled him, Feb. 4, 1859, for a scurrilous publication which he issued in answer to one of its decrees. This Supreme Council became dormant; but, in 1867, it was revived with Eugene Chassaignac at its head ; in 1868 it was recognized by the Grand Orient of France, and unless it has recently gone out of existence, the Grand-Orient to-day recognizes a so-called Supreme Council in New Orleans as a lawful body, and its members as possessing the Thirty-third degree ! "

In 1826 the Morgan murder occurred and Cerneau left for France. De Witt Clinton, Governor of New York, had been Deputy Grand Commander of the Sovereign Consistory from 1811 to 1823 when he was elected Grand Commander.

A number of sporadic revivals of this rite occurred during the ensuing 40 years.

They were known as —

The Hicks Rite, founded in 1832 by Comte de St. Laurent.

The First Atwood Body, founded about 1837 by Henry C. Atwood.

The Cross Body, founded about 1851 by Jeremy L. Cross.

The Second Atwood Body, founded about 1853.

It was not till 1867 that peace was established between the three de facto Supreme Councils in the northern part of the United States. On that date they united and Josiah H. Drummond was elected Grand Commander.

After five years of peace, however, Henry J. Seymour, who had been expelled by the council of which he was a member, organized what he called a Supreme Council of which he was made Grand Commander, " but, on a visit to Europe in 1862, in his eagerness to obtain recognition, he unwittingly held Masonic communication with the Grand Orient of France, which created such a storm that he resigned his office, and since but little has been heard of that Supreme Council, although it probably still exists. "

" In 1881, Hopkins Thompson, an Emeritus member of the Supreme Council, assisted by a few Honorary members and by a Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret, who is believed by many to have been the mainspring of the movement, all of whom had taken the oath of fealty to the Supreme Council, formed an association, which they are pleased to call the Cerneau Supreme Council ' revived '. "

" This body claims jurisdiction over the South, the claim to which was abandoned, before 1866, by unanimous vote, including Thompson's ! It denies the legality of the Southern Supreme Council, from which alone the Thirty-third degree came, and which Thompson by his vote recognized and whose recognition and fraternal support, he, with his associates, sought to obtain. "[3]

The visit to Europe of Henry J. Seymour referred to in the above quotation had serious consequences. We find that Seymour at that time was in communication with John Yarker with whom he collaborated in founding the Ancient and Primitive Rite, the ramifications of which reach to all the branches of occult illuminism such as Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, Memphis and Mizraim, Ancient Order of Oriental Templars, etc.

CHAPTER LXV

CARBONARISM
(HAUTE VENTE D'ITALIE)

(Alta Vendita [Lodge] Founded 1809)

The Carbonari had existed internationally, it is said, under different names since the days of Francis I, King of France, but not till the year 1815 did we begin to hear of its individual historical achievements.

The following is a translation of one of the secret official documents published in Italy by the highest authority of the order, for the guidance of the active head-centres of Masonry in 1818, under the title of : Permanent Instructions, or Practical Code of Rules; Guide for the Heads of the Highest Grades of Masonry[1]. The original Italian document was given to Nubio, one of the Supreme Vendita (Alta Vendita) in 1824, when he was sent to Rome to carry it into effect, and it was to this instruction that he referred when he wrote from Forli to Signor Volpi : " As I have written to you before, I am appointed to demoralise the education of the youth of the Church". When these documents were lost, the Freemasons offered fabulous sums for their recovery. These secret Instructions, intended only for a chosen few Masons of heavy calibre, were written three years after what was called the " Restoration " of 1815, which was brought about by a number of veteran Freemasons, all born in the past century, who had preceded, made, planned, and passed through the French Revolution of 1789. They were rife with the republican notions of France and Italy. They had survived their works, and had been in a great measure defeated, or at least modified, by Napoleon, in whose hands they were like a boat in the hands of new pilots, and, stunned by the many changes, were motionless for a time. In 1815, brought, as it were, in presence of a new world, they took breath and courage, and gathering up the broken threads of the tangled skein, determined to spend the rest of their lives in restoring, if possible, the web commenced in 1789 and 1783. The principal author was supposed to be a man of the name of Filippo Buonarotti, one of the great correspondents of Nubio. From his biography, given in the eighth volume of the Mondo Segreto di Castro, he would appear to have been an apt pupil and follower of Nubio's principle, Ama nesciri et pro nihilo computari. He was born at Pisa in 1761, was a friend of Robespierre, and an enemy of Napoleon, against whom he always conspired. He was a centre in Paris for both French and Italian Carbonari. He had been one of the principals in 1821,[2] and in 1830 founded the sect of the Apofesimeni. In a published record, entitled Bologna of the New Secret Society, 1835, we find the name of a young man, Giuseppe Petroni, afterwards a celebrated Mazzinian, and now (1878) Grand Master Aggunto of Roman Masonry of the Via della Valle, who was likewise one of this noble band. My readers may now thoroughly understand the character of the authors of this secret and curious document of the Instructions. It is a resume and summary, expressed in the clearest terms, of the aim of Freemasonry and the means by which it is attained ; Freemasonry antecedent to the French Revolution; Freemasonry during the French Revolution ; Freemasonry revived after the Restoration. Freemasonry, to-day, is one and the same, using the same means to work out the same end and object.

" So these old conspirators of the past century wakened up in 1815 from their long sleep more energetic than ever, and as a first step towards reviving their secret society work, wrote the following Permanent Instructions, as a guide for the Higher initiated who were chosen to command the whole Masonic movement, especially in Italy : —

" Now that we are constituted in an active body, and that our Order begins to reign as well in places most remote as in those that are nearest our centre, one great thought arises, a thought that has always greatly pre-occupied the men who aspire to the universal regeneration of the world, that thought is, the Liberation of Italy, for from Italy shall one day issue the freedom of the entire world — a Republic of Fraternity, Harmony, and Humanity. This great idea is not yet comprehended by our brothers of France. They believe that revolutionary Italy can only plot in the shade, and accomplish the stabbing of a few spies, or traitors, meantime bearing patiently the yoke of facts accomplished elsewhere, for Italy, but without Italy. This error has been very fatal to us. It is useless to combat it with words which would only propagate more. It is necessary to annihilate it with facts. And in the midst of anxieties, which agitate the most vigorous spirits of 'our society, one there is that can never be forgotten. The Papacy ever exercises a decisive influence over the lot of Italy. With the arm, the voice, the pen, of its innumerable bishops, monks, nuns, and faithful of all latitudes, the Pope finds everywhere persons enthusiastically prepared for sacrifice, and even for martyrdom, friends who would die for him, or sacrifice all for his love. It is a mighty lever, the full power of which few Popes understood, and which has as yet been used but partially. The question of to-day is not the reconstruction of a momentarily weakened power.

" Our final aim is that of Voltaire and of the French Revolution, — the complete annihilation of Catholicism, and ultimately of Christianity. Were Christianity to survive, even upon the ruins of Rome, it would, a little later on, revive and live. We must now consider how to reach our end, with certainty, not cheating ourselves with delusions, which would prolong indefinitely, and probably compromise, the ultimate success of our cause.

" Hearken not to those boastful and vainglorious French, and thick headed Germans, and hypochondriacal Englishmen, who seem to think it possible to end Catholicism, at one time by an obscene song, at another by an absurd sophism, and again by a contemptible sarcasm. Catholicism has a vitality which survives such attacks with ease. She has seen adversaries more implacable and more terrible far, and sometimes has taken a malicious pleasure in baptising with holy water the most rabid amongst them. We may therefore allow our brethren in those countries to work off their frenzy of anti-catholic zeal, allow them to ridicule our Madonnas and our apparent devotion. Under this cloak, we may conspire at our convenience, and arrive, little by little, at our ultimate aim.

" Therefore, the Papacy has been for seventeen hundred years interwoven with the history of Italy. Italy can neither breathe nor move without the leave of the Supreme Pontiff. With him, she has the hundred arms of Briareus ; without him, she is condemned to a lamentable impotency, and to divisions and hostility, from the foot of the Alps to the last pass of the Appennines. Such a state of things must not remain. It is necessary to seek a remedy. Very well. The remedy is at hand. The Pope, whoever he may be, will never enter into a secret society. It then becomes the duty of the Secret Society to make the first advance to the Church and to the Pope, with the object of conquering both. The work for which we gird ourselves up, is not the work of a day, nor of a month, nor of a year.

" It may last for many years, perhaps for a century; in our ranks the soldier dies, but the war is continued. We do not at present intend to gain the Pope to our cause, nor to make him a neophyte to our principles, or a propagator of our ideas. Such would be an insane dream. Even should it happen that any Cardinal, or any Prelate, of his own will, or by deception, should share in our secrets, such would not be a reason for desiring his exaltation to the Chair of Peter. Nay, his very exaltation would be our ruin; for this reason that, his apostasy being prompted by his ambition alone, that very ambition of power would necessarily impel him to sacrifice us.

" Catholics ! what must we consider Freemasonry, when Freemasons themselves pronounce it an apostasy from Catholicity, and foresee that a power fully acquainted with them and their machinations would, as a consequence, seek to crush them.

" That which we should seek, that which we should await, as the Jews await a Messiah, is a Pope according to our wants. An Alexander VI would not suit us, for he never erred in religious doctrine ; a Pope Borgia would not suit us, for he was excommunicated by all the thinking philosophers and unbelievers for the vigour with which he defended the Church. We require a Pope for ourselves, if such a Pope were possible. With such a one we should march more securely to the storming of the Church than with all the little books of our French and English brothers.

" And why ? Because it were useless to seek with these alone to split the rock upon which God has built his Church. We should not want the vinegar of Hannibal, nor gunpowder, nor even our arms, if we had but the little finger of the successor of Peter engaged in the plot ; that little finger would avail us more for our crusade than all the Urbans II and St. Bernards for the crusade of Christianity. We trust that we may yet attain this supreme object of our efforts.

" But when ? and how ? The unknown cannot yet be seen. Nevertheless, as[1] nothing should move us from our mapped-out plan, we must labour at our newly-commenced work as if tomorrow were to crown it with success. We wish, in this Instruction, which should be kept concealed from those simply initiated, to give advice to the rulers of the Supreme Vendita, which they, in turn, should inculcate in the brethren by means of Insegnamento, or Memorandum.

" Little can be done with old Cardinals and with prelates of decided character. Such incorrigibles must be left to the school of Gonsalvi, and in our magazines of popularity and unpopularity, we must find the means to utilize, or ridicule, power in their hands. A well invented report must be spread with tact amongst good Christian families : such a Cardinal, for instance, is a miser : such a prelate is licentious ; such an official is a freethinker, an infidel, a Freemason, and so on in the same strain. These things will spread quickly to the cafes, thence to the squares, and one report is sometimes enough to ruin a man.

" If a prelate, or bishop, arrive in a province from Rome, to celebrate or officiate at some public function, it is necessary at once to become acquainted with his character, his antecedents, his temperament, his defects — especially his defects. If he should be our enemy — an Albani, a Pallotta, a Bernetti, a Delia Genga, a Rivarola — at once trap him, entangle him in all the nets and snares you can. Give him a character which must horrify the young people and the women ; describe him as cruel, heartless, and bloodthirsty ; relate some atrocious transaction which will easily cause a sensation amongst the people. The foreign newspapers will learn and copy these facts, which they will know how to embellish and colour according to their usual style.

" For respect due to truth show, or better still, quote from some respectable fool as having quoted the number of the journal which has given the names, acts and doings of these personages. As in England and in France, so also in Italy there will be no lack of writers who well know how to tell lies for the good cause, and have no difficulty in doing so. One newspaper publishing the name of a Monsignor Delegate, His Excellency, or Eminence, or Lord Justice, will be quite sufficient proof for the people ; they will require no other. The people here around us in Italy are in the infancy of Liberalism. At present they believe in the Liberals, after a little they will believe in anything. "

Modern Carbonarism was founded in 1815 by Maghella, a native of Genoa, who, at the time when Joachim Murat became King of the two Sicilies, was a subordinate of Saliceti, the Neapolitan Minister of Police. He was a Freemason, who exempted from initiation and probation all Freemasons who desired to become Carbonari. Any one who has read the statutes and ritual of Carbonarism will see that it is one and the same as that of Masonry.[3]

A sequence of events pertaining to Carbonarism can be traced by the perusal of several works from which we quote :

At a meeting held on Oct. 13th 1820 by the Grand Secret Consistory, the Orient of Scotland was recognized. The two Consistories of Masonry in France and in Italy and that of the Sublime Carbonari were put into communication and their co-operation assured.[4]

The high ruling grades of the Carbonari appear to have been those of Sublime Maître Parfait, above which was still another that of the Sublime Elus.[5]

The Alta Vendita constituted the Supreme Directory of the Carbonari and was led by a group of Italian noblemen, amongst whom a prince, " the profoundest of initiates, was charged as Inspector General of the Order. "

Piccolo Tigre, a certain nondescript Jew, rushed about Europe obeying orders and presumably giving them, but what he actually did has remained a mystery.

Giuseppe Mazzini had been initiated Carbonaro in 1827.[6] Some time after, Carbonarism combined, or rather coalesced, with the Society known as Young Italy led by Mazzini whose aims were identical with those of the Carbonari.

Young Italy, Young Poland, Young England, Young Switzerland, Young Ireland — all together Young Europe — all international movements of the same character working towards the same end, viz. the supremacy of the Masters.

The Guelphic Knights, whose object was the independence of Italy, to be effected by means of all the secret societies of the country under their leadership, found able helpers in the Carbonari.

" The Chiefs of the Carbonari were also chiefs among the Guelphs ; but only those that had distinct offices among the Carbonari could be admitted among the Guelphs. There can be no doubt that the Carbonari when the sect had become very numerous, partly sheltered themselves under the designation of Guelphs and Adelphi or Independents, by affiliating themselves to these societies. " [7]

At one time the support of the Carbonari was offered by Maghella to Murat with the advice to declare against Napoleon and to proclaim the independence of Italy but Murat's subsequent proscription of the sect induced it to seek the support of England. The Bourbons and Lord William Bentinck favoured it while Murat ordered its extermination. Some of its leaders indeed perished but shortly afterwards the society was reorganized and a schismatic sect calling itself Calderari (Braziers) came into being. [8]

CHAPTER LXVI

THE MANCHESTER UNITY OF ODDFELLOWS ENGLAND

We find the following in the article on Oddfellows, in Hastings' Encyclopaedia of Religions and Ethics.

" R. W. Moffrey (Century p. 18) fixes the year 1810 as that in which the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows started, though it was not till 1814 that the minutes of its Grand Committees began to be printed... however Spry (Hist. of Oddfellowship p. 16) gives minutes of a meeting of a ' lodge ' No. 9, of the Order of Oddfellows, dated 12th March 1748, from which it would seem that eight previous lodges had been established before that date. "

For the connection of this order with Freemasonry see Chapter XXVIII.

We also note the following : —

" The position of Friendly Societies generally before the introduction of National Insurance is shown in the report of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies for the year ending 31st December 1906 (Parliamentary Papers of Session 1907, n° 49, xi pp. 16-18). "

According to this report, we find that the order had 1,035,785 members and the income of the benefit funds was £1,703,674.

The Oddfellows resisted any proposal of State control or State interference with the working of Friendly Societies.

The English Order has four degrees.

CHAPTER LXVII

THE HETAIRIA OF GREECE

(ETHERISTS)

Hetairia was the Greek name for societies, organizations or associations. In ancient Greece the name hetairia applied to companies in the army. In more modern times, it was used for societies of learning, or commercial purposes and also for political secret societies.

It is in connection with the latter that we are concerned. While Greece was under Turkish dominion, the national aspirations of its people could be vented in secret only. The breath of revolution which swept Europe during the latter part of the 18th century stirred some of the Greek patriots whose aims was the overthrow of the Turkish power. The main leader at that time was Constantin Rhygas (1754-1798).

He formed the first secret societies of Hetairias which were mainly composed of Klephtes or bandits. Bound by oath, each member of the society was to use all means, assassination included, to free Greece. The execution of Rhygas drove the hetairias to seek cover but in 1814, a chief lodge was re-formed in Odessa under the name of Hetairia phileke. Its avowed aim was the liberation of Greece, and its main seat was in Russia. Every candidate took an oath, as in all secret societies, and knew no one beyond his initiator and sponsor. Funds, collected and administered by a superior council directing all the lodges, were kept in Russia.

When a sufficient number of Hetairias were organized and a chief needed to direct the movement against Turkey, Count Capo d'Istria, (John, 1776-1831) a Greek, minister in Russia under the Tzar Alexander I, and author of the text of the Holy Alliance was asked to take the lead but refused, and Alexander Ypsilanti was nominated. The insurrection broke out in 1821.

Among the most prominent members of the Hetairia we find Alexander Mavrocordato (1791-1865) who was under the influence of England and was also the friend of Byron whom he had met in Missolonghi in 1822. From him he received funds for the purchase of arms to the extent of one hundred thousand francs. It is related that Lord Byron died in his arms at Missolonghi in 1824. Among the supporters of the London Branch of the Philhellenic Committee were Jeremy Bentham, Sir Francis Burdett, Lord Erskine, Lord Ebrington, Sir John Cam Hobhouse, (afterwards Lord Brougham) Joseph Hume, Sir James Mackintosh and Lord John Russell. These foreign committees provided arms, money and volunteers.

The following details concerning the organization of the Hetairia of Greece are set forth in The Secret Societies of the European Revolution, by Thomas Frost (Vol. II, page 47 et seq.).

" Less simple than that of the Carbonari, the system rather resembled that of the Illuminati in the number of grades and relation of the branch societies to each other. "

There were five grades namely : —

The Adelphoi (Brothers, who took an oath of secrecy but ignored the aims of the society),

The Systemenoi (Bachelors, who knew that Greece was to be freed by revolution),

The Priests of Eleusis,

The Prelates (knowing all the secrets),

The Grand Arch (The supreme directing control of 12 members).

" Early in 1827 a motion was unanimously adopted by the Senate favouring the placing of Greece under the protection of Great Britain. " This followed a secret interview of Mavrocordato with Sir Stratford Canning, but Mavrocordato retired from public life " on the failure of his project for the establishment of a constitutional kingdom under British protection."

" Hostilities in Greece were finally terminated, in the summer of 1828, by a convention concluded at Alexandria between Admiral Codrington and Mehemet Ali, by which the latter agreed to withdraw the Egyptian troops from the Morea. "

The arbitrary government of Capo d'Istria ended on October 24, 1831, when he was assassinated.

THE HUNG SOCIETY OF CHINA

(Founded about 1815)

This society has also been known as The Triad Society, The Ghee Hon, The Society of Heaven and Earth (T'in Tei Hui), Ts'ing-lin-Kiu, The San-ho-hoei and the Sam-ho-hui.

After the Emperor Kang Hsi issued a Sacred Edict in 1662, ordering the suppression of Buddhism and Taoism in China, the Hung and the White Lotus, the latter a Taoist mystical society also known by the name " White Lily ", are said to have united to fight the Manchu Dynasty as their common enemy.

They are supposed to have finally merged towards 1815 as a secret political occult organization.

In 1851 the Hung broke into open revolt against the Manchus. This is known as the Taiping Revolt and is often alluded to as " The Triad War ". It was led by a village schoolmaster called Hung who, after his defeat by Gordon in 1864, committed suicide.

Since the Taiping revolt the Society has been less conspicuous but it is supposed nevertheless to have inspired the successful revolution which in 1911 overthrew the Manchu Dynasty and established the Republic of which Dr. Sun Yat-Sen assumed the presidency on January 1, 1912.

Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, nominally a Christian, was a member of the Hung Society, and his first official action as the first President of the Chinese Republic was to enable Yuan Shi-Kai to unite all parties under his presidency. He then accepted for himself the Presidency of Nanking. The people received his proclamation announcing these changes in front of the Ming tombs, and listened while he told the spirits of the Mings that the Manchu despotism, having faller, China was now a Republic.

The Hung [1] having been outlawed since 1890 in China as a terrorist organization, now, as a secret society, holds its meetings in the woods at night with the approaches well guarded.

The English branch of this society is at Liverpool where it operates as a mutual benefit and charitable institution.

I, A history of the Hung is given in The Hung Society by J. S. Ward and W. G. Sterling.

As the rights of citation from this book are withheld from the public we are unable to give quotations from it here, but we recommend the first twenty-two pages as of interest to historical students.

CHAPTER LXIX

RITE OF MEMPHIS

This rite was founded in 1815 by Sam Honis (from Cairo), Gabriel Mathieu, Baron Dumas, Marquis de Laroque and Hippolite Labrunie.

The Grand Lodge Osiris in Paris was founded in 1839. Jacques Etienne Marconis was Grand Master.

In his History of Freemasonry, Freke-Gould states that " J. E. Marconis, Grand Hierophant, inaugurated the Rite in person at New York in 1857, and afterwards in 1862 chartered it as a Sovereign Sanctuary — by which body a charter was granted on Jan. 3rd, 1872, for another Sovereign Sanctuary in and for the British Islands whose officers were duly installed Oct. 8th in the same year. "

The order is now known in England as " The Ancient and Primitive Rite. "

On December 30, 1862, the rite of Memphis merged finally into the Grand Orient of France and in England, in 1875 under the name of Ancient and Primitive Rite, it amalgamated with that oi Mizraim which Gould informs us had no separate governing body in chat country.

In 1865, the Grand Orient reduced the original 97 degrees to 33.

A. E. Waite in Devil Worship in France outlines the later history of the rite in the following sentence :

" Garibaldi succeeded Jacques Etienne Marconis of Paris, becoming president of a confederation of the Rites which was brought about by Mr. John Yarker in the year 1881.[1]

THE CALDERARI

(Founded 1816)

The Calderari del Contrapeso, an offshoot of the Carbonari, came into prominence about 1816.

Their first organizer, The Prince of Canosa, became Minister of Police under Ferdinand, King of Naples, in December, 1819.

The Calderari were the sworn enemies of the Freemasons and Carbonari.

They took the following oath : —

" I, N. N., promise and swear upon the Trinity, as supreme director of the universe, upon this cross, and upon this steel, the avenging instrument of the perjured— to live and die in the Roman Catholic and Apostolic faith, and to defend with my blood this religion, and the society of True Friendship, the Calderari, to which I am about to belong. I swear never to offend, in honour, life, or property, the children of True Friendship ; I promise and swear to all the Knights, true friends, all possible succour that shall depend on me. I swear to initiate no person into the Society before I arrive at the 4th rank. I swear eternal hatred to all Masonry, and to its atrocious protectors ; as well as to all Jansenists, Materialists, Economists, and Illuminati. I swear, as I value my life, never to admit any of them into the Society of Friendship. Lastly, I swear, that if, through wickedness or levity, I suffer myself to commit perjury, I submit to the loss of life as the punishment of my error, and then to be burnt: and may my ashes, scattered to the wind, serve as an example to the children of Friendship throughout the whole world. And so help me God, for the happiness of my soul, and the repose of my conscience. "

CHAPTER LXXI

FRENCH CARBONARISM

The Masonic Lodge Les Amis de la Verite was founded in 1820 by Buchez, Flotard, Bazard and Joubert, all Freemasons, for political purposes. On a riot incited by members of this lodge a young man was killed. As a consequence of his death this lodge went out of existence.

One of its former members, Dugied, a Freemason, was initiated into the mysteries of Carbonarism while at Naples. [1] Having conceived the project of introducing this association into France he discussed the matter with another ex-member of the Ami's de la Verite, Flotard, and together they decided to put the idea into practice by taking as a nucleus of the new organization the remains of Les Amis de la Verite.

The society was organized as follows :—

The one " Haute Vente ", central " Ventes " and individual " Ventes " (lodges).

The "Haute Vente" was the committee of direction and action. Two members of the committee having found an adept, the adept would agree with them to form a " Vente ". The adept would become President one of the others censor, the other deputy, the role of the last being to keep in touch with the committee while allowing the president to believe that this committee was only a superior degree of the association; The censor's business was to inspect the work of the " Ventes ". These three chiefs were then required to annex 17 recruits, thus bringing the number of a lodge up to twenty. Thus constituted, this group was called a central " Vente ". Two of its m?mbers made below what had been made above them, forming an individual " Vente " of the first order, which, repeating the same process formed an ordinary individual " Vente " thus extending indefinitely the ramifications of the sect.

[1] Thomas Frost, The Secret Societies of the European Revolution, vol. II, p. 6.

A similar organization, but under different names, was adapted to the army. There the Haute Vente was called the Legion, the central Ventes, the Cohortes, the individual Ventes of the first order the Centuries ; and the ordinary individual Ventes the Manipules.

This double system was intended to puzzle the police, by making it believe that there was a separate association in the army. A further measure of precaution forbade a Carbonaro, under penalty of death, being affiliated to another Vente. This precaution was intended to prevent anyone entering different groups and thus possibly discovering and denouncing the secrets of the society.

The direction of the Ventes was indeed centralized but this unity of control was to be ignored by most of the members.

The Carbonari had no settled principles. It accepted all opinions provided these favoured the elimination of royal families. The imperialists and liberals formed important nuclei. The latter, the sons of middle-class parents, stirred against the government by patriotism, youth and class jealousy, dreamed only of grabbing the influence of the old families. As for what is called the people, it did not count in Carbonarism ; the illustrious role attributed to it later had not yet been invented !

To begin with, the Haute Yente counted only seven members : Dugied, Flotard, Bazard, Buchez, Joubert, Carriol, Limperani. Among them we find again the four heads of the Amis de la Vérité.

The Carbonari having prospered, the Haute Vente found it advisable to annex some notable characters. Among others, the Freemason General Lafayette, who, even in old age, had a childish weakness for popularity, accepted the offer to join the conspiracy.

Towards the end of 1820 the society had many branches, notably those of Bordeaux, Nantes, Toulouse, La Bochelle, Poitiers, Colmar, Belfort, etc.

The subversive efforts of this society culminated in an abortive attempt at Bevolution at La Bochelle, and the subsequent arrest of many of its principal members completed its nominal dissolution.

After the debacle at La Rochelle the Amis de la Verite merged into the Amis du Peuple which in turn, in 1832, became the Droits de l'Homme. After its unsuccessful attempt to assassinate the king, (Louis Philippe) in 1835 the remains of the Droits de l'Homme reorganized as the Societe des Families with Blanqui and Barbes as leaders. According to Lucien de la Hodde,[2] Carbonarism in France had ceased to exist by 1822, except for a few obstinates like Charles Teste, (a friend of Babeuf) and Buonarotti who remained faithful to the old organization. Lucien de la Hodde however, while following Carbonarism, lost sight of the Haute Vente which, working through Mazzini and the International Committee of London, directed its work of destruction in France through Ledru Rollin and Felix Pyat. After its collapse in 1836 the Société des Families became that of the Saisons (seasons) and it was a branch of this society, the Société dissidents, that served the purpose of the Haute Vente in 1848 by aiding in the terrorisation of Paris and the fall of the Monarchy.

The self-appointed members of the provisional government of France after the abdication of the king were : — Dupont (de l'Eure) Member of the original Carbonari founded in 1820, Arago, Lamartine, Ledru Rollin, Garnier-Pagès, Marie, Cremieux.

Lucien de la Hodde was the agent of the French Secret Police, and for 8 years before the revolution of 1848 occupied an exalted position in the ranks of the Revolutionaries.

His conclusions are strangely at variance with the facts which he relates. On page 381, he tells how an indiscretion on the part of Caussidière, one of his associates, placed the blame of a conspiracy upon Ledru Rollin and, because Ledru Rollin calmly denied knowledge of the affair, de la Hodde accepts his statement without question.

Though a bona-fide student of the subject, it is quite evident that de la Hodde had failed to grasp the principle upon which Revolutionary organizations operate, viz : that of a body of dupes whose particular job is genuinely to believe that their organization is the executive one. Into this one all persons of doubtful revolutionary integrity are steered, and, in this branch of the machine, conscientiously attend to their business, while the real agents do their savage work.

MODERN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR

POLAND

Heckethorn[1] tells us of a sect which arose in Poland in 1818 which he refers to as that of " National Freemasonry ", which borrowed the rites, degrees, and language of Freemasonry, but aimed at national independence. The society was open to persons of all classes, but sought chiefly to enlist soldiers and officials, so as to turn their technical knowledge to account in the day of the struggle. But though numerous, the society lasted only a few years : for disunion arose among the members, and it escaped total dissolution only by transformation. It altered its rites and ceremonies, and henceforth called itself the " Scythers ", in remembrance of the revolution of 1794, in which whole regiments, armed with scythes, had gone into battle.

They met in 1821 at Warsaw, and drew up a new revolutionary scheme, adopting at the same time the new denomination of " Patriotic Society". In the meanwhile, the students of the university of Wilna had formed themselves into a secret society which, however, was discovered by the Russian government and dissolved. In 1822, the Patriotic Society combined with the masonic rite of "Modern Templars", founded in Poland by Captain Maiewski; to the three rites of symbolical masonry was added a fourth, in which the initiated swore to do all in his power towards the liberation of his country. These combined societies brought about the insurrection of 1830. In 1834 was established the society of " Young Poland " by Simon Konarski.

[1] Heckethorn. Secret Societies of All Ages and Countries, vol. II, p. 175.

Simon Konarski (1808-1839) was a young Polish patriot and poet, one of the most active members of the Young Poland movement founded by Joseph Mazzini in 1834. He travelled to France, England and Belgium and, in the latter country, namely in Brussels, was in constant touch with Lelewel who had been chosen by Mazzini to become the link between himself and the Polish revolutionists. In Paris, the Young Poland movement was directed by Zwierkowsky.

Simon Konarski was seized by the Russian authorities and executed in 1839 at Wilna.

THE ST. PATRICK BOYS

(Founded 1825)

As regards this organization, Pollard writes " In 1825 the name of the Ribbon men was changed officially to the St. Patrick's Fraternal Organization, otherwise known as ihe St. Patrick's Boys. This change was essential as, like their predecessors the White Boys, [1] the eminently Catholic Association of Ribbon men had now been excommunicated by the Catholic Church. CHAPTER LXXIV

BRAHMO SOMAJ

The Brahmo Somaj movement, also called Brahmoism or Brahmaism, was founded by Rajah Ram Mohun Roy (1774-1833), in 1830.

Its main object was to fight idolatrous rites and practices, and, by many, it has been described as a " Hindu Unitarian Church. "

The chief achievement of Ram Mohun Roy was the abolition by Lord William Bentinck of the practice of " suttee " (sacrifice of the widow on the funeral pyre of her husband).

Ram Mohun Roy's principles were Theistic. He had also for several years studied Lamaism in the Himalayas. Having come to England in 1830, he was received with much honour by many sections of society and entertained by Louis Philippe. He was considered a great authority by all those who at that time were conducting spiritualist and psychic researches. He died at Bristol.

A great impulse was given to the Brahmo Somaj by Debendra Nath Tagore (also written Devendranath Takur) who had joined it in 1842 and is considered as its second founder.

Owing to his efforts, the institution became purely Theistic, giving up the authority of the Yedas and eliminating the Vedantic element from the Brahmic covenant. In 1856, Debendra Nath Tagore had also gone to the Himalayas where he spent three years as a disciple of the Tibetan Lamas. Later, he was joined in his work by his friend Keshub Chunder Sen who, however, in 1863, devoured by the ambition of becoming sole leader, attacked the Somaj, heading what one might call the revolt of the " Young Brahmaists " and with his followers seceded from the Mother organization.

The schism gave rise to the formation of another Somaj which was directed by Keshub Chunder Sen under the name Somaj of India, whereas the former organization, remaining under the leadership of Debendra Nath Tagore, was called Adi Samaj or Original Church. It was also named " Conservative ", in opposition to the new institution termed " Progressive ".

Keshub Chunder Sen retained power in his organization ; the foundation stone of the Somaj of India Church was laid at Jhamapukur in Calcutta, in 1868. In 1870 he journeyed to England where he was enthusiastically received by the spiritualist centres of the day, and succeeded in exciting much interest in the political, social and religious affairs of India. In 1878, his disregard for the rules of the Somaj regarding Hindu marriages which he infringed in the matter of the wedding of his own daughter to the young Maharajah of Kuch Behar, caused another split in the ranks of the Somaj of India. The dissidents then formed the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj.

The career of Keshub Chunder Sen must be followed with interest by students of Theosophy. Therein will they find many of the odd principles and injunctions laid down by H. P. Blavatsky and Annie Besant. For instance, the theocratic system was that promoted by Keshub Chunder Sen in his efforts to found a universal religion which would unite all creeds and symbols ; the Christian Cross, the Crescent, the Vedic Om, the Saiva's trident and the Vaishnava's Khunti. By means of imaginary pilgrimages, he led his adherents successively to the shrines of Moses, Buddha, to the Himalayan heights and Lama teachers, to Jesus and to Mahomet.

Similarly to Annie Besant's Khrishnamurti, he allowed himself to be worshipped as the Saviour of Sinners ; his theory was the reincarnation of Great Men of which he was one. Further, he complacently allowed his followers to raise him to the dignity of a deity. As the Kheshub Chunder Sen's worship increased, there grew also the dogma of Divine Injunction. A salient feature of Keshub's teaching was the belief or blind faith in the revelations claimed to have been made to invisible teachers and spiritual guides and exaction of blind obedience to their commands. We are forcibly reminded of the claim made by H. P. Blavatsky to her followers to sign their blind acceptance of all orders presumably received from invisible masters like her Koot Hoomi.

Another feature which, later, distinguished Keshub Chunder Sen's devotees was the " Bhakti " side of their religion. Unlike " Yoga ", the old Hindu type of religious meditation or contemplation, " Bhakti ", which has been chiefly developed by the followers of Chaytania in India, is a manifestation of religious frenzy. It spurns the aspiration to approach God by concentration of thought and desire as well as silent communion, which they deem unprofitable and vain. The philosophy of " Bhakti " is that the love of God must be strong to the point of being maddening. It therefore induces dancing, sobbing, swooning. The more frenzied the manifestations, the greater the religious perfection. A great Bhakta is one who, like the founder of the school, shows the greatest religious madness.

Women devotees of Keshub Chunder Sen's following were formed into a sisterhood in 1881 and one hears of " ladies' journies to the Spirit land ". The readers of " Inquire Within " [1] will remember the description of " journeys in the Astral " claimed to have been accomplished by women adepts of the Stella Matutina Order. Soon after, also in 1881, young men were likewise formed into a brotherhood and were initiated into different holy orders. In both cases, the number of initiates was 11. The ceremony of initiation was called New Horn, Sacred Fire or Blazing Agni. Most of the rites are found in the different branches of Theosophy and Anthroposophy, all centred around this sacred fire also named Kundalini.

In 1880, Keshub Chunder Sen had given his organization another name, that of " The New Dispensation ".

It is in the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia that one must seek the amalgamation of Jewish Cabala magic and Hindu magic. The latter swept over Europe with the spread of Theosophy and flourished particularly in England. There it had found a ground in 1830 with the teachings given by Ram Mohun Roy to the spiritualists of that day with whom he had formed a Brahmo Somaj circle.

CHAPTER LXXV

THE MORMONS

(Founded 1830)

Soon after the establishment of Mormonism its founder, Joseph Smith, conceived the idea of establishing a Masonic super rite.

In M. R. Werner's book Brigham Young (page 62) the following remark makes this evident.

" Masonry was always popular with the Mormons until Joseph Smith claimed that an angel of the Lord had brought him the lost key-words of several degrees, enabling him to progress further than the highest Masons. The charter of the Mormon lodge was then taken away by the Grand Lodge ".

Joseph Smith, applying his powers of mediumship towards the realization of the ambitious project nurtured by General Pepe, Mazzini and others for the establishment of a super rite, was not necessarily acceptable to the Masonic leaders of his time.

Thus as a Mason he failed but as the founder of a Masonic sect he succeeded.

So much has already been written about the sect of the Mormons that we confine ourselves here to a short sketch of opinion and descriptions given by various authors. The following is extracted from The Encyclopaedia Britannica, 9th Edition.

" This is a religious non-Christian sect, founded by Joseph Smith at Manchester, New York, in 1830, now settled in Salt Lake City, Territory of Utah, United States... Smith was born Dec. 23rd, 1805, at Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, from which place ten years later his parents, a poor, ignorant, thriftless, and not too honest couple, removed to New York, where they settled on a small farm near Palmyra, Wayne County (then Ontario). Four years later, in 1809, they removed to Manchester, some six miles off; and it was at the latter place when fifteen years old that Joseph began to have his alleged visions, in one of which on the night of 21st Sept., 1823, the angel Moroni appeared to him three times, and told him that the Bible of the Western Continent, the supplement to the New Testament, was buried in a certain spot near Manchester. Thither, four years later and after due disciplinary probation, Smith went, and had delivered into his charge by an angel of the Lord a stone box, in which was a volume, 6 inches thick, made of thin gold plates 8 inches by 7, and fastened together by three gold rings. The plates were covered with small writing in the ' reformed Egyptian ' tongue, and were accompanied by a pair of supernatural spectacles, consisting of two crystals set in a silver bow, and called ' Urim and Thummim '; by aid of these, the mystic characters could be read. Being himself unable to read or write fluently, Smith employed as amanuensis one Oliver Cowdery, to whom from behind a curtain, he dictated a translation, which, with the aid of a farmer, Martin Harris,[1] who had more money than wit, was printed and published in 1830 under the title of The Book of Mormon and accompanied by the sworn statement of Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, that an angel of God had shown them the plates of which the bock was a translation. This testimony all three, on renouncing Mormonism some years later, denounced as false ; but meanwhile it helped Smith to impose on the credulous, particularly in the absence of the gold plates themselves which suddenly and mysteriously disappeared. "

Blanchard draws a parallel between this story of the gold plates and that of the legend of the 14th degree of Scottish Rites Masonry, that of Grand Elect Perfect and Sublime Mason, according to which " the real name oi God was lost, till it was found by Masons, engraved on a three-cornered gold plate, in " the ruins of Enoch. "[2]

In reality, this book " was written in 1812 as an historical romance by one Solomon Spalding, a crack-brained preacher; and the MS. falling into the hands of an unscrupulous compositor, Sidney Rigdon, was copied by him, and subsequently given to Joseph Smith. Armed with this book and with self-assumed divine authority, the latter soon began to attract followers. " [3]

Joseph Smith was a Mason.

The Gold Plate trick, having worked so successfully once, was tried again in 1843 when six plates were found by Robert Wiley, a merchant of Kinderhook, Illinois. " The true story of the plates was disclosed " so Stuart Martin writes in The Mystery of Mormonism (page 69), in an affidavit made by W. Fulgate, of Mount Station, Brown County, Ill. on June 30th, 1879, when he swore before J. Brown, Justice of the Peace, that the " plates were humbug, gotten up by Robert Wiley,

3. Enc. Brit., Art. Mormons.

Bridge Whitton, and myself. Whitton, who was a blacksmith, cut the plates out of pieces of copper. Wiley and I made the hieroglyphics by making impressions of beeswax and filling them with acid. " He describes the burial and the finding of the plates, and states that among the spectators at the " discovery " were two Mormon Elders, Marsh and Sharp.

Smith and his followers founded the city of Nauvoo and " such were the powers granted them by this charter as to render the city practically independent of the State Government, and to give Smith all but unlimited civil power. He organized a military body called the Nauvoo legion, of which he constituted himself commander with the title of lieutenant-general, while he was also president of the church and mayor of the city. On April 6th, 1841, the foundations of the new temple were laid, and the city continued to grow rapidly in prosperity and size. "

Smith's career of treason, profligacy, dishonesty, polygamy, spiritism and humbug, came to an abrupt end when the gaol in which he was imprisoned by order of the Governor of the State was broken into by a mob who shot him and his fellow prisoner, his brother Hyram.

As head of the Mormons he was succeeded by Brigham Young (1801-1877).

In 1846, the repeal by the legislature of the charter of Nauvoo resulted in the Mormons being driven from the city.

In March 1849, they held a convention at Salt Lake City, and a State was organized under the name of " Deseret ". " A legislature was elected and a constitution framed, which was sent on to Washington. This, Congress refused to recognize, and by way of compromise for declining to admit the proposed new State into the Union, President Fillmore in 1850 organized the country occupied by the Mormons into the Territory of Utah, with Brigham Young as governor. " Adopting Smith's policy of aggressive military action, Brigham Young, like his predecessor, defied the Federal Government. He died on August 29, 1877, leaving 17 wives and 56 children. [4]

The following description of a Mormon ceremony was printed in the Rosicrucian in an article entitled " Ancient and Modern Mysteries " by M. W. Frater Robert Wentworth Little (page 169).

" The converts are then required to purchase white linen garments, which are furnished by the ' high deacon '. They are then conducted to the temple, ushered into a private room, and commanded to undress for the inspection of the presiding elder '. This official, after a minute examination, clothes the neophytes in the linen robes or garments of endowment and conducts them into a large room which is divided by white screens into many small compartments. Each neophyte enters one of the compartments, and is ordered to take off the ' endowment robe ' and to step into a long coffin-shaped tin bath. The elder then pours water upon the naked victim — blessing each member of the body as the water touches it — ' the brain to be clear and strong — the eyes to be bright and sharp — the ears to be quick to hear ', and so on down to the feet — this ceremony being performed upon all, without distinction of sex. A new name is then given to each convert by the elder, who commands them to ' arise and follow me '. A magnificent garden, full of exquisite fruit-trees, is the scene of the next ceremony. The candidates are still in a state of nudity, which represents primeval innocence, and the Temptation of our First Parents is the subject of the next drama. The women are directed by an elder personating Satan to pluck an apple from a certain tree, and after they have tasted, to hand it to the men. Brigham Young then appears, and drives them out of the garden with a flaming sword. They return to the temple, implore forgiveness on their knees for all trespasses and transgressions and the ceremony concludes with a benediction upon the new Saints, pronounced by the lips of this polygamous president.

[4] Enc. Brit., 9th Ed. Art. Mormonism.

" Such is a brief outline of the ' Rite of Endowment' the details of the scene being, as may readily be conceived, of too obscene a character to be explained at greater length. "

Brigham Young was succeeded by John Taylor, an Englishman and a Freemason. His apostolic successors were Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, Joseph Fielding Smith (eldest son of the founder of the order) who died Nov. 19th, 1918, and Heber J. Grant.[5]

About Mormonism and Masonry, Blanchard makes the following remark : " The two institutions are morally and legally the same. "[6]

The Mormon dogma is universality, materialism and pantheism. It blends Judaism and Christianity, aiming at a progressive universal religion while seeking to unite in itself all faiths and the cults of every people on earth.

The Mormon state is a theocratic community at the head of which is a grand priest-president assisted by two others and a travelling council of twelve. Its mysteries are those of spiritism and the seance room.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

I. O. B. B.

(JEWISH MASONRY)

(Founded 1843)

B'nai B'rith means " Sons of the Covenant ", the Covenant being that of circumcision practised according to the Mosaic law. Hence the Independent Order of the B'nai B'rith admits only Jews as members.

This rite "was founded in New York in 1843 by a number of German Jews, headed by Henry Jones. " [1]

Its constitution, District Lodges, Grand Lodges, stamp it as a Jewish Masonic Society.

Like most societies, it covers its political activities under the cloak of " benevolence and philanthropy. "

From its inception until the present time, its main contact has been with Germany and its chief aim the establishment of the supremacy of the German Jews in all world affairs through the channel of " Internationalism".

In 1882, the strength of the I. 0. B. B. in the United States warranted the opening of Lodges in Germany by Moritz Ettinger, and the growth of the order was so rapid there that in 1885, Julius Bien, President of the Order in New York, went over and inaugurated the first German Grand Lodge of the I. O. B. B.

The political activities of the leaders of the order in Bumania, Austria and Hungary are a matter of record, although the chief centre of their power is in the United States where they have lately attained supremacy in the Jewish World by absorbing " national " Zionism and submitting it wholly to their own " international " policy when the Jewish World Agency was created in October, 1928.

It will be well for the reader to bear in mind that, however united a front the Jews may present to the Gentiles, yet among themselves they are divided, and the fight for supremacy and the attainment of world power is not less bitter between their various camps than it is among the different sects of Freemasonry.

Babbi Dr. Leo Bach was the president of the B'nai B'rith of Germany in 1928.

The Grand Master for Bussia of the International Order of the B'nai B'rith at the time of the Bussian revolution of 1917 was Sliozberg. He was one of the inspirers of Kerensky, the leader of the first revolution of 1917.[2] Alexander Kerensky, real name Aron Kirbiz, Kerensky having been the name of his stepfather, was a member of the Socialist revolutionary party and a 32nd degree Scottish Bites Mason.

There is but little doubt now that the B'nai B'rith seems to be the supreme body, shaping and directing, for the attainment of its own ends, the policies, whatever they may be, of all Freemasonry beginning with the Grand Lodge of England, The Grand Orient and Scottish Bites, and ending in the O. T. O., which is Illuminism under another name.

YOUNG IRELAND

Captain H. B. C. Pollard, in writing of the Young Ireland movement says " The leaders of the Young Ireland Party of 1848 were John Mitchell, an advanced Radical, deeply tinged with Jacobin ideas, and William Smith O'Brien, whose brother later became Lord Inchiquin. They obtained popular support by reason of the widespread misery caused by the Potato famine of ' Black Forty-seven. ' Gavan Duffy, Dillon, Doheny, O'Gorman and Stephens were all minor conspirators. Mitchell and O'Brien were transported to Van Diemens Land, but the younger men mostly made good their escape and lived in exile in Paris and America. " [1]

" The old traditional combination of an open movement within the law reinforced by a secret organization of criminal habits was revived in 1850, when the Tenant Defence Society was founded with the object of enforcing, by agitation, legislation which was to accomplish by legal means that expropriation of property that the combined genius of Whitefeet, Rockites, Tenvalts, Molly Maguires and all other Irish terrorist societies had failed to achieve by violence.[2]

" The Archbishop of Dublin at that time was Archbishop Cullen, who was familiar with the evils resulting from the effective use of Secret Societies. He had been in Rome when the successful Carbonarists under Mazzini and Garibaldi drove out the Pope ;[3] and the lesson had not been wasted. Cullen readily ascertained that the Tenants' Rights Party was merely a new disguise for the late ' Young Ireland ' movement, whose ideals were both Republican and, within limits, anti-clerical.

" There was no formal excommunication, but a quiet though firm ban was placed on the party. "[4]

The Young Ireland Movement was but a branch of the Young Europe Movement led by Mazzini, the main history of which will be found in Part I.

THE BAHAI MOVEMENT

" Inquire Within", in her book Light-bearers of Darkness, gives an excellent summary of the crigin and scope of this sect. From her work we quote the following :

" This movement was founded in 1844 by a Persian, Mirza Ali Muhammad, who took the title of ' Bab ' (the Gate); he revolted against the Hierarchy, who, fearing his growing influence, had him shot at Tabriz, 1850.

" It claims to be the fulfilment ' of that which was but partially revealed in previous dispensations ', and they look upon Buddha, Zoroaster, Jesus, Mohammed, and Confucius as merely preparing the world for the advent of the ' Most Great Peace ' and the ' Mighty World Educator ' Baha'u'llah (Glory of God), 1863-92, and later Abdul-Baha, 1892-1921. It further claims to be the unity of all religions, also older and modern movements, such as Theosophy, Freemasonry, Spiritualism, Socialism, etc. ; it aims at conferring illumination upon humanity, and like all illuminated groups, it works for universal peace, religion, education, language (Esperanto), and universal everything leading to unity of humanity; therefore all prejudices must be abandoned, traditional, racial, patriotic, religious and political ; all religions must be in accordance with science and reason. "

The Bahais have a temple in Chicago, the building of which was begun in 1903 which " Inquire Within " describes as being a perfect nonagon in form, all its dimensions being based on the number nine, " the cabalistic number of generation, which initiates and leads to unity with the universal astral light. " [1]

The same author further explains the organization of the sect most concisely in the following lines :

> " There is a Guardian of the Cause — Shogi-Effendi — with nine co-workers, and in each town there is a Spiritual Assembly of nine members, who must be consulted, absolutely obeyed, and submitted to. There are also National Spiritual Assemblies in all countries to which the cause has spread, and, finally, they are making elaborate plans to form an International Spiritual Assembly to be elected by all believers — to enact ordinances and regulations not found in the explicit Holy Text. "

We leave it to anyone interested to follow the subversive activities of this sect in either the political or religious realm.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODDFELLOWS

I. O. O. F.

(AMERICAN)

" In 1819, Thomas Wildey established in Baltimore the first lodge of Oddfellows in the United States, and from 1825 till 1833, he was Grand Sire of the Grand Lodge.

" In 1843 Grand Sire Howell Hopkins of Pennsylvania was installed, and the United States Grand Lodge issued a dispensation for opening the Prince of Wales Lodge No. 1 at Montreal, Canada.

" In 1844 The Grand Lodge (Oddfellows U. S. A.) appointed a Ritual Revision Committee and entirely changed all the working, rejecting the whole of the English work, and in point of fact creating an entirely new Order "[1] based on the plans of Thomas Wildey. (See part I of this book).

The woman's degree of " Rebeckah ", which was formulated by Schuyler Colfax in 1851, was adopted by the Grand Lodge in September of that year.[2]

CHAPTER LXXX

MODERN SPIRITISM

Modern Spiritism, sometimes called Spiritualism, traces its descent from the mystifications of Catherine and Margaret Fox, the daughters of John Fox, who, in 1848, during the course of experiments conducted in a haunted house at Hydesville, New York, U. S. A. elaborated a system of communication by raps, with invisible entities. Both sisters eventually confessed to having abused the credulity of the public in their spiritist seances but the universal interest aroused by the phenomena at Hydesville did not abate.

Since then, there has been a regular epidemic of table turning, ouija boards, planchettes, automatic writings and similar modes, more or less effective, for achieving mediumship.

The acquisition of this type of mediumship exposes the aspirant to the danger of an induced state of mental passivity during which the mind may register vibrations broadcast from some terrestrial centre such as that provided by the recently constituted " Polaire Society " and recognized by the H. B. of L. (See page 531).

The cultivation of spiritism under all its different aspects either for amusement or pseudo-scientific investigation leads to serious consequences when occult adepts rely upon such manifestations for spiritual and material guidance. One is appalled at the thought that even the destinies of nations may become subject to occult direction emanating from spiritistic seances. In connection herewith, the following clipping shows the opeiation of these methods on persons prominent in political life. As everyone knows, Mrs. Snowden, now Viscountess Snowden, is the wife of the then (1930) Chancellor oi the Exchequer, and a woman oi great personal influence.

MRS. SNOWDEN & THE SPIRITS

MESSAGE WHEN SHE GAME TO LONDON

SIR OLIVER LODGE IN DOWNING-STREET

Space " pulsating with life and mind " was a picture of the universe drawn by Sir Oliver Lodge in a lecture which he delivered last night at 11, Downing-street, Mr. Snowden's official residence as Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Sir Oliver was speaking on the reality of the spiritual world, his lecture being delivered in connection with the Industrial Law Bureau of the Young Women's Christian Association. It was held in two reception rooms on the first floor of No. 11. Sir Oliver stood in the doorway between, so that he could be heard in either room.

Mrs. Philip Snowden, who presided, recalled an experience of her own when in 1906 she and Mr. Snowden first came to London.

" We got tired of hotel life, " said Mrs. Snowden, " and obtained rooms in Lambeth Palace-road. The following morning a letter came to me at this address which nobody in the world could have known. I opened this letter and it looked like nonsense.

" Scrutinising it carefully, I divided the letters and they made sentences the substance of which was that, I must put myself into friendly relationship with someone who had passed over—into the ether—because that persons work would not be effective if I did not do it, and my work here would not be so good as it might be if I failed to do it. There was an accompanying note which said that this message was delivered to me at a spiritualist meeting, in Lancaster, and the writer sent the message on. "

The Daily Telegraph, October 29th 1930.

The physical force of " Kundalini " expended by people in these " communications with the unseen drain their vital energy to such an extent that, when such practices are indulged in for an appreciable length of time, their nervous systems may be seriously impaired. A " Ouija " medium, after a week's consecutive sittings will feel a sense of heaviness and oppression about the solar plexus at certain hours. This sensation is shortly followed by serious physical weakness, manifest in sports- and athletics. Presently, the medium — now a potential medical patient — will be unable to sleep at night.

Cracks, bangs, knocks, etc., will mark an approaching state of obsession. People whose psychic experiments have brought them to this degree of development, generally cut short further adventures in this field of science and theology. These have learned that there is indeed something beyond the obvious, and that after this stage of induced experimental mediumship has been achieved the way is open for such states of mind variously known to psychopathic doctors and priests as lunacy, possession, obsession, alternating personality and sadism.

Mediumship does not imply power. A medium is a receiver and, as such, furthers the will of another. The fakirs of India are mediums.

That these phenomena are real has been proved by such prominent scientists as Crooks, Richet and Flammarion and the mediumistic exploits of such persons as D. I). Home are so well known and attested that we will give but one short extract here from page 171 of The Rosicrucian, quoting a speech by Lord Lindsay, Senior Grand Warden of England, for the benefit of persons who may happen to have no acquaintance with the subject.

" I may mention that on another occasion I was sitting with Mr. Home and Lord Adare and a cousin of his. During the sitting Mr. Home went into a trance,.

and in that state was carried out of the window in the room next to where we were, and was brought in at our window. The distance between the windows was about seven feet six inches and there was not the slightest foothold between them, nor was there more than a twelve inch projection to each window, which served as a ledge to put flowers on."

What are we to think when we read in John Drinkwater's remarkable book on Charles James Fox that Sir Francis Dashwood was Chancellor of the Exchequer under G?orge III ?

Regarding the career of Sir Francis, we here read the following. The comment concerns John Wilkes whose "ambition to be admitted into the childish and blasphemous fraternity notorious as the Monks of Medmenham was frustrated by the claims of superior profligacy advanced by the fourth Lord Sandwich, with whom he competed for election. His resentment against that nobleman and Sir Francis Dashwood, the founder of the Society, was not appeased by the success of an exploit that diverted the town. Wilkes contrived to let a baboon loose upon one of the orgiastic rites at Medmenham that was being conducted in darkness, and had the satisfaction of throwing his victims into hysterics at the apparition of what their befuddled wits took to be the devil."[1]

What indeed can be deduced from such an historical fact as that Lord Sandwich, "notable even in that age as a corrupter of morals", was Secretary of State ?

The obvious conclusion we can draw is that men either corrupt or easily bought are men easily blackmailed just as those who, being victims of their own greed, are amenable to bribery.

Spiritism is the fundamental mystery of most secret societies and the drug traffic is its chief commercial secret.

A clipping from the London Daily Telegraph of Nov. 29, 1930, which we reproduce, will give the reader an excellent idea of the problem of Modern Spiritism.

SPIRITUALISTS AND THE LAW

TEXT OF A BILL TO GRANT RELIEF

IMMUNITY FROM PROSECUTION

SOME FAMOUS CASES RECALLED

The text was issued yesterday of the Spiritualism and Psychical Research (Exemption) Bill, a measure promoted by Mr. Kelly, M. P. for Rochdale, and ten other members of the Socialist party.

It is designed to relieve spiritualists and mediums from prosecution under the enactments relating to witchcraft and vagrancy whilst they are " genuinely exercising their psychic powers, whether in religious practice or scientific investigation. "

Although the bill appears to meditate only a change in the criminal law, it is obvious that if placed on the Statute Book it must to some extent affect the attitude towards spiritualism of judges who administer the common law and the principles of equity.

If, for example, spiritualism, séances, and mediums are to be recognised as no longer inimical to the public well-being, it difficult to see how the civil courts could hold, as they have done on several occasions, that a bequest to an institution for the training of mediums and the furtherance of spiritualism generally is void, as being against public policy. By his will Sir Arthur Conan Doyle left bequests to three spiritualistic institutions.

On this aspect of the matter it is interesting to recall how, heretofore, the cult of spiritualism has been received in the High Court. It has figured, though not as a vital issue, in actions for libel and slander. The typical cases of Archdeacon T. Colley v. J. N. Maskelyne, in 1907, and Radcliffe Hall v. Lane Fox-Pitt, in 1920, will be remembered.

MEDIUMS' COPYRIGHT

It has also been a more intimate issue in a copyright case, Cummins v. Bond, which came before Mr. Justice Eve three or four years ago. The question for solution in that case was whether the copyright in a communication said to have been made at a seance by the spirit of a Glastonbury monk was vested in the woman medium who received it, or in the enthusiastic sitter to whom she dictated it and who wished to publish it.

The sitter claimed that he owned the copyright, as the author was a spirit and had only used the medium as an instrument of transmission. On the other hand, the medium claimed the copyright on the ground that she was not a mere amanuensis, but was in communion with the spirit of the deceased monk, and was therefore joint author of the message.

With customary directness the judge disregarded the pretension of both parties that the communication had an ultra-terrestrial origin. He dealt with it as coming from a terrestrial author, and held the medium to be the author and therefore the holder of the copyright.

Long memories may also revive the ase of Lyon and Home, one of the most otable cases ever brought into a Chancery Court.

A wealthy widow made a gift of :30,000 to Daniel Douglas Home, the lost celebrated of the mediums of his time (the 'Sixties), and gave him also a reversionary interest in another sum of similar amount. She did this believing that she was fulfilling the wish of er husband, whose spirit Home had invoked. Subsequently she rued her enerosity, and brought an action to ave the gifts set aside.

Vice-Chancellor Giffard heard the case, and for nine days the court listened to talk about table rapping, knotted handerchiefs, and other phenomena. In setting aside the gifts Giffard characterised the manifestations which had influenced the lady as :

> " Mischievous nonsense, well calculated on the one hand to delude the vain, the weak, the foolish, and the superstitious, and on the other hand to assist the projects of the needy and the adventurer. "

LORD DARLING'S DICTA

There is no need to strain the memory severely for an instance of judicial iticism of the claims of spiritualists ade by Mr. Justice Darling.

A theatrical agent sued theatrical oducers for damages for alleged failure to carry out an agreement to ace the Criterion Theatre at his disposal for a public séance. Merely mentioning that the plaintiff won his case, and was awarded £200 damages, the comments of the judge may be quoted full, because reference was made the statute which it is now sought to fiend :

" It is an open question whether the manifestations given by mediums are genuine or mere tricks by which people are able to represent that there is comunication with the next world. I should myself come to the conclusion that there is no certain desire to deceive or impose, but that it is desired that people should be puzzled as to whether there is a genuine manifestation of spirits or whether it is trickery.

" There are those who believe that the spirits can communicate in this world with those they have known, through some medium. Their time is so unoccupied in the next world, and it is such a dreary place, that thev are perfectly ready to come to the" Criterion and attend matinees, and not to look on from the stage, but be on the stage

"Before even they get on the stage they are counting the pennies in Mr. —'s overcoat or the buttons on it, and reading a jumble of German and English nonsense.

" On the other hand, there are those who are capable of supposing that this really is a kind of existence imposed for eternity upon those who have ceased to exist in life. If that is so, ' well may we weep for friends who die '.

" All they (the plaintiffs) desired to do was to give an exhibition which would leave some people in doubt as to whether it was real divination by means of the dead or some trickery. No magistrate ought to convict them on this account under the statute of George IV. "

LICENSED CLAIRVOYANTS

In the bill now before Parliament it is proposed that spiritualists shall be given immunity from prosecution, provided that there is no intention to defraud. The following are specifically mentioned as coming within the scope of the bill :

Promoter, chairman, or other official,
Lecturer or speaker,
Clairvoyant,
Medium.

For the purposes of the bill, " medium " and " clairvoyant " are defined as meaning a person " holding a certificate or licence of fitness to practise either as a medium or clairvoyant, or in both capacities, such certificate or licence to be issued by registered or properly constituted spiritualistic or psychical societies, or a joint committee representing such societies, or such other certifying or licensing body as may be approved by one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State. "

The Societies of Psychical Research, both in England and America, exist today as scientific centres for information and investigation of spirit phenomena. Persons interested in these " mysteries " would do well to avail themselves of their protection and the facilities they afford for serious work. The English Society was founded in 1882 by Henry Sidgwick, Edmund Gurney, Frederick Meyers, W. T. Barrett and others.

CHAPTER LXXXII

THE IRISH REPUBLICAN BROTHERHOOD

(I. R. B.)

THE FENIANS.

Concerning this famous Secret Society, Captain Pollard writes :

" From its earliest days to the present time the I. R. B. has existed as a militant revolutionary secret society, with the avowed object of separating Ireland from all connection with the British Empire and establishing an independent Republican Government.[1]

" The founders of this movement were Colonel John O'Mahoney and a barrister, Michael Doheney, both of whom had fled from Ireland for their share in the rising of 1848. Both these men took refuge in France, at that time a hot-bed of secret Carbonarist societies, such as the Communistes Revolulionnaires, the Constitutional Society with its ' Acting Company ', the Seasons and many others, and it was in Paris that these two fugitives lived with James Stephens, the real head and organizer of the Fenian movement, who was also a refugee. "

" In 1857 a messenger was sent from New York to James Stephens, then in Dublin, asking him to get up an organization in Ireland on resources provided from the States (U. S. A.) ; and it is clear that Stephens had already cut-and-dried plans in his mind as to how this was to be done. He stated his terms, which were agreed to, and on St. Patrick's Day 1858, the I. R. B. movement was initiated by Stephens and Luby in Dublin. "

[1] Pollard, The Secret Societies of Ireland, p. 47.

In 1859 the I. R. B. exacted the following oath ; " I, A. B., in the presence of Almighty God, do solemnly swear allegiance to the Irish Republic now virtually established ; and that I will do my utmost, at every risk, while life lasts, to defend its independence and integrity ; and finally that I will yield implicit obedience in all things, not contrary to the laws of God, to the commands of my superior officers. So help me God. Amen. "

" The organization made rapid headway, but the weight of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy was surging against the movement, and in due course the Brotherhood was excommunicated ; in 1861 no Fenian could get absolution. "

In reference to the founding of the Fenian society in America, Heckethorn fifty years ago had written the following :

" In Nov. 1863, the Fenian organization assumed a new character. A grand national convention of delegates met at Chicago and avowed the object of the Brotherhood, namely, the separation of Ireland from England, and the establishment of an Irish republic, the same changes being first to be effected in Canada. Another grand convention was held in 1864 at Cincinnati, the delegates at which represented some 250,000 members, each of which members was called upon for a contribution of five dollars, and this call, it is said, was promptly responded to.... About the same time a Fenian Sisterhood was established, and the ladies were not inactive ; for in two months from their associating they returned upwards of £200,000 sterling to the Fenian Exchequer for the purpose of purchasing arms and other war material. "[2]

To raise money the Fenians issued bonds redeemable 90 days after the establishment of the future Irish Republic.

Availing ourselves of the remarkable documentation furnished by Captain Pollard we gather the following facts :

" The American Fenian Brotherhood was a separate organization, distinct from the Irish Fenian Brotherhood or I. R. B. having its own leaders ; but both organizations were on the same lines and had their officers, both civil and military oaths, emblems, and passwords, funds and stores of arms. "[3]

All was well till Sept. 14, 1865 when "the Dublin authorities, who were thoroughly well informed, raided the offices of The Irish People and arrested the staff.

James Stephens was arrested with the rest but " escaped through the nominal complicity of a warder, John Breslin, who was also a member of the I. R. B. "

" Stephens had received some twenty-five thousand pounds, little of which was spent in Ireland, and in later years it was a matter of common knowledge that Stephens, besides being Head Centre, had also an agreement with the British Government, which threw a peculiar light on his immunity from arrest and his later escape from prison and leisurely retreat to France. "[4]

On March 5, 1867, " Colonel " Kelly, heading a dissident group of Fenians, established a Directory separate from the original I. R. B. in London.

" Kelly, it should be noted, was the inventor of the Committee of Safety, later known as the Assassination Committee, whose function was to shoot people suspected of ' treason ' to the Brotherhood. "

" In 1869 new influences in America and Paris succeeded in reforming the I. R. B. Directorate in London, and the organization became not only a mainspring of revolutionary endeavour in Ireland, but a definite element in the complex machinery of world-revolution. "

In March 1865, the Fenians joined the amalgamation of subversive Secret Societies under Karl Marx, known as the International Association of Working Men, founded in London on September 28th.

" It is, at all events, clear that Marx and the leaders of the I. R. B. were in close touch, and that Marx knew, even if the mass of Irish dupes did not, that the Irish revolutionary dream of the I. R. B. and Fenian leaders was no merely nationalist rebellion, but was to be a social revolution.[5]

" The function of the Fenian ' General ' Cluseret and his relation to the International are not precisely clear, but he appears to have acted as a chief of the military rather than the civil side of the secret Lodges. During his stay in England on his Fenian mission he paid particular attention to the problem of how London might be captured, held and burnt.... After the suppression of the Paris branch of the Internationale it was Cluseret who organized the workers as a secret communist revolutionary society. "

The more recent activities of the I. R. B. should be followed in connection with The Clan-na-Gael.

CHAPTER LXXXIII

PHOENIX SOCIETY OF SKIBBEREEN

In our enumeration of subversive societies we must include the Phoenix Society of Skibbereen of which Captain Pollard writes the following in The Secret Societies of Ireland (page 46).

" In 1858 a premature organization, contrived to revive the tenets of the Young Irishmen of ten years earlier, was founded at Skibbereen by Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa and James Stephens. Both these men were later to attain notoriety in criminal annals, but the Phoenix Society was abortive. Attacked by the priests it was suppressed. "

This society is interesting to us on account of the subsequent career of James Stephens, one of its founders, who had previously been identified with the Fenian movement.

For root of this movement see Chapter LXXXII.

CHAPTER LXXXIV

L'ALLIANCE ISRAELITE UNIVERSELLE

(A BRANCH OF JEWISH MASONRY)

(Founded 1860)

If, as it has been appropriately defined, Judaism is a sect, the creation of the Alliance Israélite Universelle which took place in 1860 can be regarded as that of its exoteric centre.

It was founded in 1860 by Aristide Astruc, Isidor Cahen, Jules Carvalho, Narcisse Leven, Eugene Manuel and Charles Netter. Its first president was Konigswarter. Adolphe Cremieux was president from 1863-1867 and again from 1868-1880.

In 1840, the world had been startled by the news of the fearful murder of Père Thomas at Damascus. Serious investigations had resulted in the conviction of three Jews who had confessed to the commission of the abominable crime for Jewish ritual purposes of procuring human blood.

The indignation of the whole world rising against Jewry made its prominent members realise the danger threatening their newly acquired emancipation in most countries, and they made a concerted effort to disprove Jewish guilt in the Damascus affair. Foremost among them had been Moses Monte fiore, Adolphe Cremieux and Solomon Munk. Yet, the real inspirer of the Alliance Israelite Universelle was Hirsch Kalisher, Rabbi of Thorn (Russia) and its enthusiastic exponent, Moses Hess.

The chief aim of the Alliance Israelite Universelle was political, and was clearly expressed in the report circulated after its foundation in which was stated : All important faiths are represented in the world by nations, that is to say, they are incarnated in governments especially interested in them and officially authorized to represent them and speak for them only. Our faith alone is without this important advantage; it is represented neither by a state nor by a society, nor does it occupy a clearly defined territory.

The Alliance Israelite Universelle therefore was destined to be the governmental representative of all Jews from whatever country they lived in under the authority of their secret Kahal or community rule.

The first political manifestation of the Alliance Israelite Universelle took place at the Berlin Congress in 1878 where it was represented by three of its delegates : Kann, Netter and Veneziani.

The link between the Alliance Israelite Universelle and Freemasonry was for many years Adolphe Crémieux and Masonic writers have asserted that the 18th degree, conferreo by the Grand Orient, makes the initiate, if not a member, at any rate a supporter of the Alliance.

The Alliance Israelite Universelle saw its dream of international Jewish Government shattered when Zionism emerged and came tc the fore in 1897. It is noteworthy that the " Prophet " of Zionism : Ahad Ha'am (Asher Ginsberg) was a member of the Alliance Israelite Universelle and a disciple of Charles Netter. The avowed aims of the A. I. U., namely a super-government of the world and a universal religion, both to be Judaic, are being steadily pursued by the " Jewish World Agency " functioning to-day.

CHAPTER LXXXV

THE INTERNATIONAL

(FIRST AND SECOND)

(Founded 1860)

In his early days, Karl Marx, later to be the moving spirit of the First International, edited a paper in Paris, Annales Franco-Allemandes, the organ of a secret society. This paper had been founded by Arnold Riige, a disciple of Mazzini. Marx met Riige through Henri Heine, the celebrated poet. [1]

Heckethorn, in his Secret Societies of All Ages and Countries gives an interesting synopsis of the early phases of this movement destined ultimately to form the keystone of subversion throughout the world. [2]

" The first attempt at an international society was made by a small number of German workmen in London, who had been expelled from France in 1839 for taking part in the riots in Paris. Its members consisted of Germans, Hungarians, Poles, Danes and Swedes. Of the few English members Ernest Jones was one. The society was on friendly terms with the English Socialists, the Chartists, and the London French Democratic Society. Out of that friendship sprang the Society of the Fraternal Democrats, who were in correspondence with a number of democratic societies in Belgium. In November, 1847, a German Communist Conference was held in London, at which Dr. Karl Marx (real name Mordechai) was present. In the manifesto then put forth it was declared that the aim of the Communists was the overthrow of the rule of the capitalists by the acquisition of political power. The practical measures by which this was to be effected were the abolition of private property in land ; the centralization of credit in the hands of the State — the leading agitators of course to be the chiefs of the State — by means of a national bank ; the centralization of the means of transport in the hands of the State ; national workshops ; the reclamation and improvement of land ; and the gratuitous education of all the children.

" In 1860, a Trade Unionist, Manhood Suffrage, and Vote by Ballot Association was established, of which G. Odger, a shoemaker, was chairman. As if it had not enough of what might be called legitimate work to do, the association also undertook to agitate in favour of Poland, for which purpose it co-operated with the National League for the Independence of Poland. The London International Exhibition of 1862 induced the French government to assist many French workmen with means to visit that exhibition... " and "... on the 5th August, all the delegates met at a dinner given to them by their English colleagues at Freemason's Hall, where an address was read which formed, as it were, the foundation-stone of the International. The Imperial Commission that had enabled the French workmen to visit the London Exhibition had no doubt furnished them with return tickets. But several of the artisans made no use of their second halves, since profitable employment in London was found for them by their English brethren, so that they might form connecting links between the workmen of the two countries. "

The next year, another meeting was arranged and this was followed by others. At last one was held in London on Sept. 24, 1864, presided over by Professor Beesly, at which it was finally determined to establish a permanent organization of the working people of the civilized world. The International Working Men's Association was thus founded. In The Jewish Encyclopaedia, Article on Karl Marx, we read that Mazzini and Marx were entrusted with the task of preparing the address and the constitution. Then came the big public meeting held on September 28, 1864 at St. Martin's Hall, which " declared the International Working Men's Association to be established and congresses were appointed to be held at different times and places to decide on the measures to be taken to found the working men's Eldorado. Many societies at first were affiliated, but dissensions soon broke out among them, and many, such as the Italian Working Men's Society, withdrew again. "[3]

This withdrawal of the Italian section was doubtless influenced by its recognition of the subversion of the original scheme for the amelioration of industrial conditions by the Mazzinian revolutionary agents.

" At a meeting held in London, in 1865, the ' re-establishment of Poland entire and independent ' was again one of the questions discussed. The Paris delegates were for avoiding political questions; but Mr. Odger reminded them that Poland had furnished the occasion for the establishment of the association, and that the Conference must stand by the Polish cause. "

In 1866, a meeting or congress was held at Geneva, where the abolition of standing armies, the destruction of the monopolies of great companies, and the transfer of railways and other means of locomotion to the people, were decided on. Another resolution favouring Polish Independence was passed and the report of Marx made in 1864 was adopted.

To anyone unversed in the intricacies of International Politics at that date, the introduction and predominance of the meesures concerning Poland seem senseless. All the Internationa expropriation of all existing proprietors, by the abolition of the political and legal state, which is the sanction and only guarantee of all property as now existing, and of all that is called legal right; and the expropriation, in fact, everywhere, and as much and as quickly as possible by the force of events and circumstances. ' "[4]

After such remarks, the International was evidently considered by its masters to have shown its mettle and to be deserving of better quarters. " A temple worthy of their cult was sought and found... near Geneva, where... a fine building, the Masonic Temple — Temple Unique... was procured. ... They put the name of Temple on their cards and bills. Their cult had gained a worthy shrine... "[5]

The further aims of the movement are thus described by Heckethorn:

"... At the time when the International was founded, the French Empire was as yet in all its strength and.... its ministers looked upon themselves as small Machiavellis when they permitted the International (which claimed to be a social, non-political organization), to grow in order, some day, to use it against a mutinous bourgeoisie. The Emperor had an opportunity on September 2, at Sedan, and the Empress on September 4, at Paris, to judge of the value of such policy. However, the scheme of the association having been settled in London in 1864, the organizers opened at Paris a bureau de correspondance, which was neither formally interdicted nor regularly authorized by the Prefect and the Minister. But the constantly growing power of the International shown by the strikes of Roubaix, Amiens, Paris, Geneva, etc. after a time compelled the government either to direct or to destroy it. The Parisian manifesto read at Geneva was stopped at the French frontier ; but M. Rouher agreed to admit it into France, if the association would insert some passages thanking the Emperor for what he had done for the working classes —a suggestion which was received with derision by the members. In the meantime the old revolutionary party, of which Mazzini, Garibaldi, Blanqui, and Ledru-Rollin were the oracles, looked with suspicion on the foundation of the International; for, as this last declared that it would not meddle with politics, the others called out, Treason ! and thus the two parties were soon in a condition of violent opposition. In 1867, the Congress of Lausanne voted against war, but at the same moment the other fraction of the demagogues, assembled at Geneva, under pretence of forming a congress of peace, declared war on all tyrants and oppressors of the people. However, the two parties, the bourgeois demagogues and the workmen demagogues, eventually united ; and thus it came to pass that by virtue of this pact the International took part in two revolutionary manifestations which occurred about six weeks after — the one at the tomb of Manin in the cemetery of Montmartre, and the other on the following day on the Boulevard Montmartre, to protest against the French occupation of Rome. The International having thus been carried away to declare war against the government, the latter determined to prosecute it. The association was declared to be dissolved, and fifteen of the leaders were each fined a hundred francs. The International taking no notice of the decree of dissolution, a second prosecution was instituted, and nine of the accused were condemned to imprisonment for three months. The International now hid itself amidst the multitude of working men's societies of all descriptions that were either authorized or at least tolerated, and made enormous progress so that its chiefs at last declared themselves able to do without any extraneous support. ' The International', said one of the speakers at the Bâle Congress (1869), ' is and must be a state within states ; let these go on as suits them, until our state is the strongest. Then, on the ruins of these, we shall erect our own fully prepared, such as it exists in every section. '

" On September 3rd 1870, the disaster of Sedan became known at Paris. On the next day, Lyons, Marseilles, Toulouse, and Paris proclaimed the Republic. This simultaneous movement was the result of an understanding existing between the leading members of the International in the various parts of France ; but that the 'Jules Favres and Gambettas, ' that vermine bourgeoise, as the International called them, should obtain any share of power, was very galling to the demagogues. At Lyons and Marseilles, however, the supreme power fell into the hands of the lowest wretches. The Commune installed at Lyons began its work by raising the red flag — that of the International. At Paris the association pretended at first to be most anxious to fight the Prussians. When the battalions were sent to the front, however, it was found that those comprising most Internationals were the most ready ' to fall back in good order, ' or even to fly in great disorder at the first alarm ; and General Clement Thomas pointed out this instructive fact to the readers of the Journal Officiel. But when a few Prussian regiments entered Paris, the Internationa[1], through its central committee, announced that the moment for action was come ; and so the members seized the cannons scattered in various parts of the city, and then began that series of excesses, for which the Commune will always enjoy an infamous notoriety. Its first sanguinary act was the assassination of Generals Lecomte and Clement Thomas.[6]

" One would have supposed that the International would disavow the Communists : but, on the contrary, it approved of their proceedings. Flames were still ascending from the Hotel de Ville when already numerous sections of the International throughout Europe expressed their admiration of the conduct of the Parisian outcasts.

" At Zurich, at a meeting of the members of the International, it was declared that ' the struggle maintained by the Commune of Paris was just and worthy, and that all thinking men ought to join in the contest. ' "

Thus they agreed with Armand Levi and Jewish Masonry !

In 1872, another Jew, Karl Marx, transferred " the seat of the General Council to New York, in care of his faithful follower F. A. Sorge ", his co-religionist.[7] There the organization degenerated into a gang of Anarchist-revolutionaries. In 1876 it was dissolved.

Numerous efforts to re-create the First International were made by Marx assisted by Jules Guesde and in 1889 they founded the Second International, the development of which was retarded by internal dissensions. In 1905 however a programme of unification, elaborated at Amsterdam, was accepted by the contending factions.[8]

THE KU-KLUX KLAN

The Ku-Klux Klan was the name of an American secret association formed by the Whites of the Southern States for self protection after the Civil war.

It was started at 1865 at Pulaski, Tennessee, as a club for young men. The period of organization of the K. K. K. lasted from 1865 to 1868. It absorbed other societies of similar aims such as the Knights of the White Camelia, the White Brotherhood, the White League, the Pale Faces, Black Cavalry, White Rose, etc.

Apart from the protection of whites, one of its chief aims was opposition to a government based on negro suffrage such as the North wanted to impose on the South.

The Klan denominated the entire South as the Invisible Empire under the rule of a Grand Wizard : General N. B. Forrest. Each state was a Realm under a Grand Dragon; each county a Province under a Grand Giant, etc.

The avowed principles were the maintenance of peace and order, of the laws of God, of the political and social supremacy of the white race and also the prevention of the intermingling of the races.

It showed strenuous opposition to the " scallawags " and " carpet-baggers " as they called the Northern Whites who incited the negroes to commit all kinds of depredations against the Whites of the South.

In 1871 and 1872, the United States Congress enacted a series of " Force Laws " to break the K. K. K. By that time however the negro was once more subdued and the K. K. K.'s central organization was disbanded.

Its spirit however survived and reasserted itself in 1915 when it was revived.

For development of this organization see Chapter CXXIII.

SOCIETAS ROSICRUCIANA IN ANGLIA

(Founded 1866)

For an historical sketch of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, the cover name for modern Illuminism, we can do no better than turn to such an authority as its historian William Wynn Westcott, erstwhile Supreme Magus of the Society.

The following items of information are gleaned from his History of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, published in 1910.[1] The official statement of the aims of the Society reads as follows :— " The aim of the Society is to afford mutual aid and encouragement in working out the great problems of Life and in searching out the secrets of Nature ; to facilitate the study of the system of philosophy founded upon the Cabala and the doctrines of Hermes Trismegistus, which was inculcated by the original Fratres Rosae-Crucis of Germany, A. D. 1450 ; and to investigate the meaning and symbolism of all that now remains of the wisdom, art and literature of the ancient world. "

[1] Dr. Wynn Westcott, M. W. Supreme Magus, History of The Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, IX, privately printed, Dec. 30, 1900. Copyright. British Museum Press Mark 0475 h54.

" The Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia was founded in 1866 by Frater Robert Wentworth Little, an eminent Freemason with much literary talent, and of great personal popularity. He was Secretary of the Province of Middlesex, and Secretary of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls. He became the first Supreme Magus and Master General of the College in 1867. His knowledge and authority emanated from two sources, and were supplemented by the learning and researches of several other prominent students of occult philosophy. Brother William Henry White, the Grand Secretary of England, preserved certain Rosicrucian papers[2] which had come into his possession on attaining office in 1810, at Freemason's Hall, and ot these he made no use ; Brother Little found these papers and used them. At the same time, and with the object of re-constituting a Rosicrucian College in London, he availed himself of certain knowledge and authority which belonged to Brother Kenneth R. H. Mackenzie, who had, during a stay in Germany in earlier life, been in communication with German Adepts who claimed a descent from previous generations of Rosicrucians. German Adepts had admitted him to some grades of their system, and had permitted him to attempt the formation of a group of Masonic students in England, who under the Rosicrucian name might form a partly esoteric society. With this license and with the manuscripts of ritual information, which Brother White had discovered in the vaults of Freemason's Hall, Fratres R. W. Hughan, Woodman, O'Neal Haye, Irwin and some others, the present English rituals were adopted, and have been in use with some modifications made by Dr. Woodman and his successor, ever since the first regular meeting of the Society.

[2] Part of these papers are presumed to be some of Nick Stone's rituals.

" The basic rule of the new Society stated that only Master Masons of good standing and repute should be admitted to membership, thus drawing a new distinction, of which we have no previous record ; for earlier English Rosicrucian Colleges had no Masonic basis, and some fraternities abroad certainly admitted women on equal terms, of which fact there is extant literary proof.

" See the curious document called ' The admission of Sigismund Bacstrom, dated September 12th 1794 '. This will be found reprinted in The Rosicrucian of October, 1876. The only literary extant evidence of the source of our Rosicrucian ritual from Brother W. H. White is contained in a letter in possession of the Society. The share of Kenneth Mackenzie in the origin of the Society depends at the present time on his letters to Dr. Woodman and Dr. Westcott, and on his personal conversations during the years 1876-1886 with Dr. Westcott.

" Fratres Hughan, Irwin, Hockley, Woodforde and Benjamin Cox have also contributed their personal knowledge on the subject.

" The original MSS. which Little possessed never came into the possession of the S. M., the late Dr. Woodman, and so were never received by the present Magus who has thus few proofs in writing of the historic basis, which he lays down in this sketch of the Society. The most natural conclusion is that Little returned these papers to some obscure portion of the records at Freemason's Hall, and that they are there still, although the present officials have not traced them. This explanation is very probable, because in September 1871, a Brother

Mathew Cooke raised a complaint in Grand Lodge against Masonic officials for discovering, using and removing old manuscripts from the record rooms of Freemason's Hall. These papers supplied the basis for the reconstitution of the Order of the Red Cross of Constantine, as well as of the Rosicrucian Society. They were both Christian bodies, and their records had been hidden away since the time of the Grand Mastership of the Duke of Sussex, in 1813, who, favouring the Unitarian doctrine, did all in his power to remove Christian grades from notice.

" Our records include a letter from the Rev. T. F. Ravenshaw, Grand Chaplain of England, one of the earliest fratres of the Society, confirming much of the historic information which the author received from Dr. Woodman, Woodforde, Mackenzie and Irwin. This letter recites as follows : — (I) that the first S. M. Frater R. M. Little explained to him that the German Fraternity had an established regulation which permitted distinguished members to confer Rosicrucian grades in due order on suitable persons. (II) That a certain Venetian Ambassador to England in the last century had conferred Rosicrucian grades and knowledge on Students in England; these in their turn had handed on the rule and tradition to others, oi whom one of the last survivors was Frater William Henry White, Grand Secretary of English Freemasonry from 1810 to 1857 ; he retired and lived until 1866. (III) From the papers he possessed Frater White admitted Frater Robert Wentworth Little. (IV) These papers came into Little's possession at Freemason's Hall on Frater White's retirement from office. (V)The rituals are mentioned as being imperfect for ceremonial open use. "

The above contains much useful information for any reader who might later undertake research work not only on the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia but also in its offshoots : Golden Dawn, Stella Matutina and Ordo Templi Orientis, etc. As to the organization of the Society, in order to enable the reader to understand the system on which it functions, we reprint herewith from The Rosicrucian, the Quarterly Record of the Society's transactions, [3] edited by Frater Robert Wentworth Little (S. M.) Master General and Frater William Robert Woodman, M. D., Secretary General, some of the articles governing its organization.

I. — That the meetings of the Society shall be held in London at such house as the majority of the members shall select, on the 2nd Thursdays in January, April, July and October in each year, at such time and place as the majority shall select. The first meeting in the year shall be considered as the obligatory meeting and any member unable to attend on that occasion or at the banquet meeting shall be required to send a written excuse to the Secretary-General. Each brother present at the banquet shall pay his quota towards the expenses thereof.

III. — The Master-general and the Officers shall be elected annually at the obligatory meeting and shall be induced into their several offices on the same evening. The Master-general shall then appoint the Assistant officers for the year.

IV. — No brother shall be eligible for election to the office of Master-general or Deputy Master-general unless he shall have served one year as an Ancient, and have attained the third Order; and no brother shall be eligible for the offices of Treasurer-general, Secretary-general, or Ancient, unless he be a member of the second Order.

[3] No. 1, July 1868, British Museum Press Mark 4782-h22.

V. — The Society shall, in conformity with ancient usage, be composed of nine classes or grades, and the number of brethren in each class shall be restricted as follows : —

1 — or grade Zelator	33
2 — or grade Theoricus	27
3 — or grade Practicus	21
4 — or grade Philosophus	18
TOTAL	99

The above shall form the First Order

5 — or grade of Adeptus Junior	15
6 — or grade of Adeptus Major	12
7 — or grade of Adeptus Exemptus	9
TOTAL	36

These brethren shall form the Second Order

8 — or grade of Magister Templi	6
9 — or Magus	3
TOTAL	9

These shall be considered as the Third (or highest) Order, and shall be entitled to seats in the Council of the Society. The senior member of the 9th grade shall be designated " Supreme Magus " and the two other members Senior and Junior Substitutes respectively. The grand total of membership shall thus be limited to 144, or the square of 12. The number of registered Novices or Aspirants shall not be restricted, but members only shall be permitted to be present at the ceremonial meetings of the Society.

VI. — The distinction of Honorary Member may be conferred upon eminent brethren, provided that their election to such membership shall be unanimous and that their number be strictly limited to 16, or the square of 4. An Honorary President, who must be a nobleman, and three Vice-Presidents, shall be selected from the honorary members. A Grand-Patron may also be elected in like manner.

VII. — No aspirant shall be admitted into the Society unless he be a Master Mason, and of good moral character, truthful, faithful and intelligent...

VIII. — Every Novice on admission to the grade of Zelator shall adopt a Latin motto, to be appended to his signature in all communications relating to the Society. This motto cannot under any pretence be afterwards changed, and no two brethren shall be at liberty to adopt the same motto....

The other articles, 20 in all, can be read in The Rosicrucian.

In 1877, the order of membership was rearranged to provide that in future, every College under the jurisdiction of England would be restricted to 36 subscribing members exclusive of members of the 9th grade : the only exception being the Metropolitan College which was to be permitted to enrol 72 members.

In The Rosicrucian the Society defines its aims in the following terms :—

" The object of the society being purely literary and antiquarian it is almost unnecessary to state that no interference with, or opposition to, any rite of Freemasonry is intended, or even tolerated : and it matters not to the members whether the aspirant be a disciple of pure and ancient Masonry, as interpreted by the Grand Lodge of England, or be enthusiastic follower of those rites which embrace the Hauts Grades, provided he be of good standing and possess sufficient ability to take part in the peculiar objects of research to which the society restricts itself — mystic and Rosicrucian lore.

" Thus the roll of the society displays names side by side, on the one hand ardent supporters of the high grades, and on the other their bitter opponents. "

Those who have occupied the position of Supreme Magus in the order of their succession were :—

R. Wentworth Little	1865-1878
Dr. Robert Woodman	1878-1891
Dr. William Wynn Westcott	1891-1925

Towards the close of the XIX Century, the membership of Rosicruciana in Anglia included the following personages : —

Samuel Liddell MacGregor Mathers (Junior Sub Magus)
Thomas Bowman Whytehead IX
John Yarker IX
George Kenning
A. E. Waite
Eliphas Levi
Kenneth R. H. Mackenzie IX
Major Irwin IX
William James Hughan IX
etc. etc.

The Annual Convocations were held in the Rosicrucian Temple at the Frascati restaurant, Oxford Street, London, W.

The foreign branches of this order were founded in — Canada — in 1877 by M. W. Frater Col. W. B. Macleod Moore with Fratres Thomas Douglas Harrington as S. S. M. and George Longley as J. S. M. Four meetings a year at Masonic Hall, Maitland, Ontario.

The United States of America — in 1880 by M. W. Frater Charles E. Mayer IX, Supreme Magus of United States.

Germany — in 1902 by Theodore Reuss VIII
(Initiated in the Pilgrim's Lodge 238, London).
Scotland — in 1877.

In connection with the statement made at the opening of this chapter that The Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia was modern Illuminism, the reader's attention must be drawn to the similarity of the grades of the modern Rosicrucian Society with those of Weishaupt's Bavarian Uluminism.

Much has been said and written by various and numerous English authorities on the subject of English Grand Lodge being in no wise connected with any outside societies, whether exoteric or esoteric or with foreign or, as they call it, " Continental " masonry.

We however submit the following suggestions as a logical deduction from a close study of the organization, activities and connections of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia.

English Grand. Lodge is today what it was intended to be at the time of its creation, by disciples of avowed Rosicrucianism, namely a dragnet or nursery. Under the guise of philanthropy, humanitarianism, democratic ideals, and the promise of material advancement, it attracts untold numbers of unsuspecting men. The sifting takes place from the time of their initiation. For those who are deemed useless to the further secret aims of Masonry and therefore unworthy of climbing from the Master's chair in Grand Lodge to The Royal Arch degree, English Masonry will always remain what it was represented to be when they became candidates for initiation. They will be useful carriers of the legend that English Masonry believes in God and philanthropy. But, like Charity, English Grand Lodge covers a multitude of sins.... Above all, it covers Gnosticism under all its aspects ; it is in fact its screen.

It is a common error to believe that the English Grand Lodge is an independent body which was formed in 1717. Logical deduction will show that, owing to its formation being the result of Rosicrucian effort, it always has been, and still must be, subject to the direction of its esoteric parent body, i. e. ROSICRUCIANISM or Manichean and Socinian Gnosticism.

Childish as may be the claim of English Grand Lodge as to its autonomy and independence, yet it has been most successfully defended by scores of English writers who attacked Masonic Societies and their subversive activities against state and religion. According to them English Grand Lodge was always exempted from such groups.

It is time to put an end to this legend. English Grand Lodge, the body which claims to represent English Freemasonry, is as much the child of Rosicrucianism today as it was in 1717 and has no more power or wish today to rebel against, or deny its parent, than it had then. As to Esoteric Rosicrucianism, this Esoteric body, mainly Cabalistic in its direction, always has been and is in truth international. It has penetrated every association, society or organization just as did the Illuminati of Bavaria at the Wilhelmsbad convent of 1782.

In the particular Gnostic Rosicruciana in Anglia, briefly sketched here, we see internationalism clearly depicted. At one time it was personified in Kenneth Mackenzie who, initiated and illuminized by the German Rosicrucian adepts, was later the connecting link between German, English and French Gnosticism, the latter represented at the time by Eliphas Levi (A. L. Constant).

Nearer to our own time, William Wynn Westcott is the connecting link of this international Rosicrucian-gnosticism. Prominent Grand Lodge and Royal Arch Mason, he was also Supreme Magus of Rosicruciana in Anglia and Knight Kadosch etc.

His connections with John Yarker, as also with the French hermetist Papus and with the theosophist Blavatsky, were of an esoteric kind, but most important of all were his close relations with his brother Rosicrucian MacGregor Mathers and the German Theodore Reuss. For it is, we know, William Wynn Westcott, the respected English Grand Lodge and Royal Arch Mason, Supreme Magus of Rosicruciana in Anglia who, together with the Cabalist MacGregor Mathers, created the Rosicrucian branch known as the Order of the Golden Dawn. With Theodore Reuss he was closely associated with the foundation of the Ordo Templi Orientis which from Reuss and Karl Kellner's manuscripts is known to be phallic.

How far the reciprocal conferring of degrees in their respective orders between John Yarker, W. W. Westcott, Theodore Reuss, Engel and Papus is a case of interpenetration remains to be determined. John Yarker was the head of the Ancient and Primitive Rite of the Rite of Swedenborg, etc., Wm. Wynn Westcott, the Supreme Magus of Rosicruciana in Anglia, Theodore Reuss and Engel, heads of the German Illuminati and Ordo Templi Orientis, and Papus, head of the Martinists. We are fully aware of the Gnostic practices of these different rites but the student bent on a certain type of research will find interesting and instructive the study of the political activities of the different bodies mentioned. The author of Light Bearers of Darkness[4] has attempted to show part of the nefarious political game played by adepts of the Stella Matutina and Golden Dawn Orders, two of the occult branches of Rosicruciana in Anglia.

[4] " Inquire Within ".

We reprint below two letters exchanged between William Wynn Westcott and the German Theodore Reuss which show the interlocking and international gnostic direction of those two late honoured members of English Grand Lodge Freemasonry.

It remains for the student to follow every line of enquiry to the point of ccncentration where all threads are gathered and systematically manipulated for the eventual destruction of Christian civilization.

It may lead to the B'nai B'rith, the Universal Israelite Alliance, India or Thibet, but in any case, a thorough and complete study of Rosicrucianism embracing a minute one of Rosicruciana in Anglia and its various branches will be a great step taken in the direction of uncovering much of the political and moral chaos of present day history of humanity.

Dear Bro. Reuss ;

I have to acknowledge receipt of Illuminati papers and safely received and they shall be translated and considered and I will report upon what I can do — Best thanks.

As to the Swed. Riie the Lodge Holy Grail No. 15 is all right and Bro. Yarker is entirely within his right to give you, a known Master Mason of England, a Warrant for a Lodge, but he hesitates to issue written authority for 6 Lodges which your Latomia[5] says are not regular. I had got his permission to make a Prov. Gd. Lodge of Germania for you but now he hesitates, because he does not want to have half the German Masonic World condemning him —

Care Frater,

I have duly recd. your card & letter & Report, for all which best thanks. I hope you are well again. I am sorry you missed seeing my Bro. Gardner. I note what you say about the Illuminati and hereby accept the position of Regent, and must find a good man to work it up. Do I understand that Engel is now out of the order ? I have not heard any more from him.

Re Rosics.

Your fratres must each choose a Latin motto ; Mine is " Quod scis, nescis. " — even what you know — you don't really know — is a free translation — I will read your Report on Second Thursday in October to the High Council and Met. Coll.

There must be a lot of Rosic M. S. S. lying hid in your country, make every effort to find some. We have copies of two here. I will ask the H. C. about the use of Library. I propose to keep German contributions for buying further Books for it, and for that alone. You might look out to buy any German Rosic books for us.

Yours sincerely,

Wynn Westcott.

CHAPTER LXXXVIII

THE CLAN-NA-GAEL (V. C.)

(Founded 1869)

In his oft quoted book, The Secret Societies of Ireland, Captain H. B. C. Pollard, late of the Staff of the Chief of Police, Ireland, gives much valuable information concerning the Clan-na-Gael (See page 69 et seq.).

" In 1869 a new secret Irish-American organization was formed, known as the Clan-na-Gael. It traces its origin back through a permanent secret society known as the Knights of the Inner Circle, which, in turn, descended from the Knights of St. Patrick, known as the Ancient Order of Hibernians to-day. It was originally a seceding circle (The Brian Boru) of the United Irishmen, an American society tracing back to 1789. "

By 1873, the Clan had absorbed all independent Irish secret societies save that of " The Irish Confederation " of Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa with which it had reached an arrangement for mutual toleration.

" The original organizer of the Clan had called it the United Brotherhood, and in all its work a simple letter cipher composed of the next letter in the alphabet after the one really meant, was utilised. The secret name of the Clan being the United Brotherhood, it was therefore designated and spoken of as the V. C.

Ireland was known as ' Jsfmboe, ' and so on. To this day the Clan speaks and writes of the I. R. B. as the S. C.

" Up to 1881 the Clan-na-Gael was governed by an executive body, the F. C, and had an annually elected chairman. A Revolutionary Directory, the ' R. D. ' consisted of seven members[1]... Great secrecy shrouded the R. D. and the names of members were only known to the delegates and three ' Senior Guardians ' of each ' Camp ' of the Clan.

" These Lodges or ' Camps ' were known in cipher as ' D's '; each had a number and an outward innocent name, such as the Emmett Literary Association. The essential precaution for the maintenance of secrecy was the rule that all documents, when read, had to be burnt before the Brotherhood, a rule also common to the I. R. B. of today. "

" An open Irish movement had been evolving in the States[2] and a great Irish Convention was held at Chicago in November, 1881, where all kinds of Irish associations were to be represented by delegates who would be addressed on the subject of the Land League. By a clever political manoeuvre the Clan secured the office of Chairman to one of its members, the Rev. George Betts, and as he had the right of appointment of all members of committees, they were enabled to nominate a Clan-na-Gael majority and force the Clan views on the whole body of the Convention.

" In 1882 the Clan, which had for long controlled the secret organization in America, now also controlled all the various open Irish societies and associations which had been represented at the Convention. The mechanism of control was simple — the whole influence of the Clan was exerted to secure to their members a preponderant representation as office-holders in these associations, and it soon became recognised that membership of the Clan was an indispensable preliminary to advancement in local Irish affairs.[3]

" The American Clan-na-Gael had concentrated all Irish organizations, however innocuous, in the body of the National League,[4] and had, by controlling the Committee of the League by its own members, thereby possessed itself not only of a vast field from which to draw funds and recruits, but of the whole co-ordinated political power of the Irish organizations in America. The process developed by the I. R. B. in Ireland was analogous ; through its members they were represented on the Committees and Councils of practically every organization which, in the opinion of its leaders, could be of use to it. The identity of the I. R. B. men was always a secret.

" The secret power of the Brotherhood was brought to bear on all questions of appointment to positions and offices in various open associations, and it was its influence and corruption which achieved those mysterious appointments to position of persons singularly devoid of merit, which were, and are, a marked feature of Irish life...

" In so far as the activist military policy of the I. R. B. was concerned, the period from 1895 to 1912 was practically negative.

" The I. R. B. had always held that membership of any sectarian secret society, such as the A. 0. H., or the Orange Society was incompatible with membership of the I. R. B.[5]

[5] Pollard, op. cit., p. 98 et seq.

Howevei, the A. O. H. in America has for many years been under the direct control of the Clan-na-Gael which also influences through the A. 0. H. such American Catholic Associations as are not distinctly Irish, such as the Knights of Columbus, a Catholic Fraternal Society. "

In the year 1912 "the action of the North in arming had its immediate repercussion in the South... On November 25th 1913 The Irish Volunteers, as distinct from the Ulster Volunteers, had been formally instituted. "

" The outbreak of war introduced a new element in the shape of an alliance between the I. R. B., the Clan-na-Gael, and Germany. "

Casement, whose political activities were ruled by the two Germans, Albert Ballin of the Hamburg-American line and Professor Kuno Meyer, " had been active in the councils of the Irish Volunteers and at the date of the outbreak of war was in the United States on business connected with the relationship between the I. R. B. and the Clan-na-Gael... On the 3rd Nov. 1914, he reached Berlin and laid before the German Foreign Office the suggestion of alliance between the Irish Republicans and Germany, and established a line of communication via the American Clan-na-Gael with revolutionary Ireland. From Berlin, he communicated with Judge Cohalan and John Devoy, the Clan Leaders in the States, who, in turn, maintained communication with the I. R. B. in Ireland through emissaries and an established letter-carrying service on craft crossing between Ireland and America.[6]

" The arrangements between the Clan-na-Gael as representing the I. R. B. and the German Government are amply set forth in such documents as the British Government has yet disclosed. e. g. in the White Paper, Documents relative to the Sinn Fein movement, published by H. M. Stationery office in 1921. "

The Wolf von Igel papers, taken by the United States Government at 60 Wall Street, New York, in April 1916, further prove the complicity of the Clan-na-Gael. Casement was captured when he landed from a German submarine on the coast of Kerry, April 21, 1916.

The rebellion broke out in Dublin on Easter Monday, April 24, 1916 and on April 29 P. H. Pearse, the rebel leader, President of the Provisional government, surrendered to General Sir John Maxwell, and on the first of May the rebels surrendered.

After the entry of the United States into the war in 1917, the Irish-German headquarters were transferred to Spain, operating from there via South America back to the Clan-na-Gael.

" In 1921, on the 6th of December, the Irish representatives and the Cabinet signed a Peace Treaty which gave Ireland the status of a Dominion. "

CHAPTER LXXXIX

THE NIHILISTS

(Founded 1869)

The Nihilists were founded in the spring of 1869 by Netchaief who had adopted the views of social organization which have found expression in the works of Proudhon and Abbe Constant.

As anarchists, they embraced the usual anarchist ideals some of which, such as " property is theft ", and " death to Tyrants ", could be useful to other organizations.

CHAPTER XC

THE CRYPTIC RITE

(Founded in England 1871)

Introduced into England in 1871 from America under the authority of the Grand Council of New York, the Grand Mastership was awarded by the Grand Council to the Rev. G. R. Portal, M. A., in 1873.

CHAPTER XCI

THE SAT BHAI OF PRAGUE

According to John Yarker, who was president of the order, " this is a Hindu Society organized by the Pundit of an Anglo-Indian regiment, and brought into this country, about the year 1872 by Major J. H. Lawrence Archer. The name alludes to the bird Malacocercis grisis which always fly by sevens. It has seven descending degrees, each of seven disciples who constitute their seven and seven ascending degrees of Perfection Ekata or Unity. Its object is the study and development of Indian philosophy. Somehow, its raison d'etre ceased to be necessary when the Theosophical Society was established by the late H. P. Blavatsky, which at one time at least had its secret signs of Reception. "[1]

References are said tc have been made to its esoteric object in Rudyard Kipling's Kim which, according to Rene Guenon, can be accepted as a regular autobiography. According to Guenon " that which is told therein concerning the rivalry of the Russians and the English in southern India is strictly historical.

CHAPTER XCII

ANCIENT AND PRIMITIVE RITE
RITE OF MEMPHIS
ENGLAND

John Yarker, in a pamphlet The Grand Mystic Temple, states that in 1872 " we (the English) took from them (the Americans) a Charter for its (The Ancient and Primitive Rite) degrees 33-95 in and for Great Britain and Ireland and in the Scottish Rite allied ourselves with the Supreme Grand Council 33, (Cerneau) for the United States of America, of which the writer (John Yarker) was made honorary 33°, Representative of Amity. We had thus for long the Scottish Rite allied with Mizraim, and now with Memphis. In the case of the former, we established Representatives with various Supreme Grand Councils and revised the Statutes of 1762, in preference to the forged Constitution of 1786 in the year 1884; in Mizraim with the old bodies of Naples and Paris ; and in Memphis with America, Egypt, Roumania and various other bodies working that Rite. We also, in these three Rites, accepted foreign Charters to confirm our original powers. "

Yarker then makes the following apologia —

" Whatever may be the value assigned to Craft Masonry in this country (England), a Master Mason is held in small esteem abroad. . . . Our object in giving our time at our own cost to these degrees is to break with the unmasonic exclusiveness bred of sycophancy and to give every reputable Master Mason a chance of acquiring the high Masonic initiation at a reasonable cost.[1]

Neophytes upon entering a Chapter received the 18th degree of the Ancient and Accepted Rites (Rose Croix) and Ancient and Primitive Rites and 46th of Mizraim. Advanced in a Senate, these receive the 30th of the two Rites and the 66th of Mizraim. In the series of the Council they receive the higher and more important occult grades of Mizraim and Memphis or Ancient and Primitive Masonry.

" The governing body or ' Sovereign-Sanctuary Supreme Grand Council of Rites 33-95 has already issued Charters for Grand Mystic Temples, Council General (of Rites) 32-94, for England, Scotland, Ireland, New Zealand and West Africa and each Charter covers a Grand Consistory 32-93, Ancient and Accepted Rite and Supreme Grand Council, 33rd. It has also established a Sovereign body with like powers for the German Empire.[2]

" The Constitution of the A. and P. Rite declares ' that Great Britain and Ireland derives from the Sovereign Sanctuary for the American Continent, which again derives its authority from the Sovereign Sanctuary of France, the College of Rites and the Grand Orient of France '. In America authority was vested in Harry J. Seymour by Letters Patent granted to him by the Executive Chiefs of the Rite in Paris in 1862. Ten years later a Patent and Dispensation was granted by the Ill. Sov. Gr. M. Gn., Harry J. Seymour, on February 23rd, 1872, to M. I. Bro. John Yarker, as Sov. Gr. M. Gn. to establish the Sovereign Sanctuary in and for Great Britain and Ireland; ' and he came over to England to inaugurate personally at Manchester and London the foundation of the Rite. "[3]

" Further on, The Constitution intimates that Egypt was the source of the knowledge deposited in this system. But it apparently arose in France and went to Egypt returning in 1815 with a wealth of esoteric lore, under the name of... Disciples of Memphis. "

" None but Master Masons in good standing were and are admitted to the Rite which consequently begins after the three Craft Degrees. "

On Nov. 11, 1912, John Yarker was elected Grand Imperial Hierophant 97. After his death on March 20, 1913, a meeting was held at a Special Convocation of the Supreme Sanctuary of the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Masonry at 33 Avenue Studios, 76 Fulham Road, South Kensington, London S. W., on Monday June 30, 1913, at five o'clock, and Bro. Henry Meyer of 25 Longton Grove, Sydenham, Kent, was elected Sov. Grand Master General for Great Britain and Ireland. There it is stated that " we have declared and proclaimed and by these presents do declare and proclaim our illustrious and enlightened Brother, H. P. CHAPTER XCIII

THE ANARCHISTS

Anarchists claim direct descent from Diderot and those factions which during the French Revolution of 1789 had formed the clubs of the Enrages and Hebertistes. Prudhon was their prototype.

Chronologically speaking, however, the Anarchist party was formed on Sept. 29, 1872, when a split occurred in the ranks of the participants in the Hague Congress of the International Association of Workers, numbers siding with Bakunin whilst others rallied round Karl Marx.

Bakunin's adherents formed the Anarchist party and organized in Switzerland the " Federation Jurassienne " which soon extended its ramifications to Northern Italy, Eastern France and Spain. The Federation's tenets were plainly anarchistic, urging terrorism as the means of overthrowing all forms of existing governments. The attempt of Haedel on the life of the German Emperor Wilhelm in 1878, as well as the murder of the Tzar Alexander II of Russia, 1882, were engineered by anarchists. From Europe, their activities spread to the United States of America when Most, the German anarchist, founder of the Freiheit, went to New York and, with Julius Schwab, organized the Anarchist movement in America, founding the Socialist and Revolutionary Club of New York in 1880 and such press organs as The Anarchists of Boston, later followed by Liberty. The methods of these societies are identical with those of the I. W. W., the " Industrial Workers of the World ".

THE ANCIENT AND ARCHAEOLOGICAL ORDER OF DRUIDS

(Founded 1874)

Founded by Bros. R. Wentworth Little, W. Hyde Pullen and Thomas Massa, in 1874, this order is restricted to members of the Masonic body only.

Among its members have been W. R. Woodman, M. D., George Kenning, K. R. H. Mackenzie, E. H. Thiellay and S. Rosenthal.

It claims to be a study society for Ancient and Modern Druidism.

For root of this movement see Chapter LXXXVII.

CHAPTER XCV

THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

(Founded 1875)

The Theosophical Society, with nine degrees, was founded in 1875 by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1831-1891) daughter of Colonel Peter Hahn and grand-daughter of General Alexis Hahn von Rottenstern Hahn, of Mecklenburg, Germany, settled in Russia. When very young, she married Niciphore Blavatsky, Councillor of State, from whom she separated after three months.

As regards the founder of this order, Rene Guenon, who has made a close study of Theosophy, thus briefly sketches her career.

" Mme. Blavatsky's extraordinary life of adventure started in 1848. During her travels in. Asia Minor with her friend Countess Kiseleff, she met a Copt (some say a Chaldean) called Paulos Metamon, who claimed to be a magician, and who seems to have been a fairly accomplished conjurer. She continued her travels with this personage with whom she went to Greece and Egypt till her funds gave out, when she returned to Europe. " [1]

1. Rene Guénon, Le Théosophisme, p. 12.

Having quarrelled with her family, she was unable to go to Russia so she went to London where she frequented spiritistic and revolutionary circles. She was initiated into the Carbonari by Mazzini in 1856 and was also an initiate of the Order of the Druses, according to John Yarker.

About this period, (1856) her Mahatma Morya is supposed first to have manifested. The Mahatmas Morya and Koot Hoomi are said to be members of the highest degree of "The Great White Lodge ", that is to say of the occult Hierarchy which, according to the theosophists, secretly governs the world.

Guenon thus continues :[2]

" Towards 1858, Madame Blavatsky decided to return to Russia; she became reconciled with her father, staying with him till 1863 when she went to the Caucasus and met her husband. A little later she was in Italy whither she seemed to have been summoned by a Carbonarist order; in 1866, she was with Garibaldi, whom she accompanied during his expeditions, she fought at Viterbo, then at Mentana, where she was seriously wounded and left on the field as dead ; she recovered however and went to Paris for her convalescence. There she remained some time under the influence of a certain Victor Michal, a spiritist-magnetizer. This Michal, a journalist, was a Freemason as was also his friend Rivail (alias Allan Kardec) once founder, later director of the Folies-Marigny and the pioneer of French spiritism. It was Michal who developed the mediumistic faculties of Madame Blavatsky... Madame Blavatsky was, at that time, herself a believer in spiritism and claimed to belong to the school of Allan Kardec, from whom she preserved certain ideas, notably those concerning reincarnation. "

---

[2] René Guénon, op. cit., p. 14.

In 1867, she succeeded after three previous attempts in entering Tibet.

" Inquire Within ", who acknowledges Guenon as her source of information and who has also closely followed the activities of Madame Blavatsky during this period of her life, refers to her visit to America in the following terms :

" In 1875 Madame Blavatsky was sent from Paris to America where she met Henry Steel Olcott and where on October 20, 1875, a society, said to be for ' spiritualist investigations ', was founded in New York.

" Olcott was President, Felt and Dr. Seth Pancoast vice-presidents, and Madame Blavatsky Secretary. Among other members were William Q. Judge, Charles Sothern, one of the high dignitaries of American Masonry, also for a short time General Albert Pike, Grand Master of the Scottish Rite for the Southern Jurisdiction U. S. A., who was said to be the author of the thirty-three degrees received from the Arabian member of the ' Great School. ' ".[3]

To anyone who has read Part 1 of this book the significance of this connection with Pike and Luciferianism at this period requires no further comment!

Guenon, detailing this American visit of Madame Blavatsky, further explains how " George H. Felt, self-styled Professor of Mathematics and Egyptologist, had been introduced to Madame Blavatsky by a journalist called Stevens. Felt was a member of a secret society generally called by the initials ' H. B. of L. ' (Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor). This society, which played a prominent part in the first stages of spiritistic phenomena in America, is definitely opposed to spiritistic theories, for it teaches that these phenomena are due, not to the spirits of the dead, but to certain forces directed by living men. "[4]

[3] " Inquire Within ", Light-bearers of Darkness, p. 26.

Madame Blavatsky and Olcott had both joined this society from which they were expelled before they left America.

A letter from John Yarker quoted in Freemasonry Universal (Vol V, part 2 Autumn Equinox, 1929) is here relevant. It states that Madame Blavatsky's masonic certificate in the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Masonry was issued in the year 1877.

Yarker writes " Both the Rites of Memphis and Mizraim, as well as the Grand Orient of France, possessed a Branch of Adoptive Masonry, popular in France in the 18th century and of which, in later years, the Duchess of Bourbon held the Rank of Grand Mistress.

" We accordingly sent H. P. B., on the 24/11/77, a Certificate of the highest rank, that of a Crowned Princess 12, said to have been instituted at Saxe in the last quarter of the 18th century. "

" In November, 1878 ", according to ' Inquire Within', " Madame Blavatsky and Olcott left for India, and in 1882 founded the Theosophical centre in Adyar, near Madras ; there she initiated her ' esoteric section ', and contacted the so-called ' Mahatmas ', and her phantastic phenomena, precipitated letters, astral bells, materialisations, etc., were in time suspected and exposed. The matter was taken up by the ' Society for Psychical Research ', which in December, 1885, reported her as ' one of the most accomplished, most ingenious, and most interesting impostors. '[5]

[4] René Guénon, op. cit., p. 21.

[5] Inquire Within, op. cit., p. 26 et seq.

" Mrs. Besant was presented to Madame Blavatsky in 1889 by the socialist Herbert Burrows, also member of the Stella Matutina, and she immediately succumbed to Madame Blavatsky's irresistible magnetism and formidable power of suggestion. Madame Blavatsky died in London May 8, 1891. Mrs. Besant was elected President in 1907. From 1910 to its consummation one of her chief works, assisted by Leadbeater, was to train Krishnamurti as Messiah, or as he preferred to be called, ' World Teacher '. On February 19, 1922, an alliance between Mrs. Besant's Co-masonry and the Grand Orient of France was celebrated at the Grand Temple of the Droit Humain in Paris. "

The Society has over seven hundred affiliated sects at present. " Its objects are, The World Religion, The World University, and the World Government (by the Restoration of the Mysteries, i. e. by the recognition of their place as the World Government as they were recognized in ancient days, the place they have ever continued to occupy...). " [6]

The political status of this organization as a centralizing point for numerous secret and theocratic orders is evidenced by a letter dated July 1, 1926, from 171 Palace Chambers, Westminster, London, according to which the Editors and Correspondents of the English Information Service, to which was given the name of " The Theosophical News Bureau ", were officially authorized to issue statements on behalf of : —

In the year 1889, Mr. MacGregor Mathers, 8th degree Rosicruciana in Anglia, wrote a letter to the editor of Lucifer in which he stated that the Theosophical and Rosicrucian Societies entertained very friendly relations [8] and this idea of " friendly foreign relations " is further confirmed by Rene Guenon who writes : " There are persons who believe that the ' Esoteric Section ' exists no longer in the Theosophical Society, but that is not so ; the truth is that, to defeat curiosity, it has been made into a nominally separate organization but one nevertheless, under the same direction ".

The religious principles of The Theosophical Society are gnostic and anti-christian and are the same as those of " The Hermetic Society ".

PRIMITIVE AND ORIGINAL PHREMASONS

(SWEDENBORGIAN RITE)

(Founded 1876)

Known as the Rite of Primitive and Original Phremasons, The Supreme Grand Lodge and Temple of the Swedenborgian Rite received its charter on 1/10/1876 from the Supreme Council of the Phremasons in Canada (founded by the Golden Square Body of London) which was composed of the following well-known Brethren :

M. N. Brother Colonel W. J. B. McLeod Moore S. G. M., Grand Master of Templars and 33°
R. W. Brother T. D. Harrington, S. G. S. W., Pt. G. M. of the Grand Lodge of Canada and 33°
R. W. Brother George Canning Longley. 33°

The officers of the Supreme Council for England then appointed were :—

M. W. Brother John Yarker. S. G. M.
R. W. Brother Captain R. G. Irwin. S. G. S. W.
R. W. Brother Captain Chas. Scott J. P., S. G. J. W.
Supreme Grand Secretary Dr. K. R. H. Mackenzie.

Upon the death of Scott and the retirement of Irwin, Dr. Wynn Westcott and Major G. Turner were appointed respectively.

All members of the rite of Swedenborg must be Master Masons.

The rite has six degrees, the craft degrees and three others, namely, Enlightened Prince or Green Brother, Sublime Prince or Blue Brother, and Perfect Prince or Red Brother.

The Rosicrucian and Grail grades form the apotheosis of the entire system.

Bro. John Yarker tells us (see page 416 in The Equinox, March 1912) that Samuel Beswick informed him that in his book, the matter added by Chastanier had been rejected and " that what was left was the work of Swedenborg. Hence", continues Bro. Yarker, "Bro. Waite's description of two secret and unnamed degrees, are of interest at this point ".

In 1902, Brother Yarker, Grand Master of the Rite, authorized Theodore Reuss to found six Holy Grail Lodges in Germany. The officers of this Provincial Grand Lodge of Germania were :

R. W.	Theodore Reuss	Prov. Grand Master
	Leopold Engel	Prov. Grand Senior Warden
	Erich Walter	Prov. Grand Junior Warden
	August Weinholtz	Prov. Deputy Grand Master
	Max Heilbronner	Prov. Grand Treasurer
	Siegmund Miller	Prov. Grand Secretary
	Franz Held	Prov. Grand Marshall
	Max Suppas Dr. R. Gross	Prov. Grand Stewards

George Gierloff, Guardian

The Secretary of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Swedenborg in. England at this date was Wm. Wynn Westcott.

THE NATIONAL LAND LEAGUE

(Founded 1879)

On Oct. 21,' 1879, this organization was established at Dublin, Ireland, with Charles Stewart Parnell as its President. It cooperated closely with the Clan-na-Gael. Among its members were Egan, the treasurer, Biggar, Dillon, J. J. O'Kelly, London and Harris. The league was responsible for many agrarian outrages and in October, Parnell, Sexton, Kelly, Wm. O'Brien and Michael Davitt were arrested and imprisoned. From jail they issued a manifesto advising all tenants to pay no rent. On Oct. 18, 1881 the Government suppressed the Land League.

The American branch of the National Land League was founded in 1880.

For root of this movement see Chapter LXXXVIII.

CHAPTER XCVIII

THE RUSSELLITES

OR THE INTERNATIONAL BIBLE STUDENTS

(Founded 1879)

The International Bible Student Movement was founded by Charles Taze Russell (1852-1916) with the object chiefly of attracting the lower middle class intelligentsia of Christian communities such as certain clerical workers, teachers, servants and persons not accessible to direct forms of propaganda. In America the movement has had great influence among the negro element.

In 1879 Russell founded The Watch Tower of which he was the sole editor.

The Russellite teaching, drawing its own arbitrary conclusions and proclaiming them as final, professes to prove from Biblical sources that all Christian churches are evil and corrupt, that the time of the Gentiles ended in 1914, and that the Jews must henceforth reign supreme over the world. It also elaborates an occult dogma alleged to be based on biblical precedents.

It condemns the Roman Catholic Church, referring to Rome in true esoteric Masonic style as Babylon and disposes of the Pope and his entire hierarchy as agents of the Antichrist who are doomed to extinction according to the familiar Masonic formulas of Albert Pike, Mazzini and Co. We are further told on biblical authority, interpreting the following words in Rev. II. 24 " As they speak " that this means that " Satan is a name applicable to Rome as describing its characteristics. [1]

The Protestant Episcopal and other Christian churches which in Russell's graphic language are " the Harlot daughters of the Romish Church " and " have committed fornication " which term he interprets as meaning the union of Church and State, so bitterly opposed by the Jews in all countries, fare no better at the pen of this prolific writer, who predicts that, under the visible rulership of the Ancient Worthies (The Jewish Sanhedrin), those Gentiles who still believe in Christ will acknowledge his reign as an invisible one while submitting as Christians to all the hardships these Jewish lords might choose to put upon them.

Brother Russell gives us little hope for the time of tribulation which is upon us, for on page 122 of The Finished Mystery he wrecks any hopes we might still cherish with regard to benevolent brotherhoods in the following sentence — " As the trouble increases, men will seek, but in vain, for protection in the great rocks and fortresses of society (Freemasonry, Oddfellowship, and Trades Unions, Guilds, Trusts and all societies secular and ecclesiastical) and in the mountains (governments) of the earth ".

The publications of The International Bible Students Association are interesting samples of political propaganda and seem well calculated to suppress possible instincts of revolt among such members of the Christian community as might object to the role allotted to them under the Jewish Super State.

The present head of this movement is John Rutherford.

THE INVINCIBLES

(Founded 1881)

In his historical sketch of " The Invincibles ", Captain Pollard thus records their foundation and activities : "The Executive of the Irish Invincibles was joined by members of the I. R. B. but the two organizations were kept distinct. "

" The Invincibles conceived the idea of assassinating all British officials in Ireland, and held themselves to be guerilla soldiers. " Their chief was P. J. Tynan always alluded to as Number 1. [1]

The assassination of Lord Frederick Cavendish, Chief Secretary, and Mr. Burke, known as the " Phoenix Park murders " were perpetrated by this association.

CHAPTER C

SOCIETE THEOSOPHIQUE D'ORIENT ET D'OCCIDENT

(Founded 1882)

The secret society called La Société Théosophique d'Orient et d'Occident was a spiritist organization founded by the Duchesse de Pomar (Lady Caithness) in 1882.

The Duchess was personally in close touch with Eliphas Levi, Mme. Blavatsky, Colonel Olcott, Mrs. Besant, Dr. Encausse, and other well known occultists of the period.

For the root of this movement see Chapter XCV.

CHAPTER CI

GRAND LAMAISTIC ORDER OF LIGHT

(FRATRES LUCIS)

(Founded 1882)

This order, Fratres Lucis, was founded in 1882. by an English Jew called Maurice Vidal Portman, an orientalist and a politician who in 1876 was in close contact with Lord Lytton, then Viceroy of India, the author of the well known occult novel Zanoni. [1]

As regards this order, John Yarker, recipient of The Crown of Kether, gives us the following information :

" The Altar is that of Maha Deva and had a ritual of three degrees — Novice, Aspirant, Viator. The writer (John Yarker) arranged with Bro. Portman to amalgamate it with the Sat Bhai, Rite of Perfection, but it seems to be continued separately at Bradford, Yorkshire, as the ' Oriental Order of Light '. Its early certificate adopted the forms of the Cabala, with which the Theosophy of India has some affinity. In the East, ceremonial degrees are not valued, the object being the development of practical occultism, which was the purpose of the establishment of the Order of Light, governed by a Grand Master of the Sacred Crown or Kether of the Cabala. The writer (John Yarker) has a letter from Bro. Portman in which he says ; ' the Sat Bhai rituals are without exception the finest and best suited to an occult order of anything I have ever read ' and he leaves all arrangements in the writer's hands. "[2]

If, as John Yarker says, the Altar is indeed that of Maha Deva, we refer the reader to that part of this book where the Indian cult of Siva (The Destroyer, Maha Deva) is outlined.

The present headquarters of the order are still at Bradford, Yorkshire.

CHAPTER CII

THE AHMADIYYAH SECT

(Founded 1882)

The ahmadiyyah sect is described in an article by Fr. Lawrence as having been founded in 1882 at Quadiam, Punjab, by Mirza Ghulam Ahmad, who died in 1908. It resembles in many ways Bahaism and attempts to conciliate the oriental and occidental religions while its dogma, based on the shi'a (unorthodox Mahometan) foundation of free thought, embraces the buddhist belief, rites and metempsychosis as well as the idea of the occult Messiah.

In accordance with the Ismali theory of the advent of the reincarnated mahdi at the opening of each century, this sect proclaims their founder to have been the reincarnation of Christ for the XIV Century (XX of our era) and the harbinger of the future Messiah.

An Indian branch of the sect endorses a legend according to which Christ, having escaped the Pharisees, died at Srinagar, Kashmir. At this place is the tomb of an obscure buddhist saint Yus-asaf.

The propaganda of the sect is worked from two centres, one at Lahore, India, and the other at Woking, England, the latter being chiefly political in character adhering to the kemalist and panturanic programme.

At Lahore resides the esoteric Indian chief of the sect, Muham-mab-Ali. In London is the other head, Kemal-ud-Din.

The chief publications of the order are

The Islamic Review	London
The Sun of Islam	Lahore
The Light	Lahore
Moslem Sunrise	Chicago
Moslemische Review	Berlin
Revue Islamique	Island of Mauritius

The Durang mosque is attended by English converts as well as Indians.

For root of this movement see Chapter XVII".

CHAPTER CIII

CO-MASONRY

(ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITES)

SOVEREIGN GRAND MASTER, ELECTED 1929,
THE VERY ILLUSTRIOUS BROTHER LUCIEN LEVI 33°.

We quote the following from a pamphlet issued under the sanction of the Deputy of the Supreme Council of Universal Co-Masonry for Great Britain and its Dependencies by the Grand Secretary of the said Jurisdiction.

" In the system of the Grand Orient of France the Craft lodges are under the control of the Supreme Council of the highest degree of the rite. The first attempt to found mixed lodges in France was made in 1774. These adoptive lodges spread to other countries, but the modern Co-Masonic Order or, L'Ordre Maçonnique Mixte International Was founded in 1882. It consisted of a group of Lodges which united under the name of La Grande Loge Symbolique Ecossaise de France, received immediate recognition from the Grand Orient of France.

" In 1872 the Lodge Le Droit Humain was founded by Mademoiselle Maria Deraismes in the presence of Dr. Georges Martin, a prominent mason.

" In 1900 the new Grande Loge Symbolique amended its policy so as to enable it to extend its ramifications to other countries and to work the higher degrees. Aided by Brethren in possession of the 33rd degree, the body was then raised from a Craft Grand Lodge to a Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites. Madame Marie Martin, the close friend and collaborator of Mademoiselle Deraismes, succeeded upon the death of the latter to the leadership of the movement, (Dr. Georges Martin holding the Office of Grand Orateur) and held it till her death in 1914.

" There are Co-Masonic lodges in France, Belgium, England, Scotland, India, Australia, South Africa, America, Holland, Java, Switzerland and Norway.

" The first English Co-Masonic Lodge was consecrated in London on Sept. 26th 1902 by the Grand Officers of the Supreme Council under the title of Human Duty, No. 6, and Mrs. Annie Besant was created Vice-President Grand Master of the Supreme Council and Deputy for Great Britain and its Dependencies.

" The Grand Lodge of England does not recognize this particular body of Masonry (1927) but Universal Co-Masonry recognises and admits to its lodges Masons of all regularly constituted Masonic orders. Its laws and regulations are based on the principles adopted by the Universal Assembly of Supreme Councils gathered together at Lausanne on Sept. 22nd, 1875. "

Much of the real information bearing upon the position of woman in Masonry has been omitted by Masonic writers and the reader would be well advised to refer for it to Vol I.

In The Hidden Life in Freemasonry (p. 191) C. W. Leadbeater 33° gives us the following cryptic description of the preparation of the Candidate for Initiation into the degree of Apprentice in the Co-masonic order : "Before his admission he is divested of all m...s and v...s, is h...d, and has his r... a...,]… b… and 1... k... b…, and his r... h... s...d. "

" In plain English the foregoing would read : Before his admission he is divested of all metals and valuables, is hoodwinked and has his right arm, left breast and left knee bared and his right heel slip shod. "

The candidate thus prepared is saturated with magnetic energy during the ensuing ceremony from which consequently he or she issues already under hypnotic influence.

These hypnotic bonds are further strengthened during the ensuing ceremonies of Apprentice and Master Mason which however, in this order, according to Mr. Leadbeater's description of elementals, undines and other sprites, seem to emulate very closely the phenomena of the Spiritualist's seance room.

After attainment by the Candidate to the third degree the Kundalini is supposed to be fully developed.

CHAPTER CIV

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS

The Knights of Columbus is the name of a Roman Catholic organization founded in 1882, in the United States of America, by a Roman Catholic priest, Father P. McGivney of New Haven, Connecticut.

From the Roman Catholic paper, La Croix, of Paris, in the number dated December 20, 1913, we gather that, at that date, the Knights of Columbus wielded an immense power with which public authorities had to reckon. Their number then was acknowledged to be more than three hundred thousand. The Order had four degrees and was headed by a Grand Master, six pro-Grand Masters and a General Secretary. The territory of the United States was divided into six provinces, each province administered by one of the six pro-Grand Masters. Each province was in turn subdivided in districts administered by a Master of the 4th degree and appointed by the Grand Masters for a period of two years. Districts were subdivided in councils or chapters.

The Verité of Quebec, a Canadian paper, in August 1913, put the number of the councils at 1630. At that time, the Supreme Council of the Knights of Columbus was composed of James O'Flaherty, Martin H. Carmody, William J. McGinley, Daniel J. Callahan and Joseph C. Pelletier.

The order of the Knights of Columbus was the cause of much perturbation in the Roman Catholic Church.

Under cover of being an association for mutual help, it had recruited a considerable number of members whc believed that the Order was fully approved by the Church authorities. When however its activities took on the appearance of a Masonic society with initiation rituals, symbolism and secret oaths, many among the Catholic Clergy became alarmed. Their fears were not allayed when it was known that the leaders of the Knights of Columbus were having fraternal exchanges of all kinds with the Oddfellows, Templars and other Masonic bodies. The climax was reached when it was rumoured that in Rome, the Knights of Columbus had petitioned the Pope to allow their members to become, at least in the United States, regular Masons.

The Knights of Columbus, like the Oddfellows, formed lodges of adoption in 1913, women being enrolled under the caption of " Daughters of Isabella ". Women lodges were called " courts ". In 1913, the number of " courts " was over 200 and the membership of " Daughters of Isabella " over two hundred thousand.

Like the society of Oddfellows and similarly to the O. T. O. of the Rosicrucians the Knights of Columbus hold much power over the property and various interests of their members.

Due to their efforts in the direction of establishing a universal religion and inter-confessionalism, the Knights of Columbus have been considered by a large section of the Roman Catholic clergy as an element having departed from the teachings of the Church of Rome and whose secret aim is to bore from within and disintegrate the Roman Catholic power.

Although the Knights of Columbus and the Daughters of Isabella have extended their ramifications into the United Kingdom, it is in the United States that their strength mainly resides. This is easily understood when one studies the activities of Roman Catholics in America and realises that, there, they are far more a political entity with subversive tendencies than a religious body.

CHAPTER CV

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

(Founded 1883)

Christian Science was founded in 1883.

Mary Baker Eddy, the founder, was born in 1821 at Bow, New Hampshire, U. S. A. and died in 1910.

Having suffered greatly all her life from neurasthenia and hysteria she developed mediumship at an early age. Spiritistic sessions further revealed her psychic gifts but it is more than likely that her early years of experimental psychic research exposed her, in after years, to the horrors of what she later described as " Malicious Animal Magnetism ", familiarly referred to by her students as M. A. M.

At the age of 22, she married George Washington Glover, a Freemason and Oddfellow, who took her to live at Charleston, South Carolina, six months later. However he contracted yellow fever while at Wilmington where he died in June 1844.

In 1853, she married Daniel Patterson, a medical practitioner, from whom she was later separated.

In October 1862 she applied for medical assistance to Phineas Parkhurst Quimby (d. 1866) a healer, who had many marvellous cures to his credit. His medical system was based on an understanding of the scientific laws governing the use of hypnotism, mesmerism and suggestion. It is claimed that she derived her system from him.

Her book Science and Health was first published in 1875.

In 1877 she married Asa Gilbert Eddy who left her a widow in 1882.

In 1881, she founded the Massachusetts Metaphysical College in Boston and two years later, when the movement was well established, started publishing the Christian Science Journal.

On June 13, 1888, the National Christian Science Association held its second annual meeting at Central Music Hall, Chicago. This had been organized as well as advertised by George B. Day, Pastor of the First Church of Christ Scientists, Chicago, and the speech delivered by Mrs. Eddy on the second day of this session was acclaimed by her 4,000 listeners as an inspired oration. In view of the extraordinary pitch of enthusiasm attained by her audience and knowing the practice of "charging" public rooms or halls one is led to ask oneself the question as to whether the assembly hall had been specially "charged" for that particular meeting. Whether Mrs. Eddy herself, like the Sybils of ancient times, was also "inspired" by outside hypnotic influence is another hypothesis to conjure with.

From then on, Mrs. Eddy's religious future was assured. Under her leadership suggestion became indeed the foundation of a religion, a religion in which psychic force, operating under suggestion, accomplishes definite physical results.

Mrs. Eddy's acquaintance with Mrs. Augusta Stetson, another Christian Science leader, had already taken place for, according to E. F. Dakin, author of Mrs. Eddy {page 178) "it was at a meeting in a fashionable home on Monument Hill in Charleston that she first met Augusta Stetson, in 1884... She (Mrs. Stetson) had been born of old Puritan stock in Waldoboro, Maine, about 1842. In after life she shrouded her past in mystery, refused -to tell her age, and the town records were eventually burned. She grew up as one of five children in a house which her father, Peabody Simmons, carpenter, built with his own hands. When the family moved to another Maine town, Damariscotta, Augusta was organist there in the Methodist church and a singer in the choir. At 24 she married a ship-builder, Frederick Stetson, who was partially an invalid as a result of imprisonment in Libby Prison during the Civil War. As his wife, she went to England where he secured employment with a British shipbuilding firm. Later, he was sent to Bombay, and here she had an opportunity to delve into a subject in which she had an instinctive interest — the oriental philosophies. In these philosophies affirmation and denial play an important role, and a pantheistic God is postulated — a God who is the Universe, whose mind is All, and of whose mind matter, like force, is but one manifestation or expression in the midst of many. "

Mrs. Stetson started healing and teaching Mrs. Eddy's system in New York in 1886, later resigning her connection with the Christian Science church in 1909.

One can almost describe this system as emerging clearly out of the realm of occultism, a kind of suggestion or auto-suggestion, whereby practical beneficial results may be induced in a patient by the application of certain occult laws to their personal medical requirements.

Mrs. Eddy's dogma is summed up by Hudson in the following words :

" Matter has no existence. Our bodies are composed of matter, therefore our bodies have no existence.

" It follows of course that disease cannot exist in a non-existent body. "[1]

However, regardless of this paradox and the various opinions hitherto expressed about Christian Science, we recognize, while admitting the efficacy of Mrs. Eddy's use of the force of beneficent animal magnetism, that her personal fear of the action of Malicious Animal Magnetism, so derided by her theological adversaries, is logical and founded.

These forces operate on sound scientific lines and those who can use the power of suggestion to gain ascendency over a sick person may use it again later for other motives. The danger of such misapplication is not one to be disregarded in calling in a healer, whatever Mrs. Eddy's detractors may say ! That danger is real and every student of the occult knows it.

The movement has become popular and has a following among people of wealth who seem to become the easy prey of occultists and charlatans.

The following extract from the Daily Telegraph of Decr. 18, 1930, illustrates this ;

> HARMFUL DEMONSTRATIONS
> A warning against the dangers of hypnotism in public has been issued by the Academy of Medicine as the result of an investigation by a special committee. This was set up at the request of the Council of the Meuse Department, which suggested that public experiments in hypnotism should be stopped.
> The academy declares that such demonstrations are bound to have a harmful influence. They are likely to excite undesirable curiosity, and, in the case of many sensitive people, to give rise to nervous and psychological trouble. Another grave criticism is that they may lead young people to believe that the exercise of hypnotism may enable them to influence the will and actions of those with whom they come into contact— " which, " asserts the report, " is contrary to the truth. "
>
> A resolution passed by the academy recommends the forbidding of such displays throughout the country.

CHAPTER CVI

THE FABIAN SOCIETY

(Founded 1883)

The nominal founder of The Fabian Society was Thomas Davidson, an idealist who, in the hope of bettering the lot of humanity, organized a debating club the original aim of which was, according to Mr. Pease, author of The History of the Fabian Society, " the reconstruction of society on a non-competitive basis with the object of remedying the evils of poverty. " [1]

This non-competitive basis meant maintenance for all by the community as a right, regardless of merit.

The club met fortnightly in the drawing rooms of its various members and in 1884 adopted the name "The Fabian Society".

Among those prominent in the movement in its early days were : Frank Podmore, a spiritualist, Percival Chubb, a clerk on the Local Government Board, Edward Pease, Hubert Bland, J. Ramsay Macdonald, later Prime Minister of England, R. B. Haldane, afterwards Lord Haldane, George Bernard Shaw, Sidney Webb, afterwards Lord Passfield, Graham Wallas, William Clarke, a former disciple of Mazzini, Mrs. Annie Besant, then a radical with an office at 63, Fleet Street, who controlled The Freethought Publishing Co., Dr. Pankhurst, husband of the later leader of the Women's Social and Political Union and Mrs. Charlotte M. Wilson who, while retaining her membership in the Fabian Society " devoted herself ", so we are told by Mr. Pease, to the Anarchist movement led by Prince Kropotkin and for some years edited the anarchist paper Freedom.

On page 68 of The History of the Fabian Society by Edward R. Pease we read :

> " In order to avoid a breach with Mrs. Wilson and her Fabian sympathisers, it was resolved to form a Fabian Parliamentary League, which Fabians could join or not as they pleased ; its constitution, dated February, 1887, is given in full in Tract No. 41 ; here it is only necessary to quote one passage which describes the policy of the League and of the Society, a policy of deliberate possibilism :—
> " The League will take active part in all general and local elections. Until a fitting opportunity arises for putting forward Socialist candidates to form the nucleus of a Socialist party in Parliament, it will confine itself to supporting those candidates who will go furthest in the direction of Socialism. It will not ally itself absolutely with any political party; it Will jealously avoid being made use of for party purposes ; and it will be guided in its action by the character, record and pledges of the candidates before the constituencies. In Municipal, School Board, Vestry, and other local elections, the League will, as it finds itself strong enough, run candidates of its own, and by placing trustworthy Socialists on local representative bodies it will endeavour to secure the recognition of the Socialist principle in all the details of local government. "...
> " The League first faded into a Political Committee of the Society, and then merged silently and painlessly into the general body. "

The foregoing is interesting : first, — as showing the original Anarchist connection with Fabian Socialism as we now know it, secondly, — as an example of one of the most usual methods of subverting an existing organization.

An offshoot of the existing organization was here formed, pledged to a policy or policies which might have been repudiated by the parent body. This offshoot being destined to eventual reabsorption into the parent body could thus assure the successful " boring from within " of the old organization.

We are further told by Mr. Pease that in 1888, " a Universities Committee, with Frank Podmore as Secretary for Oxford and G. W. Johnson for Cambridge, had begun the ' permeation ' of the Universities, which has always been an important part of the propaganda of the Society ".

By 1890, the support of a splendidly organized intelligentsia was assured to the socialist cause with the Fabian Society as its propaganda centre and a number of local Fabian societies were formed. They were succeeded by and merged into branches of the Independent Labour Party.

On page 209 of Mr. Pease's book, we glean some more enlightening information which definitely connects the Fabians with the Jew-captured organization of the old International

" The International Socialist and Trade Union Congresses, held at intervals of three or four years since 1889, were at first no more than isolated Congresses, arranged by local organizations constituted for the purpose in the preceding year. Each nation voted as one, or at most, as two units, and therefore no limit was placed on the number of delegates ; the one delegate from Argentina or Japan consequently held equal voting power to the scores or even hundreds from France or Germany. But gradually the organization was tightened up, and in 1907 a scheme was adopted which gave twenty votes each to the leading nations, and proportionately fewer to the others. Moreover a permanent Bureau was established at Brussels, with Emile Vandervelde, the distinguished leader of the Belgian Socialists, later well known in England as the Ministerial representative of the Belgian Government during the war, as Chairman. In England, where the Socialist and Trade Union forces were divided, it was necessary to constitute a special joint committee in order to raise the British quota of the cost of the Bureau, and to elect and instruct the British delegates. It was decided by the Brussels Bureau that the 20 British votes should be allotted ; 10 to the Labour Party, 4 to the I. L. P. (Independent Labour Party) 4 to the British Socialist Party, into which the old S. D. F. (Socialist Democratic Federation) had merged, and 2 to the Fabian Society, and the British Section of the International Socialist Bureau was, and still remains, constituted financially and electorally on that basis. "

In the same chapter of his history, Mr. Pease explains that " half of two-thirds of the Fabians belonged also to the I. L. P. and nearly all the I. L. P. leaders were or had been members of the Fabian Society ". The I. L. P. was founded in January 1893 by Keir Hardie and Friedrich Engels, the disciple of Karl Marx.

This Independent Labour Party virtually took over the active political work of the Fabian Society, leaving to the parent body its literary and propaganda status.

At a conference at Leeds in 1899 it was resolved to form a Local Government Information Bureau, to be jointly managed by the I. L. P. and the Fabian Society.

In 1904, Sidney Webb became chairman of the Technical Education Board which up to that date directed all higher education for England. This event, and the concerted working of a group of Fabians within the London County Council, considerably enhanced the opportunities for further socialistic expansion of the Society.

It should be borne in mind that Anarchists and Socialists, while seeming to differ in their social utopian policies, agree on the first step necessary to provoke an economic condition which would enable them to reorganize the world to their liking.

This first step is the destruction of present day civilisation, the good with the bad.

Their aim of Destruction is the same, only the method whereby it is to be effected differs. This effort at destruction accounts for the community of action of Socialists and Anarchists throughout history.

According to the Anarchists : All must be destroyed in order that all may be rebuilt, but, according to the Socialists, the present system will fall of itself by the passage of certain measures into law. These laws, while framed to appeal to popular fancy, once introduced, can be administered in such a way as to operate the International Destruction which is the primary aim of both parties.

Writing of Babeuf and Buonarotti and their abortive conspiracy of 1796, Professor H. J. Laski in The Socialist Tradition in the French Revolution states that " the strategy they (the Babouvists) invented has provided ever since the methodology of revolutionary socialism at least in its large outline ".

The Fabians form numerous detached societies, committees, study clubs, associations, leagues, schools and what not, in order to gain the support of non-socialists for such sections of the Socialist programme which might fail to receive public approbation if the connection with the World Socialist-Communist scheme was revealed. Thus the " sucker lists " of capitalistic supporters of socialism are made available for England. The system is the same in America.

Among the societies which owe their origin to Fabian initiative may be mentioned :

The London School of Economics, founded 1895.

The Fabian Research, founded 1912, later known as the Labour Research Bureau.

The Pan-Fabian Organization, founded 1907.

The University Socialist Federation, founded 1912, later known as University Labour Clubs.

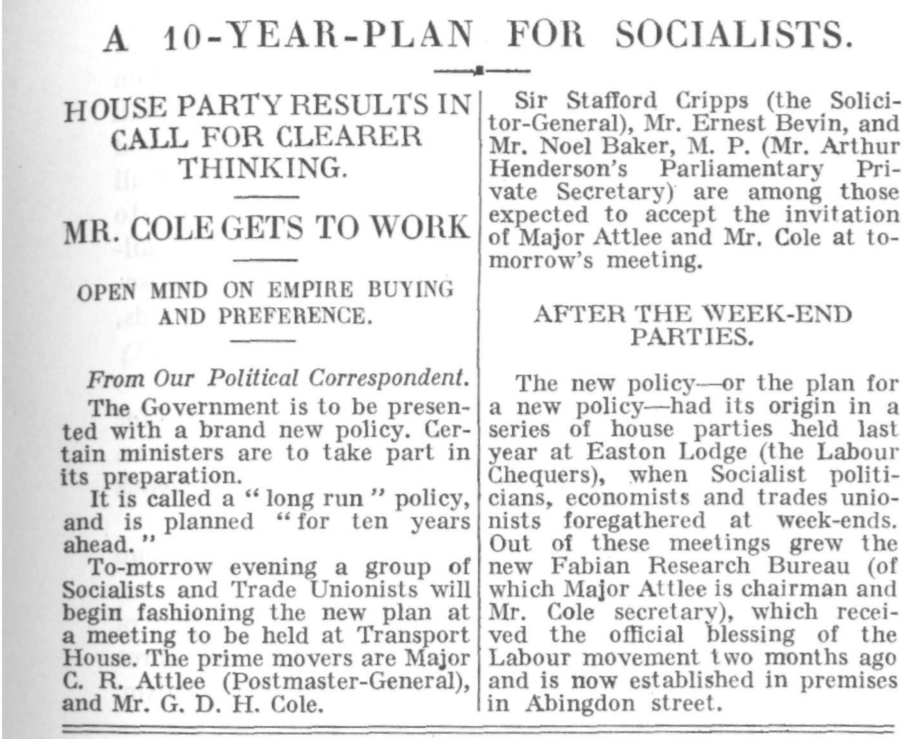
The Labour Representation Committee, founded 1900, known after 1906 as The Labour Party.

Among the members of the Fabian Association during the last 30 years we find the following names : Bertrand Russell (now Earl Russell), Professor H. J. Laski, Mrs. Sidney Webb (now Lady Passfield), H. G. Wells (resigned), F. W. Pethick-Lawrence, George Lansbury, Philip Snowden (ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lord Privy Seal) and Mrs Snowden (now Viscount and Viscountess Snowden), Will Crooks, Sir Sidney Olivier (ex-Secretary of State for India, now Lord Olivier), the late Brig.-Gen. C. B. Thomson (subsequently Lord Thomson, late Secretary of State for Air), Arthur Henderson (ex-Home Secretary) and Noel Buxton.

It is rather interesting to note how many Fabians have found their way to the House of Lords.

Mr. Pease remarks further that after the Labour Party came into office in 1923, "about half the remaining Fabians in Parliament became either Under-Secretaries or Parliamentary Private Secretaries to Ministers, all positions of greater or less influence with the Government".

The following extract from the Evening Standard, London, May 28, 1931, shows the accuracy of Mr. Pease's statement and will serve to further enlighten our readers as to the full significance of present events.



A 10-YEAR-PLAN FOR SOCIALISTS.

HOUSE PARTY RESULTS IN CALL FOR CLEARER THINKING.

MR. COLE GETS TO WORK

OPEN MIND ON EMPIRE BUYING AND PREFERENCE.

From Our Political Correspondent.

The Government is to be presented with a brand new policy. Certain ministers are to take part in its preparation.

It is called a "long run" policy, and is planned "for ten years ahead."

To-morrow evening a group of Socialists and Trade Unionists will begin fashioning the new plan at a meeting to be held at Transport House. The prime movers are Major C. R. Attlee (Postmaster-General), and Mr. G. D. H. Cole.

Sir Stafford Cripps (the Solicitor-General), Mr. Ernest Bevin, and Mr. Noel Baker, M. P. (Mr. Arthur Henderson's Parliamentary Private Secretary) are among those expected to accept the invitation of Major Attlee and Mr. Cole at to-morrow's meeting.

AFTER THE WEEK-END PARTIES.

The new policy—or the plan for a new policy—had its origin in a series of house parties held last year at Easton Lodge (the Labour Chequers), when Socialist politicians, economists and trades unionists foregathered at week-ends. Out of these meetings grew the new Fabian Research Bureau (of which Major Attlee is chairman and Mr. Cole secretary), which received the official blessing of the Labour movement two months ago and is now established in premises in Abingdon street.

One of the chief ideals of this Society is the extinction of the poor as evidenced by the following extract from The Sunday Express (London) of May 17, 1931.

Says G.B.S.

DON'T GIVE TO THE POOR

THEY OUGHT TO BE ABOLISHED !

Mr. Bernard Shaw, speaking at Letchworth yesterday, advised the extinction of the poor.

"Never give anything to the poor," he said. "They are useless, dangerous, and ought to be abolished, and until this country becomes determined that it shall never again have a poor man or woman or child in it, it will not be a country worth living in."

The best known and cleverest Destructionist laws now on the statute books are those of the Income Tax and the Inheritance Tax. This form of taxation is calculated eventually to precipitate Municipalisation and Nationalisation which also are part of the Fabian scheme for world peifection. This ideal is to be achieved by the gradual expropriation and pauperisation of all classes by systematic, economic pressure, each class to be separately ruined according to the best means available for ruining it. Municipalisation and Nationalisation means control by government, or, in other words, domination by ONE GREAT TRUST.

Is this Socialism ?

There is nothing new or extraordinary in this plan for World control by a centralized, Super-Capitalist power.

It is the plan so minutely explained in The Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion.

It is the plan of modern Judeo-Masonic Russian Soviet Communism.

It is the plan of Weishaupt's Illuminati and that of International Freemasonry symbolized by the three points of Albert Pike — Destruction, Materialism, Imposition.

One is all and all is one.

It should here be noted that the tax question is handled no differently by Conservative Governments, when in power, than by Labour or Liberal Governments and it is well known that any Conservative daring to question the Fabian policy of confiscatory taxation would commit immediate political suicide.

The stranglehold of Fabian Babouvism on England may however eventually be mitigated by an international organization of taxpayers combining as a counter revolutionary body. Who knows ?

CHAPTER CVII

GAELIC ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

(Founded 1884)

Founded by Parnell, Michael Cusack and Michael Davitt in 1884. It was related to the Irish movement.

CHAPTER CVIII

HERMETIC SOCIETY

(Founded 1884)

This spiritistic Society was founded in London on May 9, 1884, by Anna Kingsford and Edward Maitland, both members of the Theosophical Society.

According to R. Guenon, it advocates a Gnostic mixture of Christianity and Buddhism.

For Anna Kingsford, as for Mme Blavatsky, the Christs are beings who have succeeded in developing in themselves certain superior powers latent in all men. This is presumably the " Serpent Power " or Kundalini, the Sex Force. Jesus is not the historical personage Jesus Christ. Jesus is only an initiate, one of " the Christs " incarnating through the ages in different bodies, other incarnations of the " Christ force " having been in the persons of Maitreya Bouddha, Krishna and the various prophets of the other religions.

As a foundation for a Universal World Religion, the idea is a clever one but its consequences are that anyone who makes enough fuss about himself can become a god, thus reducing the idea ad absurdum.

This is the principle which when further elaborated leads to the usual Gnostic belief that " Man is God ".

Man being God is thus infallible therefore, as God can " do what he will ". This convenient principle leads in turn to an equally convenient code of morals which, unfortunately, eventually leads to the abyss.

Anna Kingsford and her society were in close contact with MacGregor Mathers the head of " Golden Dawn ".

The Hermetic Society eventually became known as " The Esoteric Christian Union ".[1]

CHAPTER CIX

ORDER OF THE GOLDEN DAWN IN THE OUTER

(Founded 1888)

This society was founded in England in 1888. It admits men and women.

As a branch of Occult Masonry, its esoteric teaching is a blend of modern Tibetan magic and Theosophy. (See Chapters on Lamaism and Theosophy).

In his History of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia [1] M. W. Supreme Magus Dr. William Wynn Westcott IX, P. M. P. Z., 30°, informs us that " in association with himself and Dr. Woodman ", R. W. Frater MacGregor Mathers J. S. M. IX " founded the Isis-Urania Temple of the Hermetic Students of the G. D. (Golden Dawn) and that he (Mathers) was then (in 1900) the Chief Adept of the entirely Esoteric Order of the R. R. and A. C. in France, Great Britain and other countries. "

Thus the story basing its foundation on the finding, by A. F. A. Woodford, of a German manuscript at a bookstall[2] is shown to have been a fabrication calculated presumably to hide the direct connection with the " Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia. "

William Wynn Westcott in the above mentioned book gives the following epitome of the Masonic career of Mathers.

" R. W. Frater MacGregor Mathers (Comte MacGregor de Glenstrae), the present Junior Substitute Magus, was admitted to Freemasonry in the Hengist Lodge at Bournemouth and was an early member of the Correspondence Circle of the Quatuor Coronati Lodge at which he was a frequent speaker before he settled in Paris. He is a very famous occult student, and has contributed several learned lectures to the Metropolitan College. He is the author of the Kabalah Unveiled, the Tarot Cards, The Key of Solomon the King and The Book of the Sacred Magic of Abra-Melin the Mage. "

Mrs. MacGregor Mathers, the sister of Henri Bergson, the Jewish-French philosopher, received clairvoyantly most of the early teaching still used in the order from the " Hidden Secret Chiefs of the Third Order. " [3]

A. E. Waite was an early member of the " Golden Dawn ", but at a meeting held at Dr. Felkin's residence in 1903, according to Dr. Felkin's history, " a split occurred, as Waite and his followers denied the existence of the Third Order, refused to have examinations in the inner, objected to all occult work, and said they must work upon purely mystic lines. "

In consequence of the split, the old organization of Golden Dawn changed its name to Stella Matutina with Aleister Crowley and William Wynn Westcott at its head while the schismatic order, under A. E. Waite and MacGregor Mathers, the latter a friend of Rudolph Steiner, retained the old name of Golden Dawn.

MODERN ILLUMINISM

ANCIENT ORDER OF ORIENTAL TEMPLARS
(ORDO TEMPLI ORIENTIS)

Exoteric names

ORDER OF TO OV.

Esoteric name

(Founded 1895)

Modern Illuminism, as we know it, was founded by Karl Kellner in 1895. He died in 1905 and was succeeded by Theodore Reuss, the agent of John Yarker.

In 1902, Reuss named William Wynn Westcott as Regent of the Illuminati in England thus establishing the interlocking directorate between Soc. Rosicruciana in Anglia and German Illuminism. This connection is further explained in the article on Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia in Chapter LXXXVII.

According to The Equinox [1] Vol III No. 1, 1919, the official organ of both the A∴ A∴ (Atlantean Adepts) and the 0. T. 0. initiates are taught that this latter order is " a body of initiates in whose hands are concentrated the wisdom and knowledge of the following bodies : —

[1] In an Appendix to this book, 33 pages are transcribed from the eleventh book of The Equinox, an organ of the sect. This eleventh volume having been withdrawn from circulation is little known. It was published in Detroit, U. S. A., in 1919. There is no copy of it in the British Museum but copies of all books published in the United States of America are kept in the Library of Congress at Washington, D. C.

17. The Order of the Martinists.
18. The Order of the Sat Bhai, and many other orders of equal merit, if of less fame.

It does not include the A∴ A∴ with which august body it is, however, in close alliance. "

This publication also states that " the dispersion of the original secret wisdom having led to confusion, it was determined by the Chiefs of all these Orders to recombine and centralize their activities, even as white light, divided in a prism, may be recomposed. "

" Secret wisdom " in the case of masonic societies of any kind is invariably synonymous with " occult knowledge. "

In the case of the 0. T. 0. the practice of the " secret wisdom " begins with the understanding of the very name of the order.

The book referred to above contains the following information on page 200 : " The letters O. T. O. represent the words Ordo Templi Orientis (Order of the Temple of the Orient, or Oriental Templars); but they have also a secret meaning for initiates. "

Were we to make a guess at the secret meaning ot the O. T. O., we would borrow the words of Godfrey Higgins, the author of Anacalypsis and, with him, " penetrate into the Sanctum Sanctorum of the ancient philosophers of India, Egypt, Syria and Greece. " There shall we discover the secret meaning of the Order of To Ov, Greek term for the emanation of fluid or invisible fire. It is the To Ov of neo-platonism of which Godfrey Higgins writes : " I am convinced that the emanation of the To Ov was believed to be this fire. "

The To Ov was supposed to be duplicate, then from that to triplicate. From him proceeded the male Logos, and the female Aura or Anima or Holy Ghost in ancient times always female. The To Ov was supposed in himself to possess the two principles of Generation.

The reader who already knows the meaning of this " fire " otherwise known as Kundalini, sex-force, astral light, etc. will easily understand the phallic hidden meaning of the O. T. O. However, it would hardly be fair to leave such a statement under the classification of either suggestion or assumption. Proof might be demanded and proof therefore is appended.

The Equinox states that " it was Karl Kellner who revived the esoteric organization of the 0. T. 0. and initiated the plan now happily complete of bringing all occult bodies again under one governance. "

In the " Gnostic Mass " printed in the same volume, mention is made, in one of the orisons, of the saints among which are named Karl Kellner and Theodore Reuss.

From notes written by Theodore Reuss himself and from correspondence between him and Karl Kellner, the basic principles of the 0. T. 0. have become known and bear out the statement that this organization was formed for the express purpose of substituting the phallic religion for Christianity.

The conception of the O. T. O. was far from being original but it was undoubtedly reformed by the two Germans above named.[2] It was no vain boast on the part of the writer in The Equinox to name all the orders as concentrated in the O. T. O., for proof has been obtained that both Karl Kellner and Theodore Reuss were, among a host of others, in close masonic relationship with John Yarker, William Wynn Westcott, Supreme Magus of Soc. Rosicruciana in Anglia, a Warden of the Grand Lodge of England, Papus of the Martinists, etc.

Apparently all concurred in the formation of the esoteric doctrine of the Order of Oriental Templars.

In the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris is filed a document, dated 1917, containing the constitution and certain information concerning the O. T. O. It states that " The Ancient Order of Oriental Templars ", an organization formerly known as The Hermetic Brotherhood of Light, has been re-organized and re-constituted.

As evidenced by the Reuss papers, one may gather that the O. T. O. has existed since 1902. Prior to 1917, the official date of its foundation, it was presumably a secret organization, operating under [2] The German Organ of the Sect was The Oriflamme.

Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites, acting, as these papers indicate, as the link between this organization and the various unofficial International occult groups. [3]

The prominent persons connected with this organization at its start were : John Yarker, William Wynn Westcott, Papus, Karl Kellner, Theodore Reuss, MacGregor Mathers, Franz Hartmann and Aleister Crowley.

Apart from its secret phallic doctrine the 0. T. 0. seeks to unite with a revival of Gnosticism, the study of the Jewish Cabala, Esoteric Lamaism and Indian Yogism. It seeks to extract from their combined doctrines the practical application of Eastern Sorcery and Western Witchcraft, wherein medicine and hypnotism occupy a place of prime importance, serving solely materialistic ends.

The reader can always be referred to the press for descriptions of the practices of the present Chief of the Order who was obliged to leave Italy following an investigation into his magic practices at Cefalú near Palermo in Sicily.

Calling himself " The Master Therion", Aleister Crowley is also known under the name of Frater Perdurabo and, from his own extravagant writings, we know that he looks upon himself as a reincarnation of Eliphas Levi etc. etc.

To give the reader a feeble idea of the perversion of the O. T. O. we quote the following : — " The blood is the life. This simple statement is explained by the Hindus by saying that the blood is the principal vehicle

3. Article IV, Section 3, of the constitution of the O. T. O. provides that " The person (male or female) filling this office (head) shall serve for life or until his or her resignation " and Article IV, Section 4, provides that " The person filling this office shall appoint his or her successor. " of vital Prana. There is some ground for the belief that there is a definite substance, not isolated as yet, whose presence makes all the difference between live and dead matter.[4]

" It would be unwise to condemn as irrational the practice of those savages who tear the heart and liver from an adversary, and devour them while yet warm. In any case it was the theory of the ancient Magicians, that any living being is a storehouse of energy varying in quantity according to the size and health of the animal, and in quality according to its mental and moral character. At the death of the animal this energy is liberated suddenly.

" The animal should therefore be killed within the Circle, or the Triangle, as the case may be, so that its energy cannot escape. An animal should be selected whose nature accords with that of the ceremony, — thus, by sacrificing a female lamb one would not obtain any appreciate quantity of the fierce energy useful to a Magician who was invoking Mars. In such a case a ram would be more suitable. And this ram should be virgin — the whole potential of its original total energy should not have been diminished in any way. For the highest spiritual working one must accordingly choose that victim which contains the greatest and purest force. A male child of perfect innocence and high intelligence is the most satisfactory and suitable victim.

" For evocations it would be more convenient to place the blood of the victim in the Triangle, the idea being that the spirit might obtain from the blood this subtle but physical substance which was the quintessence of its life in such a manner as to enable it to take on a visible and tangible shape.

4. The Master Therion, Magick, published 1930, p. 93.

" Those magicians who object to the use of blood have endeavoured to replace it with incense. For such a purpose the incense of Abramelin may be burnt in large quantities.

" But the bloody sacrifice, though more dangerous, is more efficacious ; and for nearly all purposes human sacrifice is the best. The truly great Magician will be able to use his own blood, or possibly that of a disciple, and that without sacrificing the physical life irrevocably. "

To such persons as have read in L'Elue du Dragon [5] page 43, the description of the first impressions of Clotilde Bersone (Comtesse de Coutanceau) afterwards the Inspiree (Seeress) cf the Grande Loge des Illuminés de Paris, the following note by " The Master Therion " will be of interest. —

" It is here desirable to warn the reader against the numerous false orders which have impudently assumed the name of Rosicrucian. The Masonic Societas Rosicruciana is honest and harmless ; and makes no false pretences ; if its members happen as a rule to be pompous busybodies, enlarging the borders of their phylacteries, and scrupulous about cleaning the outside of the cup and the platter ; if the masks of the Officers in their Mysteries suggest the Owl, the Cat, the Parrot, and the Cuckoo, while the Robe of their Chief Magus is a Lion's Skin, that is their affair. " [6]

Animal masks referred to above as being used in the mysteries of the Rosicrucian Order are indeed also described by Clotilde Bersone in L'Elue du Dragon.

They were a distinctive feature of the Masonic gathering in the Grand Lodge of the Illumines d'Orienl at Constantinople at which she claims to have been present.

It is even suggested by Miss Murray in The Witchcult in Western Europe that most of the legends of transformations of witches into cats, horses and other animals arose from references by other witches to craft adepts by the costumes and masks these had worn during the witchcraft ceremonies.

Thus again, the witchcraft of the Middle Ages is reflected in the occultism of today.

The philosophical teachings of the 0. T. 0. seem to be adequately summarized by its leader in the following sentence[7] : " This is in fact the formula of our Magick; we insist that all acts must be equal ; that existence asserts the right to exist ; that unless evil is a mere term expressing some relation of haphazard hostility between forces equally self-justified, the universe is as inexplicable and impossible as uncompensated action ; that the orgies of Bacchus and Pan are no less sacramental than the Masses of Jesus ; that the scars of syphilis are sacred and worthy of honour as such. "

Eliphas Levi, quoting from the Oupnek'hat, the standard Indian book on Magic (Histoire de la Magie, p. 76) outlines the same moral code ;

" It is permissible to lie in order to facilitate marriage and in order to exalt the virtues of a brahmin or the qualities of a cow.

" God is truth and in him light and darkness are one. He who knows that never lies, for, if he wishes to lie his lie becomes a truth.

" Whatever sin he commits, whatever evil work he does, he is never guilty. Even should he be twice parricide, even though he should have killed a brahmin initiated into the mysteries of the Vedas, whatever he may do, his light is never less, for, says God, ' I am the universal soul, in me are good and evil to correct one another. ' He who knows that is never a sinner ; he is universal as I am myself. "[8] [7] The Master Therion, op. cit., p. 338.

---

Is this not the ever recurring dogma of Manichean Dualism ?

Every effort is made to attract wealthy people, mostly women, to the " Profess Houses " of the Order of O. T. O. In these centres, where the " Nudity cult " and other eccentricities are cultivated, the victims become quickly amenable to the insinuating suggestions of such as covet their wordly goods.

To enhance its attractiveness to the public, the system is represented as embodying the secret knowledge which leads to all material success. Playing on the egoistical instincts of humanity, the O. T. O. attracts within its orbit all those who, with inordinate ambition and limited capacity, hope in some nebulous way, through the Glorification of self, to save humanity.

There seems no doubt that the head of the O. T. O. is justified in saying that this order reigns above all others as, everything, from political espionage to blackmail may emanate from it.

Like numerous organizations such as Mazdaznans and Rudolf Steiner's Anthroposophism, it lays great stress upon physical culture and rhythmic movements. Pretences of producing renewed youth and vigour attracts many adepts. Moreover, it promises its initiates the attainment of their ambition and desires. The 8. Oupnek'hat, instruction 108, pages 85 and 92 of the first volume of the translation by Anquetil.

" Do what thou wilt " applies to this in an ambiguous manner. The inmates of " Fontainebleau ", under the hypnotic power of a certain Oriental, said by some to be an Armenian and by others a Jew, have offered the spectacle of automata performing movements, dances etc., under the will of their master. It was even said that under the will of this new Svengali, voiceless people sang beautifully and inartistic personalities worked as well as renowned artists and sculptors.

Advertising the accomplishment of such feats attracted many people to Fontainebleau. What actually took place there has several times been revealed before the French law courts and in articles written by erstwhile inmates of this institution.

As to the American house of the same type, the scandalous happenings taking place within its precincts have sometimes been reported in the Press. Yet to the amazement of a great many, such places as the " Abode of Love " in England, the " House of Rest " at Nyack in America and Gourgief's establishment in Fontainebleau remain undisturbed.

On entering the O. T. O., aspirants must acquiesce in the complete subordination of their " will " to that of " Unknown Superiors ". This provision places them entirely in the power of the " Order " and its secret chiefs.

Under occult dominion Art, Music and Politics all tend to the same end : confusion, a calculated and induced confusion : for minds that are confused will obey and bow to the hidden masters !

The rule of the Triangle and Ellipse, together with a crude Geometry in modern art, is the rule of Masonry in aesthetics.

Standing before a meaningless Cubist canvas at an art exhibition one day, a puzzled amateur asked " But what does it mean ? " To which the painter replied. " It's not a question of what it means, it's a question of what is its effect on the observer. "

Consciously or unconsciously the artist spoke the truth. Psychiatrists tell us that this school of insidious humbug is simply an elaboration of the policy of the interruption of ideas leading to total incoherence and madness. " Cubist " art is an effort to produce certain psychic effects obtainable by optical illusion. Beauty has nothing to do with it. The cubist school is not in the realm of art at all. It belongs to that of medicine and psychic science. Those who forget that this devastating fad of " The Interrupted Idea " can be extended to music, literature and every other phase of human effort, do so at their peril.

A mind that is positive cannot be controlled. For the purposes of occult dominion minds must therefore be rendered passive and negative in order that control can be achieved. Minds consciously working to a definite end are a power, and power can oppose power for good or for evil. The scheme for world dominion might be doomed by the recognition of this principle alone, but, as it is unfortunately unrecognized, it remains unchallenged.

Destruction, Materialism, Imposition. These are the three points of Albert Pike and they seem to be ruling the world today.

CHAPTER CXI

THEOSOPHIGAL SOCIETY OF AMERICA

(Founded 1895)

In November 1894 William Q. Judge rebelled against Mrs. Besant's domination of The Theosophical Society.

On April 27th, 1895, he and his followers seceded from the Adyar Society and constituted an independent organization under the name " Theosophical Society of America ". This organization, which still exists, has its headquarters at Point-Loma, California, It was first presided over by Ernest Hargrove and later by Katherine A. Tingley. It has branches in Sweden and Holland.

Katherine A. Tingley, known to her followers as " The Purple Mother ", was in touch with Bro. Theodore Reuss, Magus Supremus in Mundo of the Esoteric Rosicrucians.

This sect it appears, practises Raja Yoga.

Parents desirous of having their children brought up under its aegis must forfeit all their natural rights of inquiry concerning their children's welfare, this prohibition extending even to their right to assist at lessons.

Pupils whose education has been entrusted to the sect are taught to observe absolute secrecy towards their parents as regards matters concerning the school.

Notwithstanding such subversive rules the school is well attended.

THE YOUNG TURK MOVEMENT

(Founded 1900)

Not till 1900, when the Grand Orient virtually took over the Young Turk Party which was composed chiefly of Jews, Greeks and Armenians, did this movement assume a serious aspect.

Vicomte Leon de Poncins in The Secret Powers behind the Revolution (page 66) giving the history and origin of the Young Turk Movement adds the following information taken from the Masonic organ of the Grand Orient, The Acacia (October 1908).

" A secret Young Turk council was formed and the whole movement was directed from Salonica.

Salonica, the most Jewish town in Europe — 70,000 Jews out of a population of 100,000 — was specially suitable for the purpose. It already contained several Lodges in which the revolutionaries could work without being disturbed. These Lodges are under the protection of European diplomacy and as the Sultan was without weapons against them his fall was inevitable. "

He further adds : —

" The Young Turks entered these lodges and met there in order to organize and prepare the revolution. Moreover a great number of the members of the lodges strengthened the secret Young Turk ' Committee of Union and Progress '... On the 1st May, 1909, the representatives of 45 Turkish lodges met in Constantinople and founded the ' Grand Orient Ottoman '. Mahmoud Orphi Pasha was nominated Grand Master... A short time after a Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites was also founded and recognized by the French and Italian authorities. "

To complete this information, we may add that two of the Salonica lodges, those of Macedonia and Labor and Lux were connected with the Grand Orient of Italy and that of Veritas was under the Grand Orient of France.

CHAPTER CXIV

THE AMSTERDAM INTERNATIONAL

(Founded 1901)

The International Federation of Trade Unions, not to be confused with The Second International, was founded at Copenhagen in 1901.

It ceased to function during the War, but was re-established as The Amsterdam International in 1919.

Its objects include the following :

To unite the international working class.

To promote the interests and activities of the trade union movement.

The development of international social legislation.

To avert war and combat reaction.

For root of this movement see Chapter LXXXV.

CHAPTER CXV

STELLA MATUTINA

(Founded 1903)

The foundation of Stella Matutina, with Aleister Crowley and Wm. Wynn Westcott at its head, was the result of a split and consequent reorganization of the old Golden Dawn in the Outer which occurred in 1903. It admits men and women.

Dr. Felkin, who had been elected one of the three members of the Council governing the Society in 1902 was appointed head of Stella Matutina by Rudolph Steiner in 1912 at which date A. E. Waite's temple, Golden Dawn, received the order to join with it.

Dr. Felkin held this office until 1919.

We are told by " Inquire Within ", author of Light-bearers of Darkness (page 152) at one time Ruling Chief of the Mother Temple and of the Stella Matutina and R. R. & A. C. that after the oath of Initiation into Stella Matutina has been taken the candidate is terrorised by the following threat... " If thou shalt fail of this thy oath of secrecy, thy blood may be poured out and thy body broken, for heavy is the penalty exacted by the Guardians of the Hidden Knowledge from those who wilfully betray their trust. "

Its occult teaching is identical with that of Golden

Dawn from which it issued and, for some of its shameful practices, the reader must be referred to Light-bearers of Darkness by « Inquire Within. " It is regrettable that this expose does not take the reader back to the early stages of initiation.

CHAPTER CXVI

SINN FEIN

(Founded 1905)

Sinn Fein, an Irish patriotic organization advocating boycott and passive resistance against England was founded by Arthur Griffiths in 1905. He was succeeded as president in 1917 by Eamon de Valera. By that time the Society was controlled and subsidized by the Clan-na-Gael and Germany.

After the start of the World War in 1914, it asserted itself as the open foe of England.

Richard Dawson in Red Terror and Green, page 176, publishes a despatch sent to Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador in the United States at that date. The document was marked " very secret " and dated April 18, 1916. It reads as follows :

" Judge Cohalan (of New York, U. S. A.) requests the transmission of the following remarks : The revolution in Ireland can only be successful with the support of Germany : otherwise England will be able to suppress it, even though it be only after a hard struggle. Therefore help is necessary. This should consist principally of aerial attacks on England and a diversion of the fleet simultaneously with the Irish revolution. Then if possible a landing of arms and ammunition in Ireland and possibly some officers from Zeppelins. This would enable the Irish ports to be closed against England. The services of the revolution, therefore, may decide the war. "[1]

The part played by the Irish-Roman Catholic church in Irish National and International politics is gathered from the following telegram from Count von Bernstorff to the German Foreign Office.

" The Bishop of Cork having died, there is a sharp contest over the succession. The present Assistant Bishop, Daniel Cohalan, is the choice of the local clergy ; but England is using unusual efforts to have — appointed. — is strongly anti-German, although Germany, at our request, released him shortly after the outbreak of war. Assistant-Bishop Cohalan is cousin of Judge Cohalan, and strongly Nationalist and pro-German. He was the intermediary between the insurgent Cork Volunteers and the British military authorities, and publicly exposed the gross breach of faith of the English with the surrendered men. Hence the effort to defeat him through the English Envoy at the Vatican. It would have a great moral effect in Rome if Cohalan were chosen. If Germany can exert any influence to bring about this result it would defeat the English intrigue against her interests. "[2]

Dr. Daniel Cohalan was chosen.

Let us repeat that by a close study of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Knights of Columbus, one cannot fail to see the control that Freemasonry exercises over the Irish-Roman Catholic church. This, unfortunately, is a phase of the international situation which is generally overlooked.

In an effort to dissociate politics from religion, writers on these subjects have lost sight of the fact that they are viewing a fight between two theocrasies, Roman Catholicism and Freemasonry.

CHAPTER CXVII

THE HONOURABLE FRATERNITY OF ANTIENT MASONRY

(FEMALE LODGES)

(Founded 1908)

This order, which began its existence as an organization in 1908, thanks to the efforts of the Rev. Geikie Cobb, admitting both men and women on equal terms, no longer accepts men as candidates, deeming their proper place to be in Lodges working under the jurisdiction of the United Grand Lodge of England. It seeks to supplement the work of Grand Lodge.

In 1920, it presented a petition to The Grand Lodge of England for examination with a view to recognition. To have acceded to the request would have been poor policy and, in any case, unnecessary, so Grand Lodge gave the usual answer and the matter ceased to be further discussed.

By 1927, there were 12 Lodges of this order in Great Britain. We know it is the policy of the official body to deny the existence of "real female masonry" and we also know that many English Masons of high rank as well as members of other rites continue to believe that there are no " real " women's lodges.

These lodges, supposed to have no connection with the Co-masonic lodges under the Grand Orient of France are however an offshoot of this body working the first three masonic degrees only.

Mrs. Reginald Halsey, Grand Mistress, died on December 27, 1927.

CHAPTER CXVIII

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA

(Founded 1908)

The " Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America " was founded in 1908. Until then it had been the " National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers ", founded in 1901.

Its constituent bodies are —

" Baptist Churches North, National Baptist Convention, Free Baptist Churches Christian Church, Churches of God in N. A. (general eldership), Congregational Churches, Disciples of Christ, Friends, Evangelical Synod of N. A., Evangelical Church, Methodist Protestant Church, Methodist Episcopal Church, Methodist Episcopal Church South, African M. E. Church, African M. E. Zion Church, Coloured M. E. Church, Moravian Church, Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, Presbyterian Church in the United States (South) Primitive Methodist Church, National Council of Protestant Episcopal Church, Reformed Church in America, Reformed Church in the United States, Reformed Episcopal Church, Seventh Day Baptist Churches, United Brethren Church, United Presbyterian Church, United Lutheran Church (consultative body). "

Further data from Twenty Years of Church Federation by the Federal Council 1929 informs us that the officials of the organization are as follows —

Officials (in part); President, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Methodist Episcopal; vice president Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington,[1] Methodist Episcopal. Executive Committee (in part); Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington,[1] Methodist Episcopal; Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, Congregational; Rev. F. Scott McBride,[1] United Presbyterian ; Bishop James Cannon jr.[1] Methodist Episcopal South ; Bishop Thomas Nicholson,[1] Methodist Episcopal; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Methodist Episcopal.

Administrative Committee (in part) ; Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, Congregational; Bishop James Cannon jr.[1] Methodist Episcopal South ; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Methodist Episcopal.

Members of Federal Council (in part) ; Hon. George W. Wickersham, Protestant Episcopal; Bishop Thomas Nicholson,[1] Methodist Episcopal; Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington[1], Methodist Episcopal; Bishop James Cannon, jr.[1] Methodist Episcopal South.

Most of these officials are also officials of the Anti-saloon League according to the statement of Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington who is reported as saying : — " The league is controlled by the churches. "[2]

The chief achievement, so far, of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, seems to have been the introduction of Prohibition in the United States.

If the general public is unaware of the motives underlying the Prohibition policy of the Federal Council of Churches, it can at any rate judge of its lesults which are a national calamity for the United States. No surer method could have been devised for the promotion of general subversion and complete disregard of law and order. A summary of the situation created by Prohibition was given by Mr. Ralph Shaw during the Congressional hearings already referred to. He thus expressed himself :

" For the first time in the history of the civilized world, organized violators of the law are being financed — the criminal underworld is being financed, and financed magnificently. Prior to this amendment, the underworld was dependent for its scanty living upon houses of ill fame and the gambling resorts. The saloons, deplorable as they were, were at least observing the law, and they paid taxes to the State. Now the enormous revenues which were formerly paid into the Treasury of the Government and the State is going to the underworld, and it is going by millions.

" Organized society, resenting invasion of the liberty of the individual, is willing to pay any price to destroy the invasion, not so much because organized society wants what it pays for, but in order to show those who have trampled upon the spirit of liberty that they cannot possibly succeed. The result is that millions and millions of dollars are pouring into the coffers of the underworld and making it so powerful financially that it is able to debauch prosecutors, judges, legislators and all the instrumentalities of government. "

The truth of these words has been clearly demonstrated in the sensational revelations made lately in the American press. It is not overrating the power of the underworld gangsters to say that they rule the United States for he indeed rules who is able to " debauch prosecutors, judges, legislators and all the instrumentalities of government ".

By its fruits shall you judge a tree.

When, in addition to the above one takes into consideration the friendly support the Federal Council of Churches has constantly afforded to the subversive " Civil Liberties Union ", one is entitled to look upon this Federation as upon a tree, the fruits of which are a menace to the national welfare. [3]

[3] Since the foregoing was written, Tainted Contacts, by Col. Sanctuary, has been published and it fully bears out the truth of the above statements.

CHAPTER CXIX

SUFISM (OCCIDENTAL)

(Founded 1910)

In his history of Persia, Sir John Malcolm devotes much space to Sufism or Sopheism.

It is supposed to have been the esoteric knowledge of the Mohammedan religion and in the possession of Ali and his successors.

Sufism in Persia dates from A. D. 1500 to 1736 when the kingdom was conquered by Nadir Shah.

Godfrey Higgins, in Anacalypsis, concludes that Sufism " is Gnosticism and that if we can discover the one we shall discover the other. " He tells us however that their (Sufist) sect has four stages or degrees and that they have " a species of Masonic or Eleusinian initiation from lower to higher degrees. "

The subtle metaphysics of Sufism are contained in the Dabistan and their esoteric teaching is centred around the principle of life. It is essentially pantheistic, the soul beirg an emanation of God's essence.

The teaching of Sufism was introduced by Knayat-Khan into the West in 1910.[1] The centre of teaching is at Geneva and a big temple has recently been built at Suresnes near Paris for the numerous proselytes made in France.

Sufism is Islamic Mysticism and adapts itself to all dogmas.

CHAPTER CXX

NARODNA ODBRANA

(Founded 1911)

The Narodna Odbrana was founded in 1911 by the well known Dr. Karl Kramarsch, the organizer of the Panslavic movement. It claimed to be a patriotic Serbian organization pledged to free Serbia from Austrian influence and to achieve specifically the independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Its secret lodge however was closely affiliated to the Crna Ruka (The Black Hand, a terrorist society) and it had absorbed the large and well known Slav organization " Omladina ".

" Sokol ", a group of physical culture clubs, served as a mask for the wider activities of the Narodna Odbrana in Bosnia and Herzegovina. This was stated as a fact by Cubrilovitch during his trial following the murder of the Austrian Archduke Franz Ferdinand on June 28th, 1914, which precipitated the World War.

The trial for high treason of Vangaluka which lasted from Nov. 15 to the spring of 1916 gives a short idea of the activities of the Narodna Odbrana.

Its aim, the grouping of all the Slav southern states into one federation, could be achieved only through the death of high standing personalities and the revolution of the masses. The master mind of the attempt on the Archduke's life was Radoslav Kazimirovitch, a Freemason, who had prepared the attempt. He had travelled abroad extensively, visited all the Lodges and had returned with revolvers and bombs. Among the murderers, Sovanovitch, Cabrinovitch and Grabez were Freemasons and Veliko Cubrilovitch was member of Narodna Odbrana and Sokol.

Gabriel Prinzip, a student, a youth ot 19, the murderer of the Archduke, was found to have received arms through Major Tankosich, a Freemason and a friend of the Serbian Crown Prince Alexander, His assistant assasin, the bomb-thrower Cabrinovitch, stated openly at his trial that in Masonry, killing was permissible, adding further that the heir to the throne oi Austria had been condemned to death by the Freemasons two years previously but that hitherto, no one had been found to execute the sentence.

The Serbians however could not divulge the secrets of the Serbian Lodge Narodna Odbrana which, in secret alliance with the Crna Ruka had organized the murder of the Archduke, heir to the Austrian throne. The documents concerning the organization of this murder were however made known and available from the diary of the Serbian Major Todorovitch which was found in Loczinka, and it was clearly demonstrated at the trial for high treason of the bomb-thrower Cabrinovitch that the leading personalities of the Narodna Obrana were Freemasons. (Refer Kolnische Volkzeitung. Nov. 1914.).

The Badische Observer for June 1917 says that it cannot be doubted that the International Lodges (Scottish Rite) must take the full responsibility for the uprising en masse of the Rrethren in the Lodges and it is therefore responsible for the political propaganda (made against Germany) and also for the murder of the Archduke which was organized in the Lodges.

On the 15th of September, 1912, La Revue Internationale des Sociétés Secrètes contained the following lines (page 788).

" Possibly also, some day we will understand the remark made by a Swiss about the Archduke, heir presumptive to the Austrian throne. " He is all right. It is a pity that he has been condemned. He will die on the steps of the throne. "

CHAPTER CXXI

THE ANTHROPOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

(Founded 1913)

The Anthroposophical Society, an offshoot of the Theosophical Society, was founded on Jan 14, 1913. by Rudolph Steiner, who had been secretary of the Theosophical Society of Germany in Berlin since 1902.

Mr. Edouard Schure, the author of the well known book Les Grands Inities, deserted Mrs. Besant and The Theosophical Society at the time of the schism and followed Steiner into the Anthroposophical Society. Later, however, he reverted also to his old allegiance.

Soon after its creation it practically merged with the Theosophical Society.

Stsiner was a friend of Dr. Hubbe Schleiden, the Secretary General of the German Theosophical Society and President of several German secret societies, the Druidenorden, Black Templars, Rosicrucians, Ygdrasil.

The headquarters of the cult and its chief temple " The Goetheaneum" are at Dornach, Switzerland. This building, a crude " Noah's Ark " specimen of architecture, flaunts the symbol of the cult above its main portal, while within its precincts the use of the iod (see Appendix, Chapter on Symbolism) as a decorative motif further emphasizes its esoteric phallic dedication.

Anyone perusing The East in the Light of the West, by Rudolph Steiner, will find on pages 38 and 119 to 125 a fairly comprehensive sample of the Rosicrucian doctrine of Luciferianism as advocated by this branch of the sect.

Its Christ teaching is the same as that of the Theosophical Society and The Hermetic Society.

The Anthroposophical Society is developing an extensive educational system for children of all ages. Its principal school, founded in 1919 by Emil Molt, teaching what is known as the Waldorf System,[1] is at Stuttgart, Germany. The Society conducts a school, The New School, at 40 Leigham Court Road, Streatham, London, and contemplates many further acquisitions along these lines.

Space does not permit of further elaboration of the Steiner Educational system which robs the child of its birthright of innocence and ideals to plunge it into the grossest materialism.

Steiner died in 1925 and was succeeded by Karl Unger.

FRIENDS OF IRISH FREEDOM

(Founded 1915)

This society was founded by Judge Cohalan, T. St. John Gaffney, Jeremiah A. O'Leary and Professor Kuno Meyer in 1915 under the auspices of the Clan-na-Gael.

As regards this organization Captain Pollard gives the following facts : —

" T. St. John Gaffney was appointed representative of the Friends of Irish Freedom for Europe. A bureau was established in Stockholm, whither Gaffney repaired, and from there and at Berlin maintained, along with George Chatterton-Hill, close relations between the German Government and the various Irish-American and Sinn Fein organizations... CHAPTER CXXIII

THE KNIGHTS OF THE KU-KLUX KLAN

(Founded 1915)

The patriotic nationalist Order of the Knights of the Ku-Klux Klan was founded in Georgia on December 4, 1915, by William Joseph Simmons, a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Great Order of Knight Templars. [1]

The " Imperial Palace " of the " Invisible Empire " is at Atlanta, Georgia.

Under sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of its charter the following powers were granted the society : [2]

" 2. The purpose and object of said corporation is to be purely benevolent and eleemosynary, and there shall be no capital stock or profit or gain to the members thereof.

3. The principal office and place of business shall be in Fulton County, Ga., but petitioners desire that the corporation shall have the power to issue decrees, edicts, and certificates of organization to subordinate branches of the corporation in this or other States of the United States and elsewhere, whenever the same shall be deemed desirable in the conduct of its business.

1. The petitioners desire that the society shall have the power to confer an initiative degree in ritualism, fraternal and secret obligations, words, grip, signs, and ceremonies under which there shall be united only white male persons of sound health, good morals, and high character ; and further desire such rights, powers, and privileges as are now extended to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Free and Accepted Order of Masons, Knights of Pythias, et al., under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Georgia.

5. Petitioners desire that there shall be a supreme legislative body in which shall be vested the power to adopt and amend constitutions and by-laws for the regulation of the general purpose and welfare of the order and of the subordinate branches of same.

6. Petitioners desire that the " Imperial Klonvokation " (supreme legislative body) be composed of the supreme officers and "kloppers" (delegates selected by the " klororo " State convention) of the several "realms" (subordinate jurisdiction) : and of such other persons as the constitution and by-laws of the society may provide.

7. Petitioners desire that the business of the society shall be under the control of the " Imperial Wizard " (president), who shall be amenable in his official administration to the " Imperial Kloncilium" (supreme executive committee, a majority of whom shall have authority to act and a two-thirds majority power to veto the official acts of the " Imperial Wizard " (president) in the matters pertaining to the general welfare of the Society: and to contract with other members of the society for the purpose of promoting and conducting its interests and general welfare in any way, manner, or method he may deem proper for the society's progress and stability, subject to the restrictions of the power of the " Imperial Wizard " (president) as is heretofore set forth in this paragraph.

8. Petitioners desire that they shall have the right to adopt a constitution and by-laws and elect the first Kloncilium (supreme executive committee), which shall possess all the powers of the " Imperial Klonvokation " (supreme legislative body) until the first organization and meeting of that body, and shall fix the number, title, and terms of officers composing said " Kloncilium " (supreme legislative committee).

9. Petitioners desire the right to own separate unto itself and to control the sale of all paraphernalia, regalia, stationery, jewelry, and such... "

The executive committee of the K. K. K. was composed of members selected by Simmons himself who held his position as Imperial Wizard " for life or during good behaviour. "[3] As chairman of the advisory board and executive committee of the " kloncilium "[4] he was regarded as the chief power in the order which was to have four degrees. Prior to 1921 however only one of these was in operation.

Among the objects and purposes of the order were the following :[5]

" Article II, Section I. The objects of this order shall be to unite only white male persons, native-born gentile citizens of the United States of America, who owe no allegiance of any nature or degree to any foreign Government, nation, institution, sect, ruler, person, or people; whose morals are good ; whose reputations and vocations are respectable ; whose habits are exemplary; who are of sound minds and at or above the age of 18 years, under a common oath into a common brotherhood of strict regulations for the purpose of cultivating and promoting real patriotism toward our civil Government ; to practice an honorable clannishness towards each other; to exemplify a practical benevolence ; to shield the sanctity of the home and the chastity of womanhood; to forever maintain white supremacy; to teach and faithfully inculcate a high spiritual philosophy through an exalted ritualism, and by a practical devotedness to conserve, protect, and maintain the distinctive institutions, rights, privileges, principles, traditions, and ideals of a pure Americanism. "

The K. K. K. require the following qualifications for membership : [6]

" Article IV, Section I. The qualification for membership in this order shall be as follows : An applicant must be white male gentile person, a native-born citizen of the United States of America, who owes no allegiance of any nature or degree whatsoever to any foreign Government, nation, institution, sect, ruler, prince, potentate, people, or person ; he must be at or above the age of 18 years, of sound mind, good character, of commendable reputation, and respectable vocation, a believer in the tenets of the Christian religion, and whose allegiance, loyalty, and devotion to the Government of the United States of America in all things is unquestionable. "

A few years after its foundation " attacks against the klan were originated and started by the New York World, which was owned or controlled by a Jew, Mr. Pulitzer. "[7]

These attacks ultimately provoked a congressional investigation into the Society during which the details relevant to its organization above given were read into the record. Many charges were brought against the klan on that occasion but none was satisfactorily proved.

After five years of quiet uninterrupted organization, the society, which had adopted for its uniform the white hoods of the Ku-Klux Klan, its ancestor of the reconstruction period of American history, had reached proportions which the subversive element in the United States regarded with great uneasiness.

The Jewish power, in particular, recognized a challenge to its established dominion of American Freemasonry for the K. K. K. constituted an " Imperium in Imperio " in the heart of Judeo-American Freemasonry, a Christian empire sound and free and, as a masonic sect, one refusing to adhere to three of its chief tenets namely; Mongrelization of race, Anti-christianity, and Internationalism.

The great war was over and the new immigrant " Americans " were mostly natives of the different ghettos of Poland, Russia, the Balkan states and Germany. American ideals meant nothing to them. New York city alone numbers over two million Jews in its heterogeneous population and was derisively known by native gentile Americans as " Jew York ".

The Americans had realized too late that in the melting pot of Israel Zangwill nothing melted.

The American Jewish Kahal, fully aware of the menace to their peoples from this new nationalist movement, took precautions against it.

7. ibid., p. 75.

With great political dexterity, the whole press concurring, the K. K. K. was pointed out on all sides as the great foe of the Roman Catholic Church and the Roman Catholics of America, falling in with the ideas, recognized the K. K. K. as merely a branch of their old enemy, Freemasonry.

So the Roman Catholics and the Ku-Klux Klan took up the old fight and the Jews looked on, while their two old rivals proceeded to destroy each other. Divide et Impera !

CHAPTER CXXIV

SINN FEIN IN AMERICA

(Founded 1917)

Sinn Fein was founded in America by James Larkin and Peter Golden Monteith in 1917.

CHAPTER CXXV

THE THIRD INTERNATIONAL

(COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL)

(Founded 1919)

In 1917, Leon Trotzky, through the intercession of an agent acting for Mr. Jacob Schiff of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb and Co. of New York, broke through the British blockade and with a cheque on Max Warburg of Hamburg (Mr. Schiff's brother-in-law) started the Bolshevik revolution in Russia.

Few people seem to be aware of the fact that Mr. Jacob Schiff was the head of the Russian Section of the Jewish International World government (Kahal).[1]

The Third International was founded at a Conference held in Moscow from March 2-6, 1919. The Russian Bolsheviks founded the Third or Communist International, sometimes known as the " Komintern ".

Mrs. Nesta Webster in The Socialist Network (page 44) describes the foundation of this International political subversion centre, in the following words :

" The Manifesto of the Conference, issued on September 8, 1919, calling upon the revolutionaries of the -world, whether Socialist, Syndicalist or Anarchist, to unite as soon as possible and form a unified Communist Party, was drafted by a committee consisting of Lenin, Trotsky, Zinoviev, Rakovsky and Fritz Platten. Zinoviev, alias Radomislsky, alias Apfelbaum, alias Ovse Gershon Aronovitch, was elected President of the Executive Committee. Among those who later formed the Executive were W. Maclaine and Tom Quelch of the B. S. P., Jack Tanner and J. T. Murphy of the Factory and Works Committee of England, Jacques Sadoul, A. Rosmer and Delignet for France, L. Fraina and A. Stocklitsky of the American Communist Party, D. Bilan of the American Communist Labour Party, the Jewish leader of the Dutch Communists, D. Wynkoop, whilst the Petrograd Committee of the Russian Communist Party was represented by N. Bukharin, V. Vorovsky, G. Klinger and Angelica Balbanova ". Let no one believe that these people were personalities in the game. They were agents. Agents only !

" While the Second International was being reconstituted in Geneva the Red or Third International was holding its Second Congress, which on July 19, 1920, met at Petrograd, and then continued its sessions in Moscow from July 23 to August 7.

" This time it was able to call itself a " World Congress ", for no less than thirty-seven countries were represented. [2]

" At this second Congress the attitude of the Komintern was made clear on two important points : Parliamentarianism and Syndicalism. With regard to the former, it was frankly stated that the aim of the Communists was to destroy parliamentarianism, which " has become a democratic form of the rule of the bourgeoisie.

[2] Nesta Webster, The Socialist Network, p. 44 et seq.

At the same time Communists should not refrain from participating in a political campaign on the score that parliament is a bourgeois government institution... The Communist Party enters such institutions not for the purpose of organization work, but in order to blow up the whole bourgeois machinery and the parliament itself from within ".

" The foundation of the Third International had immensely facilitated the spread of Bolshevism by providing the Soviet Government with a camouflage for its activities. No longer could groups or individuals working in co-operation with Moscow be accused of having dealings with a foreign power, but only with an independent Socialist organization.

"By the end of 1919 the Komintern had spread its tentacles all over Europe. In December of that year the West European Secretariat of the Third International, a marvellous organization controlling a network of smaller organizations, both open and secret, was established at a Conference attended by Great Britain. At a further Conference at Amsterdam in February 1920, it was decided to mark off this Secretariat as a Central European Secretariat, with head-quarters at Vienna (later known colloquially as the D. I. K. I.) and to set up a new Western Secretariat at Amsterdam.

A Southern European Bureau of the Third International and an Eastern Secretariat of Propaganda, comprising the Far East, were established. "

In August 1922, the Convention of the Communist Party of America was raided at Bridgeman, Mich., and numerous revolutionary documents were seized by the United States government.

Manifold requests for the recognition of the Soviet government by the United States of America, were later met by a refusal on the part of the Senate.

We extract the following from :[3]

Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Committee of Foreign relations, United States Senate
Sixty-eighth Congress
Senate Resolution 50
Declaring that the Senate of the United States favours the recognition of the Present Soviet Government in Russia
Year 1924

" It is believed that the evidence presented by the Department of State at this hearing has conclusively-established three facts ; First, the essential unity of the Bolshevik organization known as the Communist Party, so-called Soviet Government, and the Communist International, all of which are controlled by a small group of individuals, technically known as the political bureau of the Russian Communist Party. Second, the spiritual and organic connection between this Moscow group and its agent in this country — the American Communist Party and its legal counterpart, the Worker's Party. Not only are these organizations the creation of Moscow, but the latter has also elaborated their activities. While there may have existed in the United States individuals, and even groups, imbued with Marxist doctrines prior to the advent of the Communist International, the existence of a disciplined party equipped with a program aiming at the overthrow of the institutions of this country by force and violence is due to the intervention of the Bolshevik organization into the domestic political life of the United States. The essential fact is the existence of an organization in the United States created by and completely subservient to a foreign organization striving to overthrow the existing social and political order of this country. Third, the subversive and pernicious activities of the American Communist Party and the Worker's Party and their subordinate and allied organs in the United States are activities resulting from and flowing out of the program elaborated for them by the Moscow group. "

---

These findings of the Senate of the United States were duly brought up before the British Parliament on Monday July 7, 1924 (see Hansard).

They were however disregarded.

The United States alone persevered in its condemnation of the tyrannical rulers of Russia in opposition to European countries which had welcomed The Communist International at Locarno and reinstated its ambassadors as the representatives of the Russian people.

The Third International disseminates its subversive propaganda through the medium of so called commercial organizations such as Amtorg in America and Arcos in England. These organizations operate in conjunction with certain powerful banking institutions.

The Communist International and Soviet Russia stand today as monuments ot the Masonic ideal of Albert Pike symbolized by the three ∴.

Destruction — Its organization of the Terror.
Materialism — Its assault on Religion.
Imposition — Its communist State.

CHAPTER CXXVI

THE FASCISTI

(Founded 1919)

From their activities one may assume the Fascisti to be the descendants of the Calderari.

After the European War of 1914 certain banks, conscious of the menace of Satanism, ultimately rechristened Bolshevism, fearing that the monster might get out of hand, selected certain men whose integrity, patriotism and bravery they trusted and, by paying them a stipend, kept them as a nucleus, ready, when the signal was given, to rally to a leader.

Fascism was founded at Milan on March 23, 1919 and Benito Mussolini became the leader of " the First Fifty-Five ".

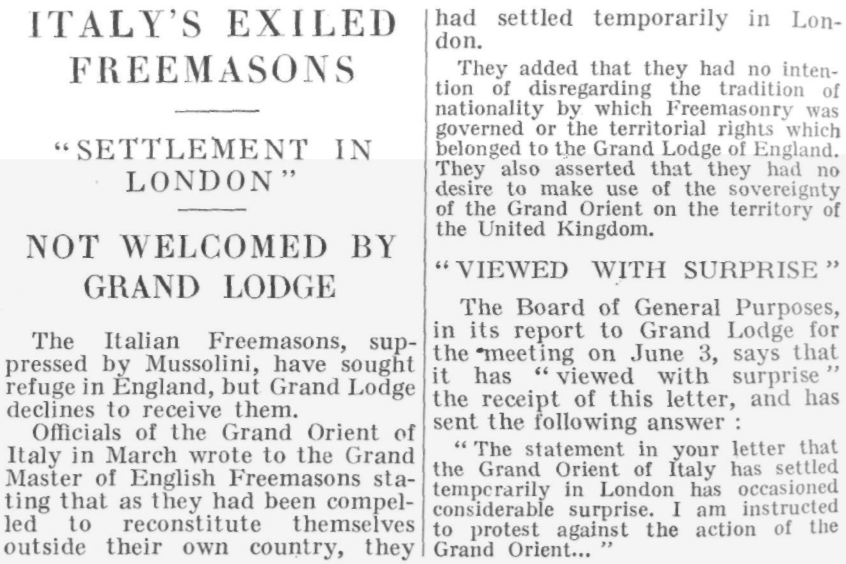
On October 27, 1922, the Fascisti marched on Rome.

At a meeting convoked previously, seventy-two socialist-bolshevist leaders had been summarily dealt with, thus preparing the way for the Coup d'Etat.

Freemasonry was outlawed in Italy in 1922, and the Grand Master of the Grand Orient of Italy, Domizio Torregiani, was arrested and condemned to five years banishment to the Lipari Islands. A similar fate also awaited Ulisse Bacci, son and namesake of the confidential agent of Crispi, Lemmi and Mazzini forty years ago.

The Fascisti also put an end to the activities of the terrorist society known as the Mafia in 1928 which, two years previously, had received its death blow at a trial involving 280 prisoners and 1600 witnesses.

The following reprint from The Daily Telegraph of May 26, 1931, is of interest in this connection :



ITALY'S EXILED FREEMASONS

"SETTLEMENT IN LONDON"

NOT WELCOMED BY GRAND LODGE

The Italian Freemasons, suppressed by Mussolini, have sought refuge in England, but Grand Lodge declines to receive them.

Officials of the Grand Orient of Italy in March wrote to the Grand Master of English Freemasons stating that as they had been compelled to reconstitute themselves outside their own country, they had settled temporarily in London.

They added that they had no intention of disregarding the tradition of nationality by which Freemasonry was governed or the territorial rights which belonged to the Grand Lodge of England. They also asserted that they had no desire to make use of the sovereignty of the Grand Orient on the territory of the United Kingdom.

"VIEWED WITH SURPRISE"

The Board of General Purposes, in its report to Grand Lodge for the meeting on June 3, says that it has "viewed with surprise" the receipt of this letter, and has sent the following answer :

"The statement in your letter that the Grand Orient of Italy has settled temporarily in London has occasioned considerable surprise. I am instructed to protest against the action of the Grand Orient... "

CHAPTER CXXVII

AMERICAN PROHIBITION

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

(1920)

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was passed and became the law of the land in 1920.

The Anti-Saloon League, the organization which thus succeeded in outlawing the use of all wines, spirits and liquors, was founded in 1874 by a group of Oberlin citizens, headed by H. Fairchild, who became its first President.

The suggestion made by F. Scott McBride, General superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, before the Senate lobby Committee, on May 9, 1930, that the chief protagonist of Prohibition in America, The Anti-Saloon League, was "born of God ?nd will fight on while He leads " precipitated altercations which, seeming ridiculous to some, suddenly brought a hitherto unsuspected factor to the fore, in which the Wet and Dry issue is concerned.

As recorded in the New York Herald of May 10, 1930 (Paris Edition), Mr. McBride's remark provoked the following conversation :

" When Mr. McBride, referring to drinking, added,

" Those things in the way of the progress of the Kingdom of God must get out of the way ", Senator Blain demanded :

" What authority have you for claiming that the Anti-Saloon League is a son of God ? "

" The league was born at a prayer meeting in Oberlin. "

" Did you get a message from God that He gave birth to your organization ? "

"No. "

" Then what notice did you receive that this had been a divine conception ? "

" The fact that it was born at a prayer-meeting. We never have such a meeting without opening with a religious service, and we are led by the leadership of God just as the activities of the church. "

" Oh ! So the league dons the cloak of religion ! "

" We do not don the cloak, it is real religion. "

Then Senator Blain, launching into the fray, exclaimed :

" I don't believe that God would approve of some of your practices, and I think your statement is an outrageous and sacrilegious thing. That's how I feel about it ! "

To us, attempting to trace the obscure sources of these movements the following question seems relevant. What "mediumistic " instructions were received at that prayer meeting in Oberlin thus to have fanaticised the faithful ?

We note that all religious extravagances seem indeed to spring from the same root, namely, the exercise of occult hypnotic influences over the masses to determine any movement whether religious, social or political. That this is so has been clearly demonstrated in the articles which deal with the Moravians, Jansenists, Anabaptists, Mormons, etc. but to be obliged to add Prohibition to this list comes rather as a shock.

In order that the reader may realize that we have a logical reason for putting Prohibition in this category of extravagances we must stress the point of alcohol being recognized by occultists as a deterrent to hypnotic influences.

Thus the annulling of the receptivity of mediums, conscious and unconscious, by the general use of alcohol among the masses, must create serious difficulties to such powers, if such indeed there be, who seek to rule by thought transference and absent suggestion.

Alcoholism, being undoubtedly a menace to the life of any nation, it is natural that the soundest element in the community should wish to fight the spread of such an evil. Thus again, the hidden powers wishing to eliminate the use of Alcohol for their own purposes, found fertile ground on which to sow the seed of dissension.

This explains the creation of the Anti-saloon League which was in effect opposed to the interests of the Catholic church (Vatican) the funds of which, in the United States, had been largely invested in the whisky trust by the Jew Judge, Max Pam of New Orleans. The Roman Catholic Church, had, by this act of its agent, thus been put in the unhappy political position of fostering the evil of the Saloon !

The move was a clever one, for the Saloon was a manifest evil and the saloon had to disappear. Its disappearance was precipitated by the drastic Prohibition law as a consequence of which, not temperance, but the 18th Amendment, is the law of the land today.

The following report of what may indeed be termed a national disaster was given on Feb. 12, 1930, by Hon. George S. Graham, in his opening speech as chairman of the House Committee 71st Congress (U. S. A.) on The Prohibition Amendment.[1]

" The eighteenth amendment and the enforcement law have been tested for 10 years, without satisfactory results. Enforcement has left a train of consequences most deplorable and depressing to every patriot. Killings amounting to over 1,360 have resulted in the last 10 years from enforcement. One hundred and fifty-one citizens were killed by prohibition officers, and 64 agents killed by citizens. In one year there were 77,351 arrests for violations, alleged or real. During the first year under prohibition there were 29,000 cases instituted, and during the last fiscal year there were close to 70,000. Demand for more prisons has been made and new ones ordered, which it is said will not give relief from overcrowding except for a period of 5 years or possibly 10. Prison population has jumped 4 per cent per 100,000 in the last five years. When we add corruption, bribery, demoralization of the citizenry, disrespect for law, bootlegging, and kindred offences, does not such a picture call for the fair dispassionate judgement of men and women, to come together and reason over what remedy can be devised to abate this sad condition ? "

Later Mr. Channing Pollock, in his testimony before the Congressional Committee, made the following statements. (Pages 176-178)

" At the most unfortunate and dangerous of all dangerous and unfortunate times, it has bred class hatred, religious hatred, and sectional hatred.

" I know a great deal about the Federal Council of Churches of America and I have worked with them a long time. I know every one of the men mentioned here to-day very intimately — Doctor Cadman and others. That contempt of public opinion led the saloon keeper to bring about prohibition by continuing to do things no people would stand, and I want to say this, that if these men in the Federal Council of Churches are not careful, they will bring about the abolishment of the church for that same reason. People will not stand that sort of dictation.

[1] The Prohibition Amendment. Hearings before the Committee. . . . Washington, 1930, 102788.

I consider the eighteenth amendment the greatest danger in our national existence. Inability to enforce it spells anarchy; ability to enforce it spells despotism. Between the two lies the golden mean of Aristotle, which is good government. "

In reading this indictment we are once more forcibly reminded of the three points of Albert Pike :

Mr. Pollock	Albert Pike
Anarchy	Destruction
Destruction of the Church	Materialism
Despotism	Imposition.

But meanwhile this " Despotism or Imposition " established by Prohibition is being helped along its destructive career by all the occult groups which furthered the passage of the 18th Amendment.

Among these are The Theosophical Society, Good Templars, Women's Christian Temperance Union, Methodist Board of Temperance and Social Service and a host of others !

THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

(Founded 1920)

In 1924, a book by R. M. Whitney called The Reds in America made its appearance. The American Civil Liberties Union founded by Upton Sinclair had by that time become an important branch of the Third International so Mr. Whitney gave several pages to a description of its organization and methods. All these would be quoted here were it not that space forbids. Our chief object in including this minor society among those already mentioned is to show the methods whereby Communism is rendered palatable to those whose world it would destroy.

" The American Civil Liberties Union owes its existence to the notorious pacifist organizations of war-time fame, which were presumably financed by German agents in this country working desperately, and for a time successfully, to keep the United States from entering the war. To be sure, in its present form it has existed only since January 12, 1920, when it was formed as an outgrowth and with the merging of various organizations which were developed during the World War, dating from October, 1914, and the members of which were pacifists, defeatists, German agents, radicals of many hues, communists, I. W. W. and Socialists. Among the organizations included in the merger were such pacifist bodies as the American League to Limit Armaments,. Emergency Peace Federation, First American Conference for Democracy and Terms of Peace, People's Freedom Union, People's Council of America, American Union against Militarism, League for Amnesty for Political Prisoners, Civil Liberties Bureau, National Civil Liberties Bureau, American Neutral Conference Committees and Legal First Aid Bureau. [1]

" The activities of this organization are extensive. It assists any radical movement through publications of high standing in order to influence public sympathy toward the radical organizations, furnishing attorneys for radical criminals, conscientious objectors and radical or foreign spies, " bores from within" in churches, religious and labour organizations, Women's Clubs, schools and colleges and the American Federation of Labour, in order to spread radical ideas. The union maintains a staff of speakers, investigators and lawyers who are working in all sections of the country. Lawyers are furnished on short notice wherever a radical criminal gets into trouble. A press clipping service is maintained which keeps the organization in close touch with every radical criminal or group of radical criminals in trouble and immediate financial aid, publicity and counsel is offered. Aiding in this service are some 800 co-operating lawyers, and more than a thousand correspondents and investigators, representing 450 weekly labour, farmer and liberal papers with 420 speakers and writers.

" The American Civil Liberties Union was particularly active in aiding the Communists caught in the Bridgman, Mich., raid.

" An office is maintained in Washington with the Federated Press organization to handle matter requiring direct contact with the Government.

" The policies of the organization are determined by the National Committee and the carrying out of them is left to the Executive Committee which meets weekly. "

Mr. Whitney quotes the following paragraphs from the 1920 Lusk Committee report concerning the American Civil Liberties Union :

" An examination, however, of the propaganda and agitation which has been carried on in favor of the forceful overthrow of this Government shows that it does not consist of a mere expression of opinion, but invariably advocates measures for its effectuation. In other words, the representatives of revolutionary Socialists, Communists, Anarchists and other groups, state that by doing certain acts this Government may be overthrown and in each instance the agitator urges his hearers or his readers to commit those acts. It is a well settled principle of law that any reasonable man is responsible for the logical and reasonable consequences of his acts and utterances.

" While the Constitution of the State of New York guarantees the right of free speech it also contains the warning that the citizen may exercise it " being responsible for the abuse of that right ". The effect of the activities of the American Civil Liberties Union is to create in the minds of the ill-informed people the impression that it is un-American to interfere with the activities of those who seek to destroy American institutions. They seek to influence legislators and executives to repeal or veto any act calculated to protect the State or the Federal Government from the attacks of agitators. "

After some further analysis this report says :

" The American Civil Liberties Union, in the last analysis, is a supporter of all subversive movements, and its propaganda is detrimental to the interests of the state. It attempts not only to protect crime but to encourage attacks upon our institutions in every form.

" The union is closely identified with groups in practically every city in the country known as ' parlor Bolsheviki'. Speakers are furnished for these dilettante radicals whose influence would amount to little, but for the fact that they can be counted upon for financial contributions to any movement that promises them a thrill. It has been said that many idle men and women become identified with this parlor Bolshevik movement through emotionalism and because it gives them something to think about. Whatever the reason, the Communists and the Civil Liberties Union agitators make use of these groups for financial aid and as means of spreading propaganda.

" It is well known ", as Mr. Whitney further explains, " that the Workers' party, as a branch of the Communist party, has access to the ' sucker lists ' of people who have contributed to the finances of the party in various cities, and besides has ' sucker lists ' of its own which are shared by the Communists. The most remarkable feature of these lists is the number of names of prominent people upon them. "

Naturally most of the people on these ' sucker lists ' have no idea what sort of an organization they are assisting, but their money assists just the same ! Hazy notions of helping the poor and downtrodden and bettering the condition of the working classes serve to produce the necessary enthusiasm leading to subscriptions.

Among the persons whose names have appeared as members or officers of this society we name the following: Roger N. Baldwin, Albert De Silver, Scott Nearing and Max Eastman.

For root of this movement see Chapter CXXVII.

CHAPTER CXXIX

THE V. V. V.

VEREINIGUNG VERGEWALTIGTER VOLKER.

(Founded 1920)

The origin of this society is given by Mrs. Webster in The Surrender of an Empire (p. 132) in the following terms :

" The League of Oppressed Peoples had been founded in the United States under the name of the ' League of Small and Subject Nationalities ' by Dudley Field Malone, attorney for Ludwig Martens, who was afterwards appointed Bolshevist ambassador to the United States by Chicherin. Aleister Crowley, the well-known Satanist, who was then working in the United States for Germany, was connected with this association through one of its agents in America... After the Armistice the society became the ' League of Oppressed Peoples ', a name coined by the Germans who had declared themselves to be the champions of the numerous oppressed peoples of the British Empire ".

In the archives of certain Secret Services, there is a report stating that John Wesley De Kay, having travelled from Switzerland to Berlin on a German diplomatic passport, had an interview there with Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau, and four members of the Druidenorden of which the direct outcome was the foundation in January 1920 of the V. V. V.

This organization was to operate in a subordinate capacity to the well known masonic " Druidenorden " and, at a secret meeting held Jan. 14, 1920, a certain Colonel was elected President of the Council. At the same meeting, a council of the League was founded and provision was made for the headquarters, and representatives in every country. It was also further decided that only bonafide accredited representatives in a recognized revolutionary society, with an occasional " Socialist Humanitarian ", would be eligible for membership in this council, two representatives being the quota allotted to each member country.

It was further ordered that a secret Inner Council, the very existence of which was to be ignored by the General Council and the members of the League, was to be formed. Five persons composed this secret council of which John De Kay was the President for life.

The Swiss branch of the society was founded on the same day as the German by a colleague of De Kay.

" The Druidenorden " writes Mrs. Webster, " was the concrete expression of the idea... of the ' Eastern School ' of German Monarchists, who believed in coming to an understanding with Soviet Russia for the purpose of a war of revenge against the Allies or, failing this, of undermining them by revolutionary propaganda, particularly throughout the British Empire. This section of German Monarchists never ceased to co-operate with the Bolsheviks after Lenin and his companions in the sealed train were sent by them to Russia : and the marvellous organization of Soviet propaganda abroad has been largely attributable to the German as well as the Jewish brains behind it.

" Up till about 1922 the activities of this German group and the Soviet Government were indistinguishable. Radek — alias Sobelssohn — acted as the link between Berlin and Moscow. The Druidenorden, like the Komintern, was internationally organized with lodges in Rome, Milan, Prague, Budapest and ramifications in England, France, Holland, Italy, Algeria, Canada, Egypt, India, Vladivostok and Japan. At the same time it had two important centres in Switzerland — at Zurich and Lugano — under Baron von A. and Baron von D. who co-operated with the Soviet agents in that country by supplying revolutionaries throughout the world with arms, ammunition and propaganda, Bolshevist, pro-German and anti-Entente.

" This inner secret society was behind the Moplah risings in India in 1921, and it was again the Druidenorden that recruited revolutionary Jews in Germany, and passed them through Switzerland via Milan and Genoa to Palestine, in order to stir up feeling against Great Britain. "

" There was also a direct connection between the Druidenorden and the I. R. B. (Irish Republican Brotherhood) though relations with Ireland were principally maintained through the V. V. V. and its agents in America. "

In 1922 the V. V. V. founded a subsidiary organization : " The League of Oppressed Peoples of the East, calculated to coordinate the activities of various societies such as those of " The Friends of Soviet Russia " and the " Friends of India ".

CHAPTER CXXX

JUVENILE FREEMASONRY

If a novice is not the son of a Freemason he must, according to the rule, be 25 years old; that is to say, he must be the age demanded by the Priesthood before he can become a Mason. The son of a Freemason, however, can obtain a dispensation as regards the age at which he is admitted into the order. It is only necessary for him to be 18 years of age.

According to an article in Freemasonry Universal, Vol. I, Part I, June 1925, page 22 — " There are two movements in U. S. A., however, particularly worthy of attention. The first is the establishment of two orders, for boys and girls respectively, under the age of 21. These are more or less attached to Masonry, and the Order of De Molay, which is open to boys, and which five years ago consisted of nine members, to-day has over 1,177 Chapters, with over 125,000 members. The Order of the Rainbow for Girls, which was only started in 1923, now has over 300 Assemblies, with at least 20,000 members, and is increasing by leaps and bounds ".

We refrain here from going too closely into the subject of the boy and girl scouts movement leaving it as a suggestion that parents, guardians and teachers of youth would do well to investigate the judeo-masonic allegiance of scout leaders and masters.

CHAPTER CXXXI

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

(Founded 1920)

The League of Nations came into being on January 10, 1920, when the Treaty of Versailles, incorporating the first 26 articles of " The Covenant of the League " was ratified.

Cradled in Mazzini's Masonic Young Europe movement, the League and Treaty are the apotheosis of the policy of the old International Commitree of London and its satellite societies.

Of these, Mrs Webster, in her book The Surrender of an Empire, [1] gives us the following epitome :

" It was towards 1850 that a modified form of this scheme became known as ' The United States of Europe ', The actual formula seems first to have been used publicly by Victor Hugo in his opening speech to the Peace Congress held in Paris in 1849, but it was not until some years later that it was formally adopted as the slogan of International Socialism.

The impulse came again from the masonic lodges. In 1866, a Freemason named Santallier composed a work on Pacifism for his brother masons which led to the founding of the Union de la Paix, under the presidency of another Freemason, a German Jew named Bielefeld. The movement spread to Switzerland and on September 5, 1867, a further Congress was held. The proceedings were enlivened by a duel between the Constitutionalists and the Socialists, who declared that kings, soldiers — and some added priests — must be swept away in order to make room for the new Federation of Republics. The Socialists, led by Emile Acollas, won the day. Dupont, Karl Marx's right hand, was invited to represent the First International, of which he was secretary. Longuet, Marx's son-in-law, also attended. It was finally decided to found a " League of Peace and Liberty ", with a Franco-German periodical, entitled Les Etats-Unis de I'Europe, as its organ. This association, the ' Ligue Internationale de la Paix et de la Liberte ', still exists and publishes its paper ".

[1] Op. cit., p. 56.

It is small wonder that members of Fabianism should have made themselves the heralds of the idea of the League of Nations. In 1917, Henry Noel Brailsford, helped by Noel Buxton, a noted Fabian, had written a book called A League of Nations, in which he outlined its principles and eventual organization. Later, Fabians proudly proclaimed that with the advent of the Labour Party, which was their party, they had gained full control of the League of Nations. But the most outspoken statements on its spirit of internationalism comes from the pen of one of the Founders of Fabianism, George Bernard Shaw.

In April, 1929, the Fabian Society published a tract (No. 226) called The League of Nations, in which the noted author gives an account of the strange relations which exist between the members of the respective national governments and those of the international government of the League. Alluding to an incident which took place at Geneva between Mr Locker-Lampson, Under-Secretary to the British Foreign Office, sent by his Government and representing it, and Sir Eric Drummond, permanent Secretary-General of the League at Geneva, George Bernard Shaw writes :

"These deciduous members arrive mostly in scandalous ignorance of the obligations already contracted by their Governments to the permanent governing bodies of the League. As party men they are at the opposite pole to the ' good Europeans ' of Geneva. As patriots they conceive themselves to be advocates of British national interests (not to say nationalist spies in the international camp) and expect to be supported devotedly by their distinguished fellow-countrymen on the permanent staffs. They are rudely undeceived the moment they begin their crude attempts at sabotage.

" Thus the British Jingo Imperialist finds himself writhing in the grip of Sir Eric Drummond whilst the French Poincarist-Militarist takes the full count in the first round from Mr Albert Thomas...

" This situation, in which the permanent nominees of the constituent governments are thrown into resolute opposition to their deciduous representatives is chronic at Geneva. One of Mr Albert Thomas's greatest victories there was won over the French Government when he defeated its attempt to exclude agricultural workers from the scope of the Labour Office on the ground that they are not 'industrials'. The really great thing that is happening at Geneva is the growth of a genuinely international public service, the chiefs of which are ministers in a coalition which is, in effect, an incipient international Government. In the atmosphere of Geneva patriotism perishes ; a patriot there is simply a spy who cannot be shot.

" In short, the League is a school for the new international statesmanship as against the old Foreign Office diplomacy ".

The struggle described by Bernard Shaw as taking place at Geneva between the Assembly — or " Hot Air Exchange " — as he terms it, and the Secretariat of the League on the one hand and the International Labour Office on the other is also edifying. The Labour Office, as its offspring, has the blessing of Fabianism and we are informed that together with its friends it is " quite willing to let the Secretariat die a natural death. "

How reminiscent of Marxism are all these utterances of one of the notorious disciples of the School of Destruction!

Another aspect of the League of Nations was given by an ardent Zionist — Jessie E. Sampter, who wrote that " the League of Nations is an old Jewish ideal, the ideal of nationalism and internationalism... The Jewish God-ideal implies democracy and internationalism ". Further the same author vouchsafed the information that " the solution of self-determination and the recognition of the necessity for a League of Nations to protect small peoples from future aggression have grown in large measure out of the claims of Zionists. "[2]

We also know that Lord Robert Cecil, Chairman of the League of Nations Union, in speeches he made in the United States, in favour of the League, predicted that eventually it would have its seat at Jerusalem. Thus speaking, he was only voicing the Zionist statements which had already been made by Leon Simon in Studies in Jewish Nationalism.[3]

Studying the League of Nations under its different aspects we are led to draw the logical conclusion that it is a Judeo-Masonic achievement.

As the embryonic future World Government, destined shortly to be the Central Government of the European Federated States, the League of Nations is at present concerned with two schemes wherewith it will eventually be enabled to enforce its dictates — viz : one, an international army and air force, the other the International Bank which is already aiming at the creation and circulation of an international universal money. Meanwhile, its creators and sponsors are endeavouring to maintain the illusion of Democracy and its manifold benefits whereas, in fact, they have already erected at Geneva a temple to the Autocracy and Tyranny of Internationalism.

CHAPTER CXXXII

TENRI KENJUKAI

(Founded around 1920)

The Tenri Kenjukai, a Japanese politico-religious sect, is an offshoot of the main cult known as Tenrikyo, itself dissident from Shintoism, the national religion of Japan.

It is subversive, inasmuch as its adherents object mostly to one of the main tenets of the Japanese religion, namely, the traditional regard held for the Imperial Family.

When, in April 1928; the police discovered several plots for the assassination of members of the Imperial Family and Conservative Statesmen, it came to light that the Communists from Moscow had had, as chief tools, Tenri Kenjukaists.

Numerous arrests were made, including that of the founder of the sect, Aijiro Onishi. His life and behaviour bear a great resemblance to that of the leaders of the O. T. O., of Theodor Reuss, Rudolf Steiner, Aleister Crowley, Gourgieff, as also of Piggott of the " Abode of Love " and others.

Like them, Aijiro Onishi exacted a vow of poverty from his adherents who had to turn over to him all their property. With this wealth he had built for himself a beautiful house wherein he lived in great luxury.

Regardless of place, creed or nationality, the same causes produce the same effects, and greed on the one hand and human gullibility of dupes on the other, lead to uniform results.

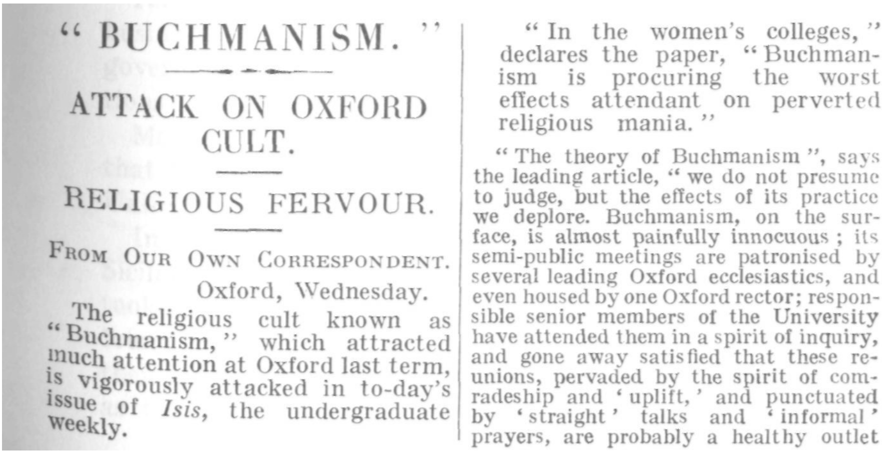
CHAPTER CXXXIII

BUCHMANISM

(Founded in 1928)

In the spring of 1928 much perturbation was caused in educational circles by the discovery that Buchmanism, defined by English University authorities as perverted religious mania, had permeated men's as well as women's colleges at Oxford.

Isis, the Oxford undergraduates' weekly, attacked Buchmanism in its leading article in one of its May issues ot 1928. On May 17, 1928, the Daily Telegraph partly reproduced it in the. following article :



"BUCHMANISM."

ATTACK ON OXFORD CULT.

RELIGIOUS FERVOUR.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Oxford, Wednesday.

The religious cult known as "Buchmanism," which attracted much attention at Oxford last term, is vigorously attacked in to-day's issue of Isis, the undergraduate weekly.

"In the women's colleges," declares the paper, "Buchmanism is procuring the worst effects attendant on perverted religious mania."

"The theory of Buchmanism", says the leading article, "we do not presume to judge, but the effects of its practice we deplore. Buchmanism, on the surface, is almost painfully innocuous; its semi-public meetings are patronised by several leading Oxford ecclesiastics, and even housed by one Oxford rector; responsible senior members of the University have attended them in a spirit of inquiry, and gone away satisfied that these reunions, pervaded by the spirit of comradeship and 'uplift,' and punctuated by 'straight' talks and 'informal' prayers, are probably a healthy outlet for surplus religious feeling; and so, no doubt, they are.

" GIGGLES AND FANATICISM."

" These meetings, however, have, roughly, the same relation to Buchmanism as a dentist's waiting-room has to the pain the dentist is about to inflict. Attendance at several of them is a preliminary step to admission to a group, a gathering of perhaps four or five friends, so delightfully informal that it seems uncharitable to call it clandestine. Here, in an atmosphere hovering between giggles and fanaticism, restraint is flung aside, souls are laid bare by hysterical confession, and, with a fervour which no longer pretends to be religious, the tenets of the doctrine are discussed.

" Now, Buchmanism attributes to Christianity a four-fold foundation on honesty, unselfishness, purity and love. It is worthy of remark that the first two qualities are seldom considered worthy of discussion. Honesty, in fact, is not a conspicuous feature of these proceedings, from which the sceptical are firmly excluded, and in which the perfervid are virtually hoodwinked.

IN WOMEN'S COLLEGES.

" In the women's colleges, although the name of its founder is never mentioned, Buchmanism has firmly established itself, and is producing the worst effects attendant on perverted religious mania. One of its adherents has recently been obliged to leave Oxford. In several others devotion to the cult is producing results not usually associated with the practice of Christianity. The authorities appear to be alarmed but remain apathetic. It is time something was done about it.

" Buchmanism is not widespread. Probably, in Oxford, it never will be. We do not wish to exaggerate the danger it represents, but neither do we wish other people to minimise or ignore that danger. Its worst effects, though almost impossible to cure, can be prevented. Accordingly we take this opportunity of asking the University authorities to exert the power which is undoubtedly theirs to remove from Oxford those responsible for a phenomenon which would be faintly comic were it not apt to produce such extremely unpleasant results."

CHAPTER CXXXIV

THE RACKETS

(Founded 1928)

Racketeering finds a place in this study on Occult Theocrasy because its adepts are the faithful servants of Mammon and their methods of terrorism, intimidation, plunder and murder are analogous to those of the Thugs, worshippers of Siva. Moreover, according to Fred Pasley, author of Al Capone and Muscling In, racketeering is organized and controlled by the members of the Italian Society, the Unione Sicilione, the Mafia, which he calls an invisible government.

Racketeering, as a system for plundering legitimate business, often with the connivance of the police and government officials, has assumed formidable proportions within the last few years.

Mr. Fred. D. Pasley, in his book Muscling In, states that " The Rackets " started with Prohibition in the United States.

In 1928, after Mussolini had suppressed the terrorist Sicilian Society known as The Mafia, whose members took an oath to " resist Law and defeat Justice ", they found a refuge in Chicago, U. S. A. There, through their affiliation with the Unione Sicilione, later known as the Italo-American Union, they manoeuvred themselves into a position which enabled them to cooperate with the vice and liquor purveyors of the city on the one side and the political party machines on the other.

To quote Mr. Pasley :[1]

" The Unione Sicilione had become a $ 10,000,000 a year enterprise, supplying the basic ingredient for the synthetic Bourbon, Rye, Scotch, brandy, rum and gin marketed in and around Chicago, and controlling the sale of sugar to the affiliated distillers of the West Side Italian district : Melrose Park, Cicero, and Chicago Heights. "

The head of the Unione, " ... ruled locally as a despot over some 15,000 Sicilians and dominated the councils of the Unione's branches in St. Louis, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Philadelphia and New York City. " He was virtually the chief executive in the invisible government, administering the gunman dictatorship of Chicago.

In 1928, the organized gunmen ot Chicago seized control of the Chicago Coal Teamsters', Chauffeurs' and Helpers' Union, local No. 704, and the Rackets entered a new phase, that of economic terrorisation by the armed forces of the Underworld.

In 1931, the New York Times of November 28 drew the following picture of the gangster situation :

> New York City has become the world's capital of the racketeers, who " with the power of Tammany hookups, reinforced with revolver bullets and sawed-off shotgun slugs " are exacting an annual tribute of at least $ 600,000,000 here, Fred D. Pasley, biographer of Al Capone, asserts in " Muscling In, " to be published today by Ives Washburn. Every trade and business organization is racket-ridden, some of the hardest hit groups being dealers in such foodstuffs as artichokes, flour, milk, fish and ice, the garment trades, the building industry and the various branches of transportation, the author declares.

---

Mr. Pasley's nation-wide survey pays special attention to Chicago and New York. Crime, he reiterates, has become " big business, " thoroughly organized in every large American city " with its various racket departments—whether beer, booze, pretzels, gambling, vice or the muscling in on industry and labor unions—as efficiently administered as the units of a great corporation. " Instead of diminishing, the power of the racketeers is increasing and " in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Philadelphia, New York and other American cities the gangster with his syndicate is in the racket saddle in 1931 and riding high, wide and handsome. "

In Chicago the annual tribute exacted by racketeers amounts to $ 200,000,000, Mr. Pasley says. The levy in Philadelphia is estimated at $ 100,000,000, in Detroit $ 75,000,000, in Los Angeles $ 50,000,000 and in Cleveland and Pittsburgh S 25,000,000 each. The nation's annual crime bill is put at $ 1,119,000,000.

Asserting that the rise of the racketeer dates from the enactment of prohibition, Mr. Pasley continues :

" Prohibition after twelve years is pouring into the coffers of the Capones, the Maddens, the Gordons and the Duffys something like $ 3,000,000,000 a year for the financing of their varied enterprises and the maintaining of political relationships. The State laws which they violated with impunity in their criminal operations were ineffective against them, for it was the record that the only convictions obtained, and these at excessive cost, were for violations of a Federal statutef namely, income tax evasion. "

The author criticizes severely the practice of freeing gangsters on bail while awaiting trial, contending that this allows the racketeer to silence his enemies by murder, to bribe officials, and to use the power of his organization to defeat justice in other ways.

But the term " Racketeering " does not apply only to the deeds of American gangsters.

Besides the underworld vice rings, drug rings, bootleggers and purveyors to the white slave traffic, we must also recognise the existence of Economic and Financial Rackets organized internationally on a huge scale.

To this category belong the International Foreign Exchange and National Credit Ramps operating to control the currencies of various countries for the benefit of a few " Insiders ". Foreign Exchange gambling gains are not even taxable and therefore constitute a doubly valuable racket. A banker's racket!

The Stock Exchange Racket, whereby the invested economies of the thrifty are siphoned out of their pockets into those of the " Insiders " is another popular form of business ramp. Stolen property being tax exempt, stock frauds yield a high return. However we do not advocate taxing stock fraud profits, we merely suggest that the law should provide for the punishment of those criminals who operate such transactions.

Then there are the Tax Department, Income and Super Tax Rackets. Should Racketeers gain control of the machinery of government of a country and use its system of taxation as a means of extorting and bleeding the taxpayer, such abuses are none the less a racket! The Income and Super Tax Racket conduces naturally to the extension of the operations of the Stock Exchange fraudulent operator. The poor pay the tax. Sometimes the rich pay it too. In any case, the honest pay for the dishonest.

And what of the law ? People often have to wonder, especially in the U. S. A., whether they can always go to law solely on the basis of a just claim. Must they not sometimes consider whether they will not be acting through a lawyer who may have interests which are opposed to their own ? And if there should be such a thing as a betrayal, need it always be paid for in money ?

Again, we must not overlook the Social Racket, one of the most interesting examples of which is the now famous " Douglas-Pennant Case ". From recent developments, however, it would seem that this was largely a Masonic intrigue. The Chairman of the House of Lords Committee trying the case was the late Lord Kintore, a noted Freemason. Others connected with the conspiracy to ruin Miss Violet Douglas-Pennant's life and reputation were also Freemasons. Nothing was ever proved against this lady and she herself makes no mystery of the fact that she was, for a short time, a member of a masonic organization, "The G. D. " She resigned her membership in this body, however, shortly after her initiation but from then onward was hounded and threatened in every way. That her failure to gain Justice in an English court is only a part of a policy of persecution will surprise few of those who have followed her case.

The present wave of International Unemployment is interesting as an Economic Racket. Already France, England and the U. S. A. have been led to segregate their own workers and exclude foreign labour. This course seemed a patriotic necessity at the outset but the idea, exploited to its logical conclusion, spells slavery of the workers. Nations decreeing that only native labour can be employed within their boundaries thus subtly rob labour of its freedom to work where it commands the highest price and best conditions.

Labour, robbed of its right to control its own market, may suddenly find itself restricted to even county boundaries. In that event a condition will arise for which there is already an historical precedent. Boris Goudounoff, through the creation of just such a situation in Russia, instituted serfdom in a country where, previously, the workers had been free men.

Italy, Australia and England have already enforced virtual embargoes on capital — why not therefore embargoes on labour ?

The Rackets are the last stage of the battle in the economic war between Predatory Capitalism and Predatory Labour against Constructive Capitalism and Constructive Labour. The progressive stages of this war are outlined in a document known as The Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion. [2] The full significance of this record should have been made the subject of a comprehensive course of studies in every school, church and university, but whereas Marxism, which is but one of the means devised for the accomplishment of the Protocols, is freely taught and practised, a wall of silence and fear has been built around the Protocols themselves.

CHAPTER CXXXV

THE NEW HISTORY SOCIETY

(Founded 1930)

This Society was founded on April 5, 1930, at a meeting at The Park Lane Hotel, New York, presided over by Mirza Ahmed Sohrab who read a resolution embodying the ideals of Professor Einstein and Arthur Henderson which was unanimously adopted.

In Torchbearers (p. 32), a pamphlet published by The New History Society in 1931, we read that Mr. Einstein has declared the position he will take in the next war ;

" I should unconditionally refuse every direct or indirect war service and try to induce my friends to take the same stand, and this independently of any critical opinion of the causes of the war. "

History is, or should be, the truth on past events. When it is distortion of past records to suit the aims and convenience of specific groups it is not history. There can be no such thing as New History. We are therefore entitled to question the historical basis of this society whose members are the " advocates of the Universal Principles of Baha'u' llah and spreaders of the Ideals of Abdul Baha. "[1]

---

[1] Torchbearers, p. C.

The direct result of another Mass meeting held on April 5 under the auspices of this society was the affiliation of twenty Peace Societies under the name of " Youth Peace Federation ".

Among the members of this New History Society we find the name of Besanta Koomar Roy.

CHAPTER CXXXVI

THE YOUTH PEACE FEDERATION

(Founded 1930)

Early in the 20th Century the headquarters of The Worker, the Communist weekly, were at 8 East 10th Street, New York. It also harboured a " Youth Movement " imported from Germany.

In a pamphlet issued by the Massachusetts Public Interest League, (210 Newbury Street, Boston, Mass. April 1925) we read that this " Youth Movement " was sponsored by The National Student Forum, an organization " made up of those elements in the colleges which have at different times called themselves Inter-collegiate Socialist Societies, Liberal Leagues and Leagues for Industrial Democracy. It was Lenin's cleverness which suggested ' frequent changes of name ' to radical organizations. This bewilders the public and the new names serve as an alias. "

An article in the Survey Graphic for December 1921 stated the aims of this movement to include advocation of the Nudity Cult and promiscuity in sex relationships under the name of free love. Its advocacy of Body worship enables us to classify it as " Phallic ".

" It is the purpose of the National Student Forum ", writes R. M. Whitney, in a pamphlet entitled The Youth Movement, " and the other organizations which it supports by its sympathy, to undermine and sink, or overthrow, the Government of the United States, and to set up in this country a s(viet form of government, such as Russia now boasts. "

" Its constituent organizations are :

Barnard Social Science Club.
Bryn Mawr Liberal Club.
Dartmouth Round Table.
George Washington University Free Lance Club.

The first executive Secretary of the National Student Forum was Mr. John Rothschild, a New York Socialist. Among others interested in the movement was

" W. A. Robeson, an Englishman who had studied under Harold Laski, the Radical who came into the limelight while teaching at Harvard. "[2] Robeson was a member of the Advisory Committee of the British Labour Party and a friend of the well known Fabian, Mr. George Bernard Shaw.

In the New Student, the organ of the National Student Forum of Dec. 2nd, 1922, Mr. George Bernard Shaw is quoted as saying; — "As far as I can gather, if the students in American Universities do not organize their own education, they will not get any. The professors are overworked schoolmasters, underpaid, and deprived of all liberty of speech and conscience. From them nothing can be expected... the remedy is co-operative organization by the consumers; that is, by the students... In forming intellectual Soviets, and establishing the Dictatorship of the Learner, the American students may save their country, if it is capable of being saved. If not, they will at least learn something, and perhaps teach something, in the ecstasy of demolition. "

In a speech made in Moscow in June, 1923, Zinovieff (Chairman of The Young Communist International Movement) said : — " The Youth Movement is the best section of the Communist International. "[3]

In further corroboration of the tendencies of this organisation to an " ecstasy of demolition ", Professor George Leiken of the Volga region is further mentioned in the pamphlet above referred to as saying : — " When the Russian youth reaches the age of 12 the so-called League of Communist Youth awaits him. This organization accepts girls as well as boys and promptly reduces them to a low state of moral corruption. The institutions of marriage and home are ignored...

The Youth Peace Federation founded in 1930 is also to be found at 8 East 10th Street, New York. Organized in April 14 1930 at the residence oi Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler this society was founded at a mass meeting held under the auspices of "The New History Society " on April 5, 1931. It is the collective name of the following associations : —

Civic Club, Junior Group;
International Club ;
League of Youth of Community Church ;
Methodist Epworth League, New York District ;
New York Committee of the Fellowship of Reconciliation ;
Pioneer Youth of America;
Progressive Youth League of Bronx Free Fellowship ;

Youth Section of the War Resisters League. "[4]

The above organization is that familiar to any business man of a Holding Corporation in which are joined subsidiary companies.

Basing our deductions on the foregoing articles in this book we conclude that the secret objectives of this corporation may be :

Disarmament of all countries except Russia in order to facilitate the rule of the World by the International Jewish Super-Capitalist Group now dominating Russia with the Red Army under its control, and the end of Democracy.

A basic principle of war strategy is to have your enemy unprepared for assault.

The Massachusetts Public Interest League warns us that :

" The Youth Movement is using American Youth as a pawn in the Communist game.

The real menace of the movement in this country (America) lies in the fact that it is revolutionary propaganda in romantic disguise subtly preaching to immature youth the ecstasy of demolition of the foundations of civilization. "

CHAPTER CXXXVII

THE INTERNATIONAL BANK

(Founded 1930)

The Internationalization of finance reached its apotheosis when, on April 23 1930 the International Bank at Basle, commissioned to enrol the central banks of nine nations in its membership, was founded.

As for the delegates from the different countries attending the meeting their names signify little for, owing to the speed and unanimity with which official appointments were made, it is evident that they were all instructed, or, in other words pledged, to obey orders. By whom were the orders given ? History may answer that question some day!

Mr. Gates McGarrah was elected chairman of the board of directors with Mr. Leon Frazer his deputy and Sir Charles Addis and Dr. Melchior were elected vice-chairmen.

The significance of this international institution was commented upon in an article entitled " Mammon being enthroned" by " Arthurian" in the Referee dated Sunday, April 13, 1930, in the following terms which, while constituting a warning to the English people, is actually an appeal to the people of the world.

" One is amazed at the equanimity with which Sir Charles Addis describes the difficulty of enabling the Bank for International Settlements to avoid interference with the Sovereign Rights of the people of each of so many countries ! Surely the possibility alone ought to be adequate condemnation of the bank. The opening for chicanery, brute force, bribery, corruption and war, in the supposed solution of this problem, is unprecedented in the history of the world.....

" The Bank is to exist for fifty years, if it can ; it is to pay no taxes during all that time ; and its assets and deposits are to be immune from seizure, confiscation, and censorship, in peace or war ; it is also to be subject to no restriction or prohibition of any kind on its imports and exports of gold or currency. So little do Government decisions regarding the Bank really count that, before the scheme has been sanctioned, the first part of the subscription has already been subscribed . The Bankers and business men to be associated are to ensure that there will be no uncertainty about the business that the Bank will promote, the ' money troubles which lie at the root' of the industrial depression and financial uncertainty are, of course, going to be cured by them — so they say. The Governor of the Bank of England (Mr Montagu Norman) is going to be a director of this foreign Bank. What an honour ! This Board, with the daily lives of hundreds of millions of people at its mercy, is going to meet at least ten times a year — four times at Basle... 'The Bank owes allegiance to no single Government. ' It need keep no currency reserve...

"This Bank that owes no allegiance to anyone can do as it likes,.... Mammon is enthroned upon the world, to make what profits it can, with unrestricted powers, for fifty years ! In addition to its extraordinary powers, it has control of the ' Machinery of Reparations ' which contains the means by which the wherewithal to liquidate Reparations can be squeezed out of the receivers at a profit to the payers. . . . Economic control involves political control as well as every other control of any people. Truly, the megalomania of finance never went further, truly, there has never been anything like it in the world before. . . .

" People of England ! Remember how the strangle-hold of the Rank of England on all the other banks, on all the other financial houses, upon every business and upon every home and family has grown from the comparatively negligible sum of £1,200,000 of similar credit free of interest and the ' usufruct' thereof. This new usufruct will be the impoverishment, debasement, extinction, and disintegration of all that the masses of this country care for, and the certain decline and fall and redistribution, into foreign hands, of the Rritish Empire...

" In this country we have asked for the creation of interest-free credit to be lent to the people to be used for the production of wealth by and for the people, but by a great conspiracy of silence the idea is being suppressed. The hidden prize is not intended for us. Only those who have been swindled on a race-course by three-card trick men can realize what is now being done to all the peoples of the Allied countries by a debased money and credit-upon-credit trick, the like of which has never been attempted in the world before...

" The alleged £ 80,000,000 per annum that Germany is supposed to pay to the United States for fifty-nine years is a delusion and a snare. Rut the aim of the section of Wall Street repudiated by President Hoover, which initially promoted the idea of the Plan (The Young Plan), is that, through Germany, this section of Wall Street shall dominate the world. "

CONCLUSION

The foregoing pages have had for object to show how, whether open or secret, a great many societies, masonic and non-masonic, of good or evil intent, seem to function towards the same goal under centralized leadership.

This book claims to be an endeavour to prove that:—

1 — Owing to their union, all secret societies, whether political, philanthropic or occult in appearance, serve a political purpose unknown to the majority of their members.

2 — The power wielded by such societies is real and its character is international.

3 — Regardless of their exoteric objects, the esoteric aims of most societies are all directed towards the same end — namely : the concentration of political, economic and intellectual power into the hands of a small group of individuals, each of whom controls a branch of the International life, material and spiritual, of the world today.

The main branches thus controlled are :—

1 — The International Banking Groups and their subsidiaries.

2 — International, industrial and commercial control groups with their interlocking directorates.

3 — Education, Art, Literature, Science, and Religion. as vehicles of intellectual and moral perversion.

4 — The Groups already organized throughout different countries for the study of International affairs political, financial and economic.

5 — The International Press, the medium used to mould public opinion.

6 — The Political party organizations of each nation, whether conservative, liberal, radical, socialist etc. existing in every country with parliamentary administration.

7 — Internationally organized corruption, the white-slave traffic, vice and drug-rings, etc.

Any one of the branches above enumerated has innumerable ramifications and the control of even the least of them cannot be obtained without money. Money therefore becomes one of the most powerful levers in the hands of men who form the controlling groups. Thus does research in the realm of Finance become indispensable to the students bent upon tracing the real power behind universal control. This power, they will find, is wholly in the hands of international Jewish financiers.

Glancing at the body frame of all political organizations, do we not perceive that MONEY is its main sinew ? It would not sound preposterous to state that the electoral system is similar to that of auction, insomuch as it favours the highest bidder. In election campaigns, the successful candidate is not necessarily the most deserving or worthy of votes, but too frequently he who was able to buy the greater number of votes. Votes are captured by slogans, propaganda and, not unfrequently, bribery. Only an infinitesimal percentage among them will ever strive to find out the power or powers behind the candidate, and by whom he is, in effect, controlled.

Yet the importance of such an investigation is both obvious and necessary, for it is a proven fact that candidates to parliament in one country have sometimes been controlled by a man, or group of men, in another country inimical to their own.

If political control is international it must of necessity be subversive of PATRIOTISM. If it holds in its power the reckless forces of Socialism and Communism, it must be subversive of social order and the promoter of revolution.

If spiritual control is anti-christian, Gnostic and occult, it must be subversive of Christianity and Religion. If it directs vice rings of all kinds, it must aim at the destruction of the moral, intellectual and physical strength of the human Race.

If, in conclusion, Finance is Power and as such is concentrated in one point, it is the arbiter of War and Peace, Life and Death, Welfare and Wretchedness, Prosperity and Ruin.

Everything and, it is sad to say, almost everybody, has a price and can be bought though not always with money. Men who to-day wield financial power have, long since based their system of purchase on this axiom. Far be it from us to suggest that there are no idealists in every walk of life for whom the pursuit of either patriotism, religious mysticism or philanthropy is unadulterated. On the contrary, we shall go as far as to say that such people become the best tools in the hands of plotters by whom they are led to believe that disinterested material help will be given them for the attainment of their ideals or aims. The study of secret revolutionary societies will show many examples of remarkable cases of self sacrifice on the part of genuine idealists. Subversives of either religious, social and political order have ever known how to make use of such people by instilling into them the super religion of the secret.

It is against this " secret " that the fight should be waged. If the aims of secret societies are good, one fails to see the need for their secret oaths and initiations. The "light " they promise should, like the sun, shine upon everyone.

To use the words of Christ : " Who lighteth a candle and putteth it under a bushel ? "

Masonic and secret societies need light.

Hence, Light should be thrown upon them from without that their secrets may be revealed.

As to " Toleration " — indiscriminate toleration preached at random, it should be considered one of the exoteric bases upon which are erected subversive creeds.

Recognizing as they do the practical power of thought, sects induce their novices to surrender their use of this power whose normal function, guided by the individual conscience, is to discriminate between good and evil in order to oppose the latter. Thus they create a dangerous negative state of mind as opposed to the Christian or positive. The individual when robbed of his initiative can easily be swayed and guided by the will of others. Therein resides the power of hypnotism and in this wise the shibboleth of " toleration " which, in fact, paralyses opposition to evil, serves an esoteric purpose suspected by few.

If the contents of this book may help in safeguarding the young and the unwary against falling into the pitfalls set by agents of subversive sects, its author will not have laboured in vain.

The work is far from being completed. It claims, in fact, to be only an attempt in the direction of inexhaustible research work upon the coordination of the aims of all societies whether political or occult. It is to be hoped that others, and may they be many, will begin work where this book ends for —

" The harvest is great indeed but the labourers are few "

PEACE, TOLERANCE, TRUTH ;

GREETING AND HEALTH.

DO WHAT THOU WILT SHALL BE THE WHOLE OF THE LAW.

1. The 0. T. 0. is a body of initiates in whose hands are concentrated the wisdom and the knowledge of the following bodies : —

---

[1] Op. cit., p. 197.

[2] Esoteric name is " Atlantean Adepts ".

1. The Gnostic Catholic Church.
2. The Order of the Knights of the Holy Ghost.
3. The Order of the Illuminati.
4. The Order of the Temple (Knights Templar).
5. The Order of the Knights of St. John.
6. The Order of the Knights of Malta.
7. The Order of the Knights of the Holy Sepulchre.
8. The Hidden Church of the Holy Graal.
9. The Hermetic Brotherhood of Light.
10. The Holy Order of Rose Croix of Heredom.
11. The Order of the Holy Royal Arch of Enoch.
12. The Antient and Primitive Rite of Masonry (33 degrees).
13. The Rite of Memphis (97 degrees).
14. The Rite of Mizraim (90 degrees).
15. The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Masonry (33 degrees)
16. The Swedenborgian Rite of Masonry.
17. The Order of the Martinists.
18. The Order of the Sat Bhai, and many other orders of equal merit, if of less fame.

It does not include the A.·. A.·., with which august body it is however, in close alliance.

It does not in any way infringe the just privileges of duly authorized Masonic Bodies.

2. The dispersion of the original secret wisdom having led to confusion, it was determined by the Chiefs of all these Orders to recombine and centralize their activities, even as white light, divided in a prism, may be recomposed.

It embodies the whole of the secret knowledge of all Oriental Orders ; and its chiefs are initiates of the highest rank, and recognized as such by all capable of such recognition in every country in the world.

In more remote times the constituent origination assemblies of the O. T. O. included such men as — Siddartha, Krishna, Simon Magus, Basilides, Paracelsus and Jacob Boehme....

And recently : —

Wolfgang von Goethe
Sir Richard Payne Knight
Sir Richard Francis Burton
Furlong Dux
Ludovicus Rex Bavariae
Richard Wagner
Ludwig von Fischer
Friedrich Nietzsche
Hargrave Jennings
Karl Kellner
Eliphas Levi
Franz Hartmann
Cardinal Rampolla
Papus (Dr. Encausse).

The names of women members are never divulged.

It is not lawful here to disclose the name of any living chief.

It was Karl Kellner who revived the exoteric organization of the 0. T. 0. and initiated the plan now happily complete of bringing all occult bodies again under one governance.

The letters 0. T. 0. represent the words Ordo Templi Orientis (Order of the Temple of the Orient, or Oriental Templars), but they have also a secret meaning for initiates.

3. The Order is international, and has existing branches in every civilized country of the world.

4. The aims of the 0. T. 0. can only be understood fully by its highest initiates ; but it may be said openly that it teaches Hermetic Science or Occult Knowledge, the Pure and Holy Magick of Light, the Secrets of Mystic attainment, Yoga of all forms, Gnana Yoga, Raja Yoga, Bhakta Yoga and Hatha Yoga, and all other branches of the secret Wisdom of the Ancients.

In its bosom repose the Great Mysteries ; its brain has resolved all the problems of philosophy and of life.

It possesses the secret of the Stone of the Wise, of the Elixir of Immortality, and of the Universal Medicine.

Moreover, it possesses a Secret capable of realizing the world-old dream of the Brotherhood of Man.

It also possesses in every important centre of population a hidden Retreat (Collegium ad Spiritum Sanctum) where members may conceal themselves in order to pursue the Great Work without hindrance.

These houses are secret fortresses of Truth, Light, Power and Love, and their position is only disclosed under an oath of secrecy to those entitled to make use of them.

They are also temples of true worship, specially consecrated by Nature to bring out of a man all that is best in him.

5. The authority of the 0. T. 0. is concentrated in the 0. H. 0. (Outer Head of the Order), or Frater Superior.

The name of the Person occupying this office is never disclosed except to his immediate representatives.

6. The Authority of the 0. H. 0. in all English-speaking countries is delegated by charter to the Most Holy, Most Illustrious, Most Illuminated and Most Puissant Baphomet X°, Rex Summus Sanctissimus, 33°, 90°, 96°, Past Grand Master of the United States of America, Grand Master of Ireland, Iona, and All the Britains, Grand Master of the Knights of the Holy Ghost, Sovereign Grand Commander of the Order of the Temple, Most Wise Sovereign of the Order of the Rosy Cross, Grand Zerubbabel of the Order of the Holy Royal Arch of Enoch, etc., etc., National Grand Master General ad vitam of the O. T. O.

7. The National Grand Master General ad vitam is assisted by two principal officers, the Grand Treasurer General and the Grand Secretary General.

There are many other officers, but they do not concern those to whom the present manifesto is addressed.

8. The whole of the Knowledge dispersed among the bodies mentioned in paragraph 2 has been sifted and concentrated in the following degrees.

0°	Minerval.
I°	M.
II°	M..
III°	M... P.·. M.·.
IV°	Companion of the Holy Royal Arch of Enoch. Prince of Jerusalem. Knight of the East and of the West.

V°	Sovereign Prince of Rose Croix. (Knight of the Pelican and Eagle.) Member of the Senate of Knight Hermetic. Philosophers Knights of the Red Eagle.
VI^0	Illustrious Knight (Templar) of the Order of Kadosch, and Companion of the Holy Graal. Grand Inquisitor Commander, Member of the Grand Tribunal. Prince of the Royal Secret.
VII^0	Very Illustrious Sovereign Grand Inspector General Member of the Supreme grand Council.
VIII^0	Perfect Pontiff of the Illuminati.
IX^0	Initiate of the Sanctuary of the Gnosis.
X°	Rex Summus Sanctissimus (Supreme and Most Holy King).

9. Every man or woman that is of full age, free, and of good report, has an indefeasible right to the III^0.

Beyond this, admission is only granted by invitation from the governing bodies concerned.

The O. T. O., although an Academia Masonica, is not a Masonic Body so far as the " secrets " are concerned in the sense in which that expression is usually understood; and therefore in no way conflicts with, or infringes the just privileges of, the United Grand Lodge of England, or any Grand Lodge in America or elsewhere which is recognized by it.

10. Application for admission to the Order may be made personally at headquarters, between the hours of Ten a. m. and Twelve Noon on week-days, or by letter to the Grand Secretary General. In the former case, applicants should be provided with the Twenty Dollars entitling them to the Third Degree ; in the latter, it should be enclosed with the application.

The First Annual Subscription is payable on taking the Third Degree ; if this is taken after June 30 in any year, only half the amount is due.

Subscriptions of old members are due on January 1, but the Brother is considered in good standing, and he does not lose his rights, if it is paid by March 1. Should he fail to discharge his obligation by this date, he ceases ipso facto to be a member of the Order, but may be reinstated on paying arrears and Five Dollars extra. If his lapse extend to the next year following, he can only be reinstated under special conditions, and by the express consent in writing of the National Grand Master General ad vitam.

11. The Constitution, Trust Deeds, Charters, Warrants and all other documents, are exhibited to candidates on their exaltations to the IV^0, should they desire it.

12. Besides the free certificate of membership, special diplomas for framing are granted to all members at a uniform price of Ten Dollars.

Special diplomas of the IX^0, Twenty-five Dollars.

13. The privileges of members of the 0. T. 0. are very numerous. These are the principal;

1° They have not only access to, but instruction in, the whole body of hidden knowledge preserved in the Sanctuary from the beginning of its manifestation.

In the lower grades the final secrets are hinted, and conveyed in symbol, beneath veil, and through sacrament.

In this way the intelligence of the initiate is called into play, so that he who uses the knowledge of the lower grades may be selected for invitation to the higher, where all things are declared openly.

2° They become partakers of the current of Universal Life in Liberty, Beauty, Harmony, and Love which flames within the heart of the 0. T. 0, and the Light of that august fraternity insensibly illuminates them and more as they approach its central Sun.

3° They meet those persons most complemental to their own natures, and find unexpected help and brotherhood in the whole world whereever they may travel.

4° They obtain the right to sojourn in the secret houses of the 0. T. 0., permanently or for a greater or lesser period of the year according to their rank in the Order ; or, in the case of those of the Fifth and lower degrees, are candidates for invitation to these houses.

5° The Knowledge of the Preparation and Use of the Universal Medicine is restricted to members of the IX⁰ ; but it may be administered to members of the VIII⁰ and VII° in special circumstances by favour of the National Grand Masters General, and even in particular emergency to members of lower degrees.

6° In the V° all members are pledged to bring immediate and perfect relief to all distress of mind, body, or estate, in which they may find any of their fellows of that degree. In the higher degrees the Bonds of Fraternity are still further strengthened. The Order thus affords a perfect system of insurance against every misfortune or accident of life.

7° Members of the IX⁰ become part proprietors of the Estates and Goods of the Order, so that the attainment of this degree implies a return with interest of the fees and subscriptions paid.

8° The Order gives practical assistance in life to worthy members of even its lower degrees, so that even if originally poor, they become well able to afford the comparatively high fees of the VII°, VIII⁰, and IX⁰.

On exaltation to the IV⁰ each Companion may file an account of his circumstances, and state in what direction he requires help.

14. In selecting members for advancement, attention is paid to their devotion to the Order, to their intelligence in apprehending the nature of its teachings, to their zeal in spreading the principles of the Order so far as they themselves understand them, though always with the discretion inseparable from the due guarding of the secrets, and to all those qualities of courage, honour, and virtue without which man is not worthy of that name.

15. The 0. H. 0., is only known to members of the VIII° and IX⁰.

The National Grand Master General ad vitam is not approachable as such by any person who has not reached the VI°.

All communications should be addressed to the Grand Secretary General, and all cheques drawn in favour of the Grand Treasurer General.

Issued by Order

L. BATHURST,
IX° Grand Secretary General.

(Ordo Templi Orientis)

AN OPEN LETTER TO THOSE WHO MAY WISH TO JOIN THE ORDER ; ENUMERATING THE DUTIES AND PRIVILEGES. THESE REGULATIONS COME INTO FORCE IN ANY DISTRICT WHERE THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE ORDER EXCEEDS ONE THOUSAND SOULS.

An Epistle of BAPHOMET to Sir GEORGE MACNIECOWIE, Very Illustrious and Very Illuminated, Pontiff and Epopt of the Areopagus of the VIII Degree O. T. O. Grand Treasurer General, Keeper of the Golden Book, President of the Committee of Publications of the O. T. O.

Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the Law.

It has been represented to UTS that some persons who are worthy to join the 0. T. 0. consider the fees and subscriptions rather high. This is due to your failure to explain properly the great advantages offered by the Order. We desire you therefore presently to note, and to cause to be circulated throughout the Order, and among those of the profane who may seem worthy to join it, these matters following concerning the duties and the privileges of members of the earlier degrees of the 0. T. 0. as regards material affairs. And for convenience we shall classify these as pertaining to the Twelve Houses of the Heaven, but also by numbered clauses for the sake of such as understand not the so-called Sciences of the Stars. First, therefore, concerning the duties of the Brethren. Yet with our Order every duty is also a privilege, so that it is impossible wholly to separate them.

ORDO TEMPLI ORIENTIS

Of the duties of Brethren.

First House

1. There is no law beyond Do what thou wilt. Yet it is well for Brethren to study daily in the volume of the Sacred Law, Liber Legis, for therein is much counsel concerning this, how best they may carry out this will.

Second House

2. The private purse of every Brother should always be at the disposal of any Brother who may be in need. But in such a case it is a great mischief if the one ask, and the other consent; for if the former be really in need, his pride is wounded by his asking ; and if not, the door is opened to beggars and impostors, and all manner of arrant knaves and rogues such as are no true Brethren. But the Brother who is possessed of this world's goods should make it his business to watch the necessity of all those Brethren with whom he may be personally acquainted, anticipating their wants in so wise and kindly and delicate a manner that it shall appear as if it were the payment of a debt. And what help is given shall be given with discretion, so that the relief may be permanent instead of temporary.

3. All Brethren shall be exceedingly punctual in the payment of Lodge Dues. This is to take precedence of all other calls upon the purse.

Third House

The Brethren shall be diligent in preaching the Law of Thelema. In all writings they shall be careful to use the prescribed greetings ; likewise in speech, even with strangers.

5. They shall respond heartily to every summons of the Lodge or Chapter to which they may belong, not lightly making excuse.

6. Brethren should use every opportunity of assisting each other in their tastes, businesses, or professions, whether by direct dealing with Brethren in preference to others, or as may suggest itself. It seems desirable, when possible, that where two or more Brethren of the same Lodge are engaged in the same work, they should seek to amalgamate the same by entering into partnership. Thus in time great and powerful corporations may arise from small individual enterprisfs.

7. They shall be diligent in circulating all tracts, manifestos, and all other communications which the Order may from time give out for the instruction or emancipation of the profane.

8. They may offer suitable books and pictures to the Libraries of the Profess-Houses of the Order.

Fourth House

9. Every Brother who may possess mines, land, or houses more than he cam himself occupy, should donate part of such mines or land, or one or more of such houses to the Order.

10. Property thus given will be administered if he desire it in his own interest, thus effecting a saving, since large estates are more economically handled than small. But the Order will use such property as may happen to lie idle for the moment in such ways as it may seem good, lending an unlet house (for example) to some Brother who is in need, or allowing an unused hall to be occupied by a Lodge.

11. (Yet in view of the great objects of the Order, endowment is welcome.)

12. Every Brother shall show himself solicitous of the comfort and happiness of any Brother who may be old, attending not only to all material wants, but to his amusement, so that his declining years may be made joyful.

Fifth Home

13. Every Brother shall seek constantly to give pleasure to all Brethren with whom he is acquainted, whether by entertainment or conversation, or in any other manner that may suggest itself. It will frequently and naturally arise that love itself springs up between members of the Order, for that they have so many and so sacred interests in common. Such love is peculiarly holy, and is to be encouraged.

14. All children of Brethren arc to be considered as children of the whole Order, and to be protected and aided in every way by its members severally, as by its organization collectively. No distinction is to be made with regard to the conditions surrounding the birth of any child.

15. There is an especially sacred duty, which every Brother should fulfil, with regard to all children, those born without the Order included. This duty is to instruct them in the Law of Thelema, to teach them independence and freedom of thought and character, and to warn them that servility and cowardice are the most deadly diseases of the human soul.

Sixth House

16. Personal or domestic attendants should be chosen from among the members of the Order when possible, and great tact and courtesy are to be employed in dealing with them.

17. They, on their part, will render willing and intelligent service.

18. While in Lodge, and on special occasions, they are to be treated as Brothers, with perfect equality ; such behaviour is undesirable during the hours of service, and familiarity, subversive as it is of all discipline and order, is to be avoided by adopting a complete and marked change of manner and address.

19. This applies to all persons in subordinate positions, but not to the Brethren Servient in the Profess-Houses of the Order, who, giving service without recompense, are to be honoured as hosts.

20. In case of the sickness of any Brother, it is the duty of all Brethren who know him personally to attend him, to see that he want for nothing, and to report if necessary his needs to the Lodge, or to Grand Lodge itself.

21. Those Brethren who happen to be doctors or nurses will naturally give their skill and care with even more than their customary joy in service.

22. All Brethren are bound by their fealty to offer their service in their particular trade, business, or profession, to the Grand Lodge. For example, a stationer will supply the Grand Lodge with paper, vellum, and the like ; a bookseller offer any books to the Library of Grand Lodge which the Librarian may desire to possess ; a lawyer will execute any legal business for Grand Lodge, and a railway or steamship owner or director see to it that the Great Officers travel in comfort wherever they may wish to go.

23. Visitors from other Lodges are to be accorded the treatment of ambassadors ; this will apply most especially to Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the Order on their tours of inspection. All hospitality and courtesy shown to such is shown to Ourselves, not to them only.

Seventh House

24. It is desirable that the marriage partner of any Brother should also be a member of the Order. Neglect to insist upon this leads frequently to serious trouble for both parties, especially for the uninitiate.

25. Lawsuits between members of the Order are absolutely forbidden, on pain of immediate expulsion and loss of all privileges, even of those accumulated by past good conduct referred to in the second part of this instruction.

26. All disputes between Brethren should be referred firstly to the Master or Masters of their Lodge or Lodges in conference ; if a composition be not arrived at in this manner, the dispute is to be referred to the Grand Tribunal, which will arbitrate thereon, and its decision is to be accepted as final.

27. Refusal to apply for or to accept such decision shall entail expulsion from the Order, and the other party is then at liberty to seek his redress in the Courts of Profane Justice.

28. Members of the Order are to regard those without its pale as possessing no rights of any kind, since they have not accepted the Law, and are therefore, as it were, troglodytes, survivals of a past civilisation, and to be treated accordingly.[1] Kindness should be shown towards them, as towards any other animal; and every effort should be made to bring them into Freedom.

29. Any injury done by any person without the Order to any person within it may be brought before the Grand Tribunal, which will, if it deem right and fit, use all its power to redress or to avenge it.

30. In the case of any Brother being accused of an offence against the criminal law of the country in which he resides, so that any other Brother cognisant of the fact feels bound in self-defence to bring accusation, he shall report the matter to the Grand Tribunal as well as to the Civil Authority, claiming exemption on this ground.

31. The accused Brother will, however, be defended by the Order to the utmost of its power on his affirming his innocence upon the Volume of the Sacred Law in the Ordeal appointed ad hoc by the Grand Tribunal itself.

[1] Compare with Schulchan Aruch and Talmud where non-Jews are as animals to the Jews.

32. Public enemies of the country of any Brother shall be treated as such while in the field, and slain or captured as the officer of the Brother may command. But within the precincts of the Lodge all such divisions are to be forgotten absolutely; and as children of One Father the enemies of the hour before and the hour after are to dwell in peace, amity, and fraternity.

Eighth House

33. Every Brother is expected to bear witness in his last will and testament to the great benefit that he hath received from the Order by bestowing upon it part or the whole of his goods, as he may deem fit.

34. The death of a Brother is not to be occasion of melancholy, but of rejoicing; the Brethren of his Lodge shall gather together and make a banquet with music and dancing and all manner of gladness. It is of the greatest importance that this shall be done, for thereby the inherited fear of death which is deep-rooted as instinct in us will gradually be rooted out. It is a legacy from the dead aeon of Osiris, and our children's children may be born free from the curse.

Ninth House

35. Every Brother is expected to spend a great part of his spare time in the study of the principles of the Law and of the Order, and in searching out the key to its great and manifold mysteries.

36. He should also do all in his power to spread the Law, especially taking long journeys, when possible, to remote places, there to sow the seed of the Law.

Tenth House

37. All pregnant women are especially sacred to members of the Order, and no effort should be spared to bring them to acceptance of the Law of Freedom, so that the unborn may benefit by that impression. They should be induced to become members of the Order, so that the child may be born under its aegis.

38. If the mother that is to be have asserted her will to be so in contempt and defiance of the Tabus of the slave-gods, she is to be regarded as specially suitable to our Order, and the Master of the Lodge in her district shall offer to become, as it were, godfather to the child, who shall be trained specially, if the mother so wishes, as a servant of the Order, in one of its Profess-Houses.

39. Special Profess-Houses for the care of women of the Order, or those whose husbands or lovers are members of the Order, will be instituted, so that the frontal duty of womankind may be carried out in all comfort and honour.

40. Every Brother is expected to use all his influence with persons in a superior station of life (so called) to induce them to join the Order. Royal personages, ministers of State, high officials in the Diplomatic, Naval, Military, and Civil Services are particularly to be sought after, for it is intended ultimately that the temporal power of the State be brought into the Law, and led into freedom and prosperity by the application of its principles.

41. Colleges of the Order will presently be established where the children of its members may be trained in all trades, businesses, and professions, and there they may study the liberal arts and humane letters, as well as our holy and arcane science. Brethren are expected to do all in their power to make possible the establishment of such Universities.

Eleventh House

42. Every Brother is expected to do all in his power to induce his personal friends to accept the Law and join the Order. He should therefore endeavour to make new friends outside the Order, for the purpose of widening its scope.

Twelfth House

43. The Brethren are bound to secrecy only with regard to the nature of the rituals of our Order, and to our words signs, etc. The general principles of the Order may be fully explained, so far as they are understood below the VI^0 ; as it is written, " The ordeals I write not : the rituals shall be half known and half concealed; the Law is for all. " It is to be observed that punctual performance of these duties, so that the report thereof is noised abroad and the fame of it cometh even unto the Throne of the Supreme and Holy King himself will weigh heavily in the scale when it comes to be a question of the high advancement of a Brother in the Order.

Of The Privileges of the Brethren.

First House

44. The first and greatest of all privileges of a Brother is to be a Brother ; to have accepted the Law, to have become free and independent, to have destroyed all fear, whether of custom, or of faith, or of other men, or of death itself. In other papers the joy and glory of those who have accepted the Book of the Law as the sole rule of life is largely, though never fully, explained ; and we will not here recapitulate the same.

Second House

45. All Brethren who may fall into indigence have a right to the direct assistance of the Order up to the full amount of fees and subscriptions paid by them up to the time of application. This will be regarded as a loan, but no interest will be charged upon it. That this privilege may not be abused, the Grand Tribunal will decide whether or no such application is made in good faith.

Third House

46. Members of the Order will be permitted to use the Library in any of our Profess-Houses.

47. Circulating Libraries will presently be established.

48. Brethren who may be travelling have a right to the hospitality of the Master of the Lodge of the district for a period of three days.

Fourth House

49. Brethren of all grades may be invited to sojourn in the Profess-Houses of the Order by Grand Lodge : and such invitation may confidently be expected as the reward of merit. There they will be able to make the personal acquaintance of members of the higher Grades, learn of the deeper workings of the Order, obtain the benefit of personal instruction, and in all ways fit themselves for advancement.

50. In the higher degrees Brethren have the right to reside in our Profess-Houses for a portion of every year, as shown : —

VI^0	Two weeks.	VII^0	Two months.
G. T.	One month.	S. G. C.	Three months.
P. B. S.	Six weeks.	VIII^0	Six months.

52. Members of the IX°, who share among themselves the whole property of the Order according to the rules of that degree, may, of course, reside there permanently. Indeed, the house of every Brother of this grade is, ipso facto, a Profess-House of the Order.

Fifth House

53. All Brethren may expect the warmest cooperation in their pleasures and amusements from other members of the Order. The perfect freedom and security afforded by the Law allows the characters of all Brethren to expand to the very limits of their nature, and the great joy and gladness with which they are constantly overflowing make them the best of companions. " They shall rejoice, our chosen; who sorroweth is not of us. Beauty and strength, leaping laughter and delicious languor, force and fire, are of us. "

54. Children of all Brethren are entitled to the care of the Order, and arrangements will be made to educate them in certain of the Profess-Houses of the Order.

55. Children of Brethren who are left orphans will be officially adopted by the Master of his Lodge, or if the latter decline, by the Supreme Holy King himself, and treated in all ways as if they were his own.

56. Brethren who have a right to some especial interest in any child whose mother is not a member of the Order may recommend it especially to the care of their lodge or of Grand Lodge.

Sixth House

57. In sickness all Brethren have the right to medical or surgical care and attendance from any Brethren of the Lodge who may be physicians, surgeons, or nurses.

58. In special necessity the Supreme Holy King will send his own attendants.

59. Where circumstances warrant it, in cases of lives of great value to the Order and the like, he may even permit the administration of that secret Medicine which is known to members of the IX^0.

60. Members of the Order may expect Brethren to busy themselves in finding remunerative occupation for them, where they lack it ; or, if possible, to employ them personally.

Seventh House

61. Members of the Order may expect to find suitable marriage partners in the extremely select body to which they belong. Community of interest and hope being already established, it is natural to suppose that where mutual attraction also exists, a marriage will result in perfect happiness. (There are special considerations in this matter which apply to the VII^0 and cannot be discussed in this place.)

62. As explained above, Brethren are entirely free of most legal burdens, since lawsuits are not permitted within the Order, and since they may call upon the legal advisers of the Order to defend them against their enemies in case of need.

Eighth House

63. All Brethren are entitled after death to the proper disposal of their remains according to the rites of the Order and their grade in it.

64. If the Brother so desire, the entire amount of the fees and subscriptions which he has paid during his life will be handed over by the Order to his heirs and legatees. The Order thus affords an absolute system of insurance in addition to its other benefits.

Ninth House

65. The Order teaches the only perfect and satisfactory system of philosophy, religion, and science, leading its members step by step to knowledge and power hardly even dreamed of by the profane.

66. Brethren of the Order who take long journeys overseas are received in places where they sojourn at the Profess-Houses of the Order for the period of one month.

Tenth House

67. Women of the Order who are about to become mothers receive all care, attention, and honour from all Brethren.

68. Special Profess-Houses will be established for their convenience, should they wish to take advantage of them.

69. The Order offers great social advantages to its members, bringing them as it does into constant association with men and women of high rank.

70. The Order offers extraordinary opportunities to its members in their trades, businesses, or professions, aiding them by co-operation, and securing them clients or customers.

Eleventh House

71. The Order offers friendship to its members, bringing together men and women of similar character, taste, and aspiration.

Twelfth House

72. The secrecy of the Order provides its members with an inviolable shroud of concealment.

73. The crime of slander, which causes so great a proportion of human misery, is rendered extremely dangerous, if not impossible, within the Order by a clause in the Obligation of the Third Degree.

74. The Order exercises its whole power to relieve its members of any constraint to which they may be subjected, attacking with vigour any person or persons who may endeavour to subject them to compulsion, and in all other ways aiding in the complete emancipation of the Brethren from aught that may seek to restrain them from doing That Which They Will.

It is to be observed that these privileges being so vast, it is incumbent upon the honour of every Brother not to abuse them, and the sponsors of any Brother who does so, as well as he himself, will be held strictly to account by the Grand Tribunal. The utmost frankness and good faith between Brethren is essential to the easy and harmonious working of our system, and the Executive Power will see to it that these are encouraged by all possible means, and that breach of them is swiftly and silently suppressed.

Love is the Law, Love under will.

Our fatherly benediction, and the Blessing of the All-Father in the Outer and the Inner be upon you.

IN THE BOOK OF EQUINOX [1]

O. T. O.

Intimation with reference to the Constitution of the Order.

Any province of the O. T. O. is governed by the Grand Master and those to whom he delegates his authority, until such time as the Order is established, which is the case when it possesses eleven or more Profess-Houses in the province. Then the regular constitution is automatically promulgated. The quotation is slightly adapted from an address in one of the rituals.

" This is the Constitution and Government of our Holy Order ; by the study of its Balance you may yourself come to apprehension of how to rule your own. life. For, in True Things, all are but images one of another ; man is but a map of the universe, and Society is but the same on a larger scale.

" Learn then that our Holy Order has but Three True Grades ; as it is written in the Book of the Law : The Hermit, The Lover, and the Man of Earth.

" It is but for convenience that these grades have been separated into Three Triads.

" The Third Triad consists of the degrees from Minerval to Prince of Jerusalem. The Minerval degree is a Prologue to the First ; the degrees subsequent to the Third but pendants to it. In this, the Man of Earth series, there are then but Three Degrees ; and these Three are One.

" The Man of Earth takes no share in the Government of the Order ; for he is not yet called upon to give his life to it in service ; and with us Government is Service, and nothing else. The Man of Earth is therefore in much the position of the Plebeian in Rome in the time of Menenius Agrippa. But there is this marked difference ; that every Man of Earth is encouraged and expected to push on to the next stage. In order that the feelings of the general body may be represented, the Men of Earth choose four persons, two men and two women, from among themselves, to stand continually before the face of the Father, the Supreme and Holy King, serving him day and night. These persons must not be of higher rank than the Second Degree ; they must volunteer for this service at the conclusion of that ceremony ; and therefore they give up their own prospect of advancement in the Order for one year, that they may serve their fellows. This is then the first lesson in our great principle, the attainment of honour through renunciation.

[1] Op. cit., p. 241.

" The degree of Knights of the East and West is but a bridge between the first and second series ; but it is important, for in that grade a new pledge-form must be signed, and the new Knight vowed to devote his life to the Establishment of the Law of Thelema.

" The members of the Fifth Degree are responsible for all that concerns the Social welfare of the Order. This grade is symbolically that of beauty and harmony ; it is the natural stopping-place of the majority of men and women ; for to proceed farther, as will appear, involves renunciation of the. sternest kind. Here then all is joy, peace, well-being on all planes ; the Sovereign Prince Rose Croix is attached equally to the higher and the lower, and forms a natural link between them.[2] Yet let him look to it that his eyes are set on high !

" In this degree the Most Wise Sovereign of each chapter will appoint a committee of four persons, two men and two women, to arrange for all social gatherings, banquets, dances, the performance of plays, and similar pleasures. They will also endeavour to promote harmony among the Brethren in all possible ways, and to compose any disputes by tact and friendliness without formal appeal being made to any more authoritative tribunal.

[2] Juncture of the two opposites ! From the foregoing one might infer that the Rose Croix is formed of two opposite characters of men, good and evil, thus accounting for the contradictory statements made about Rosicrucianism. (Author's note).

" The next grade, that which lies between the Fifth and Sixth Degrees, is called the Senate. This is the first of the governing bodies, properly speaking, and here we begin to insist upon Renunciation. For within this body is the Electoral College of the 0. T. 0.

" The principle of popular election is a fatal folly; its results are visible in every so-called democracy. The elected man is always the mediocrity ; he is the safe man, the sound man, who displeases the majority less than any other; and therefore never the genius, the man of progress and illumination.

" This electoral college consists of Eleven Persons in each country. It has full control of the affairs of the Men of Earth, appointing Lodge Masters at will. It has however no authority over the Chapters of Rose Croix.

" Persons who wish to be appointed to this College by the Supreme and Holy King must volunteer for the office. The appointment is for Eleven Years. Volunteers must renounce for that period all further progress in the Order. They must give evidence of first-rate ability in

1. Some branch of athletics.
2. Some branch of learning.

" They must also possess a profound general knowledge of history and of the art of government, with some attention to philosophy in general.

" They must each live in solitude, without more than the necessary speech even to casual neighbors, serving themselves in all respects, for three months continuously, once at least in every two years. The President will summon them at the four seasons of the year, and if necessary at other times, when they will deliberate upon the affairs placed in their charge. All applications to pass to the Fifth Degree must receive their sanction. Appeal from their decisions may however be made to the Supreme Council.

" The Sixth Degree is an executive or military body, and represents the temporal power of the Supreme and Holy King. Each member is amenable to military discipline. Singly or in concert with his comrades, each Knight is vowed to enforce the decisions of authority.

" The Grade of Grand Inquisitor Commander follows. Here every member has the right to a seat on the Grand Tribunal, which body decides all disputes and complaints which have not been composed by the Chapter of Rose Croix or the Lodge Masters. Its verdicts are without appeal, unless a member of the Electoral College give sanction to take the case to the Areopagus of the Eighth Degree. All members of the Order, even of higher grades, are subject to the Grand Tribunal.

" The next grade is that of Prince of the Royal Secret. Every member of this degree is devoted to the Propagation of the Law in a very special manner ; for this grade is the first in which the Beginning of the Inmost Secret is declared openly. He will therefore, by his personal exertions, induce one hundred and eleven persons to join the Order, before he may proceed to the Seventh Degree, except by special order from the Supreme and Holy King.

" The Seventh Degree is, in military language, the Great General Staff of the Army of the Sixth Degree. From its members the Supreme and Holy King appoints a Supreme Grand Council.

" This Council is charged with the government of the whole of the Second Triad, or Lovers. All members of the Seventh Degree travel as Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the Order, and report, on their own initiative, to the Supreme and Most Holy King, as to the condition of all Lodges and Chapters ; to the Supreme Council, on all affairs of the Second Triad; and to the Electoral College, on those of the third.

" The Eighth Degree is a Philosophical Body. Its members being fully instructed in the Principles of the Order, save in one point only, devote themselves to the understanding of what they have learned in their initiation. They have power to reverse the decisions of the Grand Tribunal, and to compose all conflicts between any of the governing bodies. And this they do upon the great principles of philosophy. For it will often occur that there is contention between two parties, both of whom are right from their own point of view. This is so important that an illustration is desirable. A man is smitten with leprosy : is it right that men should circumscribe his liberty by isolating him from his fellows ? Another holds back land or some other necessity from common use ; is he to be compelled to surrender it ? Such cases of difficulty involve deep philosophical principles ; and the Areopagus of the Eighth Degree is charged with the duty of resolving them in accordance with the great principles of the Order.

" Before the face of the Areopagus stands an independent Parliament of the Guilds. Within the Order, irrespective of grade, the members of each craft, trade, science, or profession form themselves into a Guild, make their own laws, and prosecute their own good, in all matters pertaining to their labour and means of livelihood. Each Guild chooses the man most eminent in it to represent it before the Areopagus of the Eighth Degree ; and all disputes between the various Guilds are argued before that Body, which will decide according to the grand principles of the Order. Its decisions pass for ratification to the Sanctuary of the Gnosis, and thence to the Throne.

" Epopts and Pontiffs of this exalted grade are bound to live in isolation for four consecutive months in every year, meditating the mysteries revealed to them.

" The Ninth Degree — the Sanctuary of the Gnosis — is synthetic. The prime duty of its members is to study and practice the theurgy and thaumaturgy of the grade ; but in addition they must be prepared to act as direct representatives of the Supreme and Most Holy King, radiating his light upon the world. Yet, from the nature of their initiation, they must veil their glory in a cloud of darkness. They move unseen and unrecognized among the youngest of us, subtly and loftily leading us into the holy ineffable mysteries of the True Light.

" The Supreme and Most Holy King is appointed by the

O. H. O. His is the ultimate responsibility for all within his holy kingdom. The succession to the high office of O. H. O. is decided in a manner not here to be declared; but this you may learn, O Brother Magician, that he may be chosen even from the grade of a Minerval. And herein lieth a most sacred Mystery.

" The Electoral College possesses one most singular power. Every eleven years, or in case of a vacancy occurring, they choose two persons from the Ninth Degree, who are charged with the duty of Revolution.

" It is the business of these persons constantly to criticise and oppose the acts of the Supreme and Most Holy King, whether or no they personally approve of them. Should he exhibit weakness, bodily, mental, or moral, they are empowered to appeal to the O. H. O. to depose him; but they, alone of all the members of the Order, are not eligible to the Succession.

" O. H. O., as the supreme authority in the Order, will act, in such an emergency, as he may see fit. He may himself be removed from office, but only by the unanimous vote of all members of the Tenth Degree.

" Of the Eleventh Degree, its powers, privileges, and qualifications, nothing whatever is said in any grade. It has no relation to the general plan of the Order, is inscrutable, and dwells in its own Palaces.

" There are certain important financial obligations in various grades.

" The Electoral College of the Senate is vowed to poverty. All property, earnings, or salaries are vested in or paid over to the Grand Treasurer General. The members subsist on the charity of the Order, which is extended to them in accordance with their original rank in life.

" These remarks apply equally to the Supreme Grand Council, and all higher degrees.

" In the Seventh Degree it is a qualification to vest some real property in the Order ; and no one is admitted to this grade without this preliminary.

" Those members of the Order who have given all to it must obtain the money for their initiation fees and subscriptions from the Third Triad, whose honour is thus concerned in the unselfish support of those who have abandoned all for their sakes.

" The Grand Treasurer General is appointed by the Supreme and Most Holy King; he may be a member of any grade whatever ; but he must, on accepting office, take the vow of poverty. His authority is absolute in all financial matters ; but he is responsible to, and may be removed at will by, the Supreme and Most Holy King. He will appoint a committee to assist him and advise him in his work; and he will usually select one person from each of the governing bodies of the Order.

" Such is a brief outline of the government of the O. T. O. It combines monarchy with democracy; it includes aristocracy, and conceals even the seeds of revolution, by which alone progress can be effected. Thus we balance the Triads, uniting the Three in One ; thus we gather up all the threads of human passion and interest, and weave them into an harmonious tapestry, subtly and diligently with great art, that our Order may seem an ornament even to the Stars that are in the Heavens at Night. In our rainbow-coloured texture we set forth the glory of the whole Universe — See thou to it, brother Magician, that thine own thread be strong, and pure, and of a colour brilliant in itself, yet ready to mingle in all beauty with those of thy brethren 1 "

MASONIC AND PAGAN SYMBOLISM

Translated extract from a Document addressed to all the Supreme Councils of Scottish Rites of the World by

ALBERT PIKE

Delivered in Paris October 1885.
Quoted by Domenico Margiotta in.
Le Culte de la Nature dans la
Franc-magonnerie Universelle.
(p. 51)

D∴M∴J∴ ∴

" The order demands the immediate enforcement of the D∴ M∴ J∴ NEVERTHELESS (Deus Meumque Jus).

" At different epochs of the life of the nations which have the good fortune of possessing an active Supreme Council, and from 1820 onwards, certain similar communications have been made to certain chosen members of the Grand Consistories and Supreme Councils respectively. It is necessary to give the secret of this order.

" Exoterically D∴ M∴ J∴ are the initials of the motto of the 33rd degree. Deus Meumque Jus = Dieu et mon Droit.

" Esoterically D∴ M∴ J∴ are the initials of the words, Destruction, Materialism, Imposition, which " Impose Destruction of everything which resists Materialism.

“ The three points ∴ mean that the Masonic work of Destruction Materialism and Imposition is triple :

Destruction	of Supernaturalism of Authority of Anti-masonic activity
Materialism	of Conscience of Education of the State
Imposition	on the Family on the Nation on Humanity

Consequently the order to enforce practically the D∴ M∴ J∴ NEVERTHELESS means.

" By every means, whatever they may be, one must Impose first on the Family, and then on the Nation in order to achieve the aim of imposing on Humanity.

1. Destruction of Supernaturalism, there where the Conscience has not been reached by Masonic Materialism.
2. The Destruction of Authority, there where Education has not been reached by Masonic Materialism.
3. The Destruction of Anti-Masonry, there where the state has not been reached by Masonic Materialism.

The explanations which follow are taken from various authorities as cited.

Embassy of the United States of America

Berlin, November 1st. 1896.

My dear Reuss: — I thank you very much for your article on the late Kaiser Manoeuvres, which you were so good as to send me. I have found it both interesting and useful. I am now writing my official report, and I have learned several things from you which escaped my notice in the field. Your remarks on the Cavalry, the Bicycle Detachment and the Commissariat Department I have made use of in my report.

You certainly have a good eye for tactical situations and your experience in writing, and perfect mastery of the German language, make you very competent to report a manoeuvre. I shall send your article on to Washington as an appendix to my report. I always send one or two of the best newspaper reports to fill out my own. Please do not forget to send me your report on the next manoeuvres.

Sincerely yours

R. K, EVANS,

My dear .Mr, Reuss:

Soon after seeing you at the Subscriptionts-Ball last night, I met Mr. W. C. Heick, who is one of the Managers of the New York Herald. and who, 1 have always understood, is quite near its proprietor. In the course of our conversation Mr. Reick asked me if I could recommend any one to him as a Berlin Correspondent for the Herald. I at once thought of you as being the best informed of the American correspondents here; and therefore a suitable man for the place, if you cared to take it, and if you could do so in consideration of your engagement with the United Press. Mr. Reick said that he would like to see you and talk the matter over, and I promised to let you know that he was here and that you could find him at the Hotel Bristol today. — Wishing you success, I am

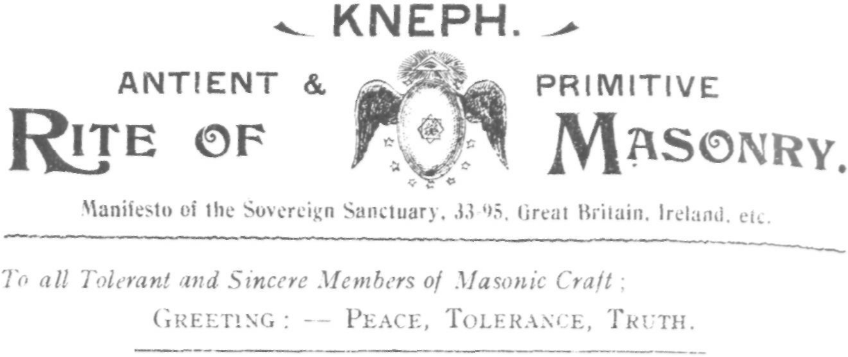
2. Kneph. Antient & Primitive Rite of Masonry. Manifesto of the Sovereign Sanctuary, signed by John Yarker and other members and officers of the Rite.



KNEPH.

ANTIENT & PRIMITIVE RITE OF MASONRY.

Manifesto of the Sovereign Sanctuary, 33-95, Great Britain, Ireland, etc.

To all Tolerant and Sincere Members of Masonic Craft;

GREETING: — PEACE, TOLERANCE, TRUTH.

WHEREAS at a recent meeting, held in Liverpool, it was brought to the notice of this Sovereign Body that misrepresentations, whether by error or design, are constantly made in regard to this valuable Kite, by certain badly informed Masons, interested persons, and others, who apparently forget their Masonic duties and obligation*.

THEREFORE it was resolved that it was advisable we should make known the following facts with reference to its history, its rights, and its privileges, in order that the same may be brought prominently under the notice of all Masons who have a sincere desire to acquire truth and knowledge.

FIRST. — Early in the 18th century, there existed in this and other countries, a system termed Antient Masonry. and which included such degrees as the Red Cross (of Babylon), under various names, the Rosy Cross (modern Rose Croix), the Kadosh; and again the Royal Arch, the Templar, the Templar Priest, or York System. Carried to France by British Jacobites, these became the nucleus of many Rites that were cumulated later. All Antient Rites, so called, include these degrees under varied names, but the firts Cratt Grand Lodge, constituted in 1717, ignored them until 1813. All the first founders of our Sovereign Body possessed these degrees, not from one source, but various independent Rites.

SECOND — It follows, that our Sovereign Body has a time immemorial right, as Antient Masons of the higher degrees, to practise a system which during the whole of the last and present centuries conferred, and still confers, the designation of Ancient Masons in this and all other countries.

THIRD. — It was constitutionally established at Freemasons' Tavern, London, in 1872, when it united to its own organization certain Chapters of the Red and Rosy Cross, Kadosh, English Grand Inspector, &c., existing independently from a time immemorial date. But it confers its degrees upon Master Masons only in good standing under some constitutional Grand Lodge, and it is allied and " Confederated " with numerous bodies, existing in all countries where Masonry is practised.

FOURTH — It has an undoubted right upon which it is prepared to insit, to the' fullest protection under the following Article wchich is No. 2 of the unalterable Constitution and unrepeatable Law of the United Grand Lodge of England, mutually accepted by the " Antient " and " Modern " Masons when they united their forces in 1813, viz: —
" It is declared and pronounced that pure
" Ancient Masonry consists of three degrees,
" and no more, viz : Those ot Entered Ap-
" prentice, the Fellow Craft, and the Master
" Mason (including the Supreme Order of the " Holy Royal Arch). But this Article is not " intended to prevent anv Lodge or Chapter
" from holding a Meeting in any of the Orders
" of Chivalry, according to the Constitutions of " the said Orders. "

FIFTH. — All its degrees are as unsectarian as those of Craft Masonry, and are accepted, without scruple, by men of all religious opinions ; one Chapter has even Initiated Parsees, Jews, Moslems, Trinitarian and Unitarian Christians. Besides this it was designed, in establishing the Rite here to enable all earnest Masons to acquire the fullest Masonic knowledge and dignity at a moderate cost, as opposed to prohibitive fees.

SIXTH. - Its Neophytes, being recognised Master Masons, receive the Red and Rosy-Cross of the " Antients, " under the modern names of these decrees, in Rose Croix CHAPTERS. From this they are advanced to the Kadosh and Grand Inspector in SENATES. Finally they receive the philosophic Egyptian grades in COUNCILS of 30-90^0. Its official grades are the Presidents or Masters. The Sovereign Body has also added, under foreign Charter, the Rite of Mizraim of 90^0 ; though our first members obtained it from bodies existing prior to 1823. when the Duke of Sussex was its Chief in England, the Duke of Leinster in Ireland, and Dr. Walker Arnott in Scotland ; those authorities having long become extinct. In an unprinted letter of 1862 the last named learned Brother states, that the late Duke of Athol was initiated into the Kite of Mizraim at Paris in 1797, and goes on to express his regret that when the Rite Ancien of 33^0 was established in Scotland, in 1845, it did not combine that of Mizraim with it.

SEVENTH. — Our Sovereign Body has absolute right, under ihe above quoted Article of Union to a peaceful practise of all degrees that can tend to elucidate Masonic Rites, symbolism, history, etc. We may point out, in this relation, that Ireland, and its later imitator England, are the only Masonic kingdoms in the World in which the U*nsectarian* A. & P. Rite has been unable to labour peaceably with the Trinitarian A. &A Kite of 33°. In Egypt, Roumania, Spain, and some other countries, there are mutual Treaties of assistance between the Craft Grand Lodge ; the A. & A. Rite of 33^0 , and the A. & P. Rite of 95^0. Even the A, & A. " Mother S. G. C. " 33^0 of Charleston has members who belong to both bodies, and we could give very distinguished names. In France the Grand Orient concorded in 1868 the degrees of the A. & P. Rite with those of the A. & P. Rite, and many other Rites possessed by it; moreover the A. & A. Rite, and that of Mizraim are allowed to give the three first degrees. England alone swears its Trinitarian Neophytes, that they will visit and belong to no other system: this needs no comment. Even in Craft Masonry the prevailing sentiments and ruling policy, in large towns, are not commendable to just men. The late Dr. Arnott who was one of the most eminent Masons Scotland has had, in the letter previously quoted, says, " The first principles of Masonry, I was taught, were equality, so far as regards civil or private fortune, and to give high offices to those only who had Proved themselves best Masons, provided their character in the world was unblemished ; by these principles I have been actuated throughout. "

EIGHTH. — However unpalatable it may be to English Masons, of whom comparatively few go beyond the third Degree, it must be admitted that in foreign countries the (rat: counts tor little in comparison with what arc termed the High-grades. Moreover this Sovereign Body is the only one which has the power to confer all known degrees in Free Masonry ; it has full Rituals of all the Degrees, whilst other Rites give by name all but 2^0 out of 30^0. It is our desire to bespeak no more than a friendly rivalry with other Rites, for we admit all, upon the assumption that they seek the same end as ourselves : namely : the promulgation of the principles of universal peace and charity, and the general welfare of mankind.

FINALLY, we need only add that earnest enquirers may obtain such information as they may desire by addressing any of the following members and officers of the Rite.

Dear Bro Reuss,

I am in correspondence with Bro Yarker the G Master on your matters & I will get what you want from him, if possible soon.

Some of your German Masons are I hear hostile: some German Masonic Journalist is trying to attack you and suggests you want to "make masons clandestinely" – that is underhand – he has written to an Official of the Grand Lodge of England— who wrote to me for information

I have sent him a Baluster & Constitutions to show that the Swed three degrees are to be given to Master Masons, see Rule V. on page 9. & that the Swed. Rite does not admit outsiders to Masonry.

Best thanks for the Book of Memorial Rules, which I am having translated & I will then send you a statement as to

Mason of England & a Warrant for a Lodge
but he hesitates to issue written authority for 6
Lodges — which your Latomia orgs are not regular — I had got his permission to make a Prov Gd Lodge of Germania for you; but now he hesitates — because he does not want to have half the German Masonic World condemning him – as well as half the English – who condemn him for the A&P. Rite.

Please write to him

John Yarker Esq

and get his authority to go on : at present my

With best wishes

" " Dr Wm Robert Woodman, M.D. 1878–1891
" " Dr. Wm. Wynn Westcott, M.B.; D.P.H. 1891-902

From this parent-stem have sprung the High Councils of Scotia, Hibernia, United States and Canada.

Fratres of the Society of Germania will be welcome guests at the Convocations of the Metropolitan, York and Newcastle Colleges of England, and the M.W. Supreme Magus in Anglia will give introductions to German fratres to the Colleges in Scotia etc.

The Aims of the Societas, are —

See Book of Regulations.

The Societas in Germania receives a Warrant under the hand of Dr. Wm. Wynn Westcott the Supreme Magus in Anglia, who is now the Senior S.M. in mundo.

Master Masons are first admitted to the Grade of Zelator, I°. and may advance to the grades of Theoricus 2°, Practicus 3°, and Philosophus 4° by regular attendance

The three Adepts grades are conferred upon fratres who assist by study, teaching and giving Lectures.

The 8° Grade of Magister is conferred upon the Celebrant of each College at his Installation: he is to chosen once a year by the fratres of his College, and is then to be installed by other fratres of the 8th Grade in secret. at the Installation Convocation: members of lower grades leaving the Temple during the Ceremonies of Magister and Installation.

At the College Convocations the Celebrants will sometimes read certain Lectures which have been given in English Temples, duly translated into German Language, in addition to Lectures by the German Fratres. The M.W.S.M. Dr W. Wynn Westcott will supervise with paternal care the proceedings of the German Colleges, while leaving them a free hand in the work, while within the limits of the Aims of the Societas, but the fratres must avoid discussion of matters which concern

Politics, and those which may cause personal dissension on Theology and Sectarianism, for the Societas is intended for personal mutual improvement and satisfaction.
The German Colleges must provide suitable furniture and clothing, and every Frater must wear the Jewel, of white enamel diamond shaped & bearing a simple four limbed cross.
The German Council shall issue Parchments.
Certificates of Membership, and it would be wise to issue also a small card of membership, small enough to be carried in a purse or pocket book for use when visiting other Colleges, or to adopt the English card.

Warrant on Parchment to follow.
For registration in the Golden Book a fee of one Mark should be remitted

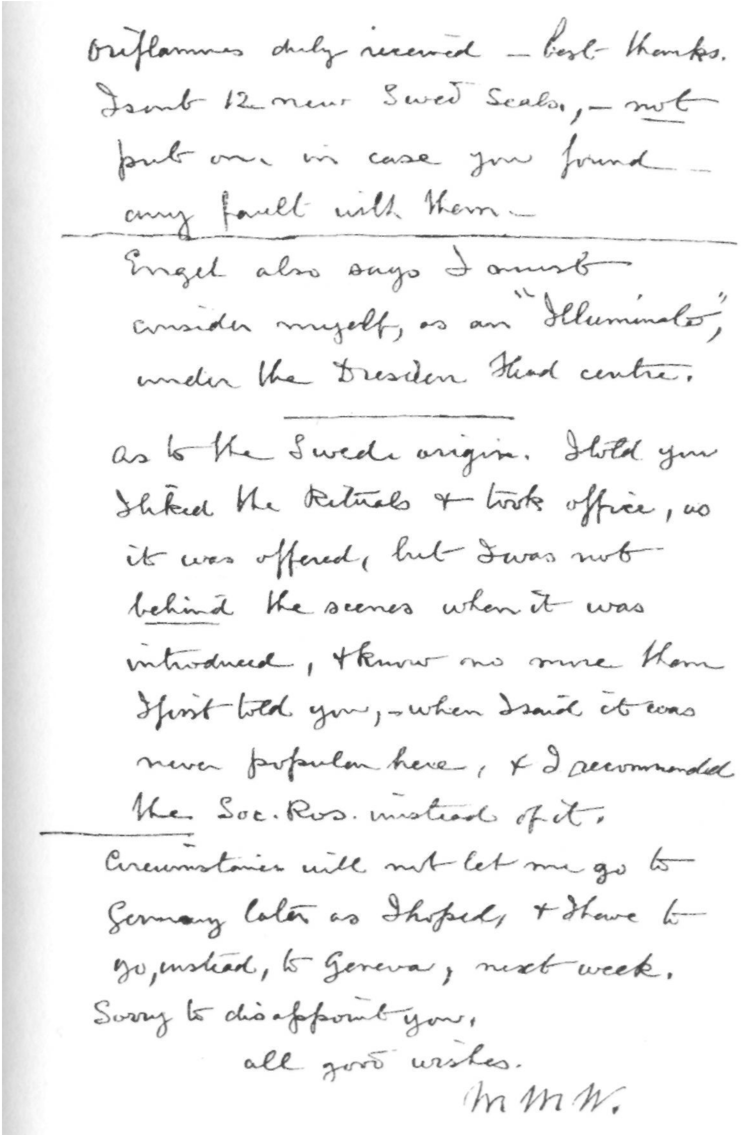
Care Frater,

In the Swedenborg Rite I am only acting for Bro Yarker the G Master. but I fear I am in for a pretty quarrel between you and your German friends. I am likely to be, like the wheat, ground between the upper + lower mill stones. Engel does not mention you; he only says he resigns the German Swed Lodge, but likes the Rite, and remains a member of the English Body.



oriflammes duly received — best thanks.

I liked the Rituals & took office, as it was offered, but I was not

I first told you, — when I said it was never popular here, & I recommended

Care Frater,

The Soc Ros. meeting ought to be on Thursday July 10, — but it may be a week later on account of my absence.

Swed Rite

Yarker alone can say anything about the English origin of it. My private opinion is that an American wrote it abt 1870 & founded it in Canada - but I have no proof of this. It is a good Ritual whoever wrote it & I am glad to have it, but I dont guarantee any history of it.

You must take it for what it is worth. & its 25 years known history in England.
I see no reason to think that Yarker will recede from his first position, that he gave the use of the Swed Rite to a proper English Freemason to give to German masons..

I note what you say about the Illuminati and hereby accept the position of Regent, and must find a good man to work it up. Do I understand that Engel is now out of the Order? I have not heard any more from him.

Your fratres must each choose a Latin motto - Mine is "Quod scis, nescis." - "even what you know - you dont really know" is a free translation - I will read your Report on Second Thursday in October. to the High Council & Met. Coll.

There must be a lot of Rosic MSS. lying hid in your country make every effort to find some. We have copies of two here. I will ask the H.C. about the use of Library. I purpose to keep German contributions for buying further Books for it, and for that alone. You might look out to buy any German Rosic books for us. Yours sincerely. Wynn Westcott.

Dear Bro Reuss

Re Illuminati ——

After thanking you again for the new Regent Warrant, I must now say I have a rough English translation of your typed Rituals – Minerva Synod – Andrew & Rose Croix –

I do not find any description of the procedure you spoke of – of the personal pupilage & of

Question and answer system.
before admission to Minerva —

The Illuminati system as a whole may suit your country — but I could not work it here — as a whole, as it stands — Chiefly because of the Rose degree — it does not touch my Rosic Ritual — but large parts of it are nearly word for word with the 18th grade of the Ancient and Accepted
Rite — called "Prince of Rose Croix" —
This is the most aristocratic and richest body of Masons in England

It has 33 grades – and I am a 30th I dare not work your Rose Ritual, because it trespasses so much – I should be sent to Coventry in London.

The Synod and Minerva are all right, and possibly the Andrew – – unless that corresponds to the "Royal Order of Scotland" – of which I am not sure.

I can get the Synod & Minerva rendered into good English & then show them to Waite & Harand & hear what they say.
I should be glad to do what I can for the Illuminati Order —

In hopes I may soon hear from you on this matter
Believe me
Yours sincerely
W. W. Westcott.

The Book of Ordinances too is full of very cumbersome, complex rules — & would have to be simpler here —

7. The first letter is addressed by the Supreme Council for Great Britain of A. & P. and Mizraim Rites to their correspondent — Theodor Reuss — in Berlin, advising that the application of Mrs Annie Besant for admission into that order be not granted.

Reuss communicated the letter to Mrs Besant who returned it stating that she had made no application for admission into " Adoptive Masonry ". The first letter bears the note at the side " To be returned to T. Reuss ". See page 548.

Dear Sir and Brother,

We have carefully considered the application of Mrs Annie Besant, which you have submitted for our opinion, and we are unanimously of opinion that it would be inadvisable to grant it. We consider that the character of the work done by the applicant during the past eight or nine years has been such as to indicate that her connection with our Order would be undesirable in every way. We would go so far as to say that we think that her application is not disinterested, but is part of a general plan of a secret nature having its centre in India, the object of which is to get control over such organisations as ours for the furtherance of certain ends.

Dear Sir & Brother,

I return the letter, which does not interest me, as I have never made any application for admission into Adoptive Masonry, & have refused its highest degree, when it was offered to me. I wrote to you at Dr Hartmann's suggestion, to see if a woman would be admitted into the M. & M. I do not regard Adoptive Masonry as true Masonry. I hold the diploma of the M. & M. from Palermo.

'Big Bang' Evidence Announced

It now seems clear that gravitational forces within these massive ripples in space and time were the key driving force, Smoot said, slowly drawing the thin gases into dense clumps that now form all matter.

"It's one of the major discoveries of the century," said physicist Joel Primack of the University of California, Santa Cruz. "In fact, it's one of the major discoveries of science."

The discovery is "unbelievably important," added physicist Michael Turner of the University of Chicago. "The significance of this cannot be overstated. They have found the holy grail of cosmology. ... If it is, indeed, correct, this certainly would have to be considered for a Nobel Prize."

The temperature and size of the structures discovered by Smoot and his colleagues also provide strong confirmation of the theory that as of the matter in

Scientists: Universe might end with Big Crunch

The Philadelphia Inquirer 4/26/02

PHILADELPHIA — Two astrophysicists, offering a new theory for the life and death of the universe, predict the Big Bang will be followed by a Big Crunch.

They predict that in about a trillion years, the universe will end in a fiery cataclysm that will give birth to a new universe.

And it will happen over and over again in infinite cycles, according to this new scenario, which represents the first serious alternative to the standard Big Bang theory to come along in 20 years.

The Big Bang theory holds that the universe had a definite beginning and appears fated to expand forever.

"You don't have to have a beginning," said Paul Steinhardt of Princeton University, who is proposing the new idea along with Neil Turok of Cambridge University. It is presented today in the journal Science.

The notion of a cyclical cosmos is not entirely new. Hindu philosophers centuries ago described a universe that went through cycles of birth, death and rebirth every 8.62 billion years, Steinhardt said. The time scale was a bit different than that proposed by the modern scientists, and Steinhardt and Turok are also proposing some bizarre physics involving a fifth make their sce-

One of those instruments is the DUMAND, an array of sensitive light detectors now being installed three miles under the surface of the Pacific Ocean off the island of Hawaii.

The instrument, designed to detect neutrinos that have passed through the Earth's core, uses special tubes that spot tiny flashes of light. Those flashes are muons, short-lived particles created when neutrinos hit rock or water.

Ocean-floor drilling began on DUMAND, which stands for Deep Underwater Muon and Neutrino Detector, in July. It is expected to cost the Department of Energy $10 million and open for business in late 1993 or 1994.

No one is sure what DUMAND will find.

"It's a real risky project," Kazanas said. "Someone has to go three miles deep in the ocean and put the detectors there. It's never been done before."

There is a chance the instrument won't be sensitive enough to detect the high-energy particles, he said. "And if these (galactic) sources don't make neutrinos, then it won't work anyway."

But, he said, "even if we see nothing, it will still tell us something."

INTRODUCTION

This book continues where Occult Ether Physics leaves off, and explains how a scientific thought-control dictatorship has been created gradually, by combined coercive-monopolist interests, through a monolithic mass media, a compliant government, and armies of overt and covert government propagandists. These combined forces manufacture opinion and control most thought in our society, making it difficult for innovative individuals to express divergent scientific views without being virtually burned at the stake as "heretics" by quasi-religious scientific thought-control zombies, who have fallen victim to the pressure to believe the science that Big Brother wants them to.

In Occult Ether Physics (1997, 1998), Space Aliens From the Pentagon (1993, 1996), and Pentagon Aliens (1999), I expounded on and documented the most important discovery in science, Nikola Tesla's electrodynamic space propulsion. Tesla and his work were literally buried by Relativism, especially after 1919. I also exposed some paradoxes of Relativism, and have apparently had a significant influence beyond the credit afforded me, both in the UFO and the free-energy fields (which are really the same fields).

The motive for the Occult Science Dictatorship, which first began with the establishment of media-promoted Relativism, was to suppress, ridicule and conceal ether physics and free energy discoveries by the monopolist-owned media giants who obliterated Tesla's name, because he had made so many important free energy discoveries. They also purged the ether physics through which Tesla had realized his electrodynamic space propulsion method. This discovery threatened the "energy-heart" of perpetual security and control by the monopolies. Energy control was the cash cow that the monopolies relied on for continuity. He who threatened to sever the lines of energy dependency, threatened the flow of cash into the pockets of the monopolies, and had to be eliminated.

The Dictatorship promotes a type of sophisticated pseudo-science in areas where its interests are threatened. This diverts the inquisitive nature of those who believe the lies which suppress alternative science by declaring it "impossible" or "pseudo-science".

With gasoline and fuel prices generally at an all-time high, and California in an artificially-created energy crunch, the oil giants proposed to drill in the pristine Alaskan National Wildlife Refuge. They actually had the gall to attempt to drill in the Yellowstone. Meanwhile, SUV owners are lucky if they get seven miles per gallon. The propaganda I heard on the news in July, 2001 was that it came up in Congress that SUVs "are only getting 24 miles per gallon", but "should be getting 27 miles per gallon", but "manufacturers had refused to allow it." What a laugh. I wonder how much the SUV manufacturers had to pay for that lie.

I have in my files a list of over 200 patents for vapor carburetors, granted between the 1920s and 1940. Many of these carburetors were available to the public until 1940, from such manufacturers as the Holly Carburetor Company. These companies still have them in their files, and probably still possess prototypes and production models of them. So why don't they start manufacturing them again and sell them to us?

The Pogue carburetor was tested in 1935. A V-8 Ford coupe, driven from Winnipeg, Manitoba to Vancouver, B.C. Canada, got 130 miles per gallon. The government grabbed the carburetor and put it on the Sherman Tank, as WW II began. The tanks got 70 miles per gallon. Rommel's Afrika Korps ran out of fuel. After the 8th A.F. Ploesti (Romanian) oil refinery raid, the Germans resorted to American "acetylene chemistry" to produce gasoline from coal, but the Panzer Korps eventually ran out of fuel during the war. Hence, the Pogue carburetor became a "national security secret", denied to the public by extraordinary "national security" policies. The pattern of using the government's national security measures to unconstitutionally suppress the natural technological progress of our people has never been broken, at least not yet.

In 2000 it was announced that three Japanese-made "gasoline-electric hybrid" cars would hit the open market in 2001 (they are on the road now). The oil companies made a pre-emptive strike, fabricating an "energy crisis" in late 2000 to justify jacking up the price of international and domestic fuels. They also manipulated the markets and available energy resources to fabricate the "California energy crisis". This 'crisis' and the artificial increase in the price of Arab crude (the OPEC cartel was an invention of the international importers, not the Arabs, who only do what they are told), were used to excuse the sudden abandonment of the "conservation of our national resources"—a major issue back in 1973—incredibly, to support the continued suppression of domestic production in favor of importation of foreign crude, right in the middle of another (artificially-created) "fuel crisis"!

Domestic oil production has been suppressed since WW II in favor of the large—mostly Rockefeller-owned—international oil importers from sources in South America, the Middle East, Indonesia, etc. The oil-importers were able to get our government to limit domestic U.S. oil production, so they could buy cheap foreign oil and sell petroleum products domestically at artificially high prices at the expense of independent domestic producers, who were restricted to limited production. In Texas, in the '60s, the "five-day allowable" meant that domestic independent producers could pump crude oil only five days per month. Meanwhile, the international oil importers—which also owned plenty of domestic mineral deposits—still had their foreign oil coming in every day of every month without restrictions, so only the public, domestic independents and oil workers were harmed by the illegal and unconstitutional denial of income.

It is pertinent to note that, while we ordinary citizens are denied the fuel-saving carburetors, the oil companies ship their crude in giant, long, narrow tankers which exploit a highly efficient nautical principle, using ships with proportionally long hulls to move the crude from foreign locations to the coastal American refineries of the Rockefeller companies with the greatest efficiency. When it came to saving HIS money, John D. Rockefeller really didn't mess around, but he made certain that the U.S. government prohibited us from practicing the same kind of frugality.

In 1967, before the 1973 "fuel crisis", the government began to require special equipment on new automobiles for use in America. One of these devices was the catalytic converter. So what does a catalytic converter do? A catalytic converter contains "activated carbon"—impregnated with a catalyst, such as "platinum black" (platinum oxide) or "palladium black" (palladium oxide)—which converts hydro-carbon gases or liquids to carbon dioxide (CO_2), on contact. Hydro-carbon gases and liquids are fuels, which can be used to run your engine.

CO_2 is a fire extinguisher, especially for hydrocarbon fuel fires. If you put the hydrocarbons in the vapor state, from your gas tank, into a carburetor vacuum intake, it will help to run your engine. If you put CO_2 into your carburetor vacuum intake, it will partially "extinguish" the combustion in your engine, and rob you of gas mileage. So why does the U.S. government require auto manufacturers to install mandatory catalytic converters on your car, which convert usable, raw hydrocarbon vapor fuel from your gas tank, and CO (carbon monoxide) "blow-by" from your crankcase, into a "fire extinguisher", then put that fire extinguisher into your carburetor to interfere with the combustion in your engine, and rob you of gas mileage? And why did it require the manufacturers to do that in 1967? Because the oil companies wanted it to.

This book is about how powerful economic interests, which also control the government, the mass media and academic institutions, have used scientific thought-control to suppress free-energy technology. The UFO is only the most glaring and remarkable example. If you are intelligent enough to realize that man-made UFOs exist, then you know that "free energy inventions work", because a UFO is a free energy invention.

Because of the corrupt behavior of the mega-corporations, oil companies and our government, we must choose between them and the UFO and other free-energy technology, because they have left us no alternative, and because it is the rational and ethical thing to do. If there is "global warming", the chief culprits are the oil companies and our government. The ideas which I have advocated for over 30 years will remove this corporate-created red herring when put into effect.

Since it now appears that physics took a "wrong turn" after 1900 and abandoned the path of ether physics, after it had already produced so many of the world's greatest discoveries—the electron, radio, electrodynamic space propulsion, free-energy generators, and the "nuts and bolts" of electrical science as we know it, etc.,—we must now go back and build a new physics on the foundation of an integrated view of reality which includes ether physics.

We must rake government secrecy and misinformation aside, and take a closer look at the reality of that not-so-distant past of a century ago. The activity has already begun, and exciting times are ahead once more in the field of science.

Through the use of creative intuition, logic and reason, a web of "credential-ism" is removed, to reveal a body of scientific orthodoxy, full of contradictions, misrepresentations, false logic, and mysticism. As these are cut away, a soft underbelly of pseudo-science, which has been masquerading as absolute, immutable truth for almost a century is exposed. We must replace this soft underbelly with "abs of steel".

Speaking of the soft underbelly, contrary to what the public is led to believe, Relativism was invented not by Albert Einstein, but by a Croatian Jesuit Priest named R. G. Boscovich (1711-87), the first exponent of Newtonian ideas in Italy, who attempted to account for all physical effects in terms of action at a distance between point particles.[1]

The concept of the luminiferous ether was soon abandoned, in spite of Huygens' development of a brilliant wave hypothesis. A "corpuscular" theory of light—based on Newton's earlier hypothesis[3]—was adopted almost universally. So the ether theory had been abandoned before in this earlier mid- 18th century instance, in favor of a corpuscular theory of light. Ether theory was to be taken up again, then abandoned at the beginning of the 20th century, for the same reasons... Relativism and the corpuscular theory of light.

Back in the 18th century, Boscovich and his assistant Michell had taught the doctrine of the mutual interpenetration of matter, i.e., that two substances may occupy the same space at the same time, without excluding each other.[4]

In 1782, George Louis LeSage[5] published a proposal to account for gravitation by means of the ether theory of Renee Descarte, that a cloud of excessively minute particles—"ultra-mundane corpuscles" as he called them—which resembled the neutrinos of modern atomic physics, filled all space. According to Le Sage, the ether moved with great speed in all directions. When two particles or bodies of ponderable matter were near each other, they would partly screen each other from bombardment by this ether, so that less bombardment on their screened sides increased the force on their unscreened sides, pushing them together, appearing to be an attractive force between them, which Le Sage identified as Newton's force of gravity.

In 1889, Sir William Thomson[6] made the assumption that material atoms move through space without displacing the ether, a concept which reflected the Boscovich theory. But by 1896[7], he had redacted this theory in embarrassment, when he realized how ridiculous it was.

Albert Einstein's wife, a Croatian scientist, was probably responsible for introducing Einstein to the Relativism of Boscovich. This is probably the origin of rumors that Einstein had "stolen" the theory of Relativity from his wife. When Tesla was asked about Relativism, he disdainfully exclaimed, "I have already heard about this from Boscovich." Tesla's well-known objections to Relativism were probably formulated while Einstein was still a boy.

Boscovich and Michell had arrived at their Relativist Theory by reflecting on Baxter's doctrine of "the immateriality of the soul", a religious doctrine appropriate to a church, but not really essential to a scientific laboratory. If the Jesuits had gained control of science more permanently, there would probably be prayer benches in physics labs today. They said 'an atom would have no definite size, but should be conceived as extending throughout all space'; and 'a molecule would consist not of atoms side by side', but of 'spheres of power mutually penetrated, and the centres even coinciding.'[8]

In 1846, Michael Faraday[9] appeared to briefly fall under the influence of Relativism, proposing to 'dismiss the aether', or to replace it by lines of force between centres', with 'the centres and lines of force together constituting the particles of material substance'. By 1851 however[10], the spell was broken, when Faraday began the modern era of theory which Relativism opposes today. Faraday suggested that if the existence of a luminiferous aether were to be admitted, it might be the vehicle of magnetic force, adding, 'if there be an ether, it should have other uses than simply the conveyance of radiations'. This sentence is regarded as the origin of the electromagnetic theory of light.

The religious nature of Relativism has changed very little since 1763. In the meanwhile, ether theory has prevailed, been rejected twice, and is now in resurgence. Both the 1763 attack by Boscovich and the 1905 attack by Einstein resulted in the suppression of ether theory. The present religious dogmatism of Relativism has petrified the field of physics in universities and student laboratories, and has driven the more creative and innovative students away, causing a "brain drain", and attracting the least creative students.[11]

The flaky concepts of 'time travel', 'mutual inter-penetration of matter', 'atoms extending to infinity', 'matter or time dilation or compression', and 'time dragging' or 'frame-dragging', have taken a toll on the minds of the world's students and scientists for long enough, so that the time is now ripe for a change.

In Occult Ether Physics I asserted that a select few government and corporate scientists were privy to 'occult' scientific principles, based on ether physics, which Relativism is used to conceal. This is the "classified science" that the government conceals pursuant to the National Security Act.

Since the advent of government-manipulated UFOlogy, generally recognized as getting seriously under way with the 1947 Roswell Hoax, the theory of Relativity has been used more than anything else to scramble the brains of a clueless public, which has now been dumbed down by over 54 years of this theory, which has also been conspicuously used to conceal man-made UFOs with fabricated "parallel universes" (the Boscovich "mutual inter-penetration" theory), Einsteinian time-travel scenarios, "space-time warps", and all manner of contorted stories and fantasies related to Relativist theory, which have been manufactured by CIA committees of propagandists with Ph.D.s in Relativity theory.

I have watched the growth of the many false theories derived from Relativity since 1946—even before Roswell—but have never been fooled by them. I was there when the people of Roswell and surrounding areas, where the government UFOs were so often observed after WWII, were gradually coerced and intimidated into shutting up about "secret German aircraft" being developed by our government at nearby bases, and finally accepting the government lies that UFOs are alien spacecraft.

A believer in man-made UFOs, who doesn't happen to share a belief in space aliens as the responsible—or even the partially responsible—parties, is made to feel uncomfortable when among those of a UFOlogy gathering, sort of like an Atheist at a fundamentalist Christian revival meeting, or a microbiologist at a witch-doctor convention.

The pressure to believe—in such things as alien visitations, bogus UFO technology, mental telepathy with aliens, remote viewing, the Relativist religion, the Big Bang, bogus conspiracies, time-travel, abductions by aliens, "other dimensions", "inter-dimensional travel", "secret alien rulers of earth", ghosts, etc.—is not the natural product of truly free or healthy minds. It is the product of controlled minds, whether by thought control—as in the case of government-controlled scientists, professionals, or the public—or by mind control—as in the case of victims of covert, abusive government mind-control programs, who have been chosen and subjected involuntarily as victims to such programs, because they are suggestible people, many of whom already had neurological disorders which rendered them vulnerable in the first place.

As for "aliens", I am not saying that it is impossible for intelligent life to exist elsewhere in the universe. What I am saying is that there is no reliable evidence that such extraterrestrial beings have ever visited earth, even though there are many covert CIA programs, researchers, front-writers and speakers, who are paid to misinterpret, mal-interpret, or re-interpret vague, ambivalent, misunderstood, mysterious, or unexplained things in archaeology, ancient history and manuscripts, languages, cultures, art forms, mythology, religion or poetry; or in the 'exact' sciences, such as meteorology, physics, astronomy or paleontology... all to create false "documentation" for such theories.

These scenarios twist ancient history and archaeology around to make it look like flying saucers/UFOs, seen by millions of rational people, are the ships of space aliens, who have been "controlling humanity for thousands, even millions, of years", and even promote the lie that aliens have "seeded" human DNA with alien (or 'reptilian-alien') DNA.

The truth of the matter is, we don't know for certain that intelligent alien life forms exist elsewhere in the universe, having no direct knowledge to that effect, nor do we possess any object fabricated by an alien life form. While it may be probable that alien life exists elsewhere, we still do not know, and will probably never know for sure. Probability is not sufficient to base a reasonable belief that aliens are visiting and controlling earth, nor worth changing your life or opinions over.

We know that organic life forms—the only kind we do know of—are what aliens would also have to be, in order to survive in earth's environment, even with special clothing. Aliens would also have to come from a similar environment to earth. The nearest "habitable" planets are so far away, that even if traveling at the speed of light, the trip would take too long, even millions of years in the case of some of the star systems suggested. This gulf can't be traversed by "time travel" or "wormhole" scenarios buttressed by contorted Relativist mathematical equations and "explanations".

It has been estimated for example, that a ship traveling at only one-quarter the speed of light, which collided with a particle the size of a grain of sand, would be disintegrated. Extraterrestrials would have no compelling reason to come to earth, and if they had been coming here for years, they would have made their presence unmistakably known to us, but have not done so. Consequently, there is no reliable evidence or logic to back up such theories.

There is plenty of evidence and logic to back up the fact that the government created these programs to induce incredible delusions as a means of confusing intelligent, inquisitive minds, to conceal the fantastic, yet exclusively man-made electrodynamic space propulsion technology of Nikola Tesla. And these programs don't stop at the TV set. They extend into schools, textbooks, literature, movies, religion, and anywhere else the spooks consider fertile ground to plant the seeds of these lies.

They have made extensive studies of human psychology, religion, mysticism, mythology, folk-tales, ethnology, and psychiatry, specifically to learn the best ways of making these lies palatable, and to know beforehand just what kinds of people will respond "positively" to these perverse and downright silly lies.

There are many of these allegations, fantasies, and hoaxes, which can be traced directly or indirectly to government sources. The rest appear to be entrained and induced by the continuous government thought-control propaganda, always in such a way as to give the government "plausible deniability".

Whether you are willing to admit it, we are living in a time in which scientific thought is being systematically controlled by a hidden dictatorship, brought about by thought-control over most people in society. This thought-control sometimes takes the form of reticence, rejection of rational explanations, or active promulgation by dupes. The existence of this dictatorship is not obvious to the naive and trusting masses, because it is covertly carried out and enforced through means unsuspected by them, to conceal certain ("occult") scientific knowledge of UFOs and other free-energy technology, as well as to make them more pliable to the government's other Big Lies of a more political nature.

The secret technologies acquired by the government and placed under secrecy orders—under threat of punishment by law of those within the government, even by death without trial, should they dare to reveal these scientific secrets—all belong to the American people, because they paid for them, or belong to the inventors, scientists, or other individuals from whom the government stole or confiscated them at the point of a gun.

Most government secrecy is actually protectionism, for the benefit of private corporations, executed through abuse of the government's exclusive legal right to the use of force, to protect powerful, mega-corporate interests. The government cloaks these illegal actions beneath a veil of "national security", which gives the corporate protectionism a false aura of "the rule of law", patriotism, and legal force and effect, which equates "corporate security interests" with "national security interests".

Powerful economic interests are conservative in nature, in the sense that a large percent of corporate holdings are tied up in archaic fuels—like oil, natural gas and coal—in archaic technology-like cars, ships, planes and trains—and in other archaic and "conservative" resources. This conservatism "conserves" the resources of old, powerful families, old powerful corporations, old powerful financial institutions, old powerful political traditions, old powerful manufacturing interests, and old vested mineral interests, investments in "conventional" industry and technology, chemical cartels, and other things controlled by the few—threatened by new technology in the hands of the many—particularly that involving energy and transportation.

These conservative interests—usually portrayed as "liberals" —have resisted and fought tooth and nail to prevent free energy technology from taking hold for over a hundred years.

Of all the secrets being protected by the government on behalf of the coercive-monopolists who control it, none is more important that the flying saucer electrodynamic propulsion technology of Nikola Tesla, which is why there is still such a big hullabaloo over it, over 56 years after the U.S. government acquired it from Nazi Germany. This book explains the workings of this dictatorship, and points out why and how we should end it.

I heard one of the people who conspicuously spreads the alien line say, "I have no agenda". Anyone who says they have no agenda is a liar, because everyone has an agenda, unless they are unconscious, and he wasn't unconscious when he said it. So why did he lie? To make his "alien lies" more believable? The big question is, who has an "undisclosed" agenda?

My agenda is out in the open: To encourage people to realize that UFO technology exists; that it is free-energy technology; that it is exclusively man-made technology (not of alien origin), which humans were capable of constructing with existing technology at least ninety years ago; that it is ours because we paid for it; that we can build our own ships, using relatively simple technology; that there are many other free-energy technologies; that we can stick together and demand the right to use this technology, since the government has no legitimate right to conceal it, or to withhold it from us, or to prevent us from using it; and that the U.S. constitution required them to disclose the technology to us long ago.

Independent American owners of domestic untapped or over-regulated mineral interests have already been the victims of the mega-corporations, and it is probably too late for them to recoup their losses, which may be permanent. These losses have been effected through government limitation of domestic mineral production, ostensibly under conservation measures, under the false premise that there is a relative scarcity of such minerals, and that humans will continue to use these same minerals until they are "all gone", and that that time would come in "only a few years".

But the "conservation" of oil and gas has had an ulterior purpose, unrelated to the "national security interests." Through this knowingly ridiculous scenario, the international mineral corporations have concealed what they have known for many years: That technologies already exist to make their mineral investments virtually worthless, and that it is only a matter of time until intelligent individuals re-discover these secrets, and carry them forth to the public, despite the most fervid and vicious resistance.

Seeing the future inevitabilities, the coercive monopolists used regulations and policies to make certain that they would sell their holdings at a hefty profit before the bottom dropped out, thus leaving independent domestic mineral owners holding the bag, with their minerals mostly still in the ground, in the currently lucrative market. Their complacency as to their rightful share of profits from their minerals was purchased with false assurances that they would realize them in the future, and should have realized that they were being hornswoggled.

It is probably too late for them to sell their minerals at the artificially elevated prices of today, or even at a decent price. The reason for the sudden re cent change to "domestic production" (note

I didn't say "independent" domestic production) is because the internationals are rushing to unload their untapped domestic minerals before the other foot drops, and free-energy technology lowers the prices and value of their "archaic mineral resources".

Notice that the "first" places that the "new" president, George II and gang have begun to increase "domestic" petroleum production are areas like the North Slope of Alaska—the minerals of which are owned by "Republican" Robert O. Anderson of Roswell, former president of the Bilderberg Group, creator of ARCO and of the Diamond A Cattle Company, the largest land holding company in North America. To protect regular oil production from oil-shale production, Anderson purchased the rights to every known oil-shale deposit in North America. And, production is now increasing for "offshore" minerals which George Ist's company, Tidewater Oil Company of Houston, owns or specializes in producing. The production "incentives" for this were the artificially-created increase in the price of Arab crude, and the artificially-created California energy crunch. To show how certain the conspirators were that the election was in the bag, these "incentives" were begun even before the election of Nov. 6, 2000.

I believe that the proximate cause of the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attack on America was the sudden "switch" to domestic production of petroleum, and that it was ordered by Saudi oligarchs and Middle Eastern oil producers, who will lose untold billions due to the switch. The assault was intended to drive the American economy backward, to prevent the switch.

Soon, free-energy and alternate energy will lower the price and demand for petroleum. The internationals hope to sell as much as they can, then get out of the business—maybe even sucker the independents into buying their interests—while smaller independent domestic mineral owners will be a "day late and a dollar short". Waiting for years, expecting their "boat to come in", it will be disappointing when it turns out to be a fly-infested banana boat, with rotten fruit on board, because it arrived "too late." They will only have themselves, the mega-corporations, and the corrupt government to blame for this tragic eventuality.

When the automobile came into its own, the same thing probably happened to horse-breeders and wagon-makers, except they weren't international, coercive-monopolists who could control the government and educational institutions to prevent automobile technology from being known, understood, developed and used by the public, like UFO technology has been.

The independent mineral owners don't see the hand writing on the wall, because they are blinded by the Relativist baloney about "shrinking energy resources", a sham which suppresses their prosperity in the "national security interest", so the mega-corporate oil importers can take all the gravy, and consumers pay through the nose.

What a bunch of suckers. Domestic independent oil producers defrauded by international oil companies. They have quietly rejoiced in the high fuel prices in gleeful delusion, in anticipation of being the eventual beneficiaries of continually-rising prices. But this "deferred gratification" is without guarantees that they will ever be compensated for their losses.

The "hard sell" on conservation should have sent up a warning flag as to the fraud. After all, did they really think the consumers give a damn about conservation, at the cost of exorbitant prices?

I am not bringing this up to try to recruit the independent domestic producers into the free-energy revolution, although they certainly are welcome. I just want to explain how the Occult Thought-Control Dictatorship operates. It won't do the independents any good to fight us. We aren't to blame, though they would be better off supporting the revolution, which could usher them into a technical arena which might familiarize them with rational alternatives for developing their mineral interests in a profitable way in the future. There are always plastics, lubricants, hydrogen conversion, petrochemicals, and other technologies.

The people who peddled the wisdom of "conserving our domestic minerals" in the "national security interest" back in 1973, are the very same people who have sold us on drilling in the pristine

National Alaskan Wildlife Preserve. This should tell the idiots out there that groups like the "Trust For Public Lands" are temporary, tax-free land holding operations of these same people. Louder! I can't hear you! Does anyone hear them screaming about the Alaskan drilling? With all their money and influence, if they did scream, it wasn't loud enough for me to hear them, and I've been reading the papers almost every day.

The problem with holding large tracts of land—something apparently learned by the Diamond A Cattle Company—is the requirement for private owners to pay taxes on that land.

Enter the "public trust" huxters: A way to sucker the public, by bribing "lawmakers" to pass some "private conservation" laws—so that large, private land holders can enjoy their land tax-free, unlike the ordinary poor slob American—and even fool the dupes who work for them into thinking they are do-gooders, when in reality, they are duping useful idiots into helping them pull off another publically-subsidized fraud. Whenever it becomes expedient for them to cash in on their massive land holdings, they will suddenly take off their "sheep's clothing", and show themselves to be "wolves" (no insult to the wolves intended).

Anyone who says free-energy inventions will not work is either ignorant, a victim of government thought-control, or a liar with a vested interest to protect. Flying saucers/UFOs—seen by millions of people since the '30s—are graphic proof that they are wrong, and proof that some free-energy inventions work, and have been suppressed for over a century, as my research shows.

I predict that those who have held onto the Relativist Theory for so long will be sorely disappointed in the near future by the triumph of free-energy solutions, which will discredit the theory along with the associated Second Law of Thermodynamics and entropy theory.

These triumphs will be accompanied by the re-discovery or liberation of free-energy secrets which have been concealed by the corporate-monopolist state for at least sixty years. We must not let the terrorist assault of 2001 halt our revolution!

CHAPTER I - UFO COUNTERINTELLIGENCE:
Plugging Leaks in "Official" UFO History

The public's eventual apprehension of UFO electrodynamic technology and other free-energy discoveries—whenever these occur —will bring about a political, social and economic revolution in favor of greater individual sovereignty, freedom, and creativity. The electrodynamic technology (not to be confused with something shown in traditional science texts under "electrodynamics") has the potential to reduce environmental problems to a minimum, if not to eliminate them entirely.

Those seeking to create a one-world fascist globalism for almost a century, fearing the technology will destroy their sick dream, "nipped this energy revolution in the bud", as soon as its potential became apparent at the beginning of the 20th century.

In retrospect, it is an odd circumstance: "Advanced" electrodynamic technology was actually discovered before "archaic" aerodynamic technology was.

Since I am a "senior citizen", one would expect me to be engrossed in the archaic concepts of jet-powered UFOs ("aerodynes") or jet aircraft, while younger men pushed the envelope, spreading the "advanced" ideas of electrodynamic technology, which has always been the means of propulsion of true UFOs. Instead, that burden has fallen on me, while mostly younger gullible dupes gleefully blabber the CIA's misinformation for them. For example, in 1999 I learned that a younger English writer seemed to be saying the same things I do, until I looked beyond his claims. He copied my ad campaign and claims, but what followed was an account of archaic, aerodynamic German technology as a lame explanation for electrodynamic UFO technology. Up to his claims, he was a "mini-me"...exactly 1/8th my size, ethically, metaphysically, and creatively, and there the scaled-down similarities ceased, for he delivers nothing except misinformation. I have generated an anachronism: a pseudo-conservative British "young fogey".

While one would expect a younger man to be digging deeper, researching Tesla's "truly advanced" technology of 1894, he was extolling the virtues of more archaic WW II German "aerodyne" technology of the 1940s, which is limited to jet-powered aircraft. Whether he was actually employed by the spooks, or was unaware of their involvement, is immaterial to the fact that the publisher's interest in his redundant book was supported by the establishment. He calls his book "UFO Disclosures" (not the real title), an oxymoronic title, since all the "FOs" ("flying objects") he refers to ceased to be "Ued" (unidentified) after they were declassified and published in Janes' Fighting Aircraft of World War Two, in the post-warl940s. So where's the "UFOs" or the "Disclosures"? A little late, wouldn't you say?

Just as jet power is sometimes used today to conceal U.S. government UFOs, the jet and rocket-propelled aerodynes of the Third Reich were used to conceal Tesla-conceived Nazi electrodynes, in a cycle of anachronistic dualism—archaic, jet-propelled, aerodynamic technology, used to conceal older, more advanced electrodynamic technology. None of the aerodynamic technology has any relevance to true UFOs and represents an attempt to connect the remarkable performance of electrodynamic German UFOs to the "conventional, aerodynamic, German jet-propulsion" of 1945.

So, instead of calling his book "UFO Disclosures", I have renamed it "UFO Counter-Revolution", because it is counter-revolutionary propaganda designed to thwart the natural revolution which should result as the world realizes the concealed truth.

The book is an example of propaganda created by American and British intelligence agencies to stem the tide of truth presently flooding into the public's awareness, as I attempt to "de-program" the public's thought-control codes.

As an older revolutionary, I see the Brit as a "young fogey", counter-revolutionary type that the spook agencies were bound to manufacture as a "last ditch" defense against my expose of illicit British-American UFO secrecy and fraud. Their likely opinion, on seeing my book in Britain on a limited scale, was that "Those American intelligence agencies aren't doing their job, so we'll have to do it for them." The British distribution of my books stopped, and the distributor was the least likely you would expect to fold under government pressure.

The Brit's job was to debunk all but the aerodyne technology of the Third Reich (none of which was ever used), as a "last-ditch" defense which I predicted in my 1996 second edition of Space Aliens From the Pentagon. This approach sought to peddle the myth that all man-made UFOs are aerodynamic advancements based on Nazi jet designs. This admits the existence of UFOs, but says they are all aerodynes. Either the Brit never saw a UFO or he was lying, because once you've seen one perform, you'll never confuse it with a jet-powered craft. If he were that stupid, he wouldn't have been able to write a book.

Most UFOlogists appear nuts by proposing outlandish "alien technology", while the Brit appears nuts by peddling archaic technology unrelated to UFOs. Instead of promoting the "alien" party line, he imitates my ads, but supports the conservative party line of conventional German aerodynamic jet technology that the oil companies love. If those experimental aerodynamic saucers actually worked, they would get much fewer miles per gallon than conventional jet aircraft, since they can't glide, and would also create more drag and friction at supersonic speeds due to increased surface area. This is a problem that electrodynamic UFOs don't have, since the increased surface area helps the electrodynamics work better.

The Brit poses as avant garde, propagating conservative, old ideas. Instead of studying electrodynamic technology, which allows a craft to dart and zip quicker than a hummingbird, and exceed the equivalent of Mach 30 ("equivalent" because they are "inertia-free"), he extols huffing and blowing by jet engines, blasting the ships around like tired old buzzards with ragged wings. The Canadian "AVRO" aerodyne project served the same misinformational purposes in the '50s and '60s and was run by ex-Nazis, continuing the Third Reich's misinformational program for the Canadian and American governments. The disfunctional aerodynes were declassified after the war, and the AVRO program succeeded in finally DIS-proving the several inadequate aerodyne saucer concepts.

The British don't seem to understand our radical. American ways, which tend to make their "spookery" comparatively fuddy-duddy. Nonetheless, I overestimated the public's capacity to see through corny lies in the past, and shouldn't be surprised if many are duped by them in the future. P.T. Barnum really knew his people.

The electrodyne technology was concealed by aerodyne technology, by the spooks, since they didn't want anyone tracing it to the discoveries of Nikola Tesla, whom they thought they had successfully buried forever, until I resurrected him. This suggests that those who obliterated Tesla's name and discoveries from the public consciousness in 1943 included the agents of Nazi Germany. I documented Tesla's unwitting connection to the Nazis in Pentagon Aliens,

I was fraudulently induced to include some misinformation in my 1993 first edition of Space Aliens From the Pentagon, My 1996 second edition redacted it. The alleged "ships"—actually non-flying models of Felix Schauberger—were said to be electrodynamic, when in fact they were designed to use aerodynamic principles, but never flew to my knowledge, and probably wouldn't have been able to get off the ground.

After discovering that the photos of the alleged "ships" actually depicted copper models of two of Schauberger's prospective designs, claimed to fly by means of internal fans intended to suck air in the top and to blow it out the bottom, allegedly powered by a Schauberger "water vortex" turbine, I felt the jackass ears growing on my head. Since the models resembled air conditioner vents, I dubbed them "flying air conditioner vents".

I was enraged after being burned by this misinformation, but blamed myself for not exploring the allegations and documentation more carefully. The person responsible for it has admitted to me that he created these impressions to sell books, without really understanding the technology. His books were based partially on the "declassified" false aerodyne technology released in Germany by the CIA for obvious reasons. I give him due credit for his honesty. He said he made plenty of money from those books, so much that he doesn't care to sell any more. I vowed never to be duped like that again.

There are basically three groups who propagate the alleged German aerodyne stories: (1) The Naziphiles, motivated by a desire to establish that the technology was a German "Aryan" discovery (but these Bubbas apparently have never seen a UFO in action, and are too "untechnical" to realize that electrodynamics is involved); (2) the CIA misinformationists, who use the inept declassified aerodyne technology the same way the Nazi elite did, to conceal the real, electrodynamic Tesla technology; and (3) the dupes who believe that flying saucer technology in fact had an exclusively German origin, unaware that "real" UFOs use exclusively electrodynes invented by Tesla. (There are some who actually believe that the Schauberger "flying air conditioner vent" was a "gift" to the Nazis from "aliens", tantamount to saying that the flush toilet is a "gift of the gods.")

A fourth group, which studies WW II-era Nazi UFO technology and secret weapons of the Third Reich, had realized that the aerodyne stuff was not the correct story. This group went wherever the evidence led it, bringing them to my work. I had firm documentation of things they had never heard of. The group had all the best research available from "conventional" sources, and some from extraordinary sources, yet could not explain the electrodynes mentioned in reliable reports which originated in wartime Germany.

After the war, the CIA controlled all information available from "conventional" sources, leaked out declassified aerodyne technology for misinformational purposes, and successfully prevented the leakage of classified electrodynamic technology. The information from unusual (non-CIA) sources—mostly ex-Nazi Germans in South America—was misunderstood by them.

My evidence on the electrodynes showed they were older than the aerodynes, while existence of the electrodynes isn't even admitted in conventional research. The German research group meanwhile unearthed documentation which corroborated some of my unusual information, and published it in their papers. The symbiosis between this group and me soon attracted the attention of the spooks.

My first edition of Space Aliens From the Pentagon was literally hacked out of raw paper and inked by me, myself and I, as a "samisdat", while I was still in the horrible throes of judicial abuse, engineered by CIA mind-control rats. My nervous system was still in upheaval, with my sweat and blood splattered all over those books, with my anger boiling over onto the pages.

I'm not impressed by another redundant blow-by-blow account of the WW II aerodynamic developments of the Third Reich, including jet-propulsion technology, used now as disinformation. It has no relevance except as misinformation. Does anyone seriously believe that the REAL electrodynamic German flying disc technology would be published in Janes', at a time when they wouldn't even publish the statistics of many propeller-driven planes?

I lost interest in the aerodyne stuff in 1953 after witnessing the performance of a real, electrodynamic UFO, and realizing that the aerodyne technology was irrelevant and obsolete even before it was invented and developed.

The Nazi aerodyne projects were mostly smoke and mirrors, created as counterintelligence buffers to conceal the electrodyne technology. The CIA picked up where the Gestapo left off. Because of the inadequate explanations, Henry Stevens, of the German Research Project, Gorman, California, had begun to "look around the edges" of those buffers, and found me. That opened up a whole new set of possibilities which were supposed to remain hidden.

In 1999 the Brit launched an Internet attack on Stevens, with an oblique attack on me, intended to break the linkage between Stevens and me. Steven lives in an isolated location, with no way of knowing of, or having an opportunity to respond to, the Brit's viper-tongued attack, since he was unconnected to the Internet. He was considered an easy target in the cowardly attack by the Brit.

The Brit's attack was intended to drive a wedge between my small contingent and Stevens' potential supporting group, a point of weakness in the linkage. Stevens responsibly attempts to research and terret out the German UFO history, while my faithful readers and I believe in a purely Tesla electrodynamic technology, which fell into German hands in the 1930s.

I learned about the Brit's attack when my name came up, only because I was E-mailed by researcher and writer Remy Chevalier, with whom I had communicated on occasion. The Brit's attack on Stevens was a "divide-and-conquer" strategy, designed to take pot-shots at me behind my back and split Stevens off, since he had cited my work in his, and had even unearthed some material corroborating my work. Since I had not cited Steven's work until 1996, I knew the Brit had my second edition, but the Brit lied to conceal that.

Once I was brought into the discussion by Chevalier, I acted as an intermediary between Stevens and the Internet discussion group, and successfully exposed the Brit's undisclosed agenda, supported by Stevens' responses that he faxed to me.

The attack walked on thin ice, since it risked giving us greater exposure. Neither Stevens nor I were expected to respond or to know of the attack. The Brit focused on the error I had redacted four years earlier, in correspondence and radio interviews, and three years earlier in my 1996 second edition, which the Brit possessed. I have found such dishonesty to be typical of misinformationists.

I have been pulled into Internet donnybrooks on several occasions, the usual tenor of the attacks being personally directed at me, rather than at my work. These discussions occur daily on the Internet without my knowledge, but this was one I knew about only because I was notified by someone who knew of me.

Nikola Tesla got lift-off even before the Wright Brothers' first flight at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina, and had difficulty in maintaining his silence following the Wright Brothers' success.

It took terrible discipline for Tesla to hold his tongue under such circumstances. Truth is stranger than fiction, and that truth is among the strangest I know of. Under the circumstances, it can be explained and documented, including Tesla's motivations and political opinions at the time. His silence becomes clear and logical if you think about it.

CHAPTER II - DISAPPEARING TESLA: The Burial of Tesla and Rebirth of His Discoveries

Nikola Tesla was buried, both literally and intellectually, in January, 1943. In 1993, I disinterred his most important work, the discovery of electrodynamic space propulsion, which he discovered in the 19th century, and documented it more fully in 1998.

Does the name Nikola Tesla even ring a bell with you? If not, let me first say that Tesla was a pioneering inventor and technological philosopher whose science and ideas we use today more than ever before, yet only recently has his name resurfaced in alternative literature. His name was once a household word, sixty or seventy years ago. Thirty years ago, only a tiny few faithful and persistent admirers and experimenters knew of Tesla's work, yet there are those within the inner sanctums of the 'national insecurity' establishment who have never forgotten it. You've most likely heard the name being used in current alternative literature by the many johnny-come-latelys who have recently jumped on the bandwagon of nouveau "Tesla experts". That's O.K., but what took them so long? You can't really blame them for being so suddenly astounded, considering the long and thorough eradication of Tesla's name from encyclopedias and books on science, invention and technology, becoming the "invisible man" of science history.

The conspicuous vacuum created where the mention of Tesla should have been, as one who made such important contributions to science, technology, and the quality of our lives, raises ominous questions as to why his memory became virtually stricken from history almost the day after his death. What did Tesla discover which threatened the powers that be? Since we already know about the many patented inventions, my assumption has always been that the unknown, still classified works were far in advance of the published ones, and were in realization of projects which Tesla had previously announced or had already tested and developed, but had not yet "...given to the world".

The discoveries in question—the very existence of which is categorically denied by establishment and corporate scientists—were such things as........

- electrodynamic flying saucers
- "free" or "environmental" energy discoveries
- transmutation of elements
- alternative "ether" physics and science
- Tesla's Dynamic Theory of Gravity

We know from available documentation and reliable sources that these discoveries and developments were actualized by Tesla before his death, yet are still classified. Within his many patented inventions, numerous startling discoveries and surprises have been recently found by careful researchers and experimenters, which show in retrospect that his claims were modest.

Tesla was born in Smiljan, Lika, Austro-Hungary (now Serbia), in 1856, and died Jan. 3, 1943 in New York City, An early biography, Prodigal Genius, the Life of Nikola Tesla, by John J. O'Neill, was initially published three times in November, 1944. In case you are wondering, the three publishings in the same month were not due to landslide sales at the bookstores, but rather to O'Neill's having been threatened and censored by the FBI, and forced to republish several times because of their deletion and censoring of material which to this day is still classified. It was odd, given Tesla's repeatedly unsuccessful efforts to get the attention of the War Department, met with ignorance and shoddy treatment. It was not until after it came to their attention in 1942, that the Nazis were building flying saucers and other 'fantasy' weapons based on Tesla's inventions, that the U. S. Government became so concerned. So why hide something from the American public today which the Nazis stole before 1934? In the case of (flying saucer) electro-propulsion, this invention is not only classified, but the very existence of it is categorically denied by the government, while its covert agents in the UFOlogy. community attribute it to extraterrestrial, "alien" origins. What better way to deter civilian scientific investigation into the obvious?

I first heard of Tesla in 1943, as a child of four, when his death was lamented by Elmer Schlosser, a neighborhood adult friend who first told me about him. I also once had in my collection of old books a well-preserved, beautiful old commemorative volume issued by the 1893 Chicago World's Fair---the Columbian Exposition—which featured Tesla as its honored guest. There were numerous photos of Tesla's inventions and some articles. Today, over 54 years after Tesla's death, experimenters are still conducting exciting and trail-blazing experiments with Tesla's discoveries of over 100 years ago, and continuing to find 'hidden' meanings in some of his early writings and patents.

There have been countless speculations as to what Tesla's most secret discoveries were. At the time of his death, there was the approximate equivalent of a railroad boxcar load of Tesla materials confiscated by the FBI, from around four different storage locations and Tesla's hotel storage and hotel room and safe. Of this, a total of only about 150,000 documents were released to Tesla's Yugoslavian relatives, now held by the Tesla Institute in Belgrade. These documents and old models, primarily of a historical nature and already in the public domain, comprise most of the published Tesla materials of the institute, and of the world.

The rest of the huge volume of Tesla documents and models was retained from early 1943 to late 1945 by the Custodian of Alien Properties, unclassified, in a warehouse in New York City, because the government's "experts" had declared in 1943 that none of it was worth classifying. The government "expert"—the equivalent of today's director of the CIA's Office of Scientific Intelligence—was a professor at M.I.T. In 1938, Tesla had written a critique of the huge Van de Graaff generator, and pointed out that one of his small Tesla coils would outperform the huge Van de Graaff, which was so large that it was housed in an aircraft hanger. That critique and Tesla's opposition to Relativism provoked the ire of the M.I.T. professor, a proponent of the "new" Relativism. For that infraction of the "rules", Tesla's lifelong work was treated to the posthumous revenge of the MIT Relativist professor, by having his work stored in a dark warehouse until the end of WW II. Following the arrival in America of the scientists and the secret war files of Nazi Germany, acquired in 1945 under Operation Paperclip, the spooks from Wright-Patterson Air Force Base hurried up to the warehouses of the Custodian of Alien Properties, and took possession of all the Tesla materials. They removed them to Wright-Patterson, and every bit of them have been classified at the highest level ever since; the government having since declassified NONE of them. Thus, the Tesla materials, which the government's Relativist "science expert" had declared in 1943 contained "nothing worth classifying", is still classified today, 58 years later.

The government distributed false rumors that "Tesla never kept notes", which was known to be a blatant lie, since the government had the tons of notes, papers, models and related things, and knew Tesla "kept massive notes". The notes on his Colorado Springs experiments alone (1899-1900) were enough for a large-format book of 433 pages.

Considering the fact that Tesla continued to do research at his Colorado Springs laboratory for at least six more years—for which we have no notes—there is ample cause for believing that those subsequent experiments involved discoveries that are even more astounding than any nuclear weapons research. It is known from Tesla's own words that these additional experiments at Colorado Springs were 'much more far-reaching' than his disclosed experiments.

The remainder of Tesla's papers and possessions which were still classified—literally tons of notes, documents, drawings, models, and plans—have been the subject of a lot of speculation. In 1979, when I requested access to Tesla papers held at the J. Robert Oppenheimer Study Center, at LANL ("Los Alamos National Laboratory"), the government admitted possession, but denied access for lack of the appropriate "badge" (security clearance). So I know that Tesla's papers are now held at least in part, in Los Alamos, New Mexico. On that same day, I found the hydrogen bomb plans on the public access shelves, yet was denied access to Tesla's papers. What could be more sensitive than the hydrogen bomb, which was invented by Tesla prior to 1943?

After the war, in 1946, at age 8, when our family returned to the little west Texas town of Kermit, I visited the radio shop of my old friend, Elmer Schlosser, and lugged home a pile of salvaged electronic components that he gave me, after a savvy little Tesla talk. That was the same year that I began to research the German flying discs seen over the region. Elmer, who had grown up in the Cimarron Territory, near Tesla's Colorado Springs laboratory, during the time that Tesla was experimenting there, said the discs were "Tesla discoveries".

I assembled the components that Elmer gave me, ran a ground line up a tree, placed my newly assembled device in my tree house, erected an antenna constructed of screen wire, and attempted to 'radio in' some power. Unsuccessful, I nonetheless continued my experiments with electromagnetism for eight more years, until I set them aside for twenty years. In 1975 I resumed my "Tesla project", eventually built a number of Tesla coils, and even began giving some lectures and demonstrations in the Santa Fe area to small gatherings. In late 1974, the CIA had commenced a pattern of harassment originally intended to "motivate" me to accept an executive position later offered to me by George Bush in early 1975. I rejected the offer and immersed myself deeply in intense research, and the harassment continued and intensified so much that it finally brought my research to a temporary standstill between 1986 and 1992. As soon as I had time to catch my breath, this provoked the first publication of my book, Space Aliens From the Pentagon, in 1993, Occult Ether Physics: Tesla's Hidden Space Propulsion System and the Conspiracy to Conceal It (revised second edition, 1998), concentrated on the 19th century "aether" science leading up to Tesla's discovery of electrodynamic space propulsion, and I also included a couple of astounding, Relativity-destroying "free-energy" discoveries or rediscoveries.

Tesla's holy grail was to build his "electric flying machine", and to draw some of the "environmental energy" out of the cosmos- This plan involved a theory of radioactivity under development by Tesla in the 1890s, which entirely presaged and conflicted with currently accepted Relativism, quantum mechanics, and nuclear energy theories.

To Tesla, so-called "atomic energy" was in fact the result of "environmental energy" emanating from the cosmos, and made known to us via "radioactive" matter, which he said had the peculiar property of resonating and reacting with ubiquitous "cosmic radiation"—a term used by Tesla before 1900—which he called "Primary Solar Rays."

The "cosmic radiation" of which Tesla spoke was of much higher frequency than what we call "radioactive emanations", which to Tesla were the result of a 'step-down' process, in which certain peculiar matter reacts to and converts the ubiquitous, omnidirectional cosmic radiation—which today we call "zero point radiation" ("ZPR") —from higher frequencies, to lower, more useful and appropriate frequencies, such as gamma, x-ray, ultraviolet, visible, infrared radiation, as well as magnetism and even electrical current. These step-down frequencies are much easier to detect and measure than the ZPR. Relativists deny the Primary Solar Rays exist.

The existence of the ZPR was well known to Tesla in the 1890s, but it was not until recently that it became scientifically permissible to even suggest a wave theory, since Relativists cling to their corpuscular theory. This radiation is of such high frequency that it normally passes through space, the earth, and our bodies without harm or incident, in constant equilibrium, because its short wavelengths do not normally react or resonate with the atoms of most matter. It is so-called "radioactive matter"—according to Tesla—-which has a peculiar atomic structure which reacts with this radiation to produce radioactivity. Atomic energy, to Tesla, comes from the ZPR, not atoms. If a lump of radium, for example, could be shielded from the effects of the ZPR, said Tesla, it would no longer show radioactivity.

Most naturally radioactive elements are dense and "unstable"—that is, they are said by the Relativists to "decay" as radiation is emitted, to elements of lower atomic numbers. The Relativists—with whom Tesla vehemently disagreed—believe that naturally radioactive elements spontaneously lose mass in the process of such "decay", so that the energy released as radioactivity is equivalent to the lost mass according to Einstein's equation, $E = MC^2$.

This always seemed untenable to me, since such elements would have to have been, by the related cosmological myth of the "Big Bang", older than the earth, yet geological examination shows that they are found to have evolved through physical processes which have occurred within natural structures here on earth. If such elements had been part of the alleged Big Bang, they would have fully decayed before now. On the other hand, if such elements are in the process of being continually evolved by natural conditions within earth, as well as in outer space, through electrical, magnetic and other physical forces, the reasons for their presence is more reasonable. I don't think this is any surprise to the national security elite. Something else is going on, and someone else knows it.

If non-radioactive elements are converted into radioactive ones by the forces of nature, what are these processes? In 1937, in one of Tesla's famous birthday announcements[1], Tesla stated that he had developed a process for the "manufacture" of radium (transmutation from other elements), which was so efficient that it could be sold for $1.00 per pound. He also announced that he had "absolutely developed" a system for the interstellar transmission of energy. He said he had been working in "several laboratories", but refused to disclose their locations. His working model, he said, "...employs more than three dozen of my inventions. It is a complex apparatus, an agglomeration of parts." It could convey "...several thousand units of horsepower to other planets, regardless of the distance", traveling "...through a channel of less than one-half of one-millionth of a centimeter." Further, he said, "...it is not an experiment. I have built, demonstrated and used it. Only a little time will pass before I can give it to the world."

That time never came. In less than six years, his death occurred in the presence of two FBI agents and a German nurse[2], and the Nazis had his plans under active development as early as 1934.

These facts demonstrate that even in his 80s, in 1937, Tesla was involved in secret research at several undisclosed laboratories, on technology which today remains highly classified, yet neither the general public nor anyone at the International Tesla Society seemed to have any idea as to the details, since they had been concealed from us by the "powers that be". In fact, the CIA itself had a hand in the founding of the International Tesla Society in Colorado Springs in 1986, to avoid the contingency of Tesla's electrodynamic discoveries coming to light. When this began to happen, the society was folded up.

Through some ingenious investigating, it is possible to reconstruct some of the facts. In focusing on just Tesla's publicly available technology, it is obvious that, even in it, there is the air of the fantastic, the almost incredible. Taking this a step further, it is possible to reconstruct much of the unknown Tesla discoveries from available sources, in order to see what has been carefully hidden from us by our own government and the corporate fascists who control it.

Tesla's Extraction of Cosmic Energy

According to Tesla, the ether is not an "energy source", since it is composed of tiny independent "carriers immersed in an insulating fluid"[3]. The ether, therefore, is a "medium" through which energetic transferences and transmutations can be effected, and electric and magnetic "tubes of force" can be created and carried into a body from space, giving it momentum to propel it.

[2] John J. O'Neill, Prodigal Genius. The Life of Nikola Tesla, John J. McKay Company, Inc. NY (Nov. 1944)

"Cosmic radiation" is not the ether, but "starlight"—what Tesla called the "Primary Solar Rays".[4] This extremely high-frequency light—of much tinier wavelength than visible light, U.V., X-rays, and gamma rays (also emitted by our sun and other stars)—is the ZPR. Tesla stated that the Zero Point Radiation gives rise to secondary radiations through impact with the cosmic dust of space, which are commonly called "cosmic rays" today.

In 1935[5] Tesla objected to the observations of the German radiologist, Dr. Werner Kolhoester, saying his observations were another confirmation of his own theory of cosmic rays originally advanced in l896,but asserted that Kolhoester's 1935 theory was erroneous, because light is a wave motion of definite velocity (C), determined by the elastic force and density of the "medium", while cosmic rays are "...particles with velocities determined by the propelling force...", which therefore could be much slower or faster than that of light. Since the velocities of the two radiations would not (and could not) coincide, Kolhoester's observations which coincided with the light observed, would not be accurate. Here, Tesla distinguished between the "cosmic radiation" he proposed in 1896, which was particles, which were propelled by ultra-high-frequency "primary solar radiation", which I equate to the ZPR, which are light rays traveling at C. Because of their extremely high voltages levels and frequencies, they can propel "cosmic dust" particles faster than C, when of sufficiently high voltage levels and frequency.

In his "objection" letter of 1935, at a time when he was involved with the German "p2" project which I wrote about in Pentagon Aliens, Tesla gave a clue to his electrodynamic space propulsion system, which if one is to take Tesla's statements seriously, means that a "particle"—or a ship—in space can be propelled very fast by electromagnetic wave radiation—light waves—which in this case are the "Primary Solar Rays", the ZPR.

The Primary Solar Rays (the ZPR) are ubiquitous in the universe and in direction of approach at a given point, with frequencies so high that there is normally no reaction with atomic matter, being able to pass through "...thousands of miles of solid matter..."[6], and therefore can approach an object on earth even from the direction of the ground. This makes this invisible "solar energy source" available around the clock, though it is said to slightly vary cyclically. This radiation should not be confused with so-called "photon energy", which is a Relativist fantasy involving "corpuscles" or "particles" of light. What a laugh.

In the on-going Relativist theory, Wolfgang Pauli, in 1933, invented the neutrino theory, in response to Niels Bohr's radical finding that, if experiments say so, the Law of Conservation of Energy does not hold for β ("beta" or electron) emission and absorption processes.[7] Pauli's theory sought to explain a loss of heat energy in beta decay, which the Relativist theory was unable to account for or measure in such processes as K-capture, in which a neutrino is emitted when a proton is converted into a neutron. The reverse process is the conversion of a neutron into a proton, thus emitting a beta particle (electron) and sucking a neutrino back into the atom from surrounding space. Other particles are involved, but these are the ones of interest. It should be of interest to you that Bohr was not a Relativist, and held a sort of "free-energy" view. It is also interesting to note that Bohr attended the opening of the Tesla Museum in Belgrade. Without Bohr's work, the A-bomb would have been impossible at that time.

[7] Gamow, George, Thirty Years that Shook Physics, Doubleday & Company, Inc., Garden City, New York (1956)

The acquisition of energy from the ZPR was regarded by Tesla as a "step-down" process, in which the super-high-frequency light waves were stepped down to a more familiar and usable form, such as 'normal' radioactivity, heat or electrical energy. In the K-capture process, an element is transmuted into another element, for example, iron to manganese—and in the reverse process—manganese to iron. Monoenergetic neutrinos are ejected in the first process, and sucked back into the iron in the reverse process, but what happens to the damned X-radiation emitted in the first half of the reversible process, Einstein? And how is it mysteriously "replaced" in the reversed half?

The neutrino explanation has always appeared as a loophole in the Relativist theory, since the missing momentum and heat, and misconceived "photon energy" (actually electromagnetic light wave radiation), were impossible to explain without the invented neutrino theory. Furthermore, since the neutrino is a neutral particle, it is composed of tiny positive and negative charges which do not exist according to Relativism, since Relativism holds that the electron is "indivisible", as the main foundation of quantum mechanics. With this argument, I now have some of my Relativist friends denying the existence of neutrinos.

In contradicting their own theory, admitting that the tinier positive and negative charges composing the neutrinos exist, the Relativists inadvertently acknowledged the "building blocks" of electrons and protons. As such, neutrinos appear to be the aether. Since neutrinos are so tiny, they must have the capacity to react with the ZPR, in bringing about so-called "nuclear radioactivity". In so doing, what are the nuclear characteristics of an element which produces radioactivity naturally? How can a non-radioactive element be made to mimic these qualities, in artificially-induced radioactivity"? If neutrinos are prevalent in K-capture (transmutation), and its reversal, it seems that an element which is made to oscillate between two elements (to transmute and de-transmute), would have to react with the ZPR. Since there is excess energy involved, as the neutrinos (ether carriers) move in and out, energy is being transferred to and from the element, the ZPR, and the ether.

We know that synthetic radioactivity can be induced by exposing an element to appropriate radiation, which is only a reversal of the process which initially created the radiation, as a verification of Tesla's theory.

In K-capture in iron, when the K-shell electron passes into the nucleus, converting a proton into a neutron, not only is a monoenergetic neutrino emitted, but also an X-ray, when the vacant K-shell takes on another electron. Though the iron atom is now a manganese atom, and has emitted energy, it has the same mass number. Shouldn't the mass number reflect the loss of energy? Where is your damned "$E = MC^2$?" There is also the question, "Where did the incident particle beam energy which induced the K-capture go? If the neutrinos taketh away, they also giveth back, as "carriers". Of course, one can say that the electrons involved do not weigh enough to be reflected in the mass number. The Relativists admit (or assert) that the neutrinos carry energy, just as the aether carriers do. Recent Japanese experiments showed that neutrinos are plentiful in space. The greatest source of free-energy appears to be the ZPR.

If the number of neutrons in a disintegration product (the atom transmuted to) is too small compared to its number of protons, the nucleus will tend to reduce its charge by one unit by positron emission, and will always have 1 Mev less kinetic energy than if beta decay had occurred.[8] Since a light element (below atomic number 19) will transmute in U.V. light, radioactivity in light elements can be induced very easily. When Joliot and Curie bombarded aluminum with alpha particles, they observed that neutrons and positrons were emitted. When they removed their alpha source, the positron emission did not cease, but decreased exponentially with time, as if the aluminum were a naturally radioactive element, for a period of three minutes.[9] The positron will always carry 1 Mev kinetic energy, and may be used for energy production. Since this process can be effected by use of an U.V. incident particle beam on the light elements, and will produce positrons at 1 Mev of kinetic energy, it may be used in what I call "leapfrog technology", which can be used for transmutation processes which will manufacture elements in much greater quantities than could be effected by the huge accelerators at such places as U.C. Berkeley.

[8] R. E. Lapp and H. L. Andrews, Nuclear Radiation Physics, Prentiss-Hall, Inc., New York (1950).

Based on the Tesla Primary Solar Ray theory, using the K-capture process, this is my explanation for a device I call Free Energy Surprise (© 1997, Wm. R. Lyne, ISBN 0-9637467-6-6, $10.00, Creatopia Productions, General Delivery, Lamy, New Mexico 87540, Tel/Fax 505-466-3022), a technical report which includes a set of plans and documentary photos.

I got the idea for this device from a statement by Nikola Tesla, concerning "special" uses for iron, to capture the ZPR/Primary Solar Rays. Whether or not this is exactly what Tesla meant, I believe it verifies his statement concerning special properties of iron.

The device, composed of steel pipe and bar stock (about 10 lbs.), is stimulated with a 15 kv, center-tapped transformer. It operates in several modes, but in what I call the "hum" mode shows an input of 35 watts and a secondary activity of 42.6 kw, operating at or beyond the approximate K-capture voltage on each leg, ca. 7,110 volts (the K-capture voltage for iron), at the standard 60 cps. The low frequency current goes into the mass of the iron (not a 'skin effect'). The iron seems to be going to manganese and back to iron, 60 times per second. This idea is based on what appeared to be the appearance of a purple area near the top of the pipe which I recognized to be the color of manganese dioxide. The extra electrical energy might be the product of interaction with the ZPR, the ether (neutrinos?), and the iron. Since manganese is the next element down on the periodic chart, with the same mass number as iron, it sounded like a reasonable hypothesis. The voltage is not really critical, as the effect could occur so long as the voltage passed through the K-capture voltage on its way up and down, and is only supposed to cause a somewhat more definite effect when it is right on the "absorption edge".

[9] Lapp and Andrews (Supra)

It appears that the electrical energy in the secondary output circuit can be converted into usable electrical energy, especially by using a resonant transformer, tuned to the same, 60 cps frequency.

Corporate-government disinformationists have already tried to debunk this device. One "debunker" inadvertently revealed the fact that he didn't actually do the experiment, when he described the device when assembled as weighing "two pounds". No reputable "scientist" could confuse "ten pounds" with "two pounds", so I knew he was lying. Naturally, his assessment was negative. He was either a lightweight, who didn't do the experiment as described, or a liar with a concealed agenda. This discovery may prove to be a new way to produce K-capture, and to transmute elements in a reversible process, by stimulation with simple, standard 60cps electric current, at or near the K-capture voltage, or at some other appropriate voltage, without the necessity to use an incident particle beam accelerator, vacuum chamber, etc.

A good free-energy process, therefore, can use an element—conveniently a light element—as a "medium" to induce another "medium"—the ether, or another element—to interact with and acquire energy from the ZPR, which is then stepped down to either a synthetic radioactive output—which can be further stepped down to manageable electrical energy or heat—or perhaps converted more directly to electrical energy by some ingenious means.

The attempted destruction and concealment of Tesla's work has now been exposed, and will soon be reversed. The factions which were responsible for this still exist through perpetuity, but will not be able to control the technology when it finally emerges.

CHAPTER III - CONCEALED ENERGY:
The Second Lie of Thermodynamics

The Second Law of Thermodynamics states that any spontaneous process occurring in the universe leads to an overall increase in the entropy of the universe. This is an example of a "negative pregnant" science belief system, designed to conceal unlimited available energy in the universe. That makes it a Pretty Big Lie. It includes the "double-think" and contradiction that are the earmarks of bogus science which unfortunately becomes "establishment science", and is an insult to the ordinary, reasonable and prudent layperson's mind.

It's as if some big shots sat down in 1919, lit up their Cubanos, and said: "This fellow, Nikola Tesla, has been talking about 'environmental energy' which is unlimited and free. This is dangerous to our interests. The papers and magazines have been giving him too much attention. From now on, our media and institutions will support and promote only the works of those scientists who can produce excuses as to why the energy available to us is NOT unlimited, OR free."

By the creation of a plethora of red herrings and negative pregnants—all of which chisel away at the citizen's awareness of the non-polluting energy available from the environment—a mass psychosis thought control system has been created in academic science, which trains young scholars to dismiss alternative views and to attack those who attempt to point these things out, as "pseudo-scientists". These young scholars then march out into the world with their minds steeled against the possibilities available in nature and in creative science, while preaching the monopoly-designed gospel of fossil fuel consumerism.

A "negative pregnant" is a denial which implies an affirmation of a substantial fact[1], and hence is beneficial to an opponent, because it is "pregnant" with an affirmation. A number of these denials, "pregnant" with affirmations of certain alternatives, are intended to convince the future scientist that all energy must be bought at a filling station or from public utility corporations, at continually inflating prices, extorted by contrived "energy crises". Coercive monopolist interests own the banks, the energy companies, producers of mineral fuels for the generation of power, as well as many other essential industries. They also own the mass media, which controls information and disseminates propaganda designed to maintain their status quo of obsolete technology and archaic resources. They are well represented in educational institutions, control endowments and grants, and essentially control the writing and publication of science texts used to train new scientists.[2]

[1] Steven H. Gifis, LAW DICTIONARY

The Second Law of Thermodynamics contradicts the First Law of Thermodynamics (the Law of Conservation of Energy), because it says that energy is being destroyed through "entropy". There are no contradictions in reality. The young scientist and the seeker of truth is encouraged to continue to seek answers, and to reject devious and deceitful concepts and theories designed to close off new possibilities.

The Second Law of Thermodynamics is a red herring, a negative pregnant denying any rational alternatives. The real issue is not only whether or not the "rule" is correct, but whether the facts show that energy apparently produced by some reactions actually originates externally to the reaction, and is a conversion through matter, of Zero Point Radiation into usable form, as opposed to "conventional" reactions which permit only the release of energy such as heat "stored" in matter.

A major question is whether we have electrodynamic ZPR, (Tesla's concept) or a quiescent ZPE (the Relativist fantasy). The latter can be discarded as an internal contradiction of Relativism, and may be intended to conceal Tesla's electrodynamic space propulsion discovery, since the "ZPE" would never work the same way as the wave principle, to propel "particles" (or "ships") though space. ZPR is ubiquitous electrodynamic wave force carried by the ether. Because of its ultra high frequency, it is extremely penetrating and forceful once arrested, and can operate on ultra-fine levels in minuscule atomic and molecular reactions.

[2] G. Edward Griffin, World Without Cancer, American Media (1974)

We must first reject the concept espoused by the relativists, that matter is "destroyed" in the process of being used to do work (producing energy). Matter produces force, and while this force is "used" to do work, and though the force may become dissipated over a large area, this process does not represent the 'annihilation' of any matter, or of force produced by it, as asserted by the Second Law of Thermodynamics and related entropy theory. As force is used, new force is continually entering into a reaction, replenishing force dissipated by the reaction—and is still conserved in the form of momentum, IR storage, or radiant energy in ether-filled space.

This brings us to the question of the 'origin' of new force, in a ubiquitous form available to all matter being replenished by it, allowing it to react again. This is the conservation of matter and force, what I call the "Theory of the Conservation of Perpetual Motion and Force".

The replenishment of expended force in a region of space is apparently the result of an exchange of forces, weak for strong or vice-versa. A weak force can be converted into a stronger force, which will do more work in the same period of time. Whenever a weaker force, such as kinetic force (gravitational) is converted into, or exchanged for, a stronger force, such as an electromagnetic one, the force is 10^{40} times stronger.[3] Since this force is so much stronger, it will do more work in the same period of time, in fact, zillions and zillions of times more work. Where does this increase in force originate? The source of this "new" ubiquitous force is of course the ZPR, which makes the energy density in a small region of space so high that I won't even bother to say.

[3] Gamow, Gravity

This processes repeated throughout the universe, automatically replenishing areas of space in which the force has been dissipated through a lower order of reaction, because there is a tendency toward equilibriation. The sun sends out electromagnetic radiation, electric current and magnetism. The sun also receives ZPR, electric current and magnetism from elsewhere, which replenishes the force expelled, maintaining its equilibrium in perpetuity.

A good example of this circuitous process is when atmospheric oxygen combines with carbon and hydrogen in coal combustion, breaking HC bonds and producing CO_2 and H_2O, with a release of IR radiation, in a sustained combustion-reaction. This is possible because the HC bonds are weaker than the CO and HO bonds, so the stronger bonds are formed. This is a replacement of 'looser', weaker (electrostatic) bond/force, with a 'tighter' stronger (electrostatic) bond/force, releasing heat (IR radiation entrapped in the O, H and C, which is 'squeezed out' when the new, 'tighter' bonds are formed). The CO_2 is then available for plants, which absorb the C and free the O in photosynthesis, driven also by solar radiation and the ZPR. The oxygen is then available again for combustion-reactions and the carbon becomes part of plant HC compounds, eventually becoming coal beds again. The H_2O is also utilized in photosynthesis, releasing more oxygen. Repeat, ad infinitum.

The bonds appear to be electrostatic ones. The 'breaking' of electrostatic bonds should not account for the heat released, as a conversion product of electrostatic force. The heat is IR radiation which has been 'stored' in the atomic space between the nuclei and electron clouds, as bouncing and reflecting radiation, until the electron clouds are 'opened' during new bond formations. When the new bonds are stronger, the reaction is exothermic (heat-releasing), and when weaker, they are endothermic (heat-absorbing), because the stored IR radiation apparently stretches the bonds and weakens them.

"THE UNIVERSE IS WINDING DOWN"

(To the tune of "London Bridge is Falling Down")

One of the most pronounced trends since the accelerated 'media-advent' of Relativism (around 1919), has been an emphasis on instilling the false idea in physics that the universe is "winding down", progressively "using up" the energy it possessed at its "beginning".

In 1916 Einstein had devised a static model of the universe, having uniform density but with space allegedly "curved" by the presence of matter, so that it had a finite volume. In order to justify this steady-state universe, so that gravitation did not collapse it, Einstein invented a repulsive force between masses, to equally balance the "gravitational attraction". How convenient.

In 1917 de Sitter purportedly "found" a further solution to Einstein's equation, an expanding universe concept (now called the Big Bang Theory), which would have a "vanishing density" due to the constant expansion. Einstein's career, and the income of the oil companies, really took off. This help from de Sitter was 'really what the doctor ordered' for Einstein's theory and the oil companies.

The purported discovery of the "red-shift" of the galaxies was used to further the expanding universe concept. The time elapsed since the "beginning of the expansion" is taken as the age of the universe, and is considered to be the reciprocal of Hubble's Constant[4]—about 10^{10} years—but the theory was flawed by the fact that the astrophysically-determined age of the oldest star clusters in our galaxy is about 16×10^9 years, about twice Hubble's Constant.

In his 1891 lecture before the A.I.E.E.[5], Tesla had stated that "enormous electrostatic forces" which emanate from the earth, "rigidify" the ether within earth's electric field as it moves through space. These rapidly varying, enormously powerful electrostatic emissions (which Tesla called "microwaves"), which "rigidify" the ether, causes the ether near the earth to travel along with it.

[5] Nikola Tesla, Lecture Before the A.I.E.E., Columbia College (1891)

The same thing applies to other planets in space. The "red shift" observed in light passing near bodies in space, as the alleged basis for an "expanding" universe, is apparently due to a refraction of the light by this rigidified ether, a phenomenon which does not require the presence of an atmosphere. It is similar to Faraday's "magneto-optical effect". This shoots down the Big Bang Theory. The Michelson-Morley experiments were based on an ether which was dynamic in relation to the earth. They tried to detect a "drift" in the ether as the earth moved through space. Since the ether near the earth is rigidified and carried along with it, there is no relative motion to detect, no 'drift'. But the ether is relatively dynamic farther away from the earth. This means that the Michelson-Morley experiments, based on a "dynamic ether" concept, and conducted on the surface of the earth, could not possibly have detected an "ether drift", because the ether is not 'drifting' on the earth's surface, where they did the experiments.

Meanwhile, the ether near the planets and bodies in space which showed the "red shift" is not only rigidified by the "microwaves" emitted from those bodies, and subject to "magneto-optical effects", but the bodies are also in relative motion in respect to the light passing near them, through their rigidified ether. These facts were ignored by the Relativists, naturally.

In 1892[6], Tesla demonstrated before the Institution of Electrical Engineers in London, how a column of gas was rigidified by a rapidly alternating current. He also told them how, prior to that, his tests had shown that the space between two metal plates subjected to currents of "sufficiently high voltages and frequencies" had become "solid state" (i.e., would support the plates, which weighed several pounds each).[7] This was the basis for his electro dynamic space propulsion discovery. The British science journals didn't bother to print a word about these momentous discoveries, as far as I have been able to determine.

[6] Nikola Tesla, Experiments with Alternate Currents of High Potential and High Frequency (a lecture delivered to the Institution of Electrical Engineers, London, 1892)

The steady-state theory of Bondi and Gold[8] gave the universe an infinite past and an infinite future, but unfortunately retained an expanding universe concept, in which the "loss of matter" by the expansion is exactly compensated by the "creation of new matter", so that new galaxies are created and only the average galaxy "needs" to have an age equal to "Hubble time" (how convenient). While the infinity of past and future are commendable (after all, there will only be a present, forever), the idea that a galaxy "needs" to have an age equal to Hubble time is teleological.

These are truly infantile notions, which are used by the Relativists to talk us out of apprehending energy available from the environment. They show a negativistic "dead end" cosmology, which discourages physics creativity.

Firstly, it is a begged question that the universe had a beginning, indicating not only inferior intelligence—people in science who can't conceive of a universe without a beginning and end, like childhood stories such as Little Red Riding Hood and the Big Bad Wolf—while insisting on a false philosophy in science, serving an ulterior purpose, say, that of the energy cartels.

Secondly, the "Big Bang" cosmology—the supposed beginning of the "expansion", or "winding down"of the universe (another begged question)—is linked to physics by the Second Law of Thermodynamics and entropy theory in such a way as to convince us that the universe had already began to unwind before it barely got out of the Big Bang 'womb', and that all matter is progressively getting "all tuckered out" as time goes on, so that available energy is constantly diminishing. The main objective of this cosmology seems to be to induce a quiet surrender to continually inflating fuel prices at the gas pump and at the public utilities corporations, as "inevitable consequences".

[8] Bondi, H.: "Cosmology", 2nd ed., Cambridge U. Press, London/N.Y., 1961.

I personally do not believe in an expanding or finite universe, or that it had a "point of origin" or will ever end. It has always existed, is infinite, and will last for eternity. Energy is never destroyed, and is conserved in the constant motion of matter and radiation in space-transit, representing infinite, available energy forever.

I believe in the idea that, when force is exerted on one entity by the action of another, causing a change (i.e., "work"), that the force does not "disappear" into nothingness or become "locked up" within matter, to remain "unavailable" forever, as the Relativists would have us believe. Most working physicists don't use Relativist theory for anything anyway, the main damage being done to the public which reads the media-mogul publications continually extolling this false belief system.

If the Big Bad Wolf had eaten Little Red Riding Hood, her "energy" would not have become "unavailable" through 'entropy'. Without really explaining themselves, the Big Bangers have told us that matter gets neutralized, and can't do any more work, forever, through a mystical "entropy" principle. This is based on the fallacy that matter contains energy in the first place. Matter in motion has momentum (kinetic, mechanical energy), and can react in electric and magnetic fields to produce electromagnetic energy, but does not "contain" energy. It may also store heat energy, as previously explained, but this energy—electromagnetic heat radiation—is not an integral part of matter, and nothing is "lost" by its release.

Energy is not an entity, but only a potential, the "ability to do work", which cannot 'disappear forever', since it exists only as a quality possessed by matter to store or affect the conversion of electromagnetic force, under certain circumstances, not something which exists in a quantitative form within matter itself. An accepted 'law' of modern physics is that there are three levels of force, the gravitational force (weakest), electromagnetic force (medium) and nuclear force (strongest). A radioactive magnet, or a radioactive chunk of lodestone, can possess all three. I believe all these to be different levels of reaction by matter with the ZPR, representing the densest electromagnetic force, because it is produced by the enormous forces within stars. Stars, in turn, like all other bodies in space, are receivers of ZPR, which react at the highest (nuclear) level.

According to the Relativists, in order for energy to become "unavailable" (i.e., "used up" forever), it is commonly believed that, in its 'last, final work', the "process" through which it reacted, somehow became "irreversible". Now let me see....what would such an "irreversible process" be? Is it the "process" which is irreversible, or is it the "state of matter" which is? I rack my brain, but fail to find an answer. I do not know of one single irreversible process! I think what these 'scientists' really mean, is that the availability is hard to follow, or a process is hard to reverse, or that they are unable to think of a convenient way to reverse it, or that they fail to understand the actual process, or that they fail to realize that matter is not destroyed or irreparably damaged by being used to produce energy, and may actually improve with use.

If a process is reversible to begin with, it should always remain reversible, and it appears to me that matter is not irreversibly changed by an energy process of any known kind, so what the Relativists appear to be trying to say, is that a different process—an 'irreversible' one— whenever it is substituted for a 'reversible' process, will fail to produce energy. To my knowledge however they have failed to identify an irreversible process. Their inability to identify such a process is a critical part of their theory. If all the atoms in the original process still exist, the Relativists have been lying to us.

Certain processes have been identified as "reversible" ones. That has to do with creativity and ingenuity, when done by a human. Other processes, which scatter the matter in such a way that it is contaminated, or is so diffuse that it can't be gathered up again, make it practically a "non-reversible" one, but not necessarily an "irreversible one". These are the kinds of processes that the cartels prefer that we use, so they can sell us some more of the fuels or other by-products of the process, at an increasingly hefty profit, and we dirty up the environment with waste and pollution.

It all seems to come down to the relative creativity of the technique used. If there is such a thing as an irreversible process, and a person wants to generate energy using the same matter, over and over, he should make certain to avoid a non-reversible, dirty, cartel-desired process, and use a clean reversible process, which captures the ZPR and produces no waste.

There are numerous 'free energy' inventions which use this principle. Matter doesn't 'get tired', 'irreparably damaged', or 'irretrievably locked up' on being used. It may become contaminated with other matter which is inconsistent with its use in a particular reversible process, but it can be purified and reused.

A simple example of a reversible process which uses the same matter to produce energy over and over would be a hydrolysis process which produces a stoichiometric oxygen-hydrogen mixture derived from water, which is combusted and used to drive a turbine, after which the water vapor is condensed to water again, and is reused in the production of the stoichiometric gas mixture, over and over, ad infinitum. There are several ways to separate the oxygen and hydrogen which use less energy than that produced by the combustion-reaction. This is reasonable, considering the fact that the external energy which actually drives the process is the ZPR. The reaction is triggered by hydrolysis, to 'set up' the water in a state-change, for the ZPR reaction. The process can be enhanced by use of certain catalysts, metals and geometric arrangements, which take advantage of the best use of physical forces.

Contrary to the idea that energy continually becomes unavailable, there is some validity to the idea that matter being used in a reversible process to produce energy may actually become "conditioned" and improve with repeated use.

Henceforth, I will refer to what I call the "Standard Model Scientist" in singular, abbreviated archetypal form—"SMS". Since SMS is an archetype, composed of all Standard Model Scientists, who are apparently of like mind, possessing a sort of "collective consciousness" due to government thought-control, with a peculiar kind of scientific tunnel vision, all such scientists are faithfully embodied in my SMS.

SMS sees "isolated systems" within the universe, when convenient, which are unaffected by external forces or matter, yet considers the universe as a whole an "isolated system", whenever that is convenient. Isolated from what? If the universe were finite, what would there be to isolate it from? This is contradiction on the grandest scale: Isolated systems within an isolated universe which is finite. This is another negative pregnant which has become a begged question through the continual, unquestioned acceptance by SMS. The only thing apparently isolated (from reality), is the brain of SMS.

Looming very large in the mind of SMS is the Second Law of Thermodynamics—sometimes referred to as the "Law of Degradation of Energy", because of the entrained theory that "entropy", in an "isolated system", is increased by "irreversible processes" involving energy changes, and that, therefore, the sum of total "available energy" "within" the universe, tends to decrease. Hmmm...now let's see...decreasing energy in the universe...equals increasing prices at the gas pump...equals more money and power for the greedy monopolists who guarantee jobs for compliant scientists. The way that SMS couches "entropy" (a negation) in such terms as "increasing", is a negative pregnant, or maybe a better term is "pregnant negation". "Doublespeak"[9] has certainly been enshrined in the science field.

[9] George Orwell, 1984 (1949)

There are at least eight things in particular with which I disagree, as false assumptions and begged questions, in this "negative pregnant belief system":

1. The concept that matter, per se, contains "energy";
2. The concept of "increasing entropy", as a "law of physics";
3. The concept of an "isolated system";
4. The concept of an "irreversible process";
5. The concept of the universe as an "isolated system";
6. The concept of the universe as a "finite system";
7. The concept that the universe had a "beginning" or "origin";
8. The concept that the universe will have an "end" or will "disappear".

It should be noted that SMS has boxed in "available energy" with negative pregnants and begged questions, to eradicate it, but the pregnant affirmations are still there. I believe that 1. through 8. above are all false assumptions. Without a doubt, they are all negative pregnants, there being no such thing as being "half" pregnant".

Entropy, in thermodynamics, is usually given a special mathematical treatment by SMS, in which a quantity is ascribed to an "isolated system", which quantity purportedly expresses the degree to which the energy of that "isolated system" has ceased to be "available energy". Again, a denial of available energy in the universe forever. In this respect, I would like for you to notice how, because available energy has been made to appear to be unavailable—because it has somehow become irretrievably "dissipated", "locked up in matter", or "tuckered out"—that SMS begs the question that it is "unavailable" forever, simply because certain matter is no longer capable of immediate reaction in the laboratory, or of use in your car, even though we know that so-called "dissipated energy"—especially heat and other radiation—has affected other matter in such a way as to perform work whenever that other matter is involved in energy changes or reactions.

We also know that, while such things as carbon have been oxidized to CO_2 during combustion, some of it is subsequently absorbed by plants, freeing the pure oxygen back into the atmosphere, while the plant retains the carbon, by which it eventually becomes available for combustion again, along with the oxygen. This process, photosynthesis, is driven not only by ordinary solar radiation, but also by what Nikola Tesla called the "Primary Solar Rays", a ubiquitous, extremely high frequency radiation produced by the enormous forces in stars, now generally called "Zero Point Radiation." Tesla created power generators which converted it into other, usable forms. There appears to be nowhere in the universe where this energy is "unavailable", so there must be no isolated systems. SMS has a "catch-22" however, because he can say that any system which shows a reaction to the ZPR is not an "isolated" one, but this is another negative pregnant which admits that the ZPR exists.

Isolated Systems and Irreversible Processes Forever?

SMS's special mathematical treatment considers all quantities ascribed to "isolated systems" to be aspects of a single, physical magnitude, and concludes that "...any physical system when left to itself always increases its entropy, and therefore decreases its 'available' energy."

But what system is really "left to itself forever? A coal bed? What? SMS says the universe is an "isolated system."

By applying this statement to the universe as a whole, as if it were an "isolated system", SMS naturally concludes from this completely unnatural presupposition that all energy processes in the universe are "irreversible". (Ooops! Someone forgot to wind the universe back up!) Is this really true, or might it be the result of looking at everything from an artificially negative viewpoint (because the corporate-state pays your salary)?

It can be easily seen from these presuppositions that in order for us to be convinced that energy is in short supply in the universe, we must be taught to believe that (1) the universe is finite (i.e., isolated), and (2) that matter within the isolated universe is getting all tuckered out.

In the case of absolute zero, SMS had a problem, since everything at absolute zero (except electrons, supposedly) is frozen in place, so it cannot "degenerate". In response to this apparent flaw in theory, an SMS named Nernst came to the rescue with his "heat theorem", which stated that all physical and chemical changes in a system at absolute zero take place at "constant entropy", so there is no "change in entropy" (called "isentropy"). He said this is also true of adiabatic processes, since they are "reversible processes". The problem with Nernst's theorem is that most adiabatic processes are reversed by external energy. This leads to another gross contradiction, which confirms the existence of ubiquitous ZPR (perish the thought that, in superconductivity, the magnetic field produced external to the superconductive ring, for example, is considered as "available energy", another apparent flaw in Nernst's theorem). If any energy reaction can be obtained externally to a so-called isolated system, maintained at absolute zero, with no change in "entropy", then Nernst's theorem is wrong, and the ZPR is affirmed. Otherwise, what could sustain such a reaction? After all, superconductivity does not destroy the magnetic field. If the current is alternating, the magnetic field is also, and even a steady magnetic field contains energy and will do work on moving charges.

It is apparent that the very large and very small aspects of the Second Law of Thermodynamics are interdependent, so that, if the very small aspects are untrue, then the very large aspects must also be untrue. If the universe is not an "isolated system"....because no "system" is completely isolated from universal processes...then the "law" must be untrue. The burden of proof here is not on the person who assumes that the universe is infinite, since it apparently is, but rather on the person who believes it is finite, since it apparently isn't. This is an Ockham's Razor situation, which works against a finite universe concept. Who has seen the universe's "boundary", or proved that it has one? Science cannot be based on such speculation, especially where it is part of a "grand theory" used to conceal available energy not at the limits of the universe, but in our own immediate space.

In reality, there appears to be no "isolated system" which is immune from external effects. This is especially true where we have penetrating cosmic rays, X-rays, UV, visible radiation, radio waves, IR, neutrinos, ether, magnetism and a ubiquitous form of radiation produced by stars which interpenetrates everything. This is also true of neutrinos, whose penetrating power is measured in light years through lead. Neutrinos are reabsorbed by mass which is undergoing K-capture process reversal, so neutrinos from perhaps the other side of the universe may affect the production and availability of energy within any so-called isolated system. Of course, SMS might argue that, since the K-capture process is a reversible one, it is not an isolated system. But there are no truly isolated systems, the argument being based on a false premise, since the K-capture process refutes it by showing the emission and absorption of neutrinos across vast regions of space and through other mass.

ZPR may play a part in every single matter change, etheric, atomic or molecular. In view of this, it is difficult to imagine that any isolated system exists, except in the collective mind of SMS. It is difficult to imagine why SMS interposes such fictitious archetypal concepts as "isolated systems", in support of archetypal, collective delusions, other than his desire to keep his job as a physics prof.

Tesla's theory of radioactivity is controversial only because it has been suppressed, in favor of the Relativistic theories of SMS, yet it is more reasonable than that of SMS, as applying to all energy changes in the universe. All energy changes—except those at absolute zero, or involving reversible process—are considered "irreversible", and result in "degradation of energy" according to SMS.

Is there really such a thing as an irreversible process? SMS would argue that, "...sure, you might reverse an irreversible process, but that would take energy from an external source." This gives cause for wonder how a process which is irreversible forever could be reversed by anything at all. Since there is nothing in the universe which is really isolated, there is always available energy to reverse any process anywhere. ZPR energy originally converted within a system has never really disappeared, but still exists somewhere, within the system or external to it. After all, this energy is not really a thing, but rather a property of matter under the circumstances, no matter how slight, capable of transforming radiant force to another form. In reversing an 'irreversible' process with 'external energy', energy 'dissipated' by other processes can be conceived as being used to 'pay back' what was previously dissipated by a so-called irreversible process. If the sum total of all universal energy (force/matter/time) remains the same, it can never degrade. It is all just a matter of time. SMS confuses states of matter with energy. It is true that, due to a matter's state, it can react with the ZPR, or can be diminished in its ability to do so, but these states are all reversible.

Disappearing Mass?

In a nuclear reaction, such as that in which a quantity of "unstable" radium "spontaneously" emits powerful radiation into surrounding space and matter, SMS would say that the radiation is the product of "radioactive decay" as expressed by Einstein's equation, "$E = MC^2$". According to this equation, the emission of a certain amount ("quanta") of radiation, at certain voltages (say 4.5 Mev), over a certain time period, is equal to a certain portion of the mass of the radium, multiplied times the speed of light, squared. The equation says that the mass of the radium decreases by an amount equal to the "interconverted" radiant energy emitted, based on the assumption that matter and radiation are interchangeable.

Since the uncontested 'minimum' age of the universe, according to SMS—notwithstanding the astronomically-determined ages of the oldest stars clusters in our galaxy—exceeds the purported atomic half-lives of any radioactive materials, it is confirmed that such materials were created within the earth through natural process, and that otherwise the atomic half-lives would long since have expired. In 1936, Nikola Tesla produced radium through transmutation, quickly, in pound quantities, with a process which he said was so cheap that it could be profitably sold for less than a dollar per pound.[10]

As it emits its radiation and alpha particles (stripped helium atoms which have mass), the radium's mass does not shrink. Any gaseous emission—radon gas—maintains its mass, atom for atom, proton and neutron for proton and neutron, electron for electron, etc., all mass remaining constant and accounted for. Any so-called "decay product"—such as lead—has the same mass as the original radium, less any radon atoms or alpha particles emitted. The physical components merely become juxtaposed, and none of them "become" electromagnetic radiation. Where, then, has the energy come from? Tesla said it comes from the ZPR. He also said that matter and radiation are not interchangeable. He compared the difference between matter and force to the difference between the body and the mind, saying force is a "...function of matter", and that, just as a mind could not exist without a body, "...without matter, there can be no force."[11] One cannot become the other. The energy is force carried by electromagnetic radiation, which never takes physical form as an entity of any kind.

This process is explained by SMS as if no external energy of any kind is affecting the radium, when in fact, according to Tesla, it is interacting with its surrounding environment, matter and space, not only by emitting radiation, but by reacting to incoming ZPR. There is no missing mass—no one has proven that there is—so the Einstein theory must be wrong. Radium is apparently "stepping down" the ZPR to gamma and X-radiation frequencies, just as Tesla said. Without a shrinking mass of radium, it has to be true, especially at the particular rates and levels of emission.

The sun shines through my window and heats up a flagstone floor. The heat moves from the stone to the earth below and the air above. It 'dissipates', warming the air. The warm air rises to the ceiling, forcing colder air downward, 'doing work'. SMS considers this energy "unavailable", because it eventually dissipates, but the reality is, whether or not energy is available does not depend upon whether SMS can follow it, but on whether we have good reason to believe it will not be unavailable forever, or that matter is not irreparably damaged by use in an energy process. Even though the particular matter may not immediately bend to our will, due to the state that it is in or the place that it resides, it does not 'disappear', and may be processed for use again, or will become included with other matter, where it undergoes natural changes which eventually render it available for later reaction, whenever that may be.

If the combustion of a hydrocarbon fuel such as gasoline yields CO_2 and H_2O, with the release of useful heat force converted from the ZPR by the expansion of hot gases which run an engine, how can this matter be made to react again? If the process to reverse the process is too complicated to put in our cars, we should use other processes which are not so complicated.

I put gasoline into my tank, start my engine, and the gas and air mixture combusts in the cylinders to produce torque to drive my wheels. The exhaust emissions—CO, CO_2 H_2O vapor and heat—are only a rearrangement of the same fuel and air molecules which entered the engine. Once in the atmosphere, the chemical and heat units are sorted and concentrated or dissipated by nature. Some of the units are recombined by plants into the raw material for more gasoline refinement, and the cycle can be repeated, ad infinitum. The only thing we are talking about is the time that it takes natural processes to render the energy available to us again, or to do other work in nature, not the idea that the matter is "all tuckered out". All motion is perpetual, all energy is conserved, and all energy is free for the taking. We take what's available now, and wait for the rest, or we use reversible processes which speed the process up and eliminate "pollution", which is really no more than the random misplacement of matter in nature in such a way that it may interfere with natural processes beneficial to life forms, including us.

SMS works for the banking, mineral or power and industrial cartels, or is a dupe, or maybe even all the above. A real scientist should know better, know the truth.

Energy is not a "thing", and there is no such thing as "pure energy" in any physical form. Energy is force, created by matter in motion, exerted on other matter over time. Mass is moved by force, and gathers and exerts force through movement and reaction with the ZPR and other radiant force. The magnitude of a particular force and the length of time it is exerted on other matter determines the amount of work done. When force is exerted to produce heat, the IR radiation is the result of conversion from another type of radiation, such as magnetism, visible light or ZPR. An example is a campfire, in which carbonaceous matter (wood) is oxidized by fire. The chemical disposition within the matter and air maintains the reaction. The heat radiated does not represent destruction of the atoms of carbon or oxygen, but rather the conversion of radiant energy by the atoms when oxidation occurs, at which time the bonds between the atoms as they existed before are broken, and are replaced by new bonds with other elements. This causes a molecular change in which the atoms release stored IR radiation, or the ZPR reacts with the atoms and molecules, "stepping down" the ZPR, like a transformer, to IR radiation. There is also a possible release of stored IR radiation in the hydrocarbon fuel atoms and molecules.

"Combusted" carbon is bonded to oxygen as CO_2. "Combusted" hydrogen is bonded to oxygen as H_2O, usually in a vapor state because of the liberated heat energy. This is not a 'final resolution' of the energy production potential of carbon and oxygen, since natural processes, driven by solar radiation, will eventually return both elements to a combustible state. The carbon and hydrogen may lie in the earth for a few million years, temporarily 'locked up' in a coal deposit, while the oxygen floats in the atmosphere, completing the "water cycle" and other process for eons. The energy in the coal deposits being formed is not 'unavailable' forever, but remains ever capable of combusting or eventually transmuting ZPR into IR radiation, again and again.

SMS has no answer as to where the heat energy of combustion comes from, other than to say that it is a "release of the bonding energy" of the molecules. But if the bonding energy of oxygen, hydrogen and carbon, prior to the reaction, were weak enough to allow the reaction, then the 'tighter' bonds producing the CO_2 and H_2O in the reaction, represents an overall absorption of energy, with the result that the reaction should produce a cooling rather than a heating effect. It seems that the force produced by the combustion reaction—IR radiation—may come from a source external to the reaction, and could represents "free energy". The only change which has occurred in the matter is its ability to combust, which has been temporarily neutralized.

SMS would have us believe that the "fuel"—oxygen, carbon and hydrogen—have decreased in available energy forever, but it simply isn't true, and the people who ultimately controlled and designed his academic curriculum knew it.

Though it is not comforting to realize that all the gasoline and diesel fuel combusted in engines is still represented in the natural environment, it is a fact that the exhaust products are forever available for use again. A better idea is to use matter which doesn't have to leave our engines, by using exclusively reversible processes to do our work.

Intuition tells us that hot water appears to "store" heat, but the fact is, heat transferred to water enters it in the form of IR radiation, and when the heat is extracted from the water, it will also be as IR radiation, in a reversible process, even when in direct surface contact with a heat conductor, in which case the atoms or molecules of the conductor become excited by contact with the water, as the conductor transfers the stored IR radiation. Since the IR radiation excites the water, this may allow it to react with the ZPR, until the same finite amount of heat is radiated back out, in a reverse reaction to that which occurred when the IR radiation entered the water. When hot water is carefully insulated in something like a thermos bottle, with a mirrored inner surface, the combination of heat-reflection, vacuum and insulation virtually isolates it from contact with an external heat conducting material (though not the entire universe). The IR radiation remains in the water, and virtually does not exit until the insulator is removed. Otherwise, it could 'jump' the insulator like microwaves can. The insulator does not stop the ZPR, but inhibits its reaction with the water, since the lower end of the 'step-down' process cannot be continued so long as the water retains maximum heat in a liquid state.

There is no energy inherent in matter, only the inherent property possessed by matter to store radiant energy and to react when undergoing molecular and atomic state-changes, to react to radiant energy force, and to convert it to useful force to perform work, such as heating, lighting, communicating, and mechanical force. It is not matter alone which determines the availability of energy, but rather the states, and changes of states of matter, which give it the capacity to react to the universal ZPR and other matter.

Lyne's Hypothesis

As I said in 1993[12]—based on my "Omni Theory" of 1963—the only way the earth could have grown like it has, is through solar/ZPR-driven photosynthesis, through which ether has been assembled into the solid mass of most of the elements found in the earth's outer layers.

Around 1961, I personally cut the samples of oil well drilling cuttings from ca. 20,000 feet beneath the surface of Reeves County, Texas, in a well drilled by my uncle, Roger Benton, for J. Evetts Haley, Sr. It was the first well to go beyond 20,000 feet. The samples represented cuttings from all the strata from the surface down to ca. 22,000 feet, I believe (if my memory serves me), all the strata contained the detritus of living things, essentially dependent on photosynthesis, either animal life remains, plant life remains, or minerals derived from these, through metamorphosis or natural transmutation. The universe must have a 'constant' of life-forms.

According to my theory, the elements we have at our disposal are mostly the products of photosynthesis and metamorphosis over time, derived from the action of radiation on the ether, via plant and animal life, except for a small percentage of "space dust" (formed the same way on other celestial bodies or in space) which fell into earth's atmosphere.

Since the elements we know of are found in deposits in the earth's upper layers, I assumed they were produced by photosynthesis or metamorphosis/transmutation from photosynthetic products, driven by the ZPR and other solar radiation, and that these deposits continue to the earth's center. The idea that earth has a "molten iron core" is a silly one, since the laws of thermodynamics would require that the surface would melt too.

Having seen their pet Relativist theories shaken by my obvious facts, an article appeared in the Orlando Sentinel, carried also by the Santa Fe New Mexican on 7/30/01, under the headline, "NASA probe on mission to catch some rays." The article stated that a NASA solar probe called Genesis was scheduled to blast off on the 30th, on a mission to "catch some rays"—to collect some samples of our sun's solar wind, and bring "them" home to scientists, thus allegedly marking the first time that "extraterrestrial material" has been returned from beyond the moon.

Though this incidentally confirms my theory of at least some of our minerals, etc., by admitting that the elements on earth were "assembled" here (since they are not considered "extraterrestrial materials") the truth of the matter is, there is a lot of "extraterrestrial material" dropping into earth's atmosphere every day. For instance, I have some "black sands" which were most probably not formed on earth, because the elements in them could not have combined in the way that they did in earth's gravity field or atmosphere. In addition, there is no "mother lode" of mineral deposits that they could have weathered out of.

The mission concentrates on cosmic "particles", which are not electromagnetic radiation, but composed of atoms propelled by solar radiation, as Tesla said in the 1890s. It also misses a real concern, the ether which is assembled into earthly mass under the influence of solar electromagnetic waves, especially of the ZPR.

The $164 million spacecraft is intended to "shed light on the makeup and evolution of our solar system." It is hypothesized that the solar wind—a stream of charged atoms—contains the "same mix" of elements found in the sun's surface layers, which in turn is believed to mirror the contents of the sun's solar nebula. Two and a half years of sampling is expected to collect material weighing "no more than several grains of salt", and "should" contain "every element found naturally in the solar system". This apparently is intended to test or disprove my theory, yet no mention is made of me or my theory, of course. This may be intended as an attempt to prove an old theory, to disprove a new theory, without stating who originated the new theory or what it said. The old theory had no basis in the first place. All they have to do to confirm the facts, is to observe things here on earth.

This seems to be a very expensive test of an hypothesis which is intended to prove that all the elements on earth were "shot" here from the sun, via the 'solar wind'. Otherwise, "Lyne's Hypothesis" presents a significant obstacle to the typical Big Bang mentality. Trying to imagine the sun building Jupiter in their way, demonstrates the improbability of such a theory.

If the samples fail to contain a mixture of all the elements on earth, my theory can be presumed true, since no one to my knowledge has more reasonably explained where all our elements "came from". I maintain that through reaction with certain basic matter in space, earth had its beginning, building additional matter from the ether through reactions with the ZPR. This eventually gave rise to basic plant life, creating a gaseous atmosphere, and all this matter reacted with the ZPR to form other matter from the ether, composing the plants, gases absorbed and released by the plants, and matter in the earth. Eventually, animal life forms developed in a similar way. Certain other basic elements transmuted to others under the influence of cosmic radiation, and some additional elements were assembled from ether particles into atoms of different elements, until the elements were complete.

The entire series could have begun with the simplest atoms, hydrogen, gathered from space. Considering the time that such a process could have taken, our galaxy has to be much, much older than Hubble's Constant.

The final, most complex elements created represent the voltage limits of the ZPR's influence on the ether, and in a certain sense, all the processes involved in creating certain elements here on earth, duplicating conditions essential for the creation of the same elements elsewhere. The process is continuous, and even transmutes atoms in your body, especially those below atomic number 19.

The process 1 have described does not create mass, but only collects and assembles tiny ether particles possessing tiny mass, into atoms, through the influence of the ZPR on the ether. The ether particles may be identical to neutrinos, which possess mass and carry momentum. Since my earlier books, Japanese experimenters have confirmed that neutrinos in great numbers are ubiquitous in space, which I think are sufficient to account for an "ether theory". Since many of these neutrinos are captured on earth, new mass is added to the earth. The Japanese seemed to have confirmed my theory.

According to my theory, the sun and other stars are transmitters and receivers of ZPR, and hence 'build' their planets by supplying the radiation necessary to assemble the planetary elements from the ether, through reaction with initially small amounts of other simple basic 'seed' elements.

The big question is, how could such "energy" continue to exist to supply power maintaining the perpetual motion of the universe, as well as for all processes of building atoms from the ether? The general opinion is that "energy gets used up" in a local region. But this energy (force) is continually replenished by the ZPR.

Since all suns basically receive as much energy as they transmit, and since all energy (force, exerted over time) and atomic matter (assembled from the ether) is conserved—in the motion of matter (or ether), or in transient radiation in all of universal space, and since there is always ubiquitous available force from the ZPR, equilibrium is maintained in all regions of space, and all matter and motion is perpetual. This is the "Lyne Theory of the Conservation of Perpetual Motion and Force".

According to Tesla[13], in an 1891 lecture, rapidly varying electrostatic discharges from the earth ("microwaves") 'rigidity' the ether. This was based on reactions actually verified by Tesla before that 1891 lecture, which showed the ponderomotive behavior of mass under the various circumstances he described. In an 1892 lecture in London[14], he repeated the results of this research regarding the emission of electrostatic 'brush' discharges (negative electrostatic corona) by a conductive body, as it draws in the tubes of force (aligned ether carriers) which carry momentum, showing that when these tubes of force are dissolved in the body, they impart their momentum to the body in the direction of the emissions.

According to Hannes Alfven[15], a giant electric current travels through space along lines of "frozen magnetic force" from the sun to the earth, passes through the earth and back to the sun's equator, imparting "angular momentum" to the earth in its solar orbit. This was based on earlier research by Kristian Birkeland, who in 1895 explained the aurora borealis as the effect of the currents later proven by Alfven, as they enter the earth's atmosphere where earth's magnetic field is almost vertical, causing a glow similar to that of cathode rays in a laboratory.

J. J. Thomson[16], in 1893, restated Tesla's earlier finding (without attribution), "...if moving tubes of force entering a conductor are dissolved in it, mechanical momentum is given to it at right angles to the tubes and to the magnetic induction", adding that this momentum is "...proportional to the vector product of electric and magnetic forces". This repeated what Tesla had said, since the momentum was proportional to the vector product of the electric and magnetic fields.

Thomson also declared that "...the aether is a storehouse of mechanical momentum", based on "his" theory, concluding that "...the aether is itself the vehicle of mechanical momentum, of amount (1/4*pi C [D . B] per unit volume." As stated by Sir Edmund Whittaker[17], in a steady (electrostatic or magnetostatic) field, the resultant stresses acting on a volume of the aether is zero, so that the aether is in equilibrium. But when the electric and/or magnetic field is variable, the resultant stress on the aether is consistent with Tesla's earlier, 1891 finding, and Thomson's 1893 equation as stated above.

Tesla's experiment had verified this, using "alternate currents of high voltage and high frequency", on the assumption that a changing field was essential to creation of the necessary stress upon the "medium" (the ether). What is more important, until Tesla's demonstration, using generators he brought along, the British had no idea of how to create the necessary high frequency fields.

This, of course, was the basis for Tesla's electrodynamic space propulsion system.

CHAPTER IV - SECRET SCIENCE: Thought-Control on The Professional Level

Epistemology

In order for the government to hide so many scientific and technological discoveries through its secrecy, there had to be a way to change the way people thought and what they believed. The formation of what one believes is usually limited by one's epistemology—what one's "first laws" are, what one's theory of knowledge or truth is. Is "seeing believing", or is "seeing just an illusion"? Philosophers have identified two basic theories of epistemology, which are the Platonic and the Aristotelian. We each usually choose one or the other, depending on what we are willing to accept as "the truth" or accept as "real".

The Platonic epistemology, based on subjective "first-laws" ("irreducible primaries", the beginning point for any philosophy), in this case states that there is a 'higher world of perfect forms', which we can never really see or know directly. According to this epistemology, the world around us is only an illusory "shadow" of these higher, perfect forms. Accordingly, we cannot have a direct knowledge of reality, because we can't depend on our senses as a reliable means of knowing reality.

The Platonic epistemology's name is derived from Plato's Cave Analogy, which is about a person sitting at night in a cave, between a fire and a passing caravan. As the caravan passes in front of the fire—which lights an inner wall of the cave, and casts a shadow of the caravan on the wall—the viewer sees no more than a 'shadow of reality' (the shadow of the caravan). The caravan itself represents reality—the world of 'perfect forms'—which we are unable to see directly.

This epistemology is usually typical of religious people, and of Relativists, the people who have been running 'official' physics since 1919, maybe longer, I could never figure out what was stopping the man in the cave from leaving the cave and taking a look at the caravan directly.

The Aristotelian epistemology has objective first-laws, which state as an irreducible primary that the senses are valid tools of cognition (thought). What you see or sense, can be accepted as true on its face, because visibility, in the three-dimensional space of perceived, physical reality, is based on scientifically measurable light, shadow, distance, height, weight, color, etc. The Aristotelian epistemology interposes no mystical, spiritual or religious concepts between the observer and reality, through which our knowledge must be filtered, such as Relativism seems to require. While non-visible or non-perceptible forces and factors are recognized, if they can be measured as heat, light, sound, touch, or smell, or through the use of scientific instruments—which are technological extensions of our senses—these forces and factors are not "relative". As Ayn Rand said, "The facts of reality are what they are irrespective as to whether we are aware of them or not."[1], and "Existence exists: A equals A."

The disconnection of science from the Aristotelian epistemology, and the movement of scientific thought toward the Platonist epistemology, was accelerated particularly after 1919, when Relativism was projected into the vogue. Beginning about 1910, the mega-corporate owners of the mass media had begun to control science and other educational curricula,[2] particularly that of the medical schools, through the use of so-called "philanthropic grants", which were actually designed to benefit the corporations which had set up the foundations through which the grants were awarded. These Rockefeller grants set the stage for the controllers. The foundations eventually appointed compliant faculty members as officers, so that the foundations, corporations, and the educational institutions were thoroughly invaginated with one another. This process, which began with grants favoring medical schools which taught a curriculum which advocated the use of products manufactured by the pharmaceutical subsidiaries of the Rockefeller family, soon also included the slanting of physics curricula toward Relativism, apparently intended to more directly favor the Rockefeller petroleum industry upon which the pharmaceutical industries were based.

---

[1] Ayn Rand, Philosophy: Who Needs It?

[2] G. Edward Griffin, World Without Cancer, Part II, The Politics of Cancer Therapy, American Media (1974)

This use of the educational grant process completed the basic cycle of how the corporate giants began to control what scientific professionals were allowed to think and believe. Those who bucked the system just simply wouldn't be allowed to remain as part of it. In 1905 Albert Einstein re-introduced the world to the religious, 18th century Theory of Relativity. The media giants wasted no time in promoting this 'wrong turn' of physics, and by 1919, it was in full swing. Some of the beliefs advocated by Relativism border on insanity.

The things some adults believe remind me of a little child who closes his eyes and thinks he is no longer visible. We play along with the gag and say, "What happened to Bobby? He disappeared! How did he do that!" But when adult scientists do it, it is no joke.

It is hard for me to accept the fact that some adults believe in "other dimensions", but why should I be surprised, since the concept of "heaven" is one of another dimension, the existence of which people have been taught to believe for thousands of years. Heaven can be neither perceived nor ascertained objectively, and whether it exists or not depends upon the faith of the believer, rather than reason. To me, if you can prove something exists in this dimension-—the only dimension I recognize—it is IN this dimension, because I think there is only one dimension, called "reality."

The fact that people have private thoughts, dreams, and ideas in their minds does not verify the existence of "other" dimensions, since we know that mental processes are held in the mind, in "our" dimension, as electromagnetic patterns, waves, currents, fields and data configurations, similar to how a computer stores information, except the mind's computer is a dynamic electromagnetic and organic one, rather than an exclusively inorganic, dynamic electromagnetic and mechanical one.

Though some beliefs border on insanity, I don't think there is a correlation between insanity and belief, but there appears to be a correlation between induced neurosis and belief. An insane person, or a person with a neurological disorder, who sees, hears and feels things and beings which aren't there, does not do so because of his epistemology. He does so because his mind plays tricks on him, due to organic malfunctions in his nervous system and biochemistry, which cause visual, auditory and other sensory hallucinations real enough for him to believe. He does not say he "believes" these things, since he usually has no choice. In a way, such an hallucinating person, by accepting what he "sees" as "real", has an Aristotelian epistemology, except we know that he only "sees" the hallucinations in his mind. To whatever degree he recognizes them for what they are, he may still be a rational person.

The concept that insanity is a disease was rejected by the director of the New York State Hospital, Thomas Szasz, as stated in his book, "The Myth of Mental Disease". Szasz destroyed the idea that an insane person was one who had "caught" a "disease" which could be "cured" through psychotherapy.[3]According to Szasz, "The classification of (mis)behavior as illness provides an ideological justification for state-sponsored social control as medical treatment".[4]

In other words, if you mindlessly accept the misclassification by the state or the psychiatric profession, of a mental problem having a physiological, biochemical or neurological basis, as a "disease" or "illness", you may soon find yourself being treated to the "therapy of choice" of your local cops.

---

[3] Thomas Szasz, The Myth of Mental Disease (1960)

[4] Thomas Szasz, Manifesto (summary statement) (1998)

It had already been discovered about the time that Szasz wrote his book, that schizophrenia was not the result of a series of "traumas" which "split the personality", but rather of organic malfunctions in the patient's brain physiology and biochemistry. The cure might be pharmaceutical, but no amount of "mental hygiene" or "therapy" would cure it. Unbelievably futile effort has been expended on "psychoanalysis" and therapy, a la Freud, Meninger, Jung, etc., without curing a single, true schizophrenic.

While true, organic insanity—psychosis, which totally obstructs rationality—has little to do with epistemology, neurosis—which interferes with rationality, but does not totally obstruct it—is yet another thing which can be induced by an epistemology which encourages beliefs which interfere with rationality. The kind of epistemology pushed by the government's covert propagandists is the Platonist epistemology, which induces neurosis in many people, but worse than that, it is an essential part of the government's program of controlling the way many people think.

If we consider the general public as inmates in a gigantic mental asylum, the government's thought-control program is worse than mere quack psychotherapy, because the "psychotherapy" is intended to induce, rather than to alleviate neurosis. In this case, the "doctor" is fraudulently generating more "business" through abuse of his patients, by inducing them to believe things which will maintain, create or increase neurotic "dependency".

Since one's credulity, regulated by one's epistemology, limits what he or she finds believable, credulity is a sort of governor, which allows information and ideas into the mind, or excludes them, either as "credible" or "incredible", subject to certain tests which one requires of them. Ordinarily, for one with an Aristotelian epistemology, these 'tests' are in the form of rational questions, such as:

1. Can the information be objectively verified by my senses or detected scientifically?
2. Have I personally seen, heard, touched, smelled, measured or otherwise sensed it?
3. Is the information or idea from a reliable source?
4. Can the information be documented by rational people?
5. Does the information seem to violate any natural law?
6. Does the information seem to violate any scientific law?
7. Can I trust those who say it is valid?

All these credulity tests are subject to modification whenever a person has a Platonist epistemology, since Platonists don't believe in relying upon objective evidence, and don't believe we can 'know' reality, a belief which is supposed to give them a "King's X" (immunity) from reality or accountability. Therefore, in order to render the public at large more easily susceptible to government thought control, the Platonist epistemology is naturally the one which the government trains its covert propaganda agents to promote, particularly through paranormalism and spiritualism.

This technique came straight from Nazi Germany, and is what I call the Big Lie False Propaganda System, developed in conjunction with John D. Rockefeller's plan to control the world through religion, and taught to the SS by his psychologists and psychiatrists in the 1920s. In this system, a big hole is first wallowed in the public's credulity, with Big Paranormal Lies spread by people the public has been taught to respect—such as those with Ph.D.s and other authoritarian titles—so the public will accept whatever other Big Lies the government wants it to believe. As stated by Adolf Hitler:

> "In the size of the lie there is always contained a certain factor of credibility, since the great masses of people ...will more easily fall victim to a great lie than to a small one, since they themselves...lie sometimes in little things...Thus such an idea of an untruth will not at all enter their heads...therefore, just for this reason some part of the most impudent lie will remain and stick."

This statement revealed the mass-psychology system which was used on the German people to gain their support for events which defied the scientific reasoning for which Germans were known worldwide.

Government thought-control won't work if there are plenty of reliable, respectable, rational, genuinely independent people available in society, with access to the media, to identify and point out the devious government-corporate scheming to the public. For that reason, to avoid this contingency, corporate-controlled media excludes such people, while the government's "official" public propaganda is directed partly to the general public, and partly to society's so-called "intelligentsia".

Government Thought-Control of Scientists and Professionals

This is a two-pronged, "divide-and-conquer" strategy carried out through two teams of covert propaganda agents, which I call the "Pseudo-Skeptics" and the "Pseudo-Paranormalists". The Pseudo-Skeptics pose as members and leaders of the intelligentsia, while the Pseudo-Paranormalists pose as members and leaders of the public's grass-roots "alternative" community. The message of the Pseudo-Skeptics also coincides with the government's "official, public" position on science, while the message of the Pseudo'Paranormalists is intended to represent irrationality, mixed with things like the worst kind of religious superstition and paranoia—to make the government's position seem more rational by comparison—and things the government wishes to discourage though ridicule heaped upon them by the Dupe-Intelligentsia (unwitting or useful educated idiots).

A true intelligentsia, which would normally be guardians of the public regarding certain devious and dangerous government tendencies, is displaced, skillfully neutralized, isolated and misdirected toward red herrings, which the Pseudo-Skeptic leaders have duped the intelligentsia with, in order to misdirect them against the red herrings created by the Pseudo-Paranormalists, designed to neutralize the grass-roots movement. In this way the Big Lie System achieves the aims of the Dictatorship without bloodshed or overt oppression. It uses "trick psychology" on the people to carry out political, social and economic programs as part of its undisclosed agenda of control and economic and physical exploitation.

Neither the Pseudo-Skeptics nor the Pseudo-Paranormalists are genuine representatives of true public opinion, but represent a "government-designed" set of opinions intended to intermesh, to subvert public opinion and rule by consent of the governed, from top to bottom and side to side, and to obliterate the most rational assumptions in the "arena of reason". What results is a "rule by consensus", a form of fascism.[5]

In order to insure that "forbidden" knowledge remains secret, the system of government thought-control manufactures a false government "skepticism" among duped scientists and intellectuals, to maintain this secrecy regarding free-energy and Tesla's electro dynamic space propulsion technology, as I have already mentioned. This subject is not allowed to come up for discussion in officially sanctioned scientific gatherings.

Certain free-energy or highly efficient scientific information is "classified" as "national secrets" by the government, so that, concerning certain scientific phenomena, laws, and procedures, the public is 'dumbed down', and denied this 'occult' knowledge possessed by the government and corporations exclusively. Corporate disclosures are kept in check by the national security/non-disclosure agreements entered into under government contracts. Occult Ether Physics deals with this 'occult' knowledge as it applies to Tesla's discovery of electrodynamic UFO propulsion, in the late 19th century,

[5] Ayn Rand, Rule by Consensus, The New Fascism (1968).

I distinguish between "mind-control" and "thought-control" as follows: Mind control is involuntary, and does not require the conscious submission of the person whose mind is being controlled, while thought-control does. Thought-control is a kind of "thought fraud", a means of controlling one's opinions and beliefs through a combination of truth-concealment and false propaganda (information control), and intimidation (a kind of psychological terrorism). These are used to create the false appearance of "conscious" acceptance by the victim of a certain set of opinions regarding certain subject matter, as if the victim had consciously accepted those views, when in fact he has been defrauded by denial of information which has been replaced by misinformation, making it impossible for him to make a fully-informed decision.

As an example of this thought-control among supposedly "rational" people today, whom I call "Dupe-Skeptics", there is a specific topic of conversation, about which independent, individual opinions are abolished, and only a certain, pre-ordained opinion is tolerated or considered to be "rational" by the government, as expressed by its official Pseudo-Skeptics, who must know the truth in order to conceal it, or pretend not to believe it. The government has the official policy of prohibiting any professional people who are respected for their positions in the community, from expressing opinions contrary to the government's dictum on this issue (just as it does on several other particular issues).

On this particular topic, who or what power is it which "pre-ordains" or "allows" only the "tolerated" opinions, and "why"? What kind of intimidation inhibits supposedly rational, professionally educated people, creating their fear of the free discussion of a certain topic, inducing them to 'consciously' yield to the preferred opinion of the controlling authority, and to limit their own expressions—and even freedom of thought? Is their behavior only the 'rational' response to a fear of a power so strong and threatening, that the Dupe-Skeptics do not even permit their own minds to think otherwise? This system of inducing people to limit and control their own thoughts and expressions to conform to government parameters was copied from religion, and shows successful thought-control. It, like religion, employs guilt-based thought-control methods.

The segment of our society from which educated Dupe-Skeptics usually come is generally one which is more easily intimidated than that of say, auto mechanics or heavy equipment operators, who are usually more resistant to such pressures. In fact, they may slap you up-side of the head with a tire-iron, if you try that on them. Dupe-Skeptics, under government persuasion, in deference to an external, covert government-connected controlling power and media-created consensus, have banned this opinion from rational consideration, and have categorically relegated it to the realm of the lunatic fringe, even though the forbidden opinion is the most rational alternative under the circumstances.

Such a situation makes a mockery of the very concept of rational skepticism. What we are presented with as "skeptical opinion", in those magazines on the book stands—such as The Skeptic, The Skeptical Inquirer, or Skeptical Opinion—is more like covert government propaganda than anything remotely resembling true skepticism in the historical tradition, when it comes to the so-called "forbidden topic" of UFOs.

Why would true skeptics be afraid of a truly rational consideration of the facts, reject the most rational alternative, and cave in to pressure from the government, the cult of intelligence, or some other group, regarding any topic? They wouldn't. What the government's reign of thought-terror has done, is reduce the ranks of true skeptics to a small few, who have little or nothing to do with groups or their magazines. I can be confident that these magazines will not respond directly to my accusations, in obedience to a covert policy to never mention or cite anyone who is not a part of the "official" two-pronged thought-control loop. This avoidance is another badge of their conscious fraud.

It is irrefutable that many alleged "intellectuals" in our society have allowed the irrational "regulation" of their thought on this topic, by the government, by intelligence agencies, and by groups sponsored by them. Most of them lack the courage to say what they really believe, and many fear for their professional reputations and licenses. Yet, these same Dupe-Skeptics, who pride themselves on being rational, have virtually fled in fear from this topic, except to parrot the sole "allowed" opinion dictated by the government and its official opinion-makers.

There is no question but that the Dupe-Skeptics have allowed their fear of the government to control their opinions, thoughts, and expressions on this topic. For example, of the many Unitarians I questioned on this topic (Unitarians pride themselves on having "independent opinions" and "free thought"), every single one of them, without exception, considered Philip Klass to be a wonderful speaker, who reflected their opinions regarding the non-existence of UFOs. Not a single one of them was bothered by the fact that Klass is a CIA man with a job to do on their minds.

Such a situation seems preposterous or incredible, even to self-proclaimed "rational" thinkers, who would be very reluctant to admit its truth. For those who, of all people, seem to have tried so conscientiously and so hard and for so long, to be intellectually courageous, logical, truthful, frank, independent, and free in the range of their minds, it is truly astounding to realize that, on this topic, they have almost all allowed their opinions to be ultimately regulated and molded by the government. Yet the actual history of Unitarianism was not always of this cowardly "tradition".

Some might comment that this conflict could only be possible in a totalitarian state. What we presently have appears to be a "covert" totalitarian state...one in which the dictat is so deceptive that the average citizen is completely unaware of it, and those of us who are aware of it are called "paranoid". The degree of this thought-control is greater than that exercised in terms of the prohibition of freedom of expression in the former Soviet Union.

Could it be that the so-called "skeptical", "rational", "free-thinker", "secular Humanist", Unitarians and other colleagues in our society—swayed by the statements of government employees, books, newspapers, and magazines (with so many CIA dupes on their boards and staffs), and other media products which inflict social and government pressures—have allowed their opinions to be determined by the government? How could those who in the past have so bravely taken controversial, rational positions on such topics as racial equality, abortion, sexual freedom, taxation, church-state separation, Atheism, cosmology, evolution, free thought, the draft, individualism and sovereignty, privacy, drugs, and the limits of legitimate government, be afraid to discuss any topic?

The importance of the topic I speak about can be gauged by the degree to which, in comparison to the topics I just listed, the government places the utmost emphasis on maintaining secrecy, far beyond its efforts on any other topic, even nuclear weapon and missile secrets.

This fear, silence, and sycophantic compliance proves that there is an unspoken, covert government rule, which prohibits a truly rational and free discussion on this topic, which is subject to the greatest priority, much like scientists were once persecuted by the church-state, which openly prohibited as heresy the free discussion of even the possibility that the scientific facts about the universe differed from those specified in holy writ.

Anyone who questioned "god" (i.e., the state) did so at their own peril. The purpose today of this covert rule, which prohibits the opinion that UFOs are exclusively man-made electrodynes, and that the government has created false "alien contact" stories about them to hide them, is analogous to questioning the medieval "god", and carries the same stigma of a "heresy" in science, to officially enforce the ignorance of an abusive authority from challenge or erosion, in addition to protecting powerful economic interests from the threat of competition from a new technology which will eventually end their illicit power over the minds of scientists, and over the intellectual, economic, social, and physical freedom of our people.

CHAPTER V - ALIEN VISITORS:
Thought-Control on the Grass-Roots Level

I first began studying flying saucers—then called "flying discs"—in the summer of 1946, seen by several people I knew, mostly oil field workers who ran oil well pumps in remote locations throughout West Texas and southern New Mexico. Many people at that time were seeing the ships in the area, and most of them correctly assumed that they were captured secret German aircraft brought to New Mexico and Ft. Bliss, Texas, after the war, from Germany. Wernher von Braun and some of his rocket and electrodyne group from Peenemunde were assigned to Ft. Bliss, to the north of El Paso, and a larger number of the Peenemunde scientists were at several other New Mexico locations such as White Sands Missile Range, Holloman AFB at Alamogordo, Sandia Base, Los Alamos, Kirtland AFB, etc. Most people in the area were aware of these activities at that time.

These assignments were determined by the specialities of the scientists, the available facilities at the time at various nearby locations, and the particular roles assigned to the bases. Generally speaking, Sandia Base is an Army weapons development center. Ft. Bliss was the U.S. Army Ordinance center, before being moved to Redstone Arsenal in 1951. Holloman Air Force Base was an advanced fighter interceptor base, which also performed early U.S. advanced flight tests for UFOs. It also engaged in R. & D. on advanced flight problems, such as the rocket sled acceleration experiments, using rhesus monkeys, then chimps. For that reason, it became the location for the Southwest Primate Research center, which Jane Goodall seemed to become aware of after my book was published, detailing the cruel and painful deaths of the monkeys on the rocket sled. These tests were preparatory for such advanced human flights as that of the X-15, and in preparation for flights to the moon and other outer space missions, using rockets, pursuant to Wernher von Braun's dreams.

Los Alamos National Laboratory, run by the University of California, Berkeley, was considered a scientific base, which dealt with the more precise studies and problems encountered with the UFO technology as it developed, such as how to deal with corrosion of the outer metal surfaces caused by the high voltage electrical discharges, which formed nitrogen oxide, which in combination with atmospheric moisture, formed nitric acid. This necessitated special acid-resistant surfaces. The lab also did special studies on such things as "spheronics" (the electronic resonant possibilities of spherical UFO shapes), the phenomenon of the lack of sonic boom or other sounds, the ability of the ships to accelerate to such fantastic speeds so rapidly, without producing a shock wave or experiencing friction heating of the surface by atmospheric gases, and several other mysteries or problems. It also did metallurgical work on special alloys for use on the ships, structural studies, and so forth.

At Kirtland AFB, special studies were undertaken regarding the physiological aspects of UFO flight, and how the human being reacted to it. Sandia Base in the meanwhile explored the possibilities of appropriate weaponry for use on UFOs, while White Sands Missile Range, as an "impact range", was used for the testing of these weapons.

Many people in the region were veterans of the European war, and some had seen the "foo fighters" over Germany. Several of my friends were the children of Air Force veterans, some of whom were air aces, such as the father of my friend, Carter McKenzie. There were several ace fighter pilots in my model airplane club. Other friends were the children of scientists and technicians who worked in the Manhattan Project during WW II.

Some of the men who taught our model airplane club how to build and fly good planes were ace fighter pilots. I point this out to show that many who assumed that the flying discs were "secret German aircraft" were expert aviators, who had witnessed first-hand German aviation technology over the skies of Europe in the most intimate way. This assumption was a problem that the government soon set out to change.

I had seen the discs in 1946 in the night sky as squadrons of lights at high altitude, which turned in increments of 30 degrees. I also saw what appeared to be discs at a distance on several occasions, but did not see one close-up in broad daylight until late summer, 1953, not more than a few days before the start of school.

In July, 1947, the Roswell Hoax was cooked up by military intelligence personnel at Holloman AFB, New Mexico, some of whom were ex members of Reinhard Gehlen's special Nazi Gestapo outfit, the Reichsicherheithauptamt VI ("National Security Agency Division 6"), which had been in charge of security and counterintelligence (disinformation) for the Nazi saucer project called "KT-p2", for the Third Reich. The hoax was perpetrated near Roswell, to give the Holloman spooks "plausible deniability", to prevent the Roswell personnel from knowing about the hoax, and to convince the regional public that the ships it was seeing were of extraterrestrial origin, and unknown to the government. The hoax was intended to be confined to the area covered by Army Air Force Intelligence "P.I.O" ("Public Information Officer") Walter Haut's press releases, which were only sent to newspapers and other media in that region.

Since the 1947 Roswell Hoax, I had observed the growth of this false propaganda program for 46 years, until I published my 1993 book, Space Aliens From the Pentagon. The propaganda putsch had always kept up the pressure to induce a belief in "aliens" and "extraterrestrial UFOs", as a means of concealing the discs' man-made origin, and to conceal the government's involvement in experimentation and flight training in that part of the country.

Today, 55 years later, it seems ludicrous to hear people say there is a "cover-up of alien contact" by the government, when it has been the government which has been pushing the "alien contact" scenario for the past 55 years. Why would the government want to cover up what it has been covertly inducing the public to believe for so long, especially since so many of the suckers have believed it? The relative percentage of people who believed the lies in 1947 was much smaller, because that generation did not have its heads in the clouds, and had its feet planted on solid earth.

That earlier generation was more familiar with the realities of German science, was generally aware of what the government was doing "right next door", and was more realistic and harder for the government to fool. Today's generation is not so stolid, and is much more gullible, so the percentages have been steadily rising, as the government's thought-control dictatorship has gradually become more complete. TV, which didn't even exist in the Southwest in 1947, barely existed in the larger cities like Albuquerque, by 1953. The existence of this mass-media, together with the government's thorough development of inroads into the movie and TV industries, have brought the thought-control system into every home on a daily basis.

During the 46 years prior to my book, I didn't bother to read all the false propaganda, only enough to confirm its falsity. I had an aunt who was all caught up in the paranormal and 'alien' hype, so I could always read any of the propaganda she had, such as a whole stack of Fate magazines and several other pulps whenever 1 had a mind to. I kind of took a "grab-sample" every now and then, to check the progress of the propaganda, just to make certain that nothing new had popped up, but it didn't.

Everything which I have seen since 1947 was an extension of the original Roswell Hoax. In my writings, I sometimes refer to certain books, etc., only to illustrate certain points, but I have never based my research on what others have said. When it comes to other writers, I am only interested in facts they may have documented, but possibly overlooked, or which are usually misinterpreted, and sometimes misstated for obvious purposes. Whenever I find an intentional lie by one of these authors, by comparing the facts to what they have stated, to the statements of more reputable sources, or to information which I have developed, I know that there is a motive behind the lie, so I look more deeply into it to see why.

Today, after having seen so much of the propaganda, I know that I can depend on the government writers to continue to practice the same false reasoning used all along since 1947, guided by government security parameters. This is perfectly logical, maintaining substantially the same original format and propaganda tricks used in the Roswell hoax. The government has apparently decided to make "Roswell" a perennial thing, to be played upon by their covert propaganda teams and front writers, since so much of their later false propaganda depends upon that original hoax.

In 1960 I worked alongside Jesse Marcel for two weeks—the same "Major" Jesse Marcel—who inadvertently became a main character in the original Roswell Hoax. The reason I believe that Marcel was not a "witting" participant in the hoax, is because, from my experiences with Marcel, I believe he was an honest man who really wasn't the kind to fool the public intentionally, and wouldn't have been very successful at it anyway. It's possible that they subsequently forced him to remain silent—which was required by his clearance anyway—to conceal certain facts, but his clearance didn't require him to remain silent on things learned through "innocent means", from non-government sources. I only know what Marcel told me. Marcel was a fine man, intelligent, dignified, and it was a pleasure to talk and work with him.

Marcel was a company representative for Mary Carter Paint Company, out of New Orleans, and I managed a Mary Carter store in Midland, Texas. His job was to come and work with me for two weeks, to see what I had accomplished with the paint mixing and matching system which I was employed to help the company develop. I was an expert in that area, because I had learned to use the Munsell Color System while a student at the Columbus College of Art and Design in Columbus, Ohio in 1957-60. I also had several years experience in our family paint and decorating business between the ages of eight and fifteen, in Kermit, Texas, between 1947 and 1952. At that time we had the most modern paint and interior decorating company between Phoenix, Dallas and Albuquerque. We had clients from as far away as Silver City and Albuquerque New Mexico, and Abilene and El Paso Texas.

It was because of my experience in the paint business, and expertise in mixing and matching colors, that I was hired to work in the paint store, to teach the owner of the store and to develop a coherent set of mixing and matching formulas, to be utilized by the rather new paint corporation in its many stores.

Years before, just before the Roswell Hoax, some military people from the Alamogordo-White Sands area had come down to Kermit, wanting to know about green paint, and how to apply it just to create a "greenish tint". I showed them how to rub dry, powdered green tempera paint on a surface to create a green tint, and sold them some of our green "Prang" dry tempera pigment. Soon afterward, when the word got out in the Roswell Hoax—possibly by rumor or by news story—that "little green aliens" were found in the "crashed alien space ship", I immediately suspected that the technique which I had shown those men had been used in the hoax to create the "little green aliens". At that point, without photos, I figured they could have used midgets or dummies, possibly monkeys, dressed up in space suits. Regular paint wouldn't have been as convincing, since it was not flexible enough.

I was not aware that I was working with the same Jesse Marcel who had unwittingly played a part in the Roswell Hoax of 1947. The reason I was unaware of that, was because I hadn't paid that much attention to something I knew to be a hoax. The reason I say Marcel "unwittingly" played a part, is because I think Marcel was pulled into the hoax unawares.

In our discussions while working, in between customers, and during meals at Midland restaurants, Marcel told me about his Air Force training as a bomber pilot, at the Midland Air Park during WW II, as part of a "second team" of the 509th Bomb Group, being trained to drop A-bombs. He said they took the big bombers through Immelmann turns, in order to drop the bombs more safely, since in ordinary bombing, the bomb would detonate along a line directly beneath the plane, exposing the plane and crew to blast radiation and shock waves.

The Immelmann turn avoided this, by having the plane going in the opposite direction from the bomb. A bomber would be taken in a half'loop, releasing the bomb at the quarter-loop point, which threw the bomb outward due to the centrifugal force and momentum. The bomb continued upward, away from the plane, until it reached its apex, then continued to arch over into vertical descent, sort of like tossing a softball underhanded in a high arch. Meanwhile, while the bomb arched toward its apex, the plane was arching back in the opposite direction to its apex, in inverted flight, at the 'half-loop' position. This gave the plane some time to distance itself from the descending bomb, as it proceeded to its final destination. The plane was then rolled over carefully to place it into regular flight in the opposite direction to that from which it had arrived. The bomb meanwhile continued on downward, and by the time it reached its detonation altitude of about 10,000 feet (the bombs were air-bursts), the plane was far enough from the blast to withstand it, and to protect the crew from its radiation.

The subject of Roswell—and the hoax—arose in our conversations, because that was where Marcel said he was stationed after the war, so that brought up the subject. After I told Marcel what my sister's mother-in-law had told me about her sister—the Army Air Corps nurse at Roswell, who later became a nun—who was present during the so-called "autopsy" (actually a dissection, performed on a rhesus monkey), he confided in me that he agreed that the whole thing was a hoax, designed to cover up the German UFOs which the both of us knew were being flown by the government and military in the region after the war. I had told Marcel about my post-war high-altitude sightings of squadrons, and the close-up 1953 sighting over our back yard.

Being an aircraft nut myself, and formerly in Air Force Intelligence like Marcel, we had some interesting conversations. Marcel was a very nice guy, originally of Cajun descent from Louisiana, just as my uncle was. He had the same tight wavy hair that my uncle's Louisiana relatives had, which can be seen on the ancient sculptures of Akkadians of Mesopotamia, c. 2300 BCE. This is because the Cajuns descended from the ancient Akkadians. After I left the Mary Carter Paint Company, in the summer of 1960,1 was the artist-in-residence of the Midland Art Association, and lived in the old Air Force buildings at the Midland Air Park, where I also did some painting and drawing, and taught classes for the Art Association. The floors were still decorated with the original blue and yellow tile, which showed the insignia of the Air Force bomb group, and most of the inner structure of the old air base was still intact. It was eerie to imagine what had transpired there in the closing days of WW II, only 15 years before.

Jesse Marcel was not a deceptive person, who would have been skillful at creating or carrying out a hoax. Originally trained as a bomber pilot in the atomic bomb program, his later training as an intelligence officer was oriented toward maintaining the usual nuclear bomb and Air Force delivery systems secrets at Roswell. He seemed to have no awareness of, capacity for or training in the intricacies of false propaganda or spooky activities. After all, he was a pilot.

It was not until the summer of 1993 that I published my first UFO book, Space Aliens From the Pentagon, 244 pages, 8" x 11". There was practically no activity in the UFO field at that time, but my book—100 hand-bound copies—hadbarely seen the light of day, when the OSI began an accelerated and massive counterintelligence campaign. The volume of new material buried my little book.

The shelves at the bookstores, which had previously displayed only a handful of UFO/alien books, were soon filled to capacity, crowding my books off the shelves and making them as invisible as a needle in a haystack. It was difficult enough to distribute them, because the CIA keeps such a tight handle on what the large distributors catalogue in that field. It exerts considerable leverage on large publishers and book dealers, since the government buys so many books for the thousands of libraries and bookstores at military bases and other domestic and overseas installations of the U.S. government.

In 1996 I published a revised and expanded, 252-page second edition, with small-type, and in 1999 published a final, small-type, 306-page third edition, re-named Pentagon Aliens, in 8" x 10" format. In 1997 I had published Occult Ether Physics: Tesla's Hidden Space Propulsion System and the Conspiracy to Conceal It, followed in 1998 with a second revised edition. Each of these books is densely packed with material, since, as a self-publisher, I had to compress my material to get more 'bang for the buck'.

Since 1993, almost every single UFO/alien publication I have read has contained propaganda and arguments directed specifically against issues I raised for the first time in my books, without mentioning who had raised the issues they sought to counteract. Since I was the one raising those issues, it was clear to me that they were responses to my books. No more than a couple of these writers even mentioned my name or the names of my books.

I have also heard direct quotes on prime-time TV from others who apparently read my books, such as Robin Williams, who repeated my joke concerning a "...flea farting in a tornado", from Space Aliens From the Pentagon, verbatim, on the David Letterman Show, around 1999. I was flattered that he did so.

Many of my ideas have been perverted and used in several movies and TV shows, such as The X-Files, One of the first influences I noticed was in the movie Terminal Velocity, starring Charlie Sheen, There was a "Sam's Surplus City" in the movie, where the owner had a rocket sled. This was a combination of my cartoon, "Sam's Saucer City", "King's Surplus City" in Albuquerque (where I purchased my Peiltochterkompass), and the rocket sled I mentioned at Holloman, to which the rhesus monkeys in G-suits were strapped. The "terminal velocity" was the 120 mph velocity which 1 alluded to as the velocity of "weightlessness".

Since 1993, never have so many government propagandists argued so much or so vigorously to counteract the words of a writer who almost none of them ever mentioned, but were apparently aware of and were responding to. This follows the policy which I have identified, that the government propagandists are never to mention another writer on the subject, unless he is a CIA asset, because they want results to be predictable and controlled by them, and don't want to draw attention to "non-assets".

The alien putsch was multiplied and magnified several times over in the past eight years, but with very little new added to what had already been said, except for the arguments designed to specifically counteract my books, arguments and evidence. My books have been the source of not only much plagiarized material for the counterintelligence Ph.D. parasites—who, as I said in my first edition, lacked originality or creativity—but also a source of dozens of new themes which I introduced, which have been appropriated and reworked as false propaganda in the alien putsch, in films, books and articles, without attribution, by generally uncreative writers. This devious form of plagiarism is a lowly sponging of ideas.

The reason so many of these government propagandists have gotten their ideas from my books is because they were required to read them, because they lack creativity, and because many of my ideas are appropriate for complete books, so many can be or have been written on my ideas.

I could have written many more books myself on each of my themes, but could only afford to publish one book at a time. As I slowly began to chisel away at the monolithic publicity and book distribution field so well-guarded by the CIA, to get my books distributed, I usually had to go through underground channels.

Meanwhile, the CIA's unlimited resources allowed it to finance many writers and the publishing of many books, often derived from my themes, to counteract what I was saying, as if to teach me an "object lesson".

In one case—the movie Roswell—a character in the movie appears to impersonate me, making my "monkey aliens" argument to Martin Sheen and others. The name given to the character was similar to mine, and the whole portrayal was as uncomplimentary as possible, as if a childish retort to me without mention. This was the result of my psychological warfare working on their minds.

In 1995 I wrote an article, No Aliens, Just Assholes, for Paranoia magazine. Soon after, in the movie Independence Day, as the character played by William Smith flies a nuclear-armed jet fighter into a hole in the center of the giant alien ship over

Washington, D.C., to give it the death blow, he screams, "Take this, you alien assholes!" Again, the idea is taken and completely perverted.

One of the few writers to mention me, Phil Patton, hardly got anything right about me personally, either because he is a sloppy researcher, or by intent. He said he got a copy of my second edition in North Carolina. In his book Dreamland, apparently influenced throughout by my book—particularly in his "movie reviews" and in imitation of my comparisons between Pentagon and professional Hollywood special effects—he got very little right about my book. But by copying my technique of comparing Pentagon and Hollywood special effects, Patton inadvertently supported my 1993 thesis that the government USES such special effects in its alien hoaxes. In his chapter 21, "Space Aliens from (sic) the Pentagon and Other Conspiracies", he made the following misrepresentations:

1. That I said the saucers were "faked by the Pentagon" (I said the aliens were faked by the Pentagon, but that the saucers are real, man-made electric flying machines);

2. That I said the Pentagon's purpose in creating the saucers was to "frighten the public into the arms of the NWO" (I said the Pentagon's purpose in mystifying the saucers as "alien ships" was to conceal the technology from the public, and to wallow a hole in the public's credulity with paranormalism, so that it would accept whatever Big Lies the government wants us to believe);

3. That I was alone when I saw Hitler in San Antonio in 1967 (I had a credible fellow witness, who recognized him simultaneously);

4. That I "..argued with R. Sargent Shriver over my dismissal from the Peace Corps" (a lie; I had a friendly talk with Shriver, which was BEFORE I was dismissed from Peace Corps training);

5. That I received an MFA from Sam Houston State U. (my MFA was from U.T., Austin, just as it states on my book jacket);

6. That I said the National Security Act of 1947 was treasonous because it "...divided the services". (Another lie: I said it was treasonous because it was never passed into law, was a presidential edict, and that it violated American sovereignty and liberty by denying our right to fully-informed consent or refusal.);

7. That I had "seen photos of dead monkeys", but "they were stolen by a former girlfriend" (another lie: I possessed a photo of dead rhesus monkeys in G-suits, and a photo of a fake 'saucer' used in the Roswell Hoax, until the photos were stolen by a woman I didn't even know until later.

Patton's other statements about me and my book, taken out of context in most cases, though somewhat accurate, demonstrated an obvious intent to ridicule me, the man he got ideas from and plagiarized, a tendency I have noticed among several others of his ilk. As often said, however, "Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery."

Patton's overall approach to his book also appeared to be strongly influenced by my 1997 Internet piece, A Truth Seeker Goes to Roswell, which is repeated in this work for you.

At least Patton mentioned me. My influence was also apparent in other ways. On page 41 he said (speaking of the "Federation of American Scientists' Mystery Aircraft Report"), "The study pointed out the 'epistemological' problems.,.", "too many sightings, too much information, too many possible planes—and yet not enough evidence." This was based on my chapter, "Einstein Was a New-Ager", in which I explained how a person's epistemology—theory of knowledge, either Platonist or Aristotelian—influenced the way he either related, or failed to relate, to reality. Patton apparently didn't know what epistemology meant, since what he was referring to was not epistemology, but rather a "cognitive problem", the inability to think.

The most damning thing about Patton and his book was his failure to mention my influence on his writing, and his attempt to trivialize and misrepresent my book and what I actually said and its impact, while at the same time imitating me.

The number of sightings, amount of information and number of aircraft relates not to an "epistemological problem", since the theory of knowledge for a scientist should be assumed to be Aristotelian, based on the primacy of the senses as valid tools of cognition. A person with an "epistemological problem" shouldn't be a scientist.

Aristotelian epistemology tells one who observes a flying saucer/UFO, that it is a real flying machine. Epistemology in this case relates to what is real, and whether or not the aircraft observed actually exists or not. About that, there should be no doubt in a scientist's mind, because so many of the people who have seen them are rational, experienced, professional, expert aircraft observers, yet the government set up Operation Blue Book at Wright-Patterson to intercept these sighting reports and classifiy them, to prevent public disclosure.

If I saw a jet fighter and heard its engines from a distance, but its exact configuration was hazy, there is room for a difference of opinion as to whether it was an F-14 or an F-16, but not that it didn't exist at all, or wasn't an aircraft. That's the main reason that educated, supposedly rational people who don't believe UFOs exist at all are the fools, not the people who report them.

When so many expert aircraft observers—both civilian and military—have observed and reported UFOs, and just as many microbiological experts have reported germs seen through a microscope, you are a fool to believe they don't exist, even though you may never have seen a UFO or a germ. On the other hand, you are a fool to believe that a UFO is an "alien" UFO, because there is no evidence, and an enormous improbability that it is alien.

Since UFOs are apparently flying machines, and since there is absolutely no evidence in the world of even a single machine being made by any being other than man (not including some insect constructions and rocks used by chimps and other animals, etc), it is completely rational to believe that ALL UFOs are man-made.

With the current dictatorship over what scientists are allowed to say, the national security tampering with the area of UFOs has created a vacuum of public scientific knowledge concerning areas of science which "don't make sense", yet which should be fully understood by the general student of science, especially when considering the advances of the past 100 years, which are being hidden from us today through government secrecy. Consequently, on the issue of gravity, the public is still stuck in the 17th century with Newton, and Newton's "corpuscular" theory of light is used as part of the cover-up of ether physics.

This scientific vacuum is primarily what I address in Occult Ether Physics, as the scientific discoveries concerning the nature of gravity and electrodynamic propulsion made in the late 19th century by Nikola Tesla, as the crowning achievement of a whole series of experiments and studies toward that same end, conducted by the world's greatest scientists. This period of physics, oddly enough, had been utterly "ignored", until the time I documented Tesla's electrodynamic discoveries in 1997-98, from books which were available but hard to get.

1 am still amazed that all the other writers and so-called "researchers" on the UFO question, since 1947, when the German ships first became evident, had absolutely failed to discover or write about the series of international scientific experiments and researches leading up to Tesla's successful testing and proving of his concept in 1894, until 1 published Occult Ether Physics.

Tesla's 1894 tests were witnessed by Marguerite Merrington, a famous New York dancer, among other friends of Tesla's. Merrington was interviewed by the FBI in 1943[1] concerning her witnessing of this discovery, soon after Tesla's death in 1943, during a national security investigation of Tesla's "known associates", in order to determine "who knew what" about the obviously astounding Tesla secrets. The fact that the FBI apparently knew about the subject matter of Merrington's observation and its enormous importance to space propulsion, yet agreed with the government's "scientific experts", that 'none of Tesla's discoveries were worth classifying', suggests that there was a conspiracy between the FBI and the Nazi state.

[1] FBI Papers on Nikola Tesla, produced under the FOIA.

Other than to state that Merrington had witnessed "...metallic plate suspensions..." by Tesla (using high voltage, high frequency currents), the details of the FBI's complete interview of Merrington have not been disclosed, which brings us to the question, "Why not? What more could Merrington have confirmed with her 1894 observation, that the FBI and US government don't want us to know, 106 years later?" But we know from books and publishings by or about Tesla from that time period, that each of those plates were solid zinc, 1/8" x 12" square, which if formed into a solid bar of metal, 1" square, would be 18" long, weighing several pounds.

Having finally proved the principle for his "electric flying machine" with those plates, it was merely a matter of expanding the size of the plates large enough, and curving them to enclose a ship, having its own internal electrical generator (turned as Tesla said by one of his bladeless turbines), complete with pilot and controls.

To compound the scientific ignorance of the establishment physicists, the area of free energy, which includes Tesla's electric flying machine, had not been documented or explained until my books.

In light of these ancient facts, it is ludicrous to consider the argument that "the human race is incapable of building flying saucers which perform like that". Considering all the "alien hype" which the world has been subjected to since 1947, without a stitch of hard evidence of alien visitations to earth, The Roswell Hoax stands out as a monument to corporate-state deceit and public gullibility.

CHAPTER VI - THE ROSWELL HOAX:
A Truth Seeker Goes to Roswell

In late June, 1997, I was pleased to receive an invitation from Bonnie Lange of Truth Seeker to be their guest at the 50th anniversary festival of the "Roswell Incident"....which I call "The Roswell Hoax". It was an intriguing proposition...me with my "intolerable view"...provided with an opportunity to stand toe-to-toe (yet on unequal footing) with the UFOlogy-alien theory "biggies"...whom I call OSI/CIA BIG LIARS...right in the womb of their initial hoax. What could I do, what could I say? I accepted, of course. What better opportunity to document the thought-control dictatorship?

My host had given me a hotel room at the Roswell Inn, with the provision that my room was also to serve as a video interview room by the Truth Seeker videographer, Ron Garner. I was anxious to meet Garner and the other people of the Truth Seeker contingent, especially Bonnie Lange, and was disappointed that she decided not to come. I was glad to be involved, since Truth Seeker literature stated a set of premises which were consistent with my own thinking.

I knew that, since no intellectual match is ever perfect, there might be someone in the contingent who might not exactly see eye-to-eye with me or the Truth Seeker philosophy, but didn't expect total contradiction. There are always parasitical opportunists who will attach themselves to a group to hitch a free ride for their undisclosed agenda at a host's expense. That has certainly never been my approach, as I do not enjoy being with people who don't desire my company, but I knew of one group which does that as a matter of twisted principle, if you can call it that.

I had my reservations about the probability for success of this involvement for Truth Seeker, in terms of what they hoped to accomplish, since the whole scenario, in order to be of value to them, would have to be investigative. I had the distinct experience of four years of attempting to penetrate the OSI/CIA barriers with what my Santa Fe friend, Fred, called my "attempt to spread sanity". I could see that, as an apparently non-Secret-Government-backed group, Truth Seeker might meet strong opposition...even sabotage...by "them".

As the day approached for me to head out to Roswell, I contemplated the situation in relation to my position: While I have usually been able to step into a strange environment and spot the immediate inconsistencies, as a Disbeliever in the alien theory I am perceived by the hard core UFOlogy leaders as "the enemy". While the presence of "Alienists" among free thinkers is tolerated, Alienists do not usually extend the same degree of fairness to those with whom they disagree, much less to an archenemy like myself. From my viewpoint, a CIA-employed "skeptic" like Philip Klass is not in "my camp", because the conditions of his employment forbid him from admitting the existence of man-made electro dynamic flying saucers. I knew that, in fact, Klass is the primary protagonist of one side of a two-pronged strategy designed specifically to conceal this exclusively man-made technology. Klass never denied his CIA employment, and neither did the "fathers" of the "alien flying saucers" movement of the 1950s. Many fail to understand how this two-pronged strategy—employing the (pseudo) "Skeptics" and (pseudo) "Believers"—is used to lead the two packs of dupes and suckers, or that it was created by, and is controlled by the CIA, or to understand why I encounter equal opposition from both these government-orchestrated groups.

The dupes of Klass have attempted to misrepresent me as a member of the "Believer" class, while those of the Believer class have attempted to misrepresent me as a member of the "Klass Class". I am the only major figure who does not, and will not, work for the government, so the leaders of both groups make sure I am excluded from debates, because, if you will recall, they will only mention, cite, or address the fantasies and people they create as "controlled assets". Klass is just as much a kook for denying the existence of flying saucers as the Believers are in their insistence on the presence of aliens. The house of Klass is made of glass.

The so-called "skeptics" of CSICOP (Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal, headed by Klass) are not true skeptics, but rather a clandestinely controlled false propaganda operation of the OSL Their operations within the continental U.S. are illegal under the U.S. constitution, but if you read the so-called "national security" laws, you'll see that Congress has betrayed 'We the People' by agreeing to the passage of legislation which permits this betrayal and allowing pretty much anything the "spooks" want to do. These laws are completely VOID, because Congress has absolutely NO JURISDICTION to pass any law which contravenes constitutional prohibitions against the violation of our INVIOLABLE (human, natural) BILL OF RIGHTS, so they are ail liable for prosecution by the PEOPLE for their TREASON.

This treason is misrepresented as a "service" to us. Their alleged "job" is the protection of our "national security", under the cover of which their "covert" job is to protract the clandestine domination of us by the international coercive monopolists. Their procedure is as follows: Evaluation of conditions; collection of intelligence; analysis of information; formulation of subversive policy; and, lastly, dissemination of disinformation, in a program which, in respect to electro dynamic flying machines, is designed primarily to conceal the reality of and technology behind man-made flying saucers. The UFOlogists mainly disseminate false propaganda, and as far as I've ever seen, never disseminate the essential truth,

A true "skeptic"—in the original historical sense, as elucidated by the parallel writings of Valmiki, of ancient India, and Socrates, of ancient Greece—should question everything. CSICOP supports the official government denial of the existence of man-made electrodynamic flying saucers, and is a covert creation of the government—involving the CIA, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Science Foundation, etc. The only things they are "skeptical" of are the assertions of the Alien Believers and the other paranormalists—spawned by the government's own 1947 Roswell press releases—all "designed" by the OSI's Ph.D. committees. This at best is pseudo-skepticism, at worst, a massive criminal fraud perpetrated by the government upon the people.

True skeptics have never been the conscious catspaws of clandestine government controllers. "...In this corner we have the officially designated 'divergent thinkers'—Kevin Randall, Don Schmitt, Linda Moulton Howe, Whitley Strieber, etc.—and in this corner, we have the "skeptics"—led by the King's very own Philip Klass"...... So what's wrong with this picture? Could we identify Valmiki or his creation, Prince Rama, in his epic novel, The Ramayana, with Klass, who is employed by the CIA? Never. Klass is only the Chamberlain. The Chamberlain's similar secret machinations were exposed by Valmiki's heroes. The Chamberlain was the guy who created phony crises, so he could pose as a hero when he "solved" them, a "Wag the Dog" scenario.

In the thousands of years since, nothing seems to have changed. Today, the Chamberlain's agents masquerade as self-styled "skeptics" or "paranormalists" who believe in "aliens", ghosts, and psychic phenomena, and pervert the "truth-seekers". Having read Valmiki's Indian classic, the CIA's "Chamberlains" have learned some new tricks. These things were in my mind when I was invited to Roswell, and I naively thought that, since Truth Seeker magazine sponsored me, the intent was to expose them.

On the sweltering afternoon of July 2, 1997, I loaded up my 28-year-old Chevy pickup and headed out for Roswell. I pulled into the Roswell Inn some time after 5:00 P.M., parked, and entered the lobby to check in.

The hotel was as busy as a beehive. Amidst a small crowd near the desk, I spotted Jim, a man I mention in my book as "the M.I.B." who trained "The Two" —Marshall Herff Applewhite and Bonnie Sue Nettles—in late 1972, early 1973—in a house in Santa Fe that the threesome shared for about three months. A tall man with dark hair, whom I didn't recognize, stood by Jim, who was wearing a freaky western hat which had what appeared to be a greenish, flowery-patterned chiffon scarf draped around the crown.

My presence shocked Jim, while his attire shocked me. I am one of a very few people who could establish Jim's earliest involvement with the formation of the Heaven's Gate "suicide cult", discussed in my original 1993 first edition of Space Aliens From the Pentagon, —four years before the 1997 mass deaths, and on pages 118-19 of my 1995 second edition—which some later took as a sign of clairvoyance. I also knew that Jim had a law degree from the University of Denver, was a "retired" colonel, who had been in Air Force Intelligence, like myself, except he was in the Air Force O.S.L ("Office of Special Investigations"—not to be confused with the related spook outfit, "Office of Scientific Intelligence", or the Nuremberg Tribunal's "Office of Special Investigations"). Since Jim immediately attempted to hide his face, we didn't speak. The tall, dark-headed man left the area, and I passed Jim and approached the desk, signed in, and went to my room to unpack and settle in.

Though several of my Santa Fe friends and I had known Jim for some time, none of us was permitted into the house during the mysterious training, or were told the nature of the training Jim was giving "The Two". We initially thought it was some sort of kinky sex thing. I had briefly encountered the threesome while they were out for coffee, and had momentarily entered the house with a friend only once during the training period, when only Jim was present. Ever since the CIA-designed 1997 Heaven's Gate Mass Suicide Incident, which Jim knew I knew he was inextricably connected with, he has pretended to "disappear", as reported by the Santa Fe and Albuquerque papers.

Having known Jim for over 25 years in 1997, I was well-versed on his various beliefs, including the Gurdjieff/Synergist teachings. That group had targeted me on several occasions, especially since I had exposed their undisclosed agenda, twisted philosophy, and unethical tactics. Add to this their CIA/OSI connections and misinformation agenda.

It was not until 1975 or so that I became aware, primarily through news articles, that Jim had trained The Two as tools of the OSl/CIA's phony "alien" scenario. One of their main jobs was to show up at the sites of "cattle mutilations" (medical experiments) to create the false impression that the experiments were the result of an occult group created by Jim called "O.S.I.R.I.S." ("Outer Space International Research and Investigations Society"). That bizarre conclusion was borne out by the fact that Jim had written a couple of news articles in 1975 about how a friend of his had joined the cult, while he was careful to conceal the fact that he had intensively trained the leaders of the cult for three months in Santa Fe in 1972, on contract for the CIA, followed by their immediate commencement of the cult activity he had designed and trained them to lead.

When the nature of the false propaganda activities of the "cult" became obvious to me from articles in the papers, the kind of counterintelligence "training" given to them by Jim in 1972 became clear, and was 100% consistent with what I already knew about him, as well as the government's secret programs which was confirmed by these facts.

When I first met Jim, I was living in my geodesic dome to the south of Santa Fe, while struggling to make a living and completing construction of my geodesic dome house, which until 1974 had no running water, electricity, or phone. There were not many alternative social pathways in Santa Fe at the time, so Jim's and my paths crossed constantly. Many of the women I dated were dated by Jim, which, as was later confirmed, was his way of using some of them as unwitting spies to gather information on me. Since my 1975 rejection of George Bush's offer to become a high-paid intellectual whore for the CIA, Jim had apparently been entrusted to continue the recruitment of me through other means.

In 1977, on learning that I had been studying petroglyphs with the intention of writing a book, Jim came to my house, and to my utter astonishment, actually attempted to hire me to write books on behalf of the government saying the petroglyphs were the writings of ancient extraterrestrials. He said the publishing arrangements were already set up in Sedona, and that I would enjoy instant success through promotions and distribution, if I accepted. Even though I greatly needed the money, I not only rejected the (OSI) offer, but asserted my intent and determination to publish my flying saucer book—a project which Jim was already aware of.

Jim then threatened to cause harm to me if I published my saucer book. I was a little shocked that Jim had the bad manners to come to my home as a supposed "friend", with a proposal to hired me to write fraudulent books for the CIA. But following that up with a violation of my hospitality, threatening me with harm if I exercised my freedom of the press and speech by publishing my book, was too much. Though dismayed by threats from such a puny guy, little did I realize that I would subsequently be subjected to the covert power he and his associates wielded.

Ever since that time, and the numerous events which followed, our "friendship"—which apparently never existed—"deteriorated" (i.e., became obvious for what it was). That was the background between Jim and I, which extended back to 1972, preceding the 1997 Roswell gathering. Over the previous twenty-five years, I had seen Jim often, but following the 1977 failed attempt by him to recruit me as a false propaganda writer, any discussion or attempt at politeness was overshadowed by the secret knowledge that we both had. It was apparent that Jim was made very uncomfortable by my presence at the Roswell gathering, especially since it was so soon after the Heaven's Gate debacle.

After checking into my room, I called Ron Garner, and we both headed for the lobby to meet. On seeing Garner, I recognized him as the man I'd just seen with Jim, which probably explained Jim's extreme discomfort. I said nothing to Garner about it, and took him to my room so he could examine it as a potential video interview room. When we returned to the lobby, I told Ron that the man I identified as a M.I.B. in my book was present in the lobby. He asked me to point him out so he could get some video footage of him, but when I pointed out Jim, Ron became disturbed. He soon took his leave, and avoided me for the rest of the conference, never contacting me again, or seeking to use my room for interviews.

Toward the end of the conference, I spoke briefly with Garner, and asked him if he got the video footage of the "M.I.B.". He pretended that he didn't know who Jim was. That was implausible, since I had seen Ron conversing closely with Jim only a few minutes before, and because you couldn't miss Jim when I pointed him out, with such a weird hat. The hat was apparently a covert means of instant identification of Jim, by his intelligence operative peers, other dupes and phonies, from within the crowd.

On meeting some others of the Truth Seeker contingent a day or so later, I was surprised to learn that Ron had engaged them in behind-the-scenes discussions about me the morning after my arrival, regarding my views on Gurdjieff, his teachings, and the Synergy cult. Since I hadn't discussed any of this with anyone at the conference except Jim, years before, I assumed that Ron's objections were based on Jim's objections, since the two were obviously connected.

The owner of Truth Seekers, Bonny Lange, must have been aware of my attitude toward the Gurdjieff/Synergy cult, since I had made it clear in my book, which I assumed she had read, so I found it hard to believe that this was an integral part of the Truth Seeker philosophy.

Jim's behavior didn't surprised me, since he had interfered in my life on many occasions in the past, but I was taken aback by the prior connection between Jim and another Truth Seeker representative, Garner. In fact, Jim had also been connected through the Gurdjieff relationships, with the naturopath I mention in Pentagon Aliens, who had attempted to murder me with arsenic, and almost succeeded. The naturopath was an avid Gurdjieff/Synergy cultist. The Synergy cult is featured very strongly in my unpublished manuscript entitled The Mystical Roots of Totalitarianism. Unfortunately, there are apparently quite a few people who are followers of Gurdjieff's teachings, apparently without full cognizance of the social consequences which have flowed from them as a matter of logic.

At the time of the Roswell gathering, I was aware that Jim had become especially paranoid about me because I had already publicly identified him in my 1993 and 1995 editions of Space Aliens as a CIA/OSI connection, four years prior to the Heaven's Gate cult's alleged "mass suicide" in 1997. This must have been particularly disturbing to Jim, given the cult's sensationalized mass deaths, which appeared to be a way for the CIA to "close out" the cult, perhaps because it had become a "liability" after my exposure of them and the OSI's 'handling' of them through Jim, and since they were becoming a geriatric group, which had failed to produce any significant counterintelligence thought-control propaganda for quite a while. Like loose cannons, these old OSI dupes were rolling around on the "national security decks", and had to be belayed for good, as their "ship" was sent to Davy Jone's Locker, instead of to a comet.

Jim was apparently in fear that I would go public, and because of his continued tampering, I did go public, in Space Aliens. In my unpublished Synergy manuscript, I go into more detail as to how the cultists believe that they are especially entitled to appropriate and use the resources of others in pursuit of a "higher purpose", defined only by them, pursuant to the "collective consciousness" teachings of Gurdjieff (which is in line with the recurring "appropriation" of my ideas).

Though Gurdjieff was apparently irresponsible when it came to contemplating the natural consequences which would follow from his teachings, he was appalled when those results included the mass murders by the S.S. "Death's Head" Schwarze Korps (the Black Order, which was the S.S. planning branch), in the concentration camps of Europe, and the murder of millions in Russia under Stalin, a former Gurdjieff student. I became a target of the cult when I blew the cover on its infiltration of an arts group I headed in 1977-78, called Free Art Forum.

The Synergy cult is especially attracted to the destruction of individualistic groups, which they see as their primary enemies and competitors, so they infiltrate them, neutralize them through the introduction of immiscible contradictions, and take over and use their resources in pursuit of their synergistic totalitarian goals. The cult typically uses a "divide-and-conquer" strategy, based on the conspiratorial equivalent to the Spartan "flying wedge".

I had attempted to block their infiltration and appropriation of my group, but the Gurdjieff cult succeeded despite my resistance, just as the grant which funded it was about to expire. After the take-over, the group degenerated and was destroyed from within by its own "synergistic", vicious in-fighting.

The State of New Mexico then offered me a grant for twice the amount of the original one—$250,000—but I turned it down because the state and federal government had refused to give me the protection I requested from the Gurdjieff group, as I eventually burned out from the social turmoil it created. Besides, I had initially been conned into becoming a partner in the grant under the false promise that I wouldn't be dealing with the government, since I am philosophically opposed to the government's involvement in the arts, per se, or in any other private cultural activity.

True to form, Jim's book offer to me, just after he learned of my involvement in the grant, appeared to be also intended to draw me out of Free Art Forum, so the Synergy group—some of whom had already been hired by my duped partner—could take it over immediately. I battled along, continuing to control the group until the grant period expired, with tremendous wear and tear on my nerves, with the Synergists misplacing blame on me for their failure to make what was left of the group work for their "purposes".

Soon after the end of Free Art Forum, Jim had learned through contact with my then current girlfriend that I had discovered his covert contact with my father in Arizona, after which my father had come to New Mexico in an attempt to convince me to abandon my UFO publishing plans, which astounded me at the time, until I discovered Jim's involvement. Thinking my father had disobeyed him, by telling me of his threats, Jim arranged through the CIA/OSI for my parents to lose their business. The fact was, I had discovered Jim's contact with my father through an independent witness whom my parents didn't even know.

I also subsequently learned from one of my parents' fellow clothing dealers, who was angered and dismayed by the unjust loss of their hard-earned business, that one of their clients in Tucson—Joseph ("Papa Joe") Bonnano, the Mafia chieftain, who coincidentally owned a Tucson dress shop—retaliated against the clothing manufacturers who had been induced by the CIA to terminate my parents' business, because he liked my parents, and "smelled a rat". The buyers dropped the clothing lines in protest, and the manufacturers lost millions of dollars, for following the CIA's orders. Justice can come in strange forms sometime, and that was "poetic justice ", but the CIA hasn't gotten what is coming to it yet.

As the conference progressed, I observed disappointment growing among the Truth Seeker contingent. The major portion of the crowd which showed up was not of the big-spender variety. As I saw it, the stated goals of Truth Seeker were in conflict with some of the material in their catalogue, especially where it played into the CIA-orchestrated "alien" scenario. For example, I immediately recognized the material of Zechariah Sitchin as a continuation of some of GurdjiefPs and Georg Lanz von LiebenfePs stories, the same as those he had, as the Cisternian monk Joseph Lanz, earlier taught to a youthful Adolph Hitler at Lambach Abbey in 1907. They were the same "teachings" spread by the Thulegesellschaft, now promoted by the CIA and reflected in the script of the movie Stargate, and continued by the TV series, Stargate SG-1. It also persues the OSI strategic objectives of the offer made to me by Jim in 1977.

Several questions arose in my mind: If Garner's objection to my involvement with Truth Seeker was based on his adherence to GurdjiefPs teachings, was Truth Seeker being targeted for takeover by the Synergy cult? Was I being "separated out" by the "flying wedge" of Garner, because I was threatening to undo the cult's efforts? That would certainly upset Jim, as I had observed. Did Jim know I was being hosted by Truth Seekers before my arrival, or did he learn about it from Ron? Since my appearance seemed to come as a complete and devastating surprise to Jim, was it because he knew that I, of all people, might figure out the latest scam-in-progress?

Ron's objections based on the Gurdjieff stuff indicated either that Jim had manipulated Ron through those beliefs, or that they were of common interest to both Jim and Ron, and that Jim feared I would blow their cover. After all, hadn't Sitchin written the same kind of books that the CIA had attempted to recruit me to write in 1977, and weren't they often published in Santa Fe or Sedona? Did they really think they could convert the Truth Seeker idea to a Gurdjieff one? If so, they would have to change the name to "Big Lie Seeker". Such a conversion would make the Truth Seeker goals only a fake shell eaten out by the Synergy roaches, to be used as a facade to entrap more prey. The Truth Seeker movement was barely getting off the ground at the time, so a takeover by the Synergists would nip it in the bud. It became my intent to avert this, and to warn them, but it was apparently to no avail. The moth flies around and near the candle flame, and is eventually consumed by it. There was apparently no way to warn the moth against its basic attraction to the flame.

By my second day at the gathering, I was already effectively ostracized by the major portion of the group, except for the two writers, David Sielaff and Paul Tice, whom I had met at the UFO Enigma Museum. John Price, "head" of the museum—a local guy who was strangely jealous and afraid of losing his grip on what little notoriety he had—wouldn't sell my books, so I joined the two writers at a table in the back room. They seemed congenial and I detected no conflict with them. I made the best of the moment.

Ahh...there I was at the dusty little museum, standing not more than three feet from Linda Moulton Howe, a UFOlogy "biggie", as she discussed "aliens" with a Mr. Heik, with the same kind of familiarity as one might expect a believer in the Tooth Fairy to describe the kind of shoes he wears. Though in plain sight, the total invisibility with which Howe regarded me indicated that she not only knew who I was, but also that I knew what she was, and that her pretense was transparent to me. Unless she knew she was lying about aliens, she would never have graduated from Stanford.

At the Truth Seeker booth at the Roswell Convention Center, the available chairs were occupied by the secretary, the shipping clerk, and astrologer Louis Turi, who used the only other chair and a table for his clients, so I milled about and made contact with some interesting people.

Ron Garner had avoided me like the plague since the first evening. After learning of his character assassination of me behind my back the next morning, the negative behavior of several others associated with the group seemed explainable, but they were only the 'spear bearer' contingent. After being snubbed by three of the group—Garner, the secretary, and the shipping clerk—and several minor associates, it seemed that my ostracism had become final by my second day there, over something I hadn't discussed with them, and which should have been anathema to Truth Seeker. Did they not know?

Had it been up to me, the secretary and shipping clerk would have remained in San Diego to hold down business. Louis Turi could have had a separate booth, since there seemed to be only a tenuous connection between "truth" and "astrology", but conceding the fact that knowledge of astrology might come in handy for understanding national leaders—and nuts like Hitler, who guided the Third Reich to Valhalla with it. Turi was more polite, and showed no signs of being in the petty conspiracy; as astrologers go, he is the best I have met.

It didn't seem appropriate that the behavior of a secretary and shipping clerk, provoked by an "outside" videographer, was controlling the fate of the operation. True to the philosophy, Synergism, like the Hitler it spawned, teaches its followers to strike at weakness, like true sociopaths. Meanwhile, I wondered if the only strong members of the group remaining—Sielaff and Tice—would eventually succumb to the Synergy garbage.

The Synergists are opposed to individuality, and will use "latitudinal" arguments and strategy to motivate their prey. That is where the CIA got the tactic. In fact, Gurdjieff had privately tutored Mao Zedong, Stalin, Alfred Rosenberg, Karl Haushoffer, Dietrich Eckhardt and many others of the totalitarian mind, and there were many Gurdjieff adepts in Reinhard Gehlen's SS Gestapo group, the RSHA VI, which became the core of the OSI in America. These teachings had been the basis of the Communist movements of Mao and Stalin, as well as that of the Nazis. The Nazi troop management manual, authored by Ernst Rohm—also a student of Gurdjieff—had found its way into U.S. armed forces policy, when the official Nazi manual was adopted by the U.S. Congress in the 1950's, as the official U.S. troop management manual. The general policy is recognized today as the "principle of group identity", which is a direct translation of the "collective consciousness" doctrine of Gurdjieff, as espoused by Captain Ernst Rohm, "Father of the Brownshirts", the bully-boys responsible for Krystallnacht in the Nazi rise to power.

Since scapegoating is a typical tactic of the Synergists, I could expect an attempt back in San Diego to create and heighten a sense of failure of the venture, and to misplace blame for the lack of success somehow on me. This would mean that a heavy trip would be laid on me to Bonnie Lange. Whether this was another divide-and-conquer/takeover maneuver, only time would tell.

A short time after the Roswell debacle, I tried to warn Bonnie Lange about the Synergists, and she assured me everything was "under control". Soon afterward, she offered me an opportunity to write a series of articles about "Tesla's Technology in Today's World," which I have included in this book, in updated form.

I finished and submitted the first installation of my series of articles, and Bonnie accepted and praised it, with a lot of editorial cutting by her staff. She said it would be published in the magazine, and would also be published on their Internet web site. I waited patiently for news that the article had been published. In January 1998 I got on the Internet for the first time, and opened a web site of my own — "Pentagon Space Aliens" http://members.tripod.com/~lvne4lvne/ . In browsing the Truth Seeker site, I not only failed to find my article, or the cataloguing of my book, but also noticed that the Synergy people had become a prominent "partner" in their organization. That, to me, suggested that the Synergists had either taken over Truth Seeker, or had conned Bonnie into a partnership. This of course appeared to explain the reversal of policy, and the exclusion of my book and article without notice to me.

I hoped that my attempts to warn Bonnie and Truth Seeker would eventually start to make sense, in time to save the operation and to separate it from the Synergists. It was sad to see an old American institution which had formerly been associated with such powerful individualists as Mark Twain and Robert G. Ingersoll, being taken over by the enemy. With a lofty stated purpose which was, among other things, intended "...to elevate and emancipate the human race", and was opposed to "...everything that degrades or burdens mankind mentally or physically", it was tragic that the organization seemed to be selling out its birthright to synergistic totalitarianism, which is diametrically opposed to everything it stood for.

When they entered that door, they risked becoming the ultimate hypocrisy, selling the CIA'backed lies about "aliens", while pretending to be "seekers of truth". I knew that there was no way they could close that door behind them for good, without losing their identity as "seekers of truth", since that is in conflict with being suckers for covert government propaganda.

Among the Internet "free-thought" links of the Truth Seekers, I was saddened and appalled by the creepy Synergy group's featuring of sleazy "Japanimation" porn cartoons, clearly appealing to sick pedophiles, with illustrations of things like child sex, snuff, torture, bondage and sadism. These were only cartoons, but the mental attitude appealed to was unmistakable. This link misrepresented and effectively smeared the idea of free-thought, falsely equating it with pedophilia, sadism, child sexual abuse, torture and murder.

This clearly wasn't opposed to "everything that degrades or burdens mankind mentally or physically", but more its opposite. Since when have the secret cravings of sex criminals been elevated to the level of "...brave new thoughts"? Why didn't they feature some saucy sex scenes from the torture chambers of Treblinka or Dachau while they were at it? Oh yes...some starkly graphic recreations of the spicy escapades of that well-known "free thinker", Jeffrey Dahmer shouldn't be left out either! (Not to exclude that Debonair Devil of Dead-Dame Debauchery, Ed Gein, whose "arts and crafts" with human body parts were simply "emancipating"!) As a Libertarian, I don't advocate censorship of any speech or thought whatsoever, but consider these bizarre public associations between Truth Seekers and the sexual exploitation of children by the Synergists, to be an attempt to give the "kiss of death" to the Truth Seeker ideology, suggesting approval of something which is not endemic to "free thought", as a kind of fraud.

It's a good thing such groups don't hold an exclusive franchise on that thing called "free thought", since, in the event of their demise, there might be no one to pick up the torch of truth and carry it forward from where they fell. I must be a little old-fashioned for continuing to believe that someone should say what they mean, and mean what they say. When someone starts out as a Truth Seeker, and ends up repeating the same OLD TIRED BIG LIES as the rest of the gang, they have lost their way, and are little more than a hypocrite. What this Truth Seeker found was a disappointment of lies and hypocrisy.

In retrospect, I thank Truth Seeker and Bonnie Lange for sponsoring my truth, which had apparently been officially banned by those who ruled the Roswell Hoax 50th Anniversary gathering. I was truly an "alien" at that gathering, but the trip was priceless to me. Only the "biggie" alien liars of UFOlogy were invited to speak at the Roswell conference. Naturally, I was not considered, even in a debate, because the CIA must control both sides of it. The speakers' usual exorbitant fees were in direct proportion to the magnitude of the Big Lies in Big Brother's false propaganda. In retrospect, I should have taken up a position on the sidewalk, with a stack of my books and a sign which read:

"FREE SPEECH HERE: WHY PAY TO HEAR A ONESIDED STORY? YOU CAN GET THE OTHER SIDE HERE FOR FREE. MEANWHILE, MY BOOK IS FOR SALE, BUT I AM NOT."

CHAPTER VII - FUZZY UFOLOGY:
Keeping the Dupes Stupid

This chapter is to teach you how to analyze UFOlogy, something covered more completely in Pentagon Aliens. Here, I give a brief overview of covert intelligence agency operations in the UFO field, point out the presence of agents posing as "UFOlogists" or "Skeptics", along with the "official government spokesmen", and show how they intermesh to maintain control of the field. I also highlight the incredible, statistically-challenging complicity of many dupes, who seem to be unaware of CIA control. I also describe the CIA's "M.O.", for use as a measuring instrument to detect CIA influence, control or complicity. I also describe some of my experiences with the military, the government, political parties, the CIA and military intelligence agencies, as background information which influences my judgments. Therefore, in this chapter let us step back and take an objective look at the UFOlogy field through my eyes, as I address the following, in part:

- ► That American "fuzzy" UFOlogy and the "alien" scenario were created by the government and CIA, as heir to the Nazi mass-psychology program, to conceal exclusively man-made UFOs, and enlarge the credulity of the public, to facilitate its acceptance of other Big Lies.

- ► That early (post WW II) UFO reports, books and movies, written by CIA'directed spooks, gave the public whatever misinformation the CIA wanted it to have. (Example: Kenneth Arnold's sightings have been debunked...as a false report describing saucers as boomerang-shaped... Arnold worked for the spooks.)

- ► That the 1947 "Roswell Incident" was created by the government, which initiated the first "credible" "alien-visitors" premise in its initial press releases by intelligence officer Walther Haut (a "P.I.O.", or Public Information Officer, an intelligence position). The news release was then redacted, making it look like a cover-up. CIA-directed UFOlogy picked up from there on out.

- ► That, in 1955, the major nations...including Russia...had a meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, and agreed to keep UFO reports secret from the public. They all had UFO technology, so they weren't hiding it from each other.
- ► That subsequent public "UFO reports" were filtered through the government's Project Bluebook, etc. Bluebook was a CIA/OSI project designed to 'intercept' the public's reports, to prevent the disclosure to the public of what was actually seen. "Real" reports were kept secret, and only CIA-fabricated, misinformational reports were "released".
- ► That UFO technology is primarily an energy and transportation secret, having the potential to end control by the world's corporate and totalitarian states and the coercive-monopolist corporate power structure. Concealment of the technology relates to maintaining the grip of coercive-monopolist status quo, not to "national security".

The CIA's Omnipresence in UFOlogy

In the world of UFO literature, the CIA has been pervasive. Even though some of this is partly paranoid imaginings, when all the pure paranoia is swept aside, the CIA's presence is still conspicuous in regard to UFOs. This presence is incongruous, given the government's official denials of the existence of UFOs: That is, unless one accepts the thesis which I put forth in my books, which is perfectly logical. It is also perfectly consistent that the CIA created "fuzzy UFOlogy" (the CIA would in fact have been remiss in its duties if it hadn't done so), through the covert branches of the Office of Scientific Intelligence (OSI).

As an intelligence operation, invested with the duty to carry out its duties for the coercive-monopolies and the government, there were two paramount "strategic objectives" which the OSI was required to pursue, which were (1) to conceal the science of UFO electro dynamic space propulsion technology, by whatever means necessary, and (2) to enlarge the public's credulity so it would believe the "space alien" lies, and whatever other lies of a more political nature that the government wished it to.

In keeping with these two strategic objectives, I have outlined what I consider to be the OSI modus operandi in pursuit of them, covered probably more extensively in Pentagon Aliens. By measuring a certain UFOlogist's or Paranormalist's M.O. against that of the OSI, one can ascertain the relative probability that he or she (don't forget "Linda Molting Cow") either takes their marching orders directly from the CIA, or is so cozy with the CIA that it really doesn't matter whether or not they are on its payroll. Since they virtually do its work for it as if they were, they either wittingly help the CIA, or else are incredibly stupid dupes. Either way, all UFOlogists are 'incriminated', either by their actual witting employment by the CIA, or by their negligence in failing to realize their own complicity when under a duty to find out, as a "responsible investigator."

An admitted association with the CIA once enhanced a UFOlogist's credibility. This previously decorative veneer has eroded away over the years to reveal shabby underlying layers of cheap fabrications and lies, due to the many incidents which have made the CIA's name synonymous with dishonest and untrustworthy behavior. Today, UFOlogists whose covers as CIA operatives have been blown are usually washed up. Naturally, such UFOlogists try to maintain their covers.

Some UFOlogists with once-assumed CIA connections now deny any connections whatsoever. That, too, would seem incongruous with regard to a UFOlogist who, for example, was once a trusted employee of a so-called "civilian" agency which had the exclusive government mission to collect and classify as secret all reports of actual or alleged UFO sightings. It would be sailing very, very close to the wind for that UFOlogist to say he had no intelligence connections. I don't think J. Allen Hynek ever made such a denial, but you can correct me if I'm wrong.

My old graduate school friend, Phil Shaw, Col., (retired), Air Force Intelligence, was in charge of two Project Bluebook offices—one in Reykjavik, Iceland, and the other in Reno, Nevada—so don't try to tell me that the project was not connected to intelligence. In Pentagon Aliens, I relate how embarrassing to Shaw it was, when, during a heated (yet friendly) argument between Phil and I, I took some students in one of our life drawing classes at the University of Texas out in the hall, and showed them that the lock on his locker was "CIA issue". As Phil grimaced, I exclaimed, "Sheesh, Phil! Are you so tight you have to use an agency lock?".

One of the things which once went with intelligence agency enhancement was the assumption that a UFOlogist who had access to Project Bluebook's secret reports—to which normal citizens had NO access—should be accepted as patently truthful and accurate. This is ridiculous, since that UFOlogist would be subject to prosecution under the National Security Act for disclosing classified information, and whatever is implied from the secret reports, without producing the actual classified reports, is mere hearsay.

The aura of "high credentials" is now used to enhance the "credibility" of UFOlogists, to induce acceptance of CIA- concocted lies, to convince the public that UFOs are extraterrestrial, that the government conducts secret liaisons with alien civilizations—based on alleged "leaks" from "inside" sources—or that human life on earth was "engineered" by "reptilian aliens". These are the favorite BIG lies used by the CIA's OSI to achieve their two most important strategic objectives.

The prolific use of allegedly "classified documents" from "inside sources" ignores the fact that such documents would have been retrieved at the point of a gun, and contained by the intelligence community, with their purveyors prosecuted, while the public availability of the documents marks them as fraudulent fabrications, created and disseminated by intelligence agencies in pursuit of so-called strategic objectives.

The frequent use of credibility-enhanced, professional UFOlogists, with high academic or military titles, such as "Ph.D.", "Colonel", etc., naturally raises the question as to why those with such "high" credentials would involve themselves in attempting to derive incomes as befits their educations from the risky business of UFOlogy, unless they were already provided with substantial covert incomes from intelligence coffers. In their writings and speeches, it seems that these UFOlogists will invariably only cite the alleged "documentation" of other CIA assets. This incestuous, fraudulent process is a matter of CIA UFOlogy policy, to never cite another researcher unless they are a controlled asset, in order to maintain control of the whole field, thus avoiding unpredictable results which might threaten that control.

My Mind and Thought-Control Ordeals

A well-known "UFOlogy lawyer"—who is himself a CIA tool—apparently alarmed that I "had his number", accused me of attempting to use my "credentials" (what credentials?) to gain credibility (his own tactic) but the only association I ever had with an intelligence agency was my short stint in Air Force Intelligence, in 1957-58, at a pay of around $160.00 per month. I subsequently have had minimal contact with the intelligence community, in the sense that, on occasion, on a voluntary basis, as a concerned citizen, I tried to warn our government, whenever I perceived what I believed to be threats to American safety, security and well-being.

Here, I briefly describe some (but not all) of my encounters in which, as a would-be responsible citizen, I rendered considerable service to my country several times, "..above and beyond the call of duty...", and in every single case, I was punished, insulted, abused, injured and dishonored. I was never so much as given a "thank you". Instead of being thanked or honored even in the slightest way, I was severely and cruelly punished. It came as a severe and traumatic shock to my naive and idealistic mind to think that my government would not only allow such things to be done to me, but to do them to me itself. I suffered deeply because of it, and the indelible and painful marks on my mind will never go away.

In my first experience, at the age of 18, as an Air Force basic trainee in 1956, I had uncovered a 5-man cell of KGB agents running the Air Force Career Counseling Center, at Lackland AFB in San Antonio, Texas sabotaging personnel records, mis-assigning trainees, and even routing their own agents into Air Force Counter-intelligence. This discovery created a chain reaction which eventually 'rolled over' on Col. Rudolf Abel (alias William Fisher), the Soviet Western Hemisphere Chief of KGB Espionage Operations, whose special training was in sabotage. The FBI, on its website, says Abel was arrested in New York City around June 21 st, 1957, but this may be a cover-story lie. The FBI takes credit for everything, another lie. If I hadn't discovered the cell, operating right under the noses of the "counterintelligence experts" for years, they would probably have never known who Abel was.

The Texas cell was handled by Mikhail Nikolaevich Svirin, Soviet ambassador to the U.N., Col. Abel's subordinate and intermediary to the cell. Svirin got wind of my exposure of his spies and immediately returned to Moscow, leaving no intermediary. Lucky for Eisenhower, Svirin had diplomatic immunity, so the FBI didn't have to arrest or to stop him from returning to Moscow, the Soviet government didn't have to lodge a noisy and falsely indignant protest with the American embassy or the U.N., and the Republicans didn't have to explain how this very serious national security breach occurred under their administration.

The arrest of the Russian ambassador to the U.N. for espionage would certainly have aroused public suspicion, and the FBI had strict orders to avoid public exposure of the incident. Meanwhile, the FBI still didn't know who Svirin's superior was. That was the way things remained until 1957, a year later.

Conveniently for the FBI, Finnish KGB agent Reino Hayhanen had defected in May, 1957, in Paris, and was moved in by the FBI to fill Svirin's slot in Abel's sabotage and espionage network, enabling him to identify Abel. Abel was arrested, charged with espionage, prosecuted, convicted and sentenced, and was eventually traded for U-2 pilot Gary Francis Powers in 1962.

Because I had uncovered Abel's Air Force records-sabotage operation, the Air Force, without my knowledge at the time, ostensibly re-assigned me to Air Force Intelligence immediately following the confirmation of my discovery. After what should have been the perception by the Air Force that I might be useful in the intelligence field, the Air Force then proceeded under an ulterior Republican-created political agenda to attempt to assassinate me, then to punish me, then to completely waste and ruin whatever potential or talent I may have had for intelligence work, after its attempt to murder me failed, which instead of killing me, "only" caused a permanent neurological disability.

From a consideration of the circumstances, my knowledge, and the evidence I have gathered thus far, it appears that "Republican intelligence agents" and Air Force spooks tricked me into taking a prescription of a neurotoxic drug, by having an agent give me a cup of bad coffee during a student coffee break, thus requiring me to go to sick call, where it was arranged that a doctor prescribe the poisonous drug which was then given to me by the pharmacist. It was the pure, "100% extract of belladonna", rather than the 10% "tincture" solution, a dosage which was ten times the prescribed dosage. Therefore, the dosage—"24 drops of in warm water before meals, three times per day" (72 drops per day)—was the equivalent to 720 drops of tincture of belladonna per day, and clearly a potentially lethal dosage, with little doubt remaining that the intent was to effect my death, to be explained posthumously as a "suicide" or "accidental overdose".

On Nov. 6, 1956, the presidential election was held, and Ike had won. Before I had even met Commander Thomas B. Hayward, I had already been poisoned and had survived. As a Republican naval officer, connected to the O.N.I, Hayward's job apparently had to do with carrying out an illegal political order from the Eisenhower Re-election Committee—possibly on request from Vice-President Richard Nixon or the fanatical right wing SAC head, General LeMay—to shut me up at all costs. The first indication that the spooks were involved in my fate was when I had been chosen just prior to the poisoning, by an Airborne jumpmaster who had come to Keesler, to be the "combat controller", in Ike's contemplated U.S. military intervention in Hungary during the revolt of 1956. This was apparently a "last minute" grandstand play concocted either by Eisenhower or Nixon—more likely by Nixon—to "insure" their re-election. I'll wager that Nixon pushed it and Eisenhower stopped it.

As the Combat Controller, I would have been the first man on the ground, where I was to set up a landing operation for our entire invasion, spearheaded by airborne divisions, and to land our planes in a massive assault. It was a tall order for an 18-year-old kid. I was led to believe that I was chosen because I was in superb physical condition, knew how to shoot, and was pretty tough. They wanted a man who could survive at least long enough to carry out the job of getting our forces on the ground so they could engage the Russian troops. Like a fool, I was ready, willing and able to do it.

In retrospect, I realized that I would have probably been one of the first men killed, thus eliminating any further problem of a possible leak regarding the KGB's record-setting records-sabotage operation. There would have been a 97% chance of my being killed in the operation. Lucky for me, the plan to intervene in Hungary was abandoned by Eisenhower, so it was time for plan of elimination of Airman William Lyne #2, which was to poison me.

Here is a case where covert intelligence operatives within the military were involved in a purely partisan, attempted political assassination of a loyal American military man to cover up a politically explosive spy scandal, because it might have prevented a Republican politician's re-election. And for that reason alone, they actually coddled the Soviet agents, and helped the Soviets keep the spy scandal secret from the American and Russian people!

After I had begun to take the belladonna as prescribed—which was the equivalent of 720 drops of tincture of belladonna per day—I became so confused that I did not even realize that my disorientation was caused by the belladonna. Belladonna is a hypnotic neurotoxin, composed of several alkaloids, including scopolamine, one of the drugs of choice for Nazi SS interrogators during WW II. Because of its horrible effects, it could induce many subjects to talk rather than to be forced to endure another dose of the drug. According to one of my dictionaries, scopolamine is, "A drug used to dilate pupils of eyes, as a depressant, to produce a partial stupor known as "twilight sleep", and to induce confession in criminals."

At that point, I began to have uncontrollable sleep attacks in class, which caused the instructors to begin disciplinary measures, and to do such things as to slap a stick loudly on the table in front of me whenever I began to drop off. This caused PTSD (post traumatic stress disorder). Even when being humiliated, by being ordered to stand at attention during class in front of a large floor fan having no protective grille on it, I still fell asleep. Thanks to a quick-thinking fellow student, who blocked my fall just as I lost consciousness, and was falling into the fan blades, a serious accident was narrowly averted. I was then cruelly hauled before boards of review, in my disoriented state, where I was ordered to explain why I kept falling asleep in class. I could only answer, "I don't know, Sir, but I can't help it."

I was then ordered to appear before the commandant of the GCA school—an eccentric warrant officer, who wore Napoleonic locks (I swear I'm not making this up)—joined by a master sergeant named Ackermann. The two promised me that, if I could make it through the school, they would make me a part of their intelligence "team" on a covert mission into Port Said, Egypt. I found out that the warrant officer and the sergeant were both colonels, using assumed names and ranks. It appeared that they were unaware that I was being poisoned. Meanwhile, I was still unaware that the belladonna was even a poison, or that it was causing the problem, so I could produce no plausible excuse, or even bring up the issue. My judgment was severely clouded, to say the least. The two officers must have been Democrats, who were unaware of the secret Republican plan to eliminate me, unless the "covert mission" was another plan of elimination.

About that time, as I was visiting the base service club in the evening, I was approached by two intelligence agents, and asked, "Are you William R. Lyne, AF 18510695?" I answered "Yes." One of the agents then said, "We're here to inform you that the KGB cell you uncovered at Lackland was caught. Your report to the adjutant turned out to be true. We are breaking security procedures by even telling you about this, because the incident is classified, so don't tell anyone we are involved. We know you are having troubles, so we will try to help you."

Belladonna in such a high dosage makes you look and act like a zombie, a virtual "living dead". I could neither sleep restfully at night, nor awaken fully during the day. At night, I began to hang out alone in the numerous dives in Biloxi, Mississippi. Due to my disorientation, my inability to explain my sudden sleep attacks, and the morbid and melancholy effects of the belladonna, together with my being washed out of the GCA school at no fault of my own, I became very distraught, even suicidal. I had been a top student, wide-awake and promising, but I was going down, and there was nothing I could do in my drugged state of mind to stop it.

While in one of the Biloxi bars, after midnight on a weekend, I was visited again by two different intelligence agents, who said they would try to help me, even though regulations prohibited them from doing so. In retrospect, years later, that all seemed so very strange to me, that they had to "violate regulations" in order to help an airman who had discovered a KGB cell, done his fellow Air Force members a great service, saved the taxpayers many millions of dollars, and was being poisoned, washed out of his school, and demoted. Again, these guys didn't seem to be part of the political assassination squad, because they didn't try to attribute blame to the KGB. As professional intelligence agents, at least they knew that the KGB couldn't have manipulated everything on the base. They probably knew my "problems" were political ones anyway, but couldn't say more.

There being absolutely no legal representative to fight for me, even myself, while under diminished capacity, in a stupor, I signed whatever papers they put before me, just to try to make the problems go away. After I was removed from the school, demoted, fined, and placed on menial detail, I stopped taking the belladonna. The extreme melancholia subsided, but the symptoms of narcolepsy remained.

At that point, in spite of the poisoning, I had survived. In retrospect, I now realize that, before the November 6th election, I was supposed to die from a "drug overdose", undoubtedly to be explained subsequently as a "probable suicide", due to my "apparent despondency over being washed out of the school", a despondency which they had so skillfully created through the MK-Ultra, trauma-based mind control methods, by which time the bottle of uncut belladonna extract would probably have been replaced by a "10% tincture solution", to cover the conspirators' tracks.

But my survival had created another problem: To prevent me from discovering that the poisoning had caused the "discipline" problems and the narcolepsy, and from realizing that it was part of the Republican plan to eliminate me. That was when Republican Tom Hayward was chosen to visit with me.

The spooks must have asked themselves, "Who is an absolutely loyal, trustworthy Republican officer, who can be relied upon to do our dirty work, to go to Keesler, to gain Lyne's confidence, and convince him that the KGB, and not the Republican party or the Air Force is responsible for his brain injury?" The fact that Hayward was Navy and not Air Force, should have told me that the problem originated outside the Air Force, but after all, I was still taking the drug, and my judgment was clouded. The drug also enhances one's suggestibility, something discovered by Nazi interrogators. Eddie Hayward, Tom Hayward's younger brother, was my roommate and friend, in whom I sometimes confided, so that, together with Hayward's high rank—his "enhanced credibility"—could be used to convince me that neither the Air Force nor the Republican party had anything to do with my strange, inexplicable problems.

The idea that all the circumstances—such as my medical condition—would be unknown to the intelligence agencies during the bogus "national security" covert operation, was ludicrous. In such a case, every single circumstance would be known. The Air Force knew all along why I was having uncontrollable sleep attacks, because they had ordered the poisoning, and they knew exactly what the effects of belladonna in a large dosage would be.

After I had survived, and exhibited for the first time the classic symptoms of narcolepsy, they also knew, in November, 1956, what the medical profession did not learn until the year 2000, that narcolepsy could be caused by the ingestion of neurotoxins, because they can destroy specialized protein cells in the hypothalamus which produce hypocretin (A.K.A. "orexin"), the hormone which regulates sleep and diet. Of course, hypocretin had not even been discovered in 1956, but the Air Force knew very well that I had been converted from an exceptionally sharp-witted and "wide awake" airman, to a narcoleptic after ingestion of the drug.

There was no longer any talk of making me part of a "covert intelligence team." By that time, the Air Force knew that I was permanently damaged. I could no longer consider becoming a jet pilot or an air traffic controller, because I had narcolepsy, and they knew it. In fact, one of the 'counselors' they sent me to, a disgruntled major (who was not a psychologist, but had been assigned to a detail counseling airmen, because he had a college course in psychology), told me I had narcolepsy, but then misinformed me, saying that it was a purely "psychological problem"—a "defense mechanism"—which was my "...attempt to avoid taking responsibility for my actions, by falling asleep." That of course was his "basic Freud 101" speaking, which was wrong. That was clearly a fraudulent, spook-designed "diagnosis" which was intended to make me think it was all "my fault".

They pretended not to know about the belladonna, but my medical record would be in the investigative file in such a case. It may turn out in the future that the evidence of the belladonna prescription was obliterated from my records. After all, they had covered their tracks very well up to that point, so why not? The fact that they had gone to such extremes of bogus psychology, and of using high-ranking liars, to avoid MY discovery of THEIR responsibility for causing my narcolepsy, and all the other so-called "discipline problems" I had, despite the obvious fact that similar problems would continue so long as I remained in the Air Force, showed that they had no concern for my human rights, and were willing to go to any extremes to achieve their ends.

Commander Thomas Hayward came to Keesler and went with Eddie and me to our squadron mess hall for our Thanksgiving dinner, in 1956, which was on the early date of Nov. 15, because Nov. 1 had fallen on a Thursday. He was warm and friendly, a decorated Navy hero in WW II, who had been awarded the Navy Cross for having removed a hot shell casing from a large naval gun on a battleship, which was jammed in the breech, during a battle in the South Pacific. By removing the shell with his bare arms, burning them, in order to get the big gun back into operation, he had purportedly risked life and limb, "above and beyond the call of duty". He made a favorable impression on me, as reflected in my book, Pentagon Aliens, since, at the time of its writing, I had not yet become aware of his duplicity and betrayal of my trust.

Tom knew all about my discovery of the KGB cell, down to the last detail. He said he had come to "help" me. He told me that he believed that my problems were "being caused by the KGB". His younger brother, Eddie, had been with me ever since basic training and the Lackland Bugle Corps, in which I was first bugler. I had left Lackland with an "excellent" rating. There was no sign of narcolepsy there, or anywhere else before my enlistment.

In the GCA school, I had been one of about three top students who vied for the top scores. My grades were later falsified to make me look like a poor student, and to justify my removal from the school for "sleeping in class", "improper attitude", and "insufficient grades." Later, I would receive an FAA certificate by mail, which had the proper grades I had made on the written tests for Control Tower Operator, and they were good grades, quite at odds with those shown in my records. I guess the conspirators missed that one. The label "improper attitude" was due to the fact, even when threatened and coerced while I was under the effects of the drug, that I still wouldn't "admit" that I was willfully falling asleep, because I knew that I had gotten plenty of sleep, had never had the problem before, and had exerted every bit of will-power I could muster, in effort to stay awake, to no avail.

Eddie had seen me go from a top student and airman, to a broken and dejected, stupefied wash-out, who was the victim of poisoning and drug-induced narcolepsy, which was permanent.

I appreciated what appeared to be genuine support from Tom, though I didn't quite understand his reasoning regarding the KGB being responsible for my sleep attacks, and hadn't even become aware of the permanent narcolepsy, or connected it to the belladonna, because I was still taking the drug and was in "twilight sleep" at the time. I hadn't even begun to separate the temporary effects of belladonna ingestion. Those particularly severe effects were gone after I stopped taking it, at which point I then began to distinguish them from the permanent effects of narcolepsy, which I was just learning about and trying to understand, without any technical information regarding the condition.

I unsuccessfully tried very hard to get the problem under control. Going to bed early in the evening didn't stop or alleviate the problem, or even help it very much, which was a mystery to me, since it had never happened before. I would not connect all of the symptoms of narcolepsy, which I had experienced since October 1956, until I would read an article on narcolepsy in Psychology Today in 1977. For the first time in 21 years, I connected all the various classic symptoms of narcolepsy which I had exhibited since October 1956, just after I had begun taking the drug.

My first "hypnogogic hallucination" was while I was napping in my dormitory room, as Eddie Hayward sat in a chair nearby, working on a letter. My friends—Eddie Hayward, Joseph di Paulo, and William Passmore—seemed to feel sorry for me, to see such a "sharp guy" like me go down. They must have thought I had gone crazy or something, or was becoming an alcoholic.

I was deceived by Tom Hayward for 44 years. It wasn't until late 2000, when I began to look closely at my old Air Force records, that I began to put it all into focus. Tom had detailed knowledge of the "classified" incident, which I had initially thought was due to his connection to ONI, but unless he had a "need to know", he shouldn't have been given access, or even have known about the incident or been inquisitive about it enough to seek access. His access had to do with carrying out the plan to shut me up, after the Nov. 6th election.

It recently became clear to me that his purpose was political damage control, after the fact. Covert Air Force intelligence operatives involved in the Republican plan had tried to murder me, intending to make it look like a suicide or an accidental drug overdose, but I had survived, but was left with a permanent neurological disability. Investigation even of that alone could lead back to the original motive, means and persons involved. That left the problem that I might figure it out, and attempt to get an investigation and possible prosecution of the criminals who had given the orders for my elimination, or that I might somehow get the information to the press. That could implicate the Republican party and maybe even Eisenhower himself. This was "Proto-Watergate", and probably involved Vice-President Nixon, since it had the imprint of his "M.O."

I find it very hard to accept the fact that a man of such high reputation, rank and warm personality, such as Tom Hayward, could lend himself to such an evil scheme, to deceive an innocent 18'year-old boy—who had performed admirably, by uncovering a nest of KGB records-saboteurs—into believing that "the Commies" had caused all his problems. When I reconsidered all the facts, in April 2001, I realized that the orders for an "executive action" (assassination) and cover-up, required Eisenhower's authorization.

Like Eisenhower, Tom was a loyal Republican. Republicans were very strong in the Navy elite, Tom's forte. After all, hadn't he been a close friends with "The Little Giant", Senator John Tower, a former Navy carrier pilot? Hadn't he rose to the rank of Rear Admiral promoted to Chief of Naval Operations, under the Republican administration of Ronald Reagan? Was this his reward for dutifully playing the "political dirty tricks" game since 1956?

Ike or Nixon was apparently fearful of a political backlash from my discovery that Communist agents had brazenly sabotaged the Air Force Personnel Center, on their watch, right under the noses of the CIA, Air Force Intelligence and the FBI, a spy scandal which had secretly come to light in the wake of the 1956 presidential election. An 18-year-old total amateur, airman 3rd class, had exposed their gross ineptitude. If it reached the public, this could throw the election to the Democrats. That airman 3rd class (me) wasn't covered by a national security secrecy order, so he could talk about what he knew to the press, since he had acquired his knowledge of the incident through "innocent means."

To the President, I was apparently a greater threat than the Communist agents, who were not even prosecuted. The treatment I received was much worse than that given to the Communist agents, who were merely transferred to the Army, so they could be "watched more closely." I, on the other hand, had been given a "life sentence" to the "prison of narcolepsy", without a possibility of parole.

News of the incident could have influenced the election to be held on Nov. 6th, during which time I was turned into a zombie. The brownie-point-sucking Republican naval officer, Tom Hayward, was sent to lie to me, to use his high credentials and winning personality to protect Ike's career, probably at the request of Richard Nixon and General Curtis LeMay.

It was an ironic turn of events, considered in retrospect. In 1955, Eisenhower had come to Waco, Texas, on the campaign trail. During the parade through downtown Waco, I watched the parade on T.V. with my grandmother, Nancy Lou Bertha (Richardson) Lyne, in my aunt's house, near Guthrie Drive. As the parade ended, the phone rang, and Grandma Lyne answered. In a few minutes, she mysteriously asked me to accompany her outside. It was a chilly, cloudy and windy day. We walked out to a small hillock just outside the rear fence, about 50 yards from the intersection of Guthrie Drive and a major highway.

A long, black, open-topped Lincoln limousine eased up on the shoulder of the road. President Eisenhower stood up, faced us, and waved his arm. Grandma had a little white hanky, which she waved in the wind, as tears streaked down her cheeks. No one else was present, except Eisenhower, two men in the limousine, my grandma, and I. My boyhood friend's father, the Chief of Secret Service, Charles Warren, Sr., a Southern Cheyenne, was one of the men in the car.

Ike and Grandma stood for a moment, viewing one another wistfully across the distance, then Eisenhower slowly sat back down, and the limousine slowly pulled away, as Grandma sobbed quietly into her handkerchief, and we returned to the house.

The only possible connection I could make between Grandma and Ike was the fact that she had lived in San Antonio with my Aunt Opal, just after my grandfather's death in 1922, which was the same time that Ike was stationed at Ft. Sam Houston Army Base. My coach in Waco, "Maj" William Kiethly, had been on Ike's staff during WW II, just as my cousin's father-in-law, retired Air Force Colonel Reinhart had been. Colonel Reinhart had gone to his grave with the belief that the Air Force was incapable of corruption, the shining example of a moral force for good that he had known in WW II and afterward. Major Kiethly had a high opinion of me. Someone procured a Presidential appointment to the Air Force Academy, from Eisenhower, for me, when I entered the Air Force at age 17, but I couldn't accept it because I was a high school drop-out.

In 1956, Eisenhower had apparently ordered my elimination, either that, or someone below him had done the dirty deed, but the motive was to protect the White House from the political repercussions of a spy scandal which showed military stupidity under a general/president. That may have been considered unforgivable by enough of the American electorate to upset the election results.

It was not until late 2000 that I discovered that I had been reassigned to intelligence, while I was still in GCA school, and before I was given the poison and removed from the school.

A few days after Tom's visit in 1956,1 attended a lecture at the base theater, by Sir Arthur C. Clarke, on "Unidentified Aerial Phenomena". Clarke's lecture was based on the lie that flying saucers were not even real, and that all sightings could be explained as mirages, weather anomalies, weird clouds, etc.

After the lecture, I approached the podium, filed through a short line, and introduced myself to Clarke with a handshake, saying, "Dr. Clarke, I'm very pleased to meet you. I enjoyed your lecture, but both you and I know that you're a goddamned liar, and that flying saucers are real, man-made flying machines, powered by electricity. I saw one of them up close in 1953, so I know they are real, and you could see the electrical discharges, so you can't fool me."

Clarke smiled wryly, as he shook my hand, and said that he was glad to meet me also. I knew that Clarke knew the truth, but had been appointed by the British Intelligence Services, the CIA, and the U.S.A.F., to come to Keesler and probably many other American bases, to use his prestige and speaking skills to convince regular Air Force personnel that flying saucers did not even exist. Only the elite knew the truth, except for me. He represented the official, government, "pseudo-skeptical" position in the "two-pronged attack", his high credentials being intended to add credibility to his lies.

I wondered what it was like for Clarke to meet an 18-year-old American airman third-class, who wasn't fooled in the least. The fact that he was not angered by my accusation showed that he had a reserved appreciation for my rationality, and was not insulted by the truth. He was ordered to lie, but here was a young man who knew it!

About three days later, I was sent to a "personnel pool", where

I was "reassigned" to the intelligence field (even though my records show that I had already been reassigned to intelligence, weeks before, pursuant to a mysterious, secret, "Report # 5").

Even though they tried to make me believe that the KGB was responsible, I now reject that idea because that would have required them to have control over the guy who gave me the bad coffee (possible), the medical appointments clerk and the doctor he assigned me to, and the pharmacist (very unlikely). This caused a permanent, neurological disorder, which made me unfit for "military intelligence" (excuse the oxymoronic expression) work, because I had no treatment or medication whatsoever for the disorder at the time. I was viciously and tortuously kicked out of the GCA school I was in, was demoted, given an Article 15 as disciplinary punishment, fined, dishonored, and placed on demeaning details as further punishment. After having done that, the Air Force transferred me to Lockbourne AFB, Ohio, gave me a Top Secret Clearance in an effort to shut me up, and buried me in an obscure SAC intelligence office, as an intelligence clerk. There, still without medical treatment, the same vicious punishment was continued until the time of my discharge, all because of the uncontrollable symptoms I suffered from their poisoning of me.

The reason for all this cruel treatment was pure politics. Specifically, the 1956 Eisenhower Re-election Committee, the Republican Party, and Dwight Eisenhower feared that my discovery, if made known to the public, could throw the election to the Democrats. Maybe this came from Nixon, well-known for his underhanded tactics, I would say. I had uncovered a KGB operation which had sabotaged the nerve center of the entire Air Force. The KGB agents were responsible for the sabotage of the records of, and potential mis-assignment of everyone coming into the Air Force during their time in operation...many thousands of personnel.

Many KGB agents were undoubtedly routed into critical jobs and even into Air Force counter intelligence, and an unknown number of personnel were routed into fields in which they were bound to be incompetent, due to the scrambling of or tampering with their tests and aptitude scores. At the very minimum, I had saved the Air Force many millions—possibly billions—of dollars, and probably many lives and aircraft, and for all that, I was cruelly and viciously punished. In retrospect, If I had known beforehand what would happen to me, I would have walked right on by and let the KGB go on its merry, mischievous way. My health will suffer to the end of my life for what the Air Force did to me, and I'm lucky to be alive. Apparently, no one was thankful for what I did. In fact, they were terrified of the truth and what it might do to their future. Imagine the Republicans—Vice-President Nixon, President Eisenhower, and right-wing General LeMay—reacting to that. They wanted no public prosecution or press releases on it, even though it was bigger than the Rudolf Abel arrest, the Aldrich Ames arrest, or the Richard Hanssen arrest, because the damage involved thousands of personnel, all under the administration of General Dwight David Eisenhower, himself a military man, whose political career was jeopardized by my discovery. The political implications of public knowledge would have been devastating. How could Eisenhower have let that happen? The best way to describe the incident is "POLITICAL EMBARRASSMENT". And I was the unfortunate messenger...who was shot.

Instead of prosecuting the members of the KGB cell, which would have attracted public attention, they were transferred to the Army, and the incident was classified (to keep the press from finding out), but since I had no clearance at the time of my discovery, I was not bound by a national security agreement, so they in effect persecuted me into oblivion instead. I was transferred to a SAC base in Ohio—Lockborne AFB—which was directly under the authority of the trusted right-wing head of the Strategic Air Command, General Curtis LeMay, where I could be oppressed and controlled. There was no interest in doing what was right or just, but rather to pursue partisan political expediency, through a criminal conspiracy, in service to continued political control by the current Republican administration in Washington.

This was clearly a case of treason, since the Republican Party gave "aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States", for purely partisan political purposes.

The indelible imprint the incident had made upon me, has been inescapably driven home to me, each and every day and night since then, by the symptoms of narcolepsy which I have struggled with ever since. Through the first few years, I never came to grips with the problem as a disability, because I was in denial. So long as I could be involved in dynamic physical activity, in my youth, I was able to continue to perform on an acceptable level, by exercising extraordinary concentration. Whenever I had to sit in a class for a long time, which was somewhat boring, or when I had not had a lot of sleep the night before, the problem persisted. For 16 years—between 1962 and 1978—before I began getting regular medication, I drove vehicles which had beds in the back, so I could take a nap whenever the narcolepsy hit me while driving. In late 1977, I first began getting regular medication.

Back in early March, 1962, I entered training for the U.S. Peace Corps, and was sent to Puerto Rico for training. This was the site of the second incident involving the CIA and the spooks, in which I was booted out of Peace Corps training for what I later discovered—over four years later—was the false allegation made by the CIA itself, to President John F. Kennedy, that I was one of its agents. Again, I as the messenger, was 'shot'. The lie to Kennedy appeared to have been related to an incident involving my discovery, around April, 1962, that the Russians were installing ICBM silos and missiles in Cuba. I had discovered this while in Peace Corps training, near Arecibo, Puerto Rico, when I was approached at a rural cantina by an old Puerto Rican man. The man explained that he had been going back and forth to Cuba in his boat, running a small black-marketeering and smuggling operation between Puerto Rico and Cuba. He emerged from a nearby pier, approached me, and excitedly told me what he had seen in Cuba, as he had crawled up in the grass, near an installation near Havana. He described the presence of Russian troops, and the large-scale construction of what were apparently ICBM silos, complete with missiles, and batteries of anti-aircraft surface-to-air ("SAM") missiles, to protect against air attacks or U-2 surveillance. The man had then urgently made the 1200-mile trip in his boat back to Arecibo as fast as he could, in order to report this important information.

I immediately relayed this information to four men and a woman whom I knew to be CIA agents, who were in my Peace Corps training group, so it could be checked out. I expected a U-2 flight to be conducted as soon as possible, to get positive photo-confirmation of this strategic information. History shows this to be true, although the version told to the public contains several lies.

Two of the CIA agents leaked the misinformation that I was a CIA agent to Fidel Castro's agents, when they visited the Peace Corps training base, followed by Castro's radio broadcasts accusing the U.S. of planting its CIA agents in the Peace Corps. This was done because the CIA and the Republican party wanted to make a shambles out of Kennedy's Peace Corps, which they had already infiltrated. After Kennedy had taken the bait, he signed an executive edict which stated that no person who had been in the CIA could be in the Peace Corps. The CIA, through Kennedy's gullibility, scapegoated me and several other innocent parties—none of whom were CIA agents—by kicking us out for being "CIA agents", yet failing to tell any of us why we were being kicked out.

Meanwhile, none of the four real agents was kicked out, and the CIA illegally maintained its presence in the Peace Corps in defiance to Kennedy's edict. Their hatred of Kennedy was apparently greater than their respect for the rule of law and the constitution under which our republic is supposed to operate.

Just before my departure from the Peace Corps training facility at Barranquitas, Puerto Rico—I was seen off by a sizeable contingency of my Puerto Rican friends—who carried placards protesting my being thrown out—and with a tearful Hispanic girl from Laredo, Texas, in the background, afraid to come forward to kiss me goodbye. Meanwhile, the CIA agents had given me a bunch of muck on the Peace Corps, which they apparently expected me to give to the press on my return to West Texas, where they had already arranged for interviews and a TV appearance.

As later documented, and faithfully reflected in the recent movie, "Thirteen Days", the information on the Russian ICBMs did not reach the President for at least six more months, and the President was also falsely led to believe that the ICBMs—which the old man had described to me in April—were not being installed in Cuba until late October, 1962. Neither President Kennedy nor the movie writers apparently ever knew of this lie. The possible reasons the CIA withheld this information from Kennedy for so long are all bad:

(1) The CIA, in its incompetence, may have ignored the information I gave them, dismissing it as a rumor, until it because so painfully apparent that they couldn't ignore it; or,

(2) the CIA may have wanted to "cut Kennedy short"....to make it a "big surprise", so they could evoke the most extreme reaction from Kennedy, possibly even to create a nuclear war.

In view of the previous discovery I had made in 1956, the CIA should have realized that the information I gave them was valid, and I'm relatively certain they acted upon it and had U-2 confirmation on it for six months before they told Kennedy about it, and General LeMay made certain Kennedy didn't know about it.

The other lie—that I was a CIA agent—was not disclosed to me until a 1966 meeting with a CIA recruiter at the University of Texas at Austin.

Incredibly, after trying to murder me and causing my narcolepsy in 1956, and scapegoating me in 1962, the CIA attempted to recruit me in 1966, 1974, 1975, 1977 and 1989, in various capacities. Though I have never worked for them, in 1962 they told President Kennedy that I did. It just goes to show that even the President can be lied to with impunity by the CIA.

It was a turning point...an "epiphany" if you will...for me, when I read in October, 1962, that the President had just "discovered" the Russian plot to install ICBMs in Cuba, which I had discovered and reported to the CIA six months earlier. Meanwhile, though I was still in the dark at that time as to why I was kicked out of the Peace Corps, I knew that the military and the CIA were concealing strategic information from the President, their boss, Commander-in-Chief of U.S. armed forces. If the President was being denied such critical, national security information, I asked myself, how was he supposed to insure our protection? Wasn't that treason? Did the generals and spooks care so little for us that they were willing to risk our suffering the possible consequences of a nuclear holocaust, by denying intelligence to the President until it was almost too late to avoid a nuclear war?

In a Feb. 11, 2001 press interview on the arrest of FBI agent/alleged Russian mole Richard Hanssen, President George W. Bush said, "I just want everyone out there to know that, if you've been false to a trust...if you've betrayed a trust...we're gonna come after you." I asked myself, what if the government is false to a trust?

The government had been false to its trust to me so many times...in 1956, by giving me a potentially lethal dose of a neurotoxic drug which caused permanent damage, and in 1962 by falsely scapegoating me as a "CIA agent", while lying to President Kennedy, and by shooting at my wife in 1983 and causing the miscarriage of our first child, a girl, and almost causing my wife to die. After all that, I view what it says mostly as lies.

As I see it, the "cloak and dagger" intrigues provide too many opportunities for illegal political manipulation, as the tools of the evil conspirators who create them. Instead of protecting our national security, they endanger it even more. In addition, a climate of hatred toward Americans has been created, so that we cannot travel abroad without being suspected of working for the spooks.

After the terrorist attack of September 11, 2001, it became obvious that the CIA and FBI are incompetent, that the White House gave the Afghani Taliban 43 million dollars only three months before, and that the CIA trained Osama bin Laden via the Pakistani ISI (intelligence service), probably including the techniques of trauma-based mind-control to use on his suicide stooges.

I had realized much earlier in life that the CIA (through its predecessors) had created both Project Bluebook and the UFOlogy field, to conceal UFO propulsion technology from the people. My contact with intelligence agencies, aside from confirming my earlier suspicions, had done little more than tell me what they were supposed to do, and revealed what they had failed to do, when under a duty to do so. It taught me to look for the motivations behind the various CIA frauds and failures in respect to the American people, and many others in the world, who don't deserve such abuse. Since I realize that all the major governments of the world possess UFO technology, yet keep it secret, such secrecy in the name of "national security" is the biggest fraud of all, especially when the technology could liberate our citizens from energy slavery.

We know of government frauds only because of blunders by its employees, but such "blunders" can be faked. A prime example of a faked government blunder is revealed by the circumstances surrounding the Condon Report, in which a government plan to use "non-believers" to propagate false propaganda was intentionally exposed, due to a feigned "accidental" discovery of a "secret" memo, dated Aug. 9, 1966, written by Robert Low, project "coordinator". In October, 1966, the Air Force selected Dr. Edward U. Condon of the University of Colorado in Boulder to head a committee to do an allegedly "objective, scientific study" of the UFO phenomenon. Low's "secret" memo was "inadvertently" placed into the unclassified "open files folder" under the heading, AIR FORCE CONTRACT AND BACKGROUND, so it could be "discovered" by a researcher for NICAP, Maj. Donald Kehoe's UFO (CIA front) organization. The memo[1] stated, in pertinent part (emphasis mine), as follows:

[1] from Flying Saucer Fiasco, John G. Fuller, LOOK magazine (May 14, 1968).

"...Our study would be conducted almost exclusively by non-believers who, although they couldn't possibly prove a negative result, could and probably would add an impressive body of evidence that there is no reality to the observations. The trick would be, I think, to describe the project so that, to the public, it would appear a totally objective study but, to the scientific community, would present the image of a group of nonbelievers trying their best to be objective, but having an almost zero expectation of finding a saucer. One way to do this would be to stress investigation, not of the physical phenomena, hut rather of the people who do the observing—the psychology and sociolosy of persons and groups who report seeing UFO's. If the emphasis were put here, rather than on examination of the old question of the physical reality of the saucers, I think the scientific community would quickly get the message"... "I'm inclined to feel at this early stage that, if we set up the thing right and take pains to get the proper people involved and have success in presenting the image we want to present to the scientific community, we could carry the job off to our benefit..."

This memo, contrary to the false idea being created—that it was a "smoking gun"—was actually a cheap "throw-away", "Saturday-night special", being thrown into the scene of the crime to be later discovered by "investigators".

Dr. Condon was a "highly-credentialed" figurehead, used to add false credibility, while Low was probably the CIA point-man, since his memo was dated two months before Condon's selection. For maximum effect, it was made to appear painfully clear from the memo that the purpose of the committee was to create the false illusion of scientific objectivity, and to convince the public of the "non-existence" of UFOs.

Therefore, the rationale for the alleged study was to make it appear to be focused on the personal psychology and sociological aspects of witnesses and UFO groups, to inflame their indignation, while conspicuously avoiding the physical reality of UFOs or the technology observed by witnesses. This was similar to Project Bluebook, which was to ostensibly pose as the official depository of the public's UFO sightings and photos, in order to "study" and "understand" the UFO "phenomenon", but having as its ulterior purpose the collection and concealment of objective reports by rational witnesses, and photographs which revealed the government's classified UFOs.

Posing as the "scientific investigators", the government hucksters of Project Bluebook were red herrings actually set up to intercept data from the uncontrolled publics' observations regarding secret UFO technology. In other words, to catch the inevitable leaks.

Meanwhile, the hucsters of the Condon Committee were conspicuously set up as red herrings, to fabricate the false appearance of a "government cover-up of government-alien contact". It skirted the issue of technology which might appear to some to prove the existence of "alien" UFOs, and changed the focus from technological to psychological and sociological. Then, by letting all this be known to the general public and UFOlogy dupes through the NICAP group...including the idea that the Condon Committee intended to cast the pall of neurosis, insanity or fraud upon all rational witnesses...who had been suckered into believing that, by filing their reports with Project Bluebook, that "our government" might be able to "figure out what UFOs are", only added to the induced paranoia of the UFOlogy dupes.

The fact that they designed this program to misinterpret sightings and witnesses, shows that they already knew everything about UFOs, especially since Project Bluebook was shut down in 1969. Shortly before that time, UFOs were sighted taking off from a military airport in the Ukraine, by American scientists, as they rode by in a train while on their way to a scientific conference in Kazakhstan. That no longer left any doubt that the Soviets also had the technology.

Consequently, four of the first five members selected for the Condon Committee were psychologists, while coordinator Robert Low had an M.B.A., with a B.S. in electrical engineering.

On Oct. 8, 1966, Condon was quoted by the New York Times as saying, "...It is improbable they (UFOs) exist..."... "...The view that UFOs are hallucinatory will be a subject of our investigation, to discover what it is that makes people imagine they see things." This statement, true to Low's memo of two months earlier, was intended to play into NICAP's agenda, and was published in the New York Times so it would reach the most people.

The Condon Committee and Maj. Donald Kehoe's NICAP organization represented two government "prongs" which are discussed later in more detail. Meanwhile, by its exclusive, official control over the gathering and concealment of rational UFO reports, Project Bluebook, headed by J. Allen Hynek, served both of these "prongs", by denial of information regarding rational reports to the public—thus supporting the government's irrational denials—while creating a vacuum of information which UFOlogy groups could fill with the begged question of an "alien presence".

NICAP and the Condon Committee's conduct was designed to create a dramatic conflict intended to polarize and divide the public between one or the other prong, leaving absolutely no "Most Rational Alternative" in the "middle"...the arena of logic and reason.

It was a nice touch to have a member of Kehoe's group 'discover' the allegedly misplaced "secret" memo, which was intended to expose the government's "official" agenda of manipulating the public. This was so the UFOlogists could scream "Censorship!" and was intended to add false credibility to the idea of a "...cover-up of a government-alien liaison." "Major" Donald Kehoe's military credentials added enhanced credibility to he and his group of counter-huckters: The Quixotic "fighting marine", leading his platoon in a battle against insurmountable government secrecy concealing "alien" visits.

Kehoe was associated with J. Allen Hynek through something called "Project Lure"[2], which was allegedly created to "lure" aliens into approaching certain sites prepared by them, to establish human contact with the "aliens", but the real object of this scam was to sucker that segment of the interested public which did not agree with the government's pseudo-skeptical denials, into believing that aliens were actually visiting earth. This also showed that Hynek and Air Force Intelligence were definitely involved in spreading the begged question of alien visitations.

The closure of Project Bluebook in 1969 represented a shift in government strategy, probably resulting from the fact that Bluebook would no longer deter the intelligence interests of Russia, which clearly had the technology by that time. From that point on, the only remaining "enemy" was the public.

It is revealing to compare the prior agenda of Air Force contractors as stated in the leaked Low memo--to deflect the gist of the investigation from physical reality to psychological causes or aberrations--to statements by French UFOlogist, Jacques Vallee, in Passport to Magonia (1969), in which he built upon the Swiss psychologist C.G. Jung's "collective unconscious"/"archetypal images"/Tarot card hypothesis, to depict UFOs as a "sociological phenomenon"...."...manifestations of the collective unconscious" (an theory on which Jung himself had already reversed his position in respect to UFOs, as disclosed by a newspaper interview given by him while visiting Alamogordo, New Mexico).

We can see that the agenda of the CIA/OSI UFOlogists had been boosted by Robert Low's "secret" memo—which had so conspicuously fallen into the public's hands through NICAP (as if the government couldn't have retrieved it)—which laid out the "official prong" parameters under which the Air Force and CIA required the Condon Committee to operate. Meanwhile, it can be seen that Vallee's work coincided with the "unofficial prong" parameters represented by UFOlogy and NICAP, except a little more toward the middle. Whether by coincidence or intent, the effect was the same as if he were operating under the OSI agenda.

Since my 1993 first edition of Space Aliens From the Pentagon was published, there have even been a few in the UFO community who have accused me of being a "CIA agent". I can only laugh at this, and my own mild irritation, since, according to my own analysis of the UFO situation—extending for over 50 years—I should therefore be trying to convince you that UFOs are extraterrestrial in origin, or natural or paranormal phenomena, as covert CIA UFOlogists do, or espousing the "alien lizard-people" "party line". Instead, I'm exposing technology that our government conceals on behalf of the powers that be, to protect its cozy partnership with the powerful economic interests. As Hitler said, "One hand washes the other."

My lifelong research shows that UFOs are exclusively man-made electric flying machines, invented by Nikola Tesla before 1900. I don't expect anyone who has their head screwed on straight to believe that I am a CIA agent, even though President Kennedy was finally convinced it was true. This was after he questioned the CIA's veracity, by sending his brother-in-law, R. Sargent Shriver, to spend a few days hanging around with me in Puerto Rico, to try to determine whether or not the CIA was lying to him about me. Hindsight now shows that he should have heeded those suspicions, and rejected the CIA lies.

I do not think that I can sue for libel, slander or defamation for being called a CIA agent, and it is doubtful that the government's judges would consider such an accusation damaging or defamatory. Anyone foolish enough to believe I am a CIA agent, after reading my books, is tragically pathetic, laughable and stupid.

Even if a person is not a "card-carrying" member of the CIA, if that person does the CIA's covert work for it, by spreading what I call the "pseudo-skeptic" or "pseudo-paranormalist" party line, they are just as much an agent as if they are on the payroll. You could think of them as the "CIA Auxiliary". By "covert work", I mean someone who surreptitiously does the CIA's work, but conceals or denies employment by, or association with, the CIA. This does not apply to me, since, as a concerned citizen, I only reported what I knew to be strategic information, which had inadvertently fallen into my lap. Nothing I ever did in this respect was "for the government", only "for the people", and I was never paid a red cent for it.

On the other hand, if a CIA employee were to sabotage the work of the CIA, they could be subject to prosecution for sabotaging their "mission". As such, if I were a CIA employee, I could be accused of sabotaging the CIA's UFOlogy M.O., by publishing my books, but as a civilian, I am not subject to prosecution, only harassment and suppression, sometimes through lawsuits or threats of lawsuits, as well as interference with the distribution of my books, with my speaking engagements, and my radio interviews.

For example, on Feb. 19, 2001, I received a call from Art Bell, requesting a telephone interview, which he scheduled for Feb. 20, at 3:00 P.M. On Feb. 20, at 3:00 P.M., the phone service for the entire village of Lamy, New Mexico (where I live) was turned off at the main switchboard in Santa Fe. The service remained off until Feb. 21, 1:00 A.M., after Bell's night-time broadcast had begun, too late for me to call. The outage was reported on Feb. 20, but no work crew was dispatched, because the phone company knew that nothing was broken and that the government had turned off the service.

A phone company representative called the following morning, and acknowledged that the service had been interrupted at the main switchboard. When I asserted that I thought the FBI had done it, he stated, "I am prohibited from expressing an opinion on that matter." That, in effect, confirmed my allegation, since it showed that a secrecy order was in effect, which the phone company employee was required to obey, probably under the delusion that he was some sort of "patriot".

Vacillating Vallee

In the 1995 second edition of Space Aliens From the Pentagon, I stated that my two "Roswell" photos--one of which showed rhesus monkeys in G-Suits--were "...among the other things taken by a woman who (allegedly) associated...""... and who had also lived with the French 'UFOlogist', Jacques Vallee, for two years." Vallee has disputed this woman's statements, so I have retracted them, and now apologize for them, since it is her word against Vallee's. Vallee (if the woman was speaking of the same Jacques Vallee, as there is more than one), did not deserve the possible inferences which a reader might derive from reading Pentagon Aliens. I did not mean to imply that Vallee was an employee of the CIA or that he had a hand in stealing my photos. What Vallee deserves is a more in-depth analysis and critique, in the light of my "CIA M.O." criteria. None of Vallee's personal life is any of my business, but I continue to assert that everything I have said about his work, which is subject to fair criticism, is true to the best of my knowledge.

Sometimes Vallee talks like he wants to be a skeptic, a la Philip Klass, and sometimes he talks like he believes in aliens or strange beings or forces, and sometimes he even mentions "advanced secret government aircraft", but in my books, if someone parrots the paranormal party line, I object, and it doesn't matter whatever else they may pay lip service to.

In reviewing some of Jacques Vallee's UFOlogy statements through the years, it is obvious that he appears to vacillate between the two sides of what I call the CIA's "two-pronged attack" (pseudo-skeptical government denial, and UFOlogical paranormalism, respectively). These two "prongs" were designed to trap and crush reason—what I call the third, "Most Rational Alternative" ("MRA")—in the middle, the assertion that UFOs are exclusively man-made, and that there are no aliens present on earth. My additional assertion—supported by objective evidence and my own personal experiences—is that the CIA initially created and presently controls both sides of the debate—the two "prongs"—as well as the entire field of UFOlogy. The CIA seeks to control the "middle", anticipating the problems represented by my argument when it designed the program—in fact, the "why" for its creation of the program. Its total control of the field through its covert, paranormal-UFOlogists, and the conspicuous absence of my argument, prove this.

Vallee apparently tries to "occupy" the middle also, but doesn't belong there, because, instead of representing it as the arena of logic and reason which it naturally should be, as I do, he apparently depicts it--by his actions and statements—as an arena of vacillation, in which confused or indecisive individuals are led to believe that the only option is a choice between the two irrational "prongs", as if the "MRA" does not even exist. Vallee is really a part of the paranormal prong, despite his attempts (sometimes) to separate himself from that designation. Logic is logic, and it can't be dodged even by evasiveness with oneself or others.

In early 2001, just after the announcement that I was to appear as a speaker in Santa Clara, California, at a two-day event entitled "Conspiracy.Con", I received a letter from David Alexander, an attorney representing Jacques Vallee, threatening to sue me for libel and defamation, for the statements I purportedly made about Vallee in Pentagon Aliens (third, renamed 1999 ed. of Space Aliens From the Pentagon). I had mentioned the name "Vallee" twice in the same context, and once in the index, so, without admitting guilt, I deleted the name, thereby mooting any claim. I also considered that, whatever important things I have to say can be concluded by anyone who reads and understands my books, without reference to a specific name, so it really isn't essential to mention any UFOlogist in a specific context, though it is often helpful.

Since the purpose of my book is to teach my method of analysis and understanding to my readers, so they can analyze UFOlogy for themselves, why not delete a name? After all, why should I allow the threat of a lawsuit to jeopardize my book? I therefore decided to write this chapter, to make myself clearer and to pursue particular issues more succinctly and in greater depth and detail, in regard to the work of Vallee and some others of that genre. I needed a more thorough treatment, in order to do justice to the public's needs.

I instinctively consider such threats to sue as attempts by the CIA to shut me up, since that type of strategy was used on me before, in relation to my energy R & D. Since it's possible that a court might conclude that I have overstepped certain boundaries, and that I might be hard put to justify what I said, I have retracted those particular statements in regard to Vallee, and will restate my accusation that the theft of my photos (and other things) was made on behalf of the CIA's Office of Scientific Intelligence, because they were a "smoking gun" on the Roswell hoax, and leave it at that.

Vallee is a "public personality" and former public servant. I have never been a "public servant" as he was, when he was employed in Project Bluebook and perhaps some other government positions. Probably more than anyone else, Vallee established the "party line" of UFOlogical paranormalism (though he calls his theories "paraphysical", they are still a minor variant of "paranormal").

It would not only be an unreasonable violation of First Amendment rights, but also quite unrealistic to expect a court to grant Vallee a "King's X", giving him "royal immunity" and prohibiting anyone from mentioning, discussing or criticizing his ideas, since he has chosen to stick himself into the spotlight of scrutiny, and to continue to put in his "two cents" as the debate rolls along. If he can't stand the heat, he will have to disappear from the kitchen, perhaps in a similar way as his witness claimed the USS Eldridge disappeared (as you will read about below). Since he has made himself rather unavoidable, I decided to devote some time and energy to this chapter, to show what kinds of reactions I had to Vallee many years ago, as well as today.

By recently demanding my attention to his activities, through his threat to sue me—and to have all my books recalled and destroyed—Vallee has induced me to focus on his past, to get a more complete idea of what his work has been all about.

It appears to me to be Vallee's self-appointed "job"—or maybe it's just his personal quirk—to play the devil's advocate, a position which tends to keep the resolution of UFO/alien issues unresolved, the way he apparently likes it... hazy, nebulous, paranormal, and irrational...occasionally venturing forth to attack and "debunk" those with rational explanations for allegedly paranormal incidents, which leaves standing what I consider to be the irrational, CIA UFOlogical paranormalist status quo. He uses what I call "pseudo-skeptical" arguments against those who may offer realistic answers to paranormal-interpreted events, and as such, ambivalently appears to be a supporter of both the irrational official denials and of the paranormal phenomena...and of the CIA's M.O., by default.

Vallee's conduct is consistent with the government's plan to control both sides of the debate, through its two-pronged attack, which means that the spooks and the government will promote his work, as well as some in the movie industry (i.e., Steven Spielberg's Close Encounters of the Third Kind). These two prongs are two sides of the same coin, since both the denial of the existence of UFOs, and the assertion of the presence of "alien" UFOs, are equally irrational and "paranormal"...a position which I consider to be dishonest...since many thousands of responsible, experienced aircraft observers with certifiable 20-20 eyesight—including myself— have seen them. Vallee appears to police the "middle", which has the effect of clearing out anyone offering rationality to the situation; get rid of the rational, leaving the irrational, so the two-pronged system will continue to work.

Whether or not this conduct by Vallee is by design or by statistically-challenging coincidence, is a matter of personal judgment, but I do think his work definitely coincides with the CIA's covert program. If Vallee has given this effect unconsciously, he has my sincere pity. If anyone thinks threats to sue will "clear me out", they have another think coming.

I have no personal animosity toward Vallee, and If I knew him personally, I would probably like him, as he appears to be a very intelligent, glib and charming person, with creativity and a writer's gift. My beef with him has to do with the ideas which he has spread in the past, which I think are damaging to the scientific understanding of UFOs, as well as to the rationality of the people who swallow his theories. Granted, those who believe what he says are already gullible, but I don't believe it is ethical to feed paranormal pulp to those who are gullible, and I will do whatever I can to convince them of what I believe to be the Most Rational Alternative.

I will argue against paranormal theories until hell freezes over, so to speak, and no one will stop me so long as I am breathing. I believe that the technology being concealed is important for the natural progress of the human race, and that the paranormal theories serve the purpose of suppressing it, as well as in preparing the public mind for acceptance of far more dangerous mass-psychology Big Lies.

Superficially, Vallee's approach may appear to be rational to gullible people, until you look at his weird punch-lines, and tally up the numerous important things he has conspicuously seemed to avoid, ignore, or even appears to conceal. For example, the following article, with the title, Jacques Vallee Hoaxed Science & UFO Community With His "Anatomy!" UFO Sweden, sheds some light on Vallee's M.O. with respect to other paranormalists, when operating in what I call the "Pseudo-Skeptic" mode:

Vallee and the Fraud Business

The controversy I discuss here was initially kicked up by various writers and alleged witnesses, surrounding the alleged "Philadelphia Experiment". I take no position on this alleged experiment—which I have no way of knowing actually occurred, and apparently neither does anyone else—since all information appears to be hearsay. But I do know that many frauds have been associated with the government's covert program to promulgate false stories surrounding it. I offer this information to show Vallee's involvement, according to a paper which I found on the Internet[3]. The Navy most certainly conducted some experiments related to German WW II submarine warfare, and in fact, also conducted some research related to German WW I submarine warfare, intended to develop and test technology to avoid German torpedoes, and for American sub-chasers to find German U-boats—such as sonar—so they could be sunk with depth charges. The idea that any so-called "invisibility" experiments were related to making American ships invisible to radar, or invisible to German magnetic torpedo sensors, seems more credible, and such technology was developed for our ships and submarines, but neither of these experiments or tests appears to have been competently proven insofar as the place and time they were performed, specifically linked to the alleged Philadelphia scenario.

In Jacques Vallee's Anatomy of a Fraud paper[4], according to the article published on the Internet, he accused researchers who had asserted that the Philadelphia Experiment was one to make the U.S.S. Eldridge invisible to radar, rather than invisible to the eye—of fraud.

Vallee based this rather rash allegation on the idea that the Germans did not have radar in 1943, ignoring the probability that the Navy might have done such an experiment in anticipation of the time when the Germans would develop radar, had it not been for the documented fact—available to Vallee via Navy documents—that the Germans did have radar in 1941- This was two years prior to the alleged experiment, though there is no proof that they had outfitted their subs with it by 1943. In any case, this was not an essential element to the Navy's possible tests. Ironically, I entertained the "invisibility-to-radar" postulate in Pentagon Aliens, and Vallee is reported to have suggested the same possibility. Was this before or after he read my book?

The absence of German radar would have been a slim enough basis for alleging "fraud", even if true, and a rather drastic and defamatory allegation under the circumstances, yet what is at stake if a reasonable explanation for the alleged "Philadelphia Experiment" is allowed to prevail? It would discredit the obviously phony paranormal and ridiculous tale about the experiment being an attempt to make the Eldridge invisible to the eye, but which went wrong, causing the ship and its crew to get caught up in a so-called "space'time warp", resulting in its being transported to another time and place; or, the story about it becoming invisible to the eye.

By attacking the reasonable explanation—a radar/stealth experiment—Vallee's attack had the effect of supporting the irrational "disappearing ship" garbage, by default, as well as to support his own weird "paraphysical" theories[5].

[4] Jacques Vallee, Anatomy of a Fraud, Journal of Scientific Exploration, Editor-in-Chief Bernard Haisch.

In his attack on the reasonable explanation, it appeared that Vallee attempted to show that the proponents of the alternate theory had concealed their presumed knowledge of appropriate Navy documents which allegedly showed that the Germans had no operational radar in 1943. By his same standard, Vallee was also presumed to be aware of the Navy documents which proved that what he and his witness said was wrong, and put most or all of what they said into question.

After ValleVs paper was published, allegedly to "debunk" the alternate theory, "Special Civilian Investigator" Marshall Barnes responded, saying that Vallee had a presumed knowledge of Navy documents which proved that the Germans in fact had radar in 1941, two years before the alleged experiment. While this did not prove that the Germans had radar on their subs, the Navy would have been very short-sighted not to assume that the Germans soon would install radar on their subs, and would most likely have been held to blame for a failure to conduct experiments which might avoid the loss of several ships and many lives, a result which, if ameliorated by productive experiments, could more than pay for experiments which might have helped to develop appropriate new technology.

In his initial paper, Vallee's alleged "eye-witness", Edward Dudgeon, said he was present at the stated time, and that the Philadelphia experiment, per se, "never occurred", but added that the ship did in fact become invisible to the eye, due to the effects of "St. Elmo's fire". After the initial version of his paper was written, Vallee edited a portion of Dudgeon's statements out, to delete his comment regarding the actual optical invisibility of the ship due to St. Elmo's fire. The apparent reason Vallee did so, is that the allegation was so irrational that it tended to impeach the credibility of his own, so-called eye-witness. Such a deletion might be considered to be a fraudulent concealment in a court, by tbe way, if it was considered to be a "material" omission, but Barnes made no issue on it except to paranormally say tbat Vallee's omission was due to the Navy's classifying the use of St. Elmo's fire as a secret technology to make ships invisible to the eye!

In addition to showing the German possession of radar in 1941, Naval documents also proved, when compared to statements, dates and documents purportedly produced by Dudgeon, and contained in Vallee's paper, that Dudgeon was lying, and couldn't have been there or have witnessed the events he claimed to, at the time. Or so Barnes asserted. Big deal.

After being confronted with the evidence, Barnes asserted that Vallee did not retract his article, and by his subsequent conduct continued to promulgate his "debunking" paper, by his failure to disapprove of his witness's alleged fraud. Has Vallee become so old and inflexible as to be incapable of admitting he made an error, even when faced with the undisputed accusation of fraud? Did he publish his paper with the intent of promulgating fraudulent research, as alleged by Barnes, based on presumed knowledge of the naval documents referred to by both Vallee and Barnes, or did Barnes also promulgate a fraud by continuing to allege an "anti-radar" experiment which also was not proven by the evidence?

The answer, in the final analysis, is that we should not allow ourselves to be taken in by this alleged "argument"...between two proponents of the same paranormalist ilk...which has the effect of making them appear to be on opposing sides, when in fact, they both promote the same things, while projecting each other's "careers" into the public eye, through a meaningless "argument".

These labyrinthine arguments and controversies appear to me to have been intentionally created as red herrings for the purpose of pursuing the strategic objectives desired by the Occult Scientific Thought Control Dictatorship, by creating endless mazes and eddy currents of meaningless chatter which absorb and dissipate the energies of those who seek answers to obviously more important questions, the answers to which have been classified.

Vallee was a close associate of Dr. J. Allen Hynek in his work for Project Bluebook, the Air Force/OSI project created allegedly to investigate the so-called "UFO phenomenon". My documentation shows that the Nazis came into possession of Tesla's UFO technology and did initial experimentation at Los Alamos, New Mexico, in 1934-38, prior to taking the technology to Germany. The U.S. came into possession of the German projects in 1945, under Operation Paperclip.

Documentation shows that Project Bluebook was initially created on contract for the U.S. Army Air Force Counter-intelligence Corps ("C.I.C") at Wright-Patterson AFB Ohio, beginning during WW II, by Charles Hundley and Edgar Cayce. Cayce was employed there ostensibly as a "technical writer". Hundley was associated with the O.N.I., having taught Russian to American Naval Intelligence officers. The project later fell under the jurisdiction of the Air Force Office of Special Investigation ("OSI"), but was covertly organized under the CIA's Office of Scientific Intelligence (A.K.A. "OSI", confusion intentional).

The last time I heard from Hundley, around 1961, he was teaching maritime law at the U.S. Coast Guard Academy at Carlsbad, California. Hundley had also been associated with the Ohio State University astronomy department, and said he was also associated with Jacques Vallee, due to the Bluebook connection. In spite of his "high credentials", Hundley made many paranormal claims, such as, "...being abducted by Venusians and taken to Venus and back in a flying saucer." Since I could write a small book about all this, I won't digress further here. His reasons for making such claims should be obvious to those who read my book, especially in view of his intelligence background.

An alleged CIA source told Timothy Good (as reported in his book, Above Top Secret, 1988) that in 1955, the leaders of the secret services of the USSR, USA, France and Britain met at Geneva and unanimously agreed to a policy of secrecy on the "UFO problem" as far as the public was concerned. Good also said that Vallee told him in 1986 that in 1966, he was sent to the International Congress of Mathematics in Moscow, and managed to discuss the subject of UFOs with several Soviet scientists. Good also stated that an unevaluated CIA report, dated 18 Aug. 1967 (a few months after Vallee's trip), with the subject heading , "Report on Conversations with Soviet Scientists on Subject of Unidentified Flying Objects in the USSR", had the name of the CIA (or CIA'Sponsored) scientist who conducted the interview, along with the names of the Soviet scientists, deleted, together with the date(s) of the interviews.

From this sequence of events, it is reasonable to suspect that Vallee or any other scientist accompanying him, might have been the "CIA or CIA-sponsored" scientist who conducted the 1966 interviews mentioned in the 1967 report.

The ultimate purpose of U.S. UFOlogical forays into Russia in ca. 1966 appeared to have been to monitor Russian government compliance with its agreement to keep its UFO reports secret, under the 1955 Geneva agreement. It is also interesting to note here that there has been a conspicuous absence of any claim by any government that the utterance of a paranormal claim is a security breach, so these claims can be presumed to be both unclassified and untrue.

Since it is illegal under our constitution for an American citizen to negotiate directly with or to serve a foreign government without executive authority, especially its military or its scientists, and especially when that government is considered hostile to the U.S. at the time, we should suspect that ValleVs work on the Russian trip was authorized by the national security apparatus of the U.S. government. It would probably also require Vallee to disclose to them the context of all his contacts with Soviet scientists after his return, just as Los Alamos National Laboratory required of its employee, scientist Wen Ho Lee, on his return to the U.S. from a similar mathematics conference in Communist China, as disclosed during the prosecution of Lee in 1999-2000. Good's "unevaluated" 1967 CIA report matches these criteria closely. The names of the U.S. UFOlogist/scientist and the Soviet scientists he engaged in UFO discussions were deleted, making it an intelligence matter.

So we had Vallee, who probably had a government security clearance to authorize his access to all the secret UFO reports of Project Bluebook, and government security authorization for travel to an enemy country, going to Russia ostensibly for a "mathematics conference". Since the official policy of the U.S. government toward UFO reports is secrecy, we can assume that Vallee's discussions of UFOs with Soviet scientists was of an authorized, "government-to-government" nature. It can also be presumed that the "un-secret" ("public") reports of Project Bluebook, and of its former employee, Vallee, are all suspect, either completely concocted by the CIA/OSI, to maintain secrecy through misinformation, or carefully selected reports which favor a hazy, nondescript, "middle" paranormalist interpretation.

The ambiguous interpretations advocated by Vallee, have the effect of dumbing down the public, and of supporting the official denials of CSICOP and Phillip Klass, on the one hand, or the paranormal interpretations of Vallee on the other—or of supporting the similarly outrageous "space alien" claims of the slightly more extreme lunatic fringe—allowing them to prevail among various segments of the population. Naturally, the total effect of all these "fuzzy" effects is a sort of factual mud. Was Vallee's work promoted by the CIA through its contacts in the media and publishing, because his theories favored its two-pronged strategy? Was Vallee fed misinformation to excite a tendency toward paranormalism, or was that his own idea, after being shown the non-paranormal facts?

We know that Vallee, as a Bluebook functionary, was party to keeping UFO sighting reports secret. We also know that he had access to that secret data, so he had to have a clearance. In order to have access, he had to have a "need to know". Why would a mere civilian have a "need to know" secrets the rest of us have no access to? He also may have had discretion in deciding which reports could be made public, if any, and in fact, would have to know where to draw the line on what he himself could disclose, without violating the national security oath he took when his clearance was granted. Vallee and his wife, Janine, compiled the first allegedly "comprehensive" database on UFO sightings, a database we can't trust, because it emphasized the paranormalist interpretation, and excluded the Most Rational Alternative, by what it included and excluded, whether true or untrue.

We mere civilians don't have access to the massive data collected by Bluebook, but Vallee does. Most of us don't know what has been concealed, but Vallee should. He cannot tell us what he is forbidden to tell us, so everything he tells us can be presumed to be of no "strategic value", and follows the security establishment guidelines designed by the OSI committees, which apply to him whether he likes it or not. Otherwise, he would have been prosecuted. Knowing what he knows, he must constantly have a "brake" on what he says, and may have to seek approval from the OSI prior to publication of anything. That means that his former boss Hynek, the Air Force, the OSI, the 'other' OSI, and the CIA, all had some say about what has been kept secret, and why.

We know that under the national security rules, NOTHING was intentionally disclosed in those Bluebook releases to the public which was of a classified, "national security" nature. Vallee cannot tell us what he may know, because the government won't let him, and we don't know that he would tell us even if he could. Ultimately, he tells us only what the government will let him tell us, unless what he wants to tell us just happens to be what they want him to tell us, but I find that to be a statistically-challenging coincidence. The CIA can't tell us what Vallee tells us, because that would be patently irrational, and it would be held accountable. Vallee's material easily passes all security tests.

We can assume that all of the Bluebook reports for public scrutiny are immaterial or false, since the "real" reports are classified, so the publicly disclosed reports were all created or chosen by the OSI to confuse the public, to conceal what it alleges to be "national security secrets". Given the mission of the national security establishment, operating under the same rules as Air Force Intelligence, Project Bluebook was forbidden to publish a single photograph in their possession, taken by a civilian or military photographer, of any government aircraft which was of a classified nature. This basically discounts every single photograph of an alleged "UFO" made available to the public via Bluebook. They certainly never published the clear photos made by my boyhood friend, Ken.

Until and unless you personally observe something alleged to be "fantastic", you have to consider it hearsay. This is especially true where the alleged event or thing is a known government secret, and the information comes from a government source.

Everything that Vallee says in regard to alleged "aliens" or UFOs, is entirely consistent with my analysis. So what does he say?

Vallee says he thinks UFOs are the "modern manifestation of an age-old phenomenon", generally what he calls the "paraphysical theory of UFO origins" (Parascope,Inc, 1996). This theory includes the time-travel hypothesis—UFOs as time machines from our own future—and the angel/demon theory—UFOs as God's angels or Satan's demons—taken to be "visitors from space". I had to laugh when I heard the Satan's demons hypothesis; imagine, Satan having his own little air force, and God too! In Forbidden Science, Vallee stated that UFOs are probably "...windows to other dimensions...", "...manipulated by intelligent, often mischievous, always enigmatic beings we have yet to understand" (60 Greatest Conspiracies of All Time).

Philip Klass, CIA man and CSICOP director, whom I call the government's lead "pseudo-debunker", calls Vallee "...one of the more distinguished members of the pro-UFO community"...."one of the brighter physical scientists who believes in UFOs" (Heretics Among Heretics", 60 Greatest Conspiracies of All Time, interview). So here Vallee is praised by the arch pseudo-debunker himself.

Vallee believes that "...the intelligence guiding UFOs is a kind of control mechanism, an invisible hand shaping the development of human consciousness over a period of eons.." (60 GCAT). He tried to cover his rear by acknowledging that governments "..sometimes manipulate public opinion through UFO mythology, sometimes constructing elaborate hoaxes for propagandistic purposes." This could be said of him, couldn't it? This sounds like a quote from my books. If Vallee sincerely believes this, why hasn't he written about it more?

Vallee says "...we don't know" where UFOs come from, that they are possibly a "...natural phenomenon", or "...an undiscovered form or energy in the atmosphere..", possibly "artificial", and if so, "...it could come from another form of consciousness, which may or may not be extraterrestrial."

In other words, Vallee wants it a multiplicity of ways, except as a real, man-made flying machine powered by electricity. Fuzzy, so-called "declassified" or "unclassified" photos are chosen to support this theory, because they are hazy, nebulous, and vague, nothing like the saucer I saw on a clear, end-of-summer day, from about 300 feet, in 1953, and nothing like the photos and negatives the OSI purchased from my boyhood friend.

Incidentally, photos of real saucers may appear to be hazy, because of their rapid precession during certain flight modes, as I describe in Pentagon Aliens. This is especially the case where the lens or film speed is too slow to catch the image in a "still" photo.

One of the first statements I make in Pentagon Aliens, is:

"Have neither an open nor closed mind, but rather a self-controlled mind, which weighs facts, accepts truth and knowledge, and filters out lies and trash."

This reflects my disgust with such bromides as the one I saw on a bumper sticker: "Minds are like parachutes; they only work when open." The same thing applies to a toilet, but a toilet is for the disposal of human excrement, not an input port for valuable knowledge. The mind is a delicate instrument. Downloading someone's mental excrement could turn your mind into a mental toilet, so you would be a good little consumer and unquestioningly do what Big Brother says.

Vallee is a proponent of what I consider to be a rather indiscriminate "open-mindedness", maybe as a result of too much Sartre or Camus. As a supposed computer expert, what he advocates is tantamount to a computer with no virus protections. In my opinion, if you accept and "download" his kind of ideas, it could do to your mind something similar to what a virus does to a computer. That is just my opinion, based on my own analysis, so you may apply my standard, and decide for yourself, or if you wish, you can accept everything Vallee says, and reject everything I say. In the end, it is up to you.

The exasperating thing about the term "UFO" is that it creates the opportunity for the government's "catch-22". Since the term refers to "Unidentified Flying Objects", it can always permit the plausible denial of the existence of an "unidentified" object. If the government provides a photo of an alleged "unidentified flying object", no one can say it has committed a fraud, so long as it cannot be proven what the object is, or that the government fabricated it with the prior knowledge of what the object is.

Since the government knows that there are no aliens on planet Earth...just as I say...it can always plausibly deny the existence of "alien UFOs", or a "government cover-up of alien UFOs", but cannot plausibly deny the existence of "exclusively man-made, electrodynamic flying craft...thought by the public to be alien UFOs". That is the reason that—of all the questions put to the government by so-called "UFO lawyers", in frivolous FOIA lawsuits—that this question is always excluded, and that is the way that you can know that the lawsuits are filed by the CIA. The questions are always designed by the OSI, to beg the question that UFOs are extraterrestrial—which is also a lie—so that their covert UFOlogists can ask them, and their official spokesmen can answer them without lying. The government has created and controlled the situation so that it can deceive the public by denying these falsities, and telling the truth in a covertly-limited and fraudulent context.

So the government has always avoided the particular question—conspicuously never asked by its covert "UFOlogists"—as to whether it has knowledge of exclusively man-made, electrodynamic flying craft, which the public generally knows as UFOs, Government spokesmen could not truthfully or plausibly deny their existence, if this question were asked, because the security regulations prohibit them from "...either confirming or denying..." the existence of any classified aircraft.

Vallee seems to have foreclosed the possibility of us ever knowing the answer to the "UFO enigma" in our time. His conclusions are paranormal, seemingly intended to create a perpetual, unanswerable mystery around the UFO, which to me is just a man-made electrical machine, which, in my estimation, is man's greatest invention. Who benefits from concealment? The large corporations with vested interests, who would be decimated by public access to the technology involved. They are definitely at the head of the line of those who would be out of business if we all had the technology. That is the "motive" behind the corporate-state crime of UFO fraud.

The government's involvement in the UFO situation is also a red herring, since the real impetus for the secrecy comes not from the government, but from the corporations and power elite who control and use our government, to insure that the power structure they created prevails. All the major governments of the world are involved in suppressing this great invention, for fear that public access will destroy their inordinate coercive monopoly powers to control or profit illicitly. I realize that the facts suggest that there is a secret corporate "world-state" government of some kind, otherwise, there would be no international conspiracy between the world's major governments to conceal UFO technology.

There are plenty of people out there who absolutely know the truth, because they have been part of the elite, or part of its concealment system, all along. They have been privy to the ships themselves or the secret photos showing real ships with military markings, and FAA-compliant red and green position beacons, etc., which can mean only one thing: They are bound by illegitimate self-interests, or national security orders, but I am not.

Some UFOlogists have been "speaking with a forked tongue"—contradicting themselves at every turn—offering a multiplicity of "wild cards" or bluffs, dealing from the bottom of the deck, slipping cards out of their sleeves, or playing with "daisy decks" in the game of UFO poker, as a sort of "insurance", in case the direction of the field reverses, in which case they can point at whatever option they choose, and say, "See.. I said that back when." This strategy is a built-in CIA "contingency plan", intended for it to maintain control through opportunism, as a "last ditch" scenario. They shouldn't be accepted with open arms. I always liked that statement of Ghengis Khan, "Once a traitor, always a traitor; hang 'em". You certainly don't accept such traitors as the leaders of your army.

Don't be surprised if some of these opportunists start to come forward, trying to play their "wild" cards, saying the same things that I have been saying since I was a boy, never fooled even once by the false propaganda. They are no more than opportunists, who have built their deceitful "careers" with ease, with official government sponsorship, and now want to switch sides, with their unearned, government-bought "name-recognition", when they see that their side is losing. If successful, they would only turn things back the other way again, a complete lie.

The next time you are confronted with a higher gasoline, heating or electric bill, or contrived power blackout—not to mention an empty billfold—remember these traitors, and recognize that our government uses paranormalist propaganda to conceal technology which would alleviate or eliminate most if not all of these energy problems, as well as to stop the political control of our military being directed toward globalist objectives, and to stop the exploitation of Americans through global control and manipulation of petroleum. We Americans have much more to live for than a feudal fealty to global oil corporations. We have been weakened domestically in order to extort our support of these global objectives, by continually limiting and jeopardizing our energy resources, jacking up prices, and making us fight and pay for the oil companies' private interests.

CHAPTER VIII - LA REVOLUCION TECHNOLOGIA: Turning Things Around Through Technology

In 1997, Chapter VI of Occult Ether Physics was entitled "Free Energy Massacre: The Atomic Hydrogen Process ©1996". The rest of the book traced the discovery of electrodynamic space propulsion by Nikola Tesla, within the scientific milieu of the late 19th century. This was the world of "aether physics", just approaching the "wrong turn" which physics took after the 1905 publishing of Einstein's Theory of Relativity. The crooked road for that wrong turn had already been laid by some of the ether physicists themselves.

Beginning with my 1993 Space Aliens From the Pentagon, I dared to attack Relativist theory and concepts, up through my 1999 Pentagon Aliens, in an ever increasing number and quality of ways. One of the concepts I developed was that free-energy physics is exclusively a non-Relativistic ether concept. That is the reason Tesla was so opposed to Relativism. One cannot discuss Teslian concepts in the same breath as Relativist ones. Relativism forbids "free-energy".

Today, suddenly, masquerading as "free-energy researchers", there appears a plethora of Relativists. Relativists are like broken records, and cannot get out of the same old Relativist "groove". If you look at their websites, and read their material, all you see is the 'same old same old' contorted Relativist "theories". They theorize, and theorize, and theorize, but what do they really do? They theorize...curved space...dilated time...and ruminate through all the other aspects of the shaky 'house of cards' built by St. Albert. And out of these insane ruminations, they attempt to solve the riddle of "gravity", "anti-gravity" and "fluctuations in the quantum vacuum field", but no solutions are in sight now, just as none were in sight in 1905.

And now, when it appears that ether physics may really have something, they are invading the free-energy field, even pretending to be the discoverers of this or that—actually ideas stolen from those without "credentials"—and have found a haven in which to build a "new" nest, lined with the feathers of contorted mathematics, Platonist epistemology and circuitous reasoning. History will eventually undo them, showing them to be intellectual thieves.

It is often said that "an idea cannot be patented". There is something wrong with that, but even if true under the law, it is still intellectually dishonest to claim the discovery of someone else's idea in a patent application, without the slightest attribution, when it is known that priority was with the victim of that theft.

Scientists like Michael Faraday and many of his colleagues wouldn't have thought of taking the ideas of others, without saying where they got them. The "rush to the patent office" to claim such unpatented discoveries made by others is not only illegal, but unethical, because such applications require the swearing of an oath declaring that the claimant knows of no priority by anyone.

Relativism does not recognize free-energy, ether, ZPR or electromagnetic radiation which travels through space. Their theory was based on "corpuscular photons", which required no luminiferous ether to transport their force through space. The concept of the "photon" implies a "light particle", not electromagnetic wave radiation, because without an ether, there would be nothing for a wave to "wave" (wave action requires a "medium" to wave, similar to a wave on a pond of water).

Relativists hang out on the Internet constantly, looking for ideas to steal and claim as their own. Why? Because Relativism does not produce any results, will sabotage your brain and cripple your creativity and reason. Those who practice this religion spend all their time praying at the Holy Shrine of Einstein, but their 'god' gives them nothing. Was it all Einstein's sick joke on them?

Relativism recognizes no "quantum vacuum field" or ether in "empty space". Einstein's theory of gravity was wrong, because he believed in no ether. So the Relativists invented a "quantum vacuum field" with "fluctuations" (i.e., oscillations), in contradiction to their religion.

The Relativist is a mathematical creature, who confuses himself with his equations, getting high on them but getting (109 kcal/gram mole) "has" to be equal to the dissociation energy. Consequently, they never measured it directly, only extrapolated it retroactively as "equal", based on this erroneous theory.

I found a reference from a reputable source which gave the dissociation energy as 103 cal/gram mole[1], rather than the 109 k-cal/gram mole of the Relativists. I preferred that figure, since it was published by a major house, and had gone through five editions without challenge. It differed from the "norm", which was controlled by Relativist theory. Maybe, I thought, Van Nostrand was independent, since they had published some Tesla books in the early 20th century, after Relativism had begun to take over.

It is also said by Relativist theory that all that is required to dissociate diatomic hydrogen to monoatomic hydrogen, is heat energy, which is supposed to be equal "exactly" to the recombination energy. This dissociation/recombination energy is also supposed to be equal to the "bond energy" which has been broken by heat, which is then supposed to be stored in the monoatomic hydrogen atoms until released again in recombination, whereupon the broken bonds are "restored". This would have to mean that the bond energy of a diatomic molecule would have to be equal to the energy "stored" in the monoatomic atoms, minus the energy released by recombination.

My hypothesis was that the dissociation energy required to separate the diatomic atoms could not be greater than the energy of combustion of H_2 with oxygen, which produces H_2O, with a bond which is supposed to be stronger, due to the electromotive difference between oxygen and hydrogen. Using the Relativists' own standard, this means that the energy of dissociation/recombination of hydrogen is 3.76 times that for hydrogen hydrolysis/combustion. This is yet another internal contradiction in Relativist theory.

According to Langmuir, atomic hydrogen is produced directly in hydrolysis using a lead amalgam cathode. Yet, since Langmuir was a Relativist, he never measured it directly, but computed the dissociation energy backward on paper as the same as the recombination energy, assuming that the electrical wattage required to produce a gram mole of atomic hydrogen was equal to the recombination energy per gram mole of monoatomic hydrogen.

[1] Encyclopedia of Science, Van Nostrand Reinhold Company (1976), fifth edition

If the energy required to break the diatomic bonds is supposed to be equal to the 'stored' heat in dissociated atoms, and the bonds are 'restored' when the atoms recombine, the 'bonds' would still have to contain the same energy as that which had already been released during the 'restoration', according to Relativism.

Either the diatomic bond energy is "replaced" by heat on dissociation, and converted back to heat on recombination—and therefore taken away—or the heat stored "in" the mono atomic atoms only dissociates the atoms when it places enough strain on the bonds to break them. Since the bonds are restored when the heat is released, the force maintaining the bonds is neither heat nor another force converted from heat, but would still have to exist somewhere. My theory is that IR radiation ("heat") can be stored in the space between nuclei and electron clouds, as well as in intermolecular space, when dissociation occurs. The radiation remains in its original electromagnetic wave form as it bounces around inside, 'force free', reflected between the nuclei and electron clouds. Since IR radiation is of lower frequency and voltage than UV radiation, it lacks sufficient penetrating power or force to break out of this space until the recombination of the monoatomic atoms, at which time it is able to exit when the electron clouds open up, as the new diatomic electrostatic bonds re-attach.

I think the "bonds" are electrostatic ones, which can be broken by heat, by expanding or stressing the space between nuclei and electron clouds to the bonds' elastic limits, or by other radiation, or by electrostatic force. This is merely mechanical. A more efficient means of breaking the bonds should be by electrostatics. Even more effectively, they should be broken more easily by higher frequency radiation, such as UV. In addition, UV radiation transmutes hydrogen and ail other elements below atomic number 19. This should yield additional energy on reversal. This appears to involve bringing in excess charges from the ether, and holding them in the bonding spaces, as indicated by microphotos of diatomic hydrogen atoms which show extra electric charges in the inter-molecular space. This violates Relativism, representing sub-electron charges.

If electrostatics can break the bonds, the proper "arc" should be an electrostatic one, rather than a conventional AC or DC arc current, usually used to dissociate atomic hydrogen. Since it is also recognized that the process by ordinary arc discharge/heat is incomplete, perhaps electrostatics can also make it more complete. The dissociation of hydrogen by heat appears to be a mechanical one, related to the kinetic energy of the heat-induced increase in vibrations of the diatomic nuclei and electrons, caused by IR radiation. That being the case, it should also be subject to the rule that the electromagnetic interaction is 10^{40} times greater than the gravitational one.[2] This should therefore be related to the hydrogen nucleus' gravitational mass, versus the use of electrostatic force to break the bonds more efficiently, since the electromagnetic interaction should do more work on the nucleus during the same time, and should therefore improve the process.

Langmuir first noticed the atomic hydrogen reaction after hydrogen gas was passed around heated tungsten wires, believing that heat transferred to the hydrogen broke the bonds. However, tungsten may react electrostatically or catalytically to break the diatomic bonds. This 1912 experiment was originally done in Socorro, New Mexico, in a desert well-known for its high electrostatic activity. In this region it is very difficult to avoid electrostatic charges.

Neither my name nor my books are cited by some researchers who were kicked into high gear by my "cold fusion" research, my books, my thoughts and my generosity. They do not cite my work because I am not obsessed with Relativism and its orgiastic mathematics, the very things standing in their way,

I now say to them: You are welcome to use whatever I disclose in my books, but at least have the common decency to say where you got it. It is bigger to say that someone influenced you, than to pretend that you had no help when you did. And by all means, please don't try to describe things in reality with Relativist terminology.

I find it ironic that those high and mighty Relativist physicists, who looked down on me because I refused to speak their erroneous "math-ese", now appropriate my energy ideas without any attribution whatsoever, yet fail to see the available energy in reactions they have observed for years, because it has been concealed by their revered Relativism. Sooner or later, the disparity between theory and practice will become so obvious that they should be exposed as the hypocrites and idea-thieves they are. We are on the verge of a radical change in physics, and it hasn't been the result of the physics establishment itself.

VITA

William Lyne was born in Big Spring, Texas, and was raised in West Texas cattle and oilfield boom towns, with two years in the San Francisco Bay area during WWII, as a Navy brat. He enjoyed several sports, his favorites being long distance running, swimming and football. He played solo baritone horn in Waco High School Band, Texas' best high school band, in 1956, led by the immortal Lyle Skinner, in its 25th consecutive Dist. IV-A Texas Sweepstakes victory performance, and won a gold medal for his solo.

In 1956, Lyne entered the Air Force. He was removed from an Air Traffic Control School (GCA), placed in Air Force Intelligence, and granted a Top Secret Clearance, which, unknown to him at the time, was primarily to prevent his public disclosure of a Soviet spy ring he had discovered at the age of 18, while in basic training at Lackland AFB, Texas.

In 1965, Lyne acquired a B.S., with a double major (Fine Arts and Industrial Arts), Sam Houston State University, Huntsville, Texas. In 1969, he acquired an MFA in Studio Arts from the University of Texas. When he arrived in New Mexico in 1970, he was a professional artist (painting and sculpture), a profession abandoned years ago due to constant harassment orchestrated by the CIA (he refused an executive position they offered him).

Lyne has lived in New Mexico for the past thirty-one years, where he engages in energy R & D, writes, publishes, and pursues very broad interests, ranging from art to music, cinema, acting, photography, science, epigraphy and petroglyphs, archaeology, ancient history, geography, inventing, interpretation of current events and enjoying the beautiful Southwestern scenery and culture.

Lyne has three previous books presently in print: PENTAGON ALIENS (1999)(revised, expanded and renamed 3rd ed. Of his 1993 book, Space Aliens From the Pentagon); OCCULT ETHER PHYSICS (1997), revised 2nd ed. (1998); FREE ENERGY SURPRISE (1997), a technical report, involving a free-energy discovery. Lyne's next book is THE GALISTEA TANOAN-EGYPTIAN DJED FESTIVAL STONE: Thothmes Ill's Expedition to New Mexico, ca. 1625 B.C., isbn 0-9637467-3-1.

Lyne presently resides in Lamy, New Mexico, and is currently single.

PENTAGON ALIENS

THE BOOK WHICH TELLS IT ALL: WHAT FLYING SAUCERS AND UFOS ARE, WHO INVENTED THEM, HOW THEY WORK, AND WHO IS BEHIND THE CONCEALMENT OF THIS HIGH TECHNOLOGY, CARRIED OUT THROUGH DOUBLE-TALK AND FALSE "ALIEN" PROPAGANDA, AND WHY.

HAVE A MAJORITY OF PEOPLE SWALLOWED A BIG LIE DESIGNED BY A POWERFUL ELITE TO CONCEAL THINGS WHICH ARE CRUCIAL TO FUTURE AMERICAN ECONOMY, INDEPENDENCE AND SURVIVAL AS A GREAT NATION?

WAS THIS FANTASTIC TECHNOLOGY INVENTED IN THE 19TH CENTURY BY NIKOLA TESLA, AND IS THE PRESENT TOP PHYSICS' A COVER-UP OF THE REAL ETHER PHYSICS' UPON WHICH THESE SHIPS ARE BASED?

IF YOU THINK UFOS DON'T EXIST OR ARE FROM OUTER SPACE, THINK AGAIN. THIS BOOK WILL BLOW YOUR MIND.

William Lyne was born in West Texas and raised in oil boom towns. He had a Top Secret clearance in Air Force Intelligence. In 1975, he rejected a high-paying and prestigious executive CIA poition offered by director George Bush, because he believes the National Security Act of 1947 is an illegal batrayal of American sovreignty and liberty, and that the flying saucer, a man's greatest invention, should be enjoyed by all. He began research leading to this book over 50 years ago. Contains much never before published information, including photos of a celestial guidance system from a WW H-vintage Nazi "Kreisel Teller" ("Gyrating Saucer").

OCCULT ETHER PHYSICS: Tesla's Hidden Space Propulsion System and the Conspiracy to Conceal It

Is there a "Secret Physics" with a different set of rules—hidden away from us earlier in this century, by a powerful elite who fear the technology based on it will strip away their power and wealth, and liberate us from their grip? Dynamite comes in small packages, and this little stick of scientific dynamite blows apart pseudo-scientific myths and instills the truth.

FREE ENERGY SURPRISE

What did Nikola Tesla mean when he said he had found a new (environmental, free-energy) use for iron? He stated at one point, that for every 200 pounds of iron, another horsepower was added to one of his electrical generators. Why? How? In the 1890s, he spoke of using "cosmic radiation" (which he also called "Primary Solar Rays") for the generation of energy, and said this radiation—' which today we call the ZPR ("Zero Point Radiation")—interacted with the ether and matter, to produce useful electrical energy in great amounts. When Relativism was promoted in 1919, Tesla continued to assert that the theory was wrong, and challenged the proponents of the theory to find fault with his theories, and they declined to do so. Tesla claimed that the radiation produced by "radioactive elements" was actually a reaction with the ZPR. Was he right? The author of this paper, William R. Lyne, in collaboration with a reader of his books, engaged in some unusual and innovative research, and have evolved some inventions which appear to completely refute the Relativist theory of "nuclear energy" as we think we know it, showing that "E = (much more than) MC^2.

Non-fiction: A re-discovery of what the author calls “occult ether physics”, the scientific/technical basis for a space-propulsion system invented in the late 19th century by Nikola Tesla, now used in the secret, exclusively man-made flying machines known as “flying saucers” or “UFOs”. The government conceals this invention behind false scientific theories, “space alien” hoaxes, and false propaganda, disseminated through a controlled mass media. A “UFOlogy”, “new-age”, “paranormalist”, and “pseudo-debunker” network is covertly maintained under “national security laws”, to blur the facts of reality and disjoint inquiry, thus protecting the archaic technology and resources of coercive-monopolist, corporate-state interests from the competition of a truly free market.

Chapter VI is the Lyne Atomic Hydrogen Furnace, a 1964 freeenergy invention of the author.

PREFACE

The two illustrations which precede the title page are ones commissioned by Tesla in preparation for his offer of inventions to the U.S. government in 1914, which was rejected by the government, so Tesla then made his offer to Germany to which he sold them. After all, a man is entitled to a reward for his work.

This revision was made necessary in order to get closer to the basic details in regard to Tesla's space propulsion technology. To this end, subtle changes were required. The previous 3rd revised edition has already experienced suppression which could only have come from the government through its catspaws. This revision therefore is to push the envelope even further than before.

There is much consternation today about the words “cult” and “occult”, and what they mean. Many are worried that their own organizations, groups, or religions may fall into this category. Since the word “occult” merely refers to “secret” or “hidden”, it is used by doctors to describe unknown bacteria as being “occult”. As for a religion, philosophy, organization or other group activity, it is a “cult” if it utilizes “secret teachings”, made known only to a select few initiates or “priests”. Therefore, “national security secrets” are occult and hence the name for this book.

Is it possible that an entire area of physics has been declared virtually “occult” and “off-limits” to the public or to private individuals, by a powerful deep-black operations group, so that all science education or data generally available to the public has been “screened” to eliminate references to it? Is it possible that the actual science involved in “electro-propulsion” has been replaced with “bogus science”, which has been promoted and promulgated to the extent that no one except the ‘esoteric elite’ knows the truth? And if so, has the “occult” science become the exclusive province of a very few specially selected corporate/government “scientific priests”?

I began studying this controversy—including the science involved —when I was but a child of eight years, in 1946, after interviewing oil field pumpers who had seen silvery “flying disks” in the remote oil fields in the West Texas and southern New Mexico desert. At the age of 13, I spent a couple of days visiting with family friends and their neighbor, astrophysicist Dr. Lincoln La Paz, in Albuquerque, new Mexico. La Paz was then employed by the U.S. government to help cover up Nazi flying saucer technology brought to New Mexico after WW II. My early convictions were later corroborated when I acquired a piece of hardware from a 1943 German flying saucer at Sandia Base where La Paz worked.

Since the truth about Tesla’s space propulsion system is based on “ether” (A.K.A. “aether”) physics, which has been collected, hidden away, or declared “national security secrets”, or intentionally obliterated by false propaganda which is so intense that the general public remains unaware of the facts which are right under their noses, I have dubbed the ether physics ultimately connected to Tesla’s system “Occult Ether Physics”. This book is dedicated to the rediscovery of, examination of, and the integration of these secrets into the public knowledge.

The high priests of this occult knowledge are the elite owners of the coercive monopolist corporate banking, industrial, mineral and related interests, who in turn allow the initiation of certain scientists, military and government officials into their secret teachings only insofar as it is necessary, to execute and maintain a conspiracy of giant proportions, so that the technology can be classified as a “state secret” which can be controlled and enforced by means of unconstitutional “national security laws”, military and civilian legal authority, and police. These measures are intended to protect the archaic technology and resources controlled by the elite, from the competition of a truly free market society. This technology is possessed by all the world’s major governments, so we know that they aren’t hiding it from each other, they are hiding it from us, the people.

Because of the last 76 or more years of progressively intensifying false propaganda and manipulation of knowledge and science, a majority of scientists ridicule the concepts of the existence of an ether and of flying saucers, as if such thinking belonged in the category of a “flat earth” theory and the “little green men” from outer space babble, but the reverse is true. The proponents of Relativism and the Big Bang want you to believe that the universe is finite, so that, if you go “too far” you will “fall off the universe”, rather than off a “flat earth”. What’s the difference,? Flat earth...finite universe...they’re both dumb theories.

And what do the “little green men” lies—originally told in 1947 by the government at Roswell—have to do with exclusively manmade electric flying machines, and technology based on sound and well-established electrical science and physics, but which, like the existence of the ether, has been tucked away in secret vaults, to keep you from using it, while you are being fed false and useless “theories”? These range from “curved space”, “time travel”, Big Bang”, and “alien abduction” stories, to parallel universe”, “interdimensional travel”, “worm-holes in space”, and any other outrageously incredible stories, concocted by government spooks, national security personnel, and secret agents in the “UFOlogy” and “pseudo-de-bunker” communities (“pseudo-de-bunkers” in my vernacular are official government spokesmen or scientific know-italls whose job it is to completely deny the existence of flying saucers, or to ridicule their other covert government counterparts, the UFOlogists, new-agers, or paranormalists).

Before you decide there is no ether, or no flying saucers, or before you believe the often-told “prime time” lies that aliens are “here”, or that time travel is possible, you should ask yourself whether or not your thinking on these subjects has been conditioned by Big Brother’s Biggest Lies. If you believe in relativism, I should point out that “time travel” is an integral part of that, which is a very incredible impossibility which makes the so-called “science” you rely on a worthless piece of pseudo-intellectual crap promoted by someone who wanted to sabotage your mind on behalf of the self-appointed high priests of “Occult Ether Physics”.

Is your thinking a barometer of thought-control mediocrity? Are you so out of control of your own metaphysical concepts and epistemology, that you have to get your thinking from the “canned goods” section of NASA (NAZIA), courtesy of the CIA’s Office of Scientific Intelligence (“OSI”)? Is your education a frozen “TV dinner”, prepared by a Secret Government, so you’ll never discover the real food for thought?

For those of you who may be unfamiliar with my more complete exposition of the whys, wherefores, whos and other facts concerning the huge volume of false propaganda designed and disseminated on behalf of the coercive monopolist corporate state, to conceal flying saucer propulsion and other advanced and “free energy” technology, you should read my other books-- Pentagon Aliens (copyright 1993, 1995, 1999 (3rd Edition), ISBN 0-9637467-7-4, and Occult

The flying saucer is a product of Nikola Tesla’s life work, his most fundamentally important invention, for which he said all his other inventions were in pursuit of, though you have probably never heard this fact from anyone else. How do I know? I have documented it in many years of research, tracing Tesla’s developments and his own words uttered and published during his lifetime, in scattered, sparse yet sufficient sources, as he placed a crowning achievement on top the work of the world’s greatest scientific minds of the nineteenth century, who were Tesla’s inspirations. And this invention has been concealed above all others by governments throughout the world. But they could not conceal everything, as there were already bits and pieces of information which were already widely published before they got their concealment act together.

It was supposedly proved, on May 29, 1919, “...that we live in a curved four-dimensional space-time”. Albert Einstein said a massive body spinning in space “...would drag space and time around with it...”, the origin of so-called “frame-dragging” and “space curvature”. “Gravity is no longer a mysterious force acting at a distance but the result of an object trying to travel in a straight line through space curved by the presence of material bodies”. (Gary Taubes, Relativists in Orbit , Discover, March, 1997).

Even such theories...relativistic bromides interlaced with such phrases as “the “fabric of space-time”, “space curvature”, and “frame-dragging”, although off-the-wall ludicrous, suggest the existence of an ether, albeit an erroneous concept of the ether.

Since 1919, Nikola Tesla’s propulsive discoveries have been concealed by government suppression, theft, and ridicule, while theoretical physics has become a pseudo-scientific mathematical shell-game which bears little new fruit, and less resemblance to reality. And this highly dubious “pop” physics is primarily what is spread by the media, while practicing physicists don't have much time for it. It is time for the truth as far as I am able to determine it.

INTRODUCTION: NIKOLA TESLA’S ORIGINAL 1875 PLAN

Tesla’s original vision, in his 1870s student days, of his “ideal flying machine”, the realization of which is why he said he entered the field of mechanical engineering in 1875 in the first place; this was the problem which he had assigned to himself as his main lifelong work. (Frank Parker Stockbridge. The Tesla Turbine, The World's Work, March, 1912, pp. 543-48). The ship actually works on mechanical principles, but is actuated by electrostatic impulses. More on this later.

Originally anticipating that the electrical power needs for an electrostatically-actuated mechanical craft would be too great for an on-board power plant (since his ship was to be devoid of sustaining planes), he initially embarked on developing his "wireless transmission of power" system, so as to transmit the power needed from ground-based power generators and stations. The "power" being transmitted was actually mechanical in nature. Some of these earlier Tesla ideas turned out to be unnecessary for his flying machine, so he turned them for appropriate commercial purposes. Since his concept of the ether was of a relatively low-density one, and his earlier conception of the necessary force was not nearly so much stronger than the gravitational one as it later turned out to be, his later discovery that his anticipated electrical power needs were so much greater than that actually required, led to changes in his craft, and produced plenty of surplus "spin-off" technologies.

As stated in the Preface, in 1914, at a time when he was in great need of money, Tesla unsuccessfully attempted to interest the U.S. government in submarine and propulsion technology. In an article prepared by Tesla but never published, Tesla said "...we should push the development of flying machines and wireless transmission of energy without an instant's delay and with all the power and resources of the nation". The immediate association here is between "flying machines" (not "aeroplanes") and "wireless transmission of energy". Tesla had piles of patents which produced him no money, because the Morgans and Rockefellers had declared them off limits. No one could borrow money from the banks to put one of these systems into practice, and anyone who was foolish enough to do so on their own money could expect the wrath of the gods to come down on them like lightening bolts from Zeus.

In 1914 Tesla sold his technology to the German Minister of High Marine, Admiral Alfred von Tirpitz. Tesla had also failed to interest anyone in the development of his wireless energy transmission system. He made the imminent discovery that his onboard power needs would not be so great, saying "...weight is no object". In 1913 Tesla had obtained a patent on a remarkable turbine he had invented about 1909, which solved his on-board power needs for his flying machine. This was probably in view of encouraging developments and awareness which showed that the electromagnetic interaction is 10^{40} times stronger than the gravitational interaction (George Gamow, Gravity, Anchor Books, N.Y. [1962], p. 138) According to Hendrick Lorenz, the electrical attractive force is 2x 10^{39} times stronger than the gravitational attractive force.

In an interview for a 1912 book, A Boy's Book of New Inventions - The Tesla Turbine, Tesla further revealed some details of his system when he stated the following: "As I told you before when we were talking of the wireless transmission of power, the mechanism will be a development of the principle on which my turbine is constructed. It will be so tremendously powerful that it will make a veritable rope of air above the great machine to hold it at any altitude the navigators may choose, and also a rope of air in front or in the rear to send it forward or backward at almost any speed desired. When that day comes, airship travel will be as safe and prosaic as travel by railroad train today, and not much very different, except that there will be no dirt, and it will be much faster. One will be able to dine in New York, retire in an aero Pullman berth in a closed and perfectly furnished car, and arise to breakfast in London."

It was also implied that in producing the "ropes" the Tesla coil was used to produce rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials to create longitudinal sound waves in the ether for hundreds of miles through the air. The "equal and opposite reaction" to these waves was to bring back to the ship what are called "tubes of force" which carry mechanical momentum and, what Tesla's description appears to say, to lock onto a huge mass of ether molecules to pull the ship forward. As I witnessed on the ship I saw in 1953, an electrostatic envelope surrounded the ship as it moved without air friction, shock wave or sonic boom at around 36,000 mph. The description in the above quote by Tesla also sounds like a "tractor beam" technology. The principle of Tesla's turbine was to use the adhesiveness and viscosity of rapidly moving gases to propel his turbine blades around. Applying this same principle to his aircraft would use the adhesiveness and viscosity of the ether applied through a steady brush discharge, to impart momentum to pull his ship through space.

There was a change in Tesla's strategy which seems to have occurred between this 1912 and 1915 tests of an electro-mechanically powered missile using wireless energy projected to it by a power beam from the ground. These new developments were probably spurred on by necessity—the "mother of invention"—since without a wireless energy system, the prior conception would be rather useless. The power monopolists could fight that off forever, so Tesla was left to his own devices, unable to count on anyone else. Typical for a true genius, when he was thwarted in one direction he found another way.

The earlier conceptions must have been still in Tesla's mind when he developed the turbine commercially under the Tesla Propulsion Company slogan, "20 Horsepower Per Pound", with the intention of also using the turbine to drive one of his specially designed high frequency alternators to power his ideal flying machine. After having developed such a light and powerful turbine, which could turn upwards of 30,000 rpm., with a ten pound unit producing 200 break horsepower on gasoline, he also designed and received a patent in 1928 for a new kind of "VTOL" (Vertical Takeoff and Landing)
-type propellor-driven airplane, to be powered by two turbines mounted in tandem, which would counteract the torque of the prop, and avoid the need for the stabilizing rotors that helicopters have on their back fuselages. This aircraft, if built, would have had a superior weight-to-horsepower ratio—perhaps three-to-one—and would have been fast in level flight, taking off vertically.

On seeing the inefficient heavier aircraft engines then in use, and the requirements of more cumbersome aircraft with greater wing area but lower wing-area-to-weight ratios, Tesla apparently wished to commercialize on the turbine by designing and patenting the new airplane, which specifically used his turbine, to raise needed capital to complete research and development on his more expensive flying machine project. In his experiences with prior patents, he must have learned that a patent would be worthless unless he could get the needed capital to carry the project out before the patent period expired, and that the disclosure in a patent would allow others to do so only 17 years after a patent might be granted to him, during which time his invention could languish for lack of funding on his part, because the monolithic financial interests were set against him. And yet there was the patented airplane and no one built it.

While in the initial stages of development, Tesla seemed quite unaware of the true power of "the force", until his early field tests proved that it was "tremendous". In the years 1893 and 1894, Tesla had "completely worked out" his Dynamic Theory of Gravity", that is, at least in "theory". Inherent to that theory, was his propulsion system, yet in the formative and theoretical stages. To publish his theory however, would have been tantamount to disclosing the basic technology as well, which would have allowed his competitors with more money and resources to complete and take credit for the most important work of his life, and the greatest invention of mankind. Tesla lacked the necessary money, and could not raise it. He could not protect himself by patent, until he completed and tested a working model of large enough scale to impress the aircraft industry and the government. Fatefully, it was during this time of greatest financial need, when he still had the physical stamina to carry the project out, that he was run ragged by bill collections and foreclosures, at the behest of J.P. Morgan and his cohorts, all with the intent of crushing Tesla because he kept coming up with new electric power systems which made his prior systems obsolete. Since the newer systems would have ruined Morgan and Rockefeller, and since any invention which Tesla marketed for great profit would have allowed him the resources to build more energy systems, he had to be crushed. Tesla never seemed to fully realize that Morgan’s pseudophilanthropy became nothing more than a scheme to compromise Tesla’s contract with himself, and a way of falsely inducing his reliance on others rather than on himself. This treatment set Tesla back emotionally as well as financially, after he had invested all his cash in his project, and reduced him at one point to a heap of groveling nerves, literally begging Morgan to make good on his promises, to no avail, but like all truly tragic figures, there was a peripides—a reassertion of the tragic hero’s excellent and untarnished Arturian powers—before he passed heroically into the oblivion of death, as his discoveries, like the sword Excalibur, sank beneath the waves of the lake of ‘national security’ lies, to the inurement of corporate greed, coercion and extortion.

The only power that Tesla seemed to have left, was that of withholding his discoveries from the world, to protect his secrets from the pilfering paws of the looters, until and unless he could receive the compensation and credit which he deserved, but that didn’t matter, because they got it all before his corpse was cool, and never paid him so much as a dime for his trouble.

After becoming aware of the true power of “the force”—one hundred billion thousand trillion thousand trillion times stronger than gravity—Tesla began to pursue the idea of an “on-board” power system for a manned craft to be used for personal and commercial transportation, with his “wireless transmission of power” to be relegated to a robotic, remote controlled, electric powered transmission of mechanical power to a “missile” from the ground, for use in warfare. After a long period of silence following his field testing of a working model of the electro-mechanically propelled missile in 1915, Tesla began referring to the propelling force as “tremendous” in his later announcements which began in the ‘30s. “Tremendous” does not mean something which reacts feebly, to barely get off the ground, but to something which rises with great and astounding force, such as the way I saw a flying saucer perform in 1953...only ten years after Tesla's death. If "tremendous" meant something like an airplane or conventional rocket—as the CIA/NASA mis-informers have idiotically attempted to misconstrue —then what would be the word to describe a force which propels a flying saucer at 36,000 mph in three seconds?

The words "means of propulsion" used by Tesla in his 1940 interview with William L. Laurence of the New York Times are of the utmost importance for those interested in understanding both the misinformation conspiracy as well as the scanty documentation of Tesla's concealed discoveries. In their context, these words denoted something which was different from the autos, planes, trains and ships then in existence, else why mention them and why would it be "new"? These words obviously meant an on-board electromechanical means to be used on his "ideal" flying machine, either manned or unmanned, controlled "mechanically" by a pilot on board, or "remotely by wireless energy" by a controller on the ground. It did not refer to a "projectile" such as a "pellet" or "bullet", which had no "propulsion system", and was merely "repelled" by a gun of some sort, and it did not refer to any kind of aerodynamic "airplane"—hence Tesla used the term "flying machine"—since his machine was to have no wings, ailerons, propellers or "outer appurtenances of any kind". "Propulsion" here means an on-board system for perpetuation of motion by electromechanical means supplied with electrical power by either on-board turbine-driven generator or by mechanical energy and control signals transmitted by power beam from the ground. The idea of interplanetary travel appealed to Tesla, with the idea that, so long as the energy for propulsion could be transmitted from the earth, a space ship would require no fuel tanks. But the term "veritable ropes of air" raises a question as to whether these ships will work in outer space.

In a letter to his friend and financial supporter B.A. Behrend in the 1930's, Tesla referred cryptically to what may have been his propulsion discovery: "What I shall accomplish by that other invention I came specially to see you about, I do not dare to tell you. This is stated in all seriousness". Tesla may have been inferring a plan to discover "other worlds" in outer space, if some version of his flying machines would work there. We really can't know for certain how all of Tesla's secret inventions worked but the government knows. There seemed to be some differences between Tesla's earlier statements and later ones which indicate that he had several different related inventions and that he may not have understood himself exactly how some of them worked.

Tesla said that all bodies contain "electrical content" and that they behave as resonant bodies which interact with rapidly varying electrostatic forces and ether to determine their gravitational interactions and movements in space. These theories were tested and confirmed to some degree in his 1899 Colorado Springs experiments. The U.S. government never gave Tesla the time of day, and his great propulsion discovery slipped into the eager hands of the Nazi elite, when Wernher von Braun engaged and began development in the “p2 Projekt” at Los Alamos, New Mexico in 1936. Tesla apparently participated—in fact may have been the project leader—in these early tests in New Mexico from 1936 to 1938. Von Braun took the data back to Germany in the Winter of 1937, where research and development was conducted at Peenemünde in the Baltic, with underground manufacturing facilities elsewhere in Germany, until these secrets and others were traded to American corporations and the U.S. government in exchange under Operation Paperclip, just after the armistice, for amnesty for many war criminals, along with an agreement for several thousand people to work for the U.S. government and American corporations. Anyone having important technical information was protected. The Nuremberg Tribunal was a show trial which did not prosecute anyone having advanced or “strategic” technical knowledge or abilities even though they may have been guilty of crimes against humanity.

I have always associated the ship which I saw up close in 1953 with Tesla technology, because of the copious electrostatic discharges (which I call “Tesla discharges”) because it was obviously an electric flying machine, and because the ship’s precession indicated gyroscopic stabilizers as Tesla emphasized. And because the ship moved with a force consistent with the fact that the electromagnetic interaction is 1040 times greater than the gravitational interaction.

In 1912-14 Tesla mentioned “veritable ropes of air” which “pulled” his ship through space (there being no “thrusting” from behind) and said that his ship utilized the same phenomena—the adhesiveness and viscosity of fast moving gas—as that which propelled his smooth turbine blades around, except in this case the “gas” he referred to was the ether. He stated that his ship or a missile based on his system could be “...dropped on any point on the globe” electrically. Is it possible that Tesla stumbled on something much more powerful when conducting tests, attempting to use air? Is it possible that J. J. Thomson’s description of the specific action of the technology involving the ether is more accurate (that “...the aether is itself a storehouse of mechanical momentum”)?

There are those who have interpreted or will interpret Tesla’s statements as meaning that his flying machine technology was simply a matter of using his turbine and Tesla pump to suck air in and shoot it out the rear of the machine to produce the thrust to “repel” it like a “jet” engine, yet we know this is wrong because of Tesla’s use of the word “pull”, and there is no way to create a “rope-like” column of air with only his turbine and pump powerful enough to “pull” his ship. And there is certainly no technology based on such a primitive idea which could accelerate a ship to 36,000 mph in three seconds as I observed, with no sonic boom or shock wave. And with no intake ports or jet nozzles on the rear. But there is a technology based on Tesla principles which could and did do so electrostatically, and that technology appears to have been more cogently described by J. J. Thomson. And it is also possible that what J. J. Thomson described was partially technology which Tesla was attempting to keep secret.

Thomas Edison joined the Theosophist organization of Madame Blavatsky in 1872. Their main activity seemed to be industrial espionage, concealed behind a veil of an interest in mysticism. I think Edison used the organization to steal technology from other inventors. Tesla was invited to join in 1895 and he refused. His laboratory was burned to the ground soon after his refusal. J. J. Thomson was also associated with the Theosophists. Was some of the technology he described obtained from Tesla through Theosophist espionage?

The REAL Cover-up

Ever since Tesla’s saucer discovery came under the control of the U.S. government in 1945, there has been in effect a false propaganda program—originally developed by the RSHA VI— Reichsicherheitampt VI, or “National Security Agency Division 6"— the division of the Gestapo which was invested with the highest secrets of the German Reich (managed by General Reinhard Gehlen) which included and controlled in Nazi Germany the equivalent to our own UFOlogy, new age—and what I call the “pseudo-skeptic misinformation dissemination network.” The U.S. government simply employed the whole Nazi saucer counterintelligence apparatus, and it was some of the original Nazi personnel employed at Holloman, A.F.B., at Alamogordo, New Mexico, who designed and implemented the 1947 “Roswell Hoax”. Though shadowed with ostensible military and “national security” vestiges, this cover-up has been protracted on behalf of a coercive monopolist corporate state— even in Germany —ever since the acquisition of the secrets by the Nazis, for if the technology had gotten even into the hands of private Germans at that time, the Nazi state’s days would have been ever so much more shortly numbered.

Can you imagine the effect of this kind of transportation technology in private hands? It would allow the common man to go anywhere in the world, to visit all the places which he cannot presently afford the airline fare to. Yet a small, privately-owned flying saucer would cost less than an automobile to build, would use practically no fuel, would travel thousands of miles per hour, would last a long time, and would require practically no maintenance.

Can you imagine the effect it would have on totalitarian communist, fascist or corporate state governments and ‘privileged’ economic interests? Can you see the bottom drop out of the overpriced real estate market, when it suddenly became possible to live anywhere, even in places where there are no roads? Can you see the problems along the borders of countries, if saucers could fly across and back without checking through “customs”? (The conservatives and totalitarians are horrified by this possibility, as if our borders do not already leak like sieves.) The main problems, as you can see, are with the paranoid and criminal fears of power crazy authorities and coercive monopolist industrial interests, who would suddenly lose a lot of the power necessary for them to keep their “jobs” protecting and maintaining the interests of themselves and the coercive elite of whatever kind.

These considerations are the ones which indicate the perpetrators of any “cover-up”. There is much talk on TV programs, radio talk shows, newspapers, books, magazines and videos about a “...coverup of our government doing business with aliens for fifty years”, etc. But if you can see it on prime-time TV every night of the week, the only “cover-up” which can be presumed, is one which is opposite to the one they pretend to be telling you about. Such programs are the cover-up. The volume of these lies is so great that it is almost incredible, considering the fact that they are evidence of our own government covertly acting behind the scenes to lie to us. Whenever government is involved in broadcasting such trashy BIG LIES to every household in America, it is good cause to ask, “What else are they lying to us about?”

This book, along with my prior ones, are dedicated to the objective of bringing this technological secrecy and socio-economic dictatorship to an end. We are being robbed of our future. This 2010 Edition was called for because between the Second Edition of 1998 and the present, more information has come to me, but the original nature of the cover-up has never changed since 1947.

CHAPTER I: THE OCCULT ETHER THEORY AND ELECTRO-MECHANICAL PROPULSION

MECHANICAL PROPULSION

The theory which I espouse in this book is based on what can be corroborated throughout the words and developments of Nikola Tesla and their logically construed implications, in combination with other special information linked to that, as presented here and in my prior book, Space Aliens From the Pentagon (now in its Third Edition as PENTAGON ALIENS). This theory is close to Tesla's Dynamic Theory of Gravity, and I like to think that it even suggests some corrections that Tesla himself made or would have made if we only knew what is concealed in government vaults.

Like most theories, this theory is incomplete, may contain errors, and will require further development, tests, corrections, and revisions, either by myself or by others in the future. I have stated here my basic thinking on the subject up to this time, which has progressed somewhat since my prior books.

Since this book is for the greatly uninformed public, as well as for the researcher, I will make an effort to couch it in laymen's terms —for I am myself a layman—and will provide some illustrations where helpful, to give a reasonable grasp of my concepts based on Tesla's concepts which I have developed as a consequence of what I have also witnessed. I do this rather than engage in a "quantum mechanical" mathematical orgy, which is usually combined with pages of dull equations and numbers which proceed logically from the contradictory and unproven illogical premises which are so prized by that ilk. It is as if to say, "Hey! Look at me Ma, I can do lots of math!"

"Ether Physics" by its very nature and name is subatomic physics, which to me means "sub-protonic" and "sub-electronic". I am not so concerned with sub-atomic nuclear particles per se, but rather with what I believe are the finite building blocks of the proton and electron, which exist within the ether in simpler form. I will leave all the quarks, muons, mesons, leptons, etc. to the "Relativistic Quantum Mechanics" (hence "R.Q.M.s") and their "elegant equations".

Characteristics of Basic Ether Particles

The basic ether particle, on order to respond to the negative electrostatic D.C. Potentials described by Tesla, must have a positive nucleus—a "protette"—and a negative sub-electron—an "electrette", and is surrounded by an insulative fluid as Tesla said. As you may have noticed, this scheme is a scaled-down version of the basic hydrogen atom, with its proton and electron. Like most atoms, it is the basic hydrogen atom, with its proton and electron. Like most atoms, it is normally neutral and in equilibrium, but is much smaller, being ultra-fine. Due to its tiny size and neutrality, it can pass easily through solid bodies which it permeates as it moves, yet the ether as a whole behaves like a solid in respect to rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials of specific frequencies, from the infra-red through the visible light frequencies, which disturb its equilibrium, yet, though we can feel it, it appears to be transparent and invisible to the naked eye.

Like hydrogen gas, there is some elasticity, so it is “elastic” as Tesla said, but is incompressible. Due to the tiny size, so called “empty space” is virtually packed with this very fine matter, which oscillates at such high frequencies—well beyond that of x-rays—yet the tiny size and normal neutrality allows it to penetrate “solid mass”—which is mostly “space” (which is also saturated with ether which must be moved through by a mass). And as J. J. Thomson said, “The ether is the storehouse of mechanical momentum”.

Since interstellar space is equivalent to a vacuum containing little gaseous matter of the conventional type—such as a Lenard tube in which charges easily move—ether-filled interstellar space is permeated by charges moving freely along frozen magnetic lines of force as Hannes Alfvén said.

Ether-packed space is also omni-directionally interpenetrated by ultra-fine radiation, which Tesla called “Primary Solar Rays”, which Tesla said were positive particles propelled by enormous repulsive forces in stars. I think these Primary Solar Rays may constantly “twang” the electron clouds of atomic matter, creating or powering “electron orbits”, which may be in fact standing waves in the undulating layers of particulate electronic clouds surrounding atoms and molecules. Since the matter with which these electron clouds are associated is in constant motion, the clouds are currents, since a “charge carried around is a current”. The driving force behind the currents appears to be the motion and the Primary Solar Rays, also by a conversion of weak forces into strong ones. Any lost momentum is ‘made up’ by the Primary Solar Rays and the conversion of weak to strong forces, the ultimate source of extra force (“free energy”) needed to make up for the losses in the universe. The conversion of weak forces into stronger forces will do more work in the same period of time. The Primary Solar Rays are an example of this process. With the UFO, the gravitational, kinetic force of a turbine propelled by chemical reaction is converted into electrostatic force which is much stronger than gravity. This is free energy.

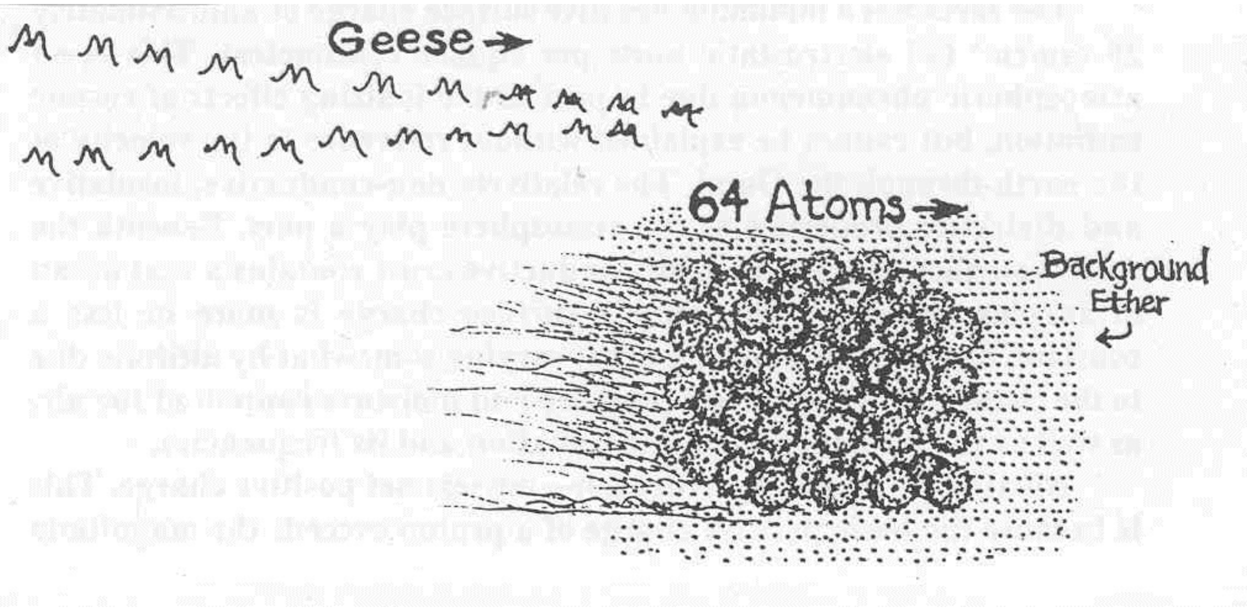
The ether must have an almost balanced charge-to-mass ratio, and respond to both positive and negative electrostatic potentials. Tesla said the positive or negative aspects depended on the conditions. Electrostatic generators provide a good example of the electrical behavior of the ether. At sufficiently high voltages the positive and negative dynamic sub-charges are separated by magnetic fields and condensed as electrons and “holes”. There is some unknown underlying reason why these charges are of specific magnitude, which is yet to be explained, but the quantum theory— originated by ether physicist Max Planck—practically admits that there are subdivisions of basic electrical charges, and that electrons are not “indivisible”. This is one basic bone of contention, since if electrons are divisible, Relativism must fall. I think the “basic charge” which has been perceived as that of the electron, appears to be time-related, since electrical current moves virtually at the same speed as light, therefore my opinion is that the electron charge is probably the quantity of charge accumulated from a discrete number of negative sub-charges carried by ether over some discrete unit of time due to the positive mass units of ether composing a proton. This may in turn reflect the distance traveled through space of a proton during that time, with the charges circulating as a current between the ether and grosser matter.

High voltage force—either in electrostatic impulses or in radiation—is apparently necessary to force the ether to form momentum-carrying tubes of force, as an ‘equal and opposite reaction’. The principle applies to Tesla’s propulsion system, which was a sort of electro-mechanical one. Strong, high voltage, negative charges are necessary to penetrate the insulating fluid surrounding the ether to react with the positive ether mass to cause the “inertia resistance” of the ether to be “asserted” as Tesla said, so as to access its mass—and that of the atmospheric gases locked to it—to be possibly pulled against by the ship. The screwing force of tubes of force which rotate around irrotational vacuous ether cores may be the “positive mechanical action” referred to by Tesla and the “pulling force” involved. Unless the tubes of force are dissolved in the conductors of the ship imparting momentum to it, as J. J. Thomson said (more on this later). The tubules could be the product of the rotation imparted by a magnetic field to electrical currents, which are consolidated to effect changes in momentum.

The rapidly-varying electrostatic forces emanating from the earth rigidify the ether within the earth’s electric field, which may form a virtual stationary anchor which an electro-mechanical craft may possibly lock onto to propel itself through space. Although the ether ‘anchors’ are stationary relative to the earth and carried along by the earth’s electric field, this carry-along ether has a and carried along by the earth's electric field, this carry-along ether has a velocity of many thousands of miles per hour relative to the ether outside the earth's electric field. Just as the so-called “gravity field” diminishes as the square of the distance, the relative movement of the ether decreases outside the earth's electric field.

If gross matter is formed of ether particles, what is the “mortar” which holds them together? Tesla said the ether was particles within an “insulating fluid”. This fluid is apparently what ‘wets’ positive bodies and particles as a ‘perfect fluid’ which flows everywhere. Does it have viscosity and adhesiveness? If it does then forcing the incompressible medium past or through the ship could be the key, sort of like swimming under water.

While the ether is invisible to the eye—because its period of vibration is beyond the visible frequencies—it is not imperceptible. As we move, we can feel the ether accelerating, decelerating, or changing directions within our bodies. When running, we feel the resistance (“inertia”) created within the atoms of our body, as a response to changes in momentum, as the tubes of force are forced in different directions or in accelerating or decelerating pathways through the atoms and molecules of our body. Once we reach a constant velocity, we can feel how the tubes of force ‘bore’ through our mass, delivering the momentum the ether carries, which tends to carry us along in level and straight lines (the paths of least resistance). Once in constant velocity we must supply only whatever momentum is shed through wind or mechanical friction or erratic movement, in order to maintain constant velocity, and we can feel all this. We can also see the effects of the ether in the behavior of everyday objects—the way they resist changes in movement, fall, accelerate, gain momentum, tumble, roll, collide, shatter, bounce, or come to rest. I analogize a solid mass to a flock of geese, maintaining its “formation” (“shape”) as it flies trough the air (ether) as a single unit:



Newton’s laws fail to tell us “why” gravity exists, what forces create it, or why the force varies “directly proportional to the masses, and inversely proportional to the square of the distance between (the centers of the) bodies”. If gravity is a force at a distance, why would a body in outer space be completely free of it? Why would the force of gravity between the earth, for example, and the moon, not affect a body floating in outer space between the two? If that were true, would the force selectively pass through the body without affecting it? This fact negates Newton’s laws. Even Newton explicitly admitted that his laws failed to address causes, and only claimed to mathematically describe “apparent effects”. But what may “appear” to be true may not be all or any of the truth.

“Electrical content” is inherent to all solid matter. Atoms contain nuclei composed of positive protons and neutral neutrons (neutered by the tightly bound electrons within them). Around these nuclei are negative electrons. All matter which contains electrostatic charges and is in motion, represents “electric charges carried around”, hence currents, which create magnetic fields. Since magnetic fields impart rotation to electromagnetic fields, this creates rotatory electromagnetic tubules within the ether within the fields. These tubules rotate around irrotational vacuous cores in space and within solid bodies relative to their motions, and are aligned by the relative motion along the axis of a uniform or changing movement, and impart momentum when dissolved in a body. While at any given time the pitch and diameter of a micro-helix is fixed, it involves a logarithmic spiral or vortex either inward or outward each time the velocity changes, and the pitch resists, then adjusts to the new momentum or direction. But with Tesla’s system this polarity of movement can be changed

But with Tesla's system this polarity of movement can be changed electromagnetically, so that all the internal reactions can be instantly reoriented, thus eliminating such things as centrifugal force and inertia, created by the tendency to remain in a particular state of motion.

According to Tesla, the earth and all electrostatically charged bodies have a maximum negative surface charge of approximately 20 esu/cm2 (20 electrostatic units per square centimeter), an atmospheric phenomenon due in part to the ionizing effects of cosmic radiation and lightening. The relatively non-conductive, insulating and dielectric properties of the atmosphere play a part. Beneath the earth’s surface charge, the semi-conductive crust contains a vast ocean of surplus electrons. The earth’s surface charge is more or less a constant, due to the earth’s surface area, varying somewhat by altitude due to the changes in atmospheric pressure and moisture content of the air, as well as the incidence of cosmic radiation and its frequencies. This charge leaks upward constantly but is maintained by lightening.

The nuclei of all atoms—including hydrogen—possess net positive charge. This is because the basic positive charge of a proton exceeds slightly the magnitude of the basic negative charge of the electron. Hydrogen, with its single proton and single electron, has the highest charge-to-mass ratio and the lowest gravity of all elements. As one moves up Mendeleev’s periodic table of elements, progressively increasing in complexity and mass number above hydrogen, elements possess progressively lower charge-to-mass ratios, since the comparative ratios of electrons match the number of only the protons in the nuclei. Yet since the neutrons are not negative, they add to the positive mass relative to the atom, but contribute nothing to effective electrical charge, and the ratio of neutrons and mass increases up the chart. In relation to the earth, this leaves an excess positive mass, the semi-conductive surface of which is capable of receiving and maintaining a negative charge surplus, mostly brought to earth by the thousands of lightening bolts per second, and retained due to the dielectric and insulating properties of the atmosphere.

The constant electrical discharges from the atmosphere by lightening are driven by the cosmic rays and motion of the earth, which converts the electrostatic charges to currents. This was confirmed by H.A. Rowland’s experiment. Since atmospheric gases are insulators, the mostly alkaline, semi-conductive crust of the earth is largely an electron donor material, which maintains a large reservoir of negative charges insulated by the atmosphere. Cosmic rays striking the rarified light gases of the ionosphere, maintain the ionosphere’s positive charge.

The excess negative charges of the earth are meanwhile ejected constantly by the rapidly-varying electrostatic discharges (the “microwaves”) which Tesla discovered. The effects of gravity also helps, since helium and hydrogen, both light, electropositive gases, gravitate to the ionosphere. Between the ionosphere, ca. 620 miles above, and the earth’s surface, there is a gradient of ca. 150 volts/meter, totaling about 176 million volts, creating a considerable electric field, but the electric field extends far beyond the ionosphere. This electric field creates electrical displacement in the ether within it. The effects of the electric field on the ether is almost instantaneous, since near the speed of light, as the ether passes from “free space” into mass, where the gravitational force is exerted downward, toward the source of the electric field. The relative weakness of the so-called gravitational force however might be due to bodies on earth being pulled upward due to the downward motion of the tubes of force being brought down by the rapidly-varying electrostatic discharges from the earth.

There is no significant gravitational effect of earth’s field above this electric field. Since earth’s magnetic field encompasses the moon, so does the electric field. When the ether is placed within a strong electric field, it is polarized and the negative charges on it are attracted by the positive pole (ionosphere) and repelled by the negative pole (earth). The effect of these attractive/repulsive forces is to “displace” the ether, and to place the dielectric atmosphere and the ether within a strain. Tesla and other ether physicists said this strain was the cause of gravitational effects.

The Cause of the Apparent “Inverse Square” Law of Gravity?

As earth spins, the surface velocity—and the atmospheric velocity with it—at any point varies according to its distance from the earth’s axis. An object sitting at sea level moves slower than a body on top Mt. Everest. The voltage potential between the atmospheric gases at higher altitude and the ionosphere is lower, but the voltage potential between the atmosphere and the surface of Mt. Everest is higher, which, along with lower air pressure explains the increased coronal discharges on mountain tops.

The differences in these electrical potentials illustrates why there are differences in relative displacement of the ether within both earth’s “gravity field” and within bodies moving within that field, with a degree of displacement which is directly proportional to difference in so-called “gravitational force” and the dielectric strain.

This comparison suggests that a body at a higher altitude and velocity has a lower gravity because the electric field has a lower displacing influence on the ether . This is pertinent to electropropulsion because we must diminish, reverse, magnify and otherwise control this displacement in order to instantly synthesize and control inertia, momentum, and “gravity”. This displacement influences the momentum because it affects the vibrating microhelical tubules and the way they “bore” through etheric space. “Gravity” appears to be a product of the resistance to a change in ether displacement. The reason why a moving sphere when charged experiences an increase in its “virtual mass”—that is, an increase in the work required to move it, but not an increase in its gravity—is because the “Faraday cage” effect of the increased charges tends to increase the resistance to the movement of the mass through the ether, apparently effected by the negative surface charges on the sphere.

Tubes of Force

Due to the cosmic motion of earth, electrostatic, molecular charges become currents, which create magnetic fields within atoms, molecules, and sometimes ponderable bodies such as iron. As stated before, as earth moves through the ether, rapidly-varying electrostatic impulses from the earth rigidify the ether within earth’s electric field, causing the ether within the field to be carried along.

The tubes—what Tesla called “moving molecules”—may function like drills, tending to bore straight paths at a constant pitch and linear velocity, around irrotational vacuous cores (consistent with Newton’s laws for inertia and momentum). Any change in direction or velocity would apparently be met by a resistance (“inertia”). Since all mass is already in motion, it always has momentum, acquired from the ether. The inertia exhibited by a body at rest relative to earth is apparently a product of its momentum, so this inertia is really momentum. Inertia is therefore a resistance of a body to change in its state of momentum. The two words are used in different ways, to define “relative changes” in velocity and/or orientation, but no body is “at rest”.

Since the ether near the spinning earth is subjected to the negative impulses (the “current”) and the positive mass of the earth, the ether forms tubes of force which are attracted downward. With the theory of the moving tubes of force a mass acquires momentum from the tubes entering it. Under this reasoning, a body sitting at relative rest on the surface of the earth would be attracted upwards. So what attracts the body downward? Could it be that the momentum through space that the body already has is somehow being re-directed downward through space that the body already has is somehow being re-directed downward by the earth’s electric field? Could the momentum from the tubes of force which carry the body through space along with the earth be partially deflected downward by vertical tubes of force? If gravity is the product of a body’s reaction to the ether’s resistance to a change in its momentum, transferred to a mass due to its constantly changing movement, orientation and velocity as it moves through universal ether-filled space, gravity could be explained. The explanation provided by Sir William Thomson and Nikola Tesla are given later in this book.

More on Tesla’s Primary Solar Rays

According to Tesla, in addition to the ether all space is omnidirectionally interpenetrated by ubiquitous “Primary Solar Rays”, particles repelled by positive forces, causing extremely high velocity and energy. This is electrostatic inductance, using repulsive rather than attractive forces. These rays are the product of particles which are projected by the enormous voltages of stars, including our sun. They may be similar to what contemporary physicists have called Zero Point Radiation (“ZPR”). One scientist has attributed so-called “blackbody radiation” to the ZPR (T.H. Boyer, Derivation of Blackbody Radiation Spectrum Without Quantum Assumptions, Phys. Rev. 182 [5], pp. 1374-83 [1969]). Boyer also found that a nonlinear dipole can absorb energy from particular modes of the ZPR spectrum (Random Electrodynamics: The theory of classical electrodynamics with classical electromagnetic zero-point radiation, Phys. Rev. D 11 [4], pp. 790-808 [1975]). Another scientist claimed to measure the energy density of ZPR at 1094 grams/cm3 , for individual fluctuations of random ZPR, on the scale of the Planck length (10-33 cm.), by means of a standard radiation detector, the frequency response of which was specially altered to extend into the super high frequency spectrum involved (J. A. Wheeler, Geometrodynamics, Academic Press, N.Y. [1962]). In my final chapter, I detail what I think is the extraction of Primary Solar Ray energy in the atomic hydrogen process.

These particular researches of 1962 to 1975 are ex post facto, coming long after Tesla’s great discoveries. They merely confirm that, in order for such intense radiation to pass through space packed with an even finer ether, probably consisting of ultra-fine bundles of positive mass, surrounded by negative charges and an “insulating medium”, as well as passing through other planets and the earth, it would require the enormous force that Tesla described which is generated in stars like our sun, propelling tiny particles which do not react with the ether in space, and only react with certain materials which we call “radioactive materials”. This reminds me of the multifrequency response of interlinked tetrahedronal silicon dioxide crystals which make up solid quartz crystals, which can be cut to respond to a wide variety of frequencies.

If the Primary Solar Rays pass through space and mass—which we know is mostly “space”—and they react with so-called “radioactive materials” as Tesla said, what is it about the structures of radioactive materials which causes them to capture the energy of the Primary Solar Rays and to emit radiation? And if so, wouldn’t the development of technology to convert the force of these particles to usable energy be an excellent way to supply all our energy needs?

I have previously mentioned a technology which can use radioactive emissions to ionize air and to separate high-energy alpha and beta particles with a magnetic field to produce a huge output of electrical energy.[1]

In reiteration, Tesla’s propulsion utilizes externally projected electrostatic impulses of high voltage and frequency to “rigidify” and cause the ether to assert its “inertia resistance”, combined with (polarized) rotatory electromagnetic tubes of force, which instantaneously impart momentum to propel a spacecraft.

An Old Wooden Box and a German Inertial Guidance System

In 1979, at a Santa Fe flea market, I examined an old wooden box belonging to an elderly Pojoaque man who had been employed as a workman in 1937 at a secret project called “p2" at nearby Los Alamos, which was run by Nikola Tesla and Wernher von Braun. The man had built the box to carry tools used in his job there. He had carved in “New Mexico folk style” a “map” on the lid of the box showing the highways, the location and name of the project, the symbol for the project (a triangle with a dot in its center) which was apparently a symbol for the Prussian/Masonic “Illuminati” of which von Braun was a member, and the date of the project. This information was corroborated by my friend Peter van Dresser who confirmed that von Braun was involved in a German research project at Los Alamos at that time. Pojoaque, where the old man lived, is prominently shown as a large “P” with a zia sign around it. The zia sign is an ancient symbol used by the Zia American Indian tribe to denote the sun, which they worshiped:

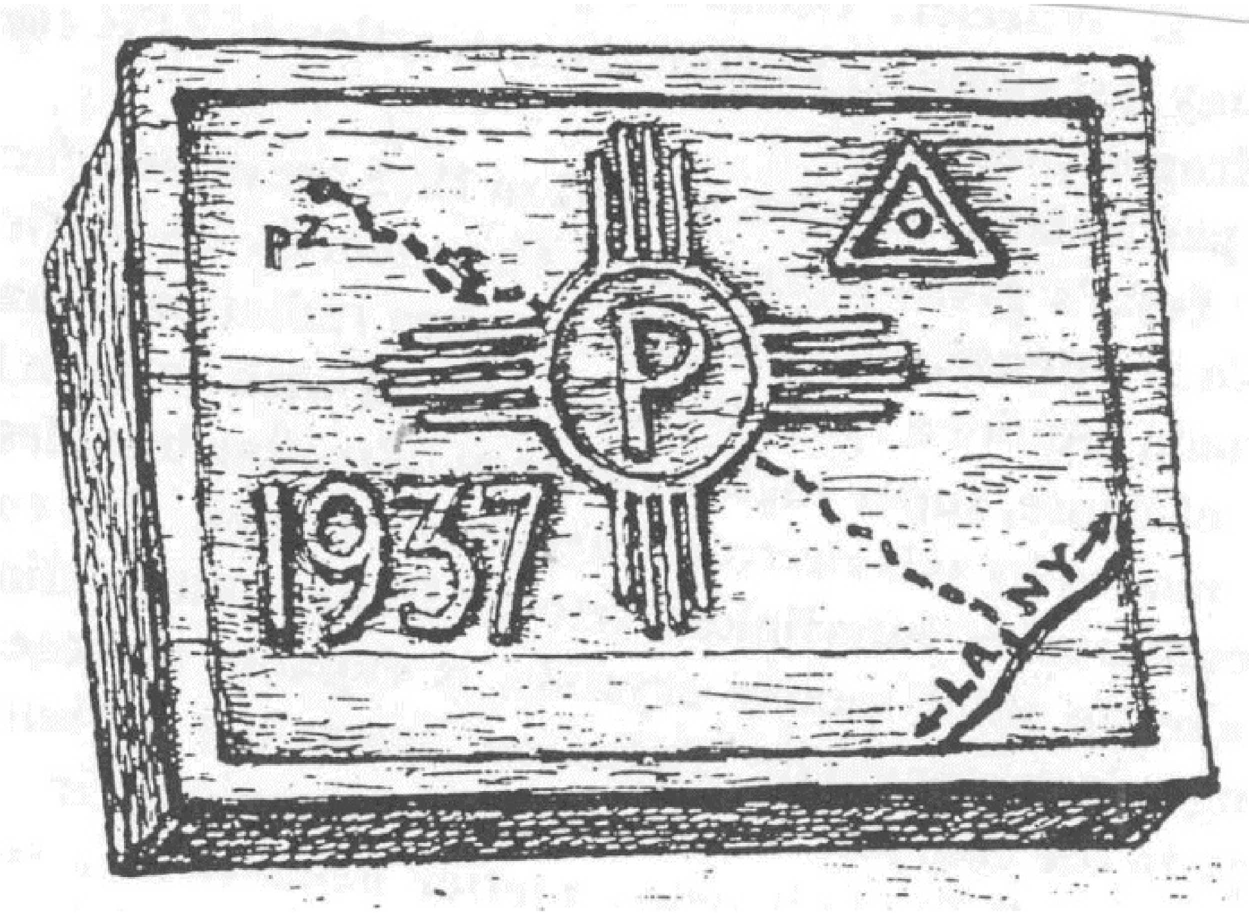
Each particle carries two units of positive electricity. This will produce 34 zillion α-particles per second, at 4.5 Mev. The number of charges per second, yields a hugh amperage which, when stepped down to normal 120 VAC, is staggering. Page 230: “1 atom of radium expels one αparticle producing 1.5 billion ions, at 4.5 Mev”. Page 231: “One α-particle has more than sufficient kinetic energy to bring about all the ionizations which stand to its credit”, and is “...quantitatively sound”.



When von Braun arrived from Germany he was accompanied by 16 top Nazi scientists. Dr. Robert Goddard, who shared American Rocket Society technology with von Braun, purportedly left the project and returned to his workshop at Mescalero when he realized that von Braun’s interest was in Nazi military applications. Von Braun was able to acquire the new rocket engine design from the Rocket Society’s publication, Astronautics , which he acquired from Dr. Robert Goddard.

(NOTE: There has been no publically-available information whatsoever on this project and those at Los Alamos who later conducted the Manhattan Project apparently had no idea as to what the old barn used by Tesla and von Braun in the “p2 Projekt” was for, or that it had an historical significance, until my first book was published in 1993. The barn had been rented from Spanish Land Grant heirs by the p2 Project about 1934. Around 1979, LASL, not knowing what it was used for, had cleaned out the contents of the old barn, removed all the copper wire used on the coil forms, and sold the contents to salvage dealers. It was obvious that the old wooden forms, which were mostly rough sawn planks connected together with dowels, were Tesla coil forms. I purchased two bases used for tuning coils, which had the coils removed from them. Handwriting in pencil on the forms matches that of Nikola Tesla. After reading my book, Los Alamos National Laboratory personnel went to one of the nearby salvage dealers and retrieved the contents which he had purchased. He apparently had taken everything except the forms which I had purchased because nobody else was interested in them, or had large enough trucks to carry them away. The old barn with all its recovered contents (except my two bases) is now preserved under lock and key for historical purposes.)

The weekend in 1979 following my viewing of the old wooden box at the Santa Fe Flea Market, I went to an Albuquerque salvage company, “King’s Surplus City”, on east Central Avenue, where I often bought military surplus things related to my research and inventing, and was pleased to find a very unusual pile of material stacked in a separate little pile. On top the pile was a device which I immediately recognized as a type of navigational “compass” which would be required on the early flying saucers I had witnessed during my back yard sleep-outs in Kermit, Texas, between 1949-53, which turned in increments or multiples of thirty degrees. The device showed thirty-degree increments, and had fourteen contacts—twelve for each of the directions, and two for the six-volt motor which rotated the compass ring to indicate the correct flight heading. The label showed it was manufactured on Oct. 1, 1943, in lot 127-178 (52 devices), for a project named “KT-p2". (I interpret this as “Kurskreisel-Tochterkompass - p2" which in English would mean “Navigational-Gyro Slave-Compass - p2". The device was called a “Peiltochterkompass” (a “polar slave compass”), which was controlled by signals from a “Meisterkurskreisel” (a “master navigational gyro”), which means that the device was half of an inertial guidance system, which requires a master gyro for its completion. The navigational master gyro, mounted on gimbals, was pointed at the Pole Star—either Polaris or Arcturus—and maintained the true north heading no matter where on earth the ship flew. Contacts on the gyro sent signals to the twelve contacts on the slave compass to tell it which of the twelve 30°-increments the ship was following. When the ship changed directions, a small D.C. electric motor came on and rotated the flight heading ring to the correct direction in relation to the Master Gyro.

Development of the systems was imperative for the flying saucer, since a magnetic compass would be worthless due to the “Faraday cage” effect of the electric field surrounding the saucer, which would block out the magnetic field of the earth. The master gyro was calibrated to the Pole Star prior to takeoff, and would continue to hold that position during flight, so that the “slave” (“-tochter” or “daughter”) would have that as a reference, in order to actuate the six-volt motor and turn the geared compass heading ring to reflect the correct direction of flight, in 30-degree increments. This particular type of Peiltochterkompass was used on a circular ship which could turn peripherally—in 360 degrees, frontwards, sideways, backwards, etc., in increments or multiples of 30 degrees —while other devices were used on some of the latest types of German “V” (for “Vergehtungswaffen” or “Revenge-Weapons”) rockets, which carried neutron bomb warheads, and were fired from underwater from special small Lafferenz Project submarines which were towed behind the latest “Electro-U-Boats” used in the final “Stalemate” which I detailed in the third edition of Space Aliens From the Pentagon (Pentagon Aliens). This submarine missile delivery system had been tested (prior to the Stalemate) in the Baltic by Dr. Ernst Steinhoff, who died in Alamogordo, New Mexico in the 1990s.

This type of (now) relatively primitive navigation system was one which I knew had to have existed at the time of my 1946-47 night time sightings, in which the squadrons of high altitude flights from New Mexico turned in increments of 30 degrees. Similar systems were used in American military aircraft during WW II, but those systems were not designed to facilitate instantaneous sharp turns in 30-degree increments in the 360-degree range. Those devices were also not designed to be mounted horizontally as this one was, but were mounted on the vertical faces of instrument panels.

Tesla's ships were all of what I call the “linear” type, long and narrow. The Germans apparently contributed the circular or “saucer”-type ships, unless Tesla's designs which are presently concealed by government secrecy contain that type.

During my graduate school years in the department of art at the University of Texas, 1965-70, I often drew hypothetical diagrams of such a navigational compass.

Several years after I had published photographs of the KT-p2, there were web pages placed on the Internet by a German source--apparently our own CIA---- which attempted to fabricate a different use for the devices, in order to which attempted to fabricate a different use for the devices, in order to counteract what I have said about it and to debunk me. The fatal error of this misinformation is the obvious omission of a “master” gyro which signaled the “slave” compass the true north heading by which it could navigate. Without the master compass the device would not only not be a slave compass, it would be inoperable. That omission shows the misinformation to be what it is, lies. Perhaps the agents who created the misinformation were not given access to those complete secrets because of “compartmentalization”. It is however a fact that the devices, combined with other devices, were also adapted to other uses, such as the following into England of the VOR beams projected over England by the Allies to carry out night bombings over Germany.

The following photographs are of the 1943-vintage Nazi Kurskreisel-Tochterkompass—also labeled a Peiltochterkompass — which came from classified salvage at Sandia Base in Albuquerque:

The letters “p2", which designated the 1936-38 project (two years when von Braun was in New Mexico before WW II) run by Tesla and von Braun, were incorporated into the official secret namedesignation for the Nazi flying saucer project in 1943 Germany and displayed on the navigational Peiltochterkompass. “p2" is apparently a combination of rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials which initiate the propulsion of the ship and high-frequency currents which are used to aid in this according to Tesla theory. More on this later.

As explicitly detailed in Space Aliens From the Pentagon (repeated in Pentagon Aliens), in 1957, as an Air Force member of the 26th Strategic Reconnaissance Wing, SAC, Lockborne AFB, Ohio, with a Top Secret Clearance, I saw the original 16 mm reels of intelligence film made during WW II by my 8th Air Force Intelligence group in 1943, during the night-time bombing raids of the industrial center at Schweinfürth, Germany. That film was made by members of my same group during WW II, and the original film was in our film library. The B-17 bombers were “buzzed” by small, one-man type Tesla flying machines, which flew at very high speeds around the bombers, apparently in order to draw the fire of the gunners and interfere with their missions. This was a tactic apparently designed to distract the gunners so the “Komets”— Messerschmitt rocket planes—could get in close to use their 30 mm cannons on the bombers.

In the spring of 1945, as Russia closed in on Berlin, General George Patton took a special armored group deep into territory encircled by the Russians to the Nazi rocket research center at Peenemünde, on the Baltic. Attached to this group, disguised as “tank commanders”, were Army intelligence officers specially tasked to retrieve all flying saucer materials and/or destroy the same at that project, along with retrieval of any technical drawings, etc., of strategic importance, before the area could be captured by Russian troops. On discovering 200 celestial guidance systems deep underground in a salt cave, General Patton was infuriated on being ordered to destroy the systems by his superiors, saying he could successfully get them back behind Allied lines, and being unaware of the fact that the technical drawings and specifications for the systems, as well as functional Nazi flying saucers were already in American possession. The documentation which I found of this trip to Peenemünde by Patton and his group has been removed from all war histories. The “fix” to hide the saucers was already on in 1945. And who are the authors of this fix?

Subsequent to my purchase of the Peiltochterkompass, security agents learned of my possession of it and knowledge of what it was, so they went to Mark King, son of the owner of King’s Surplus City, and grilled him. He showed them a bill of sale from Sandia Base, pursuant to his purchase of the small pile of salvage from a Sandia Base employee who usually brought salvage from that base to sell to him. As it turned out, the man, who was under secrecy orders as an employee of that base, had stolen a pile of classified salvage and sold it for his own profit, using a “double-receipt” process intended to cover his tracks, but the security people at Sandia put the man under surveillance, caught him doing it again, and charged, convicted and jailed him.

They could not get the device back from me, because I was an “innocent purchaser”, and because it would confirm the stillclassified purpose of the device, in violation of security orders.

I had purchased an inertial guidance system from a 1943 Nazi flying saucer

I had purchased an inertial guidance system from a 1945 Nazi flying saucer, which was subsequently brought to Sandia Base in 1945 under Operation paperclip, along with over 116 scientists and over 15,000 German military and technical personnel, brought to New Mexico as part of a secret ‘deal’, made prior to Operation Paperclip pursuant to a Stalemate, during which 24 German Electro-U-Boats, towing Lafferenz subs carrying rockets with neutron bomb warheads, in attacks concentrated on New York City. The first six of these boats in the first attack were bombed and destroyed. The remaining 18 in a second attack managed to coerce a secret conditional surrender for the German Third Reich.

This secret surrender was negotiated between President Truman and Admiral Karl Döenitz by radio telephone conducted through an intelligence Electro-U-Boat which was located off the coast of New Jersey and was revealed to be sunk there in a TV program (Nova or History Channel) in the late 1990s. Pursuant to that secret surrender, a provision was that the captains of the remaining 18 U-Boats went to the bottom with all hands on board. Consistent to this scenario evidence in that sub was that the captain had ordered an explosive charge detonated in the conning tower taking the sub to Davy Jones’ Locker, presumably while the crew sang “Deutschland Über Alles”. An underwater view of the conning tower showed that the explosive charge had been placed inside the conning tower as the surface was blown outward from it.

As to the question of what “p2” meant scientifically, a similar designation was used by Tesla to denote “potentials”. I think it refers to the use of rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials in one direction to draw in the tubes of force to impart momentum to the ship and high frequency A.C. in the opposite direction to block the ether and stop the tubes from moving completely through the ship.

The drawing below is derived from information contained in Tesla’s 1890s lectures and excerpted later in the part of this book regarding Tesla’s “Dynamic Theory of Gravity”, insofar as I am able to reconstruct it, since the actual theory was unpublished by Tesla.

For horizontal motion or buoyancy, there must be, attached to the Tesla coil, emitter plates which create the sound waves in the ether with rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials. The frequency must not be as high as the microwave range, as the waves would not penetrate the shell. I see no reason why it is not possible for these emitter plates to be placed inside the outer shell of the ship, shooting the waves through the shell to the outside. These plates must have thick layers of high dielectric---such as barium titanate---on their backsides, so the waves are emitted only on one side in the direction desired. When a plate is flat, the waves are parallel; when convex, fan-shaped; and when concave, focused (such as for tractor-beams, to pull smaller objects to the ship).

A variable-concavity plate could focus on objects at various distances from the ship, as desired. This would be a mechanical problem.

This seems to explain some of the puzzling maneuvers of the ships observed by many. Meanwhile, a lower, rapidly-varying electrostatic potential may be placed on the entire ship's surface to "lubricate" it as it moves through the atmosphere without friction or sonic boom, while the directional waves are shot through this.

This hypothesis appears to agree with what has been observed.

This technology has been highly developed for over seventy years since the early days at Los Alamos, years before the Manhatten Project came onto the scene.

I could only assemble parts of Tesla's technology like pieces of a jigsaw puzzle, from smaller statements he made at various times regarding it. As you can see in this drawing, based on Tesla’s statements, there is some conflict between an ether which is supposedly “incompressible” versus the fact that Tesla sometime referred to “compression” of the ether by high frequency alternating current emissions in the atmosphere. I think he meant by this that the space between ether particles was eliminated. As you will see in the drawing, both the negative electrostatic ‘brush’ electrode and the A.C. ‘compression’ electrode would direct the ether carriers in the tubes of force through the mass of the ship from the negative electrode, and cause them to be dissolved in the conductors of the ship, imparting momentum to the ship, similar to what J. J. Thomson said. The electrode on the left would create a “veritable rope of air” so that, when paired with the opposite A.C. electrode on the right, would accelerate the ether carriers through the mass of the ship, dissolving them and propelling the ship. Tesla described this as a “pulling” action (not a “repulsive” action).

Many of Tesla’s tests and experiments in Colorado were related to his propulsion system. A rapidly-varying electrostatic (D.C.) potential, according to Tesla, at one end of the ship creates sound waves in the ether which somehow draw in the momentum-carrying tubes of force. Meanwhile, a high frequency at the opposite end of the ship creates a positive potential according to Tesla, which causes the tubes of force at that end to be blocked, so that the tubes of force at the opposite end are accelerated into the mass of the ship and its contents, to be dissolved in the conductors to impart momentum to the ship. While the ship may be accelerated or turned so fast that a normal person inside might be crushed, the technology must operate in such a way that every atom of the ship is accelerated with the same force, in the same direction, at the same time, so that no excessive force is experienced by a passenger. There was research in Germany during the war which discovered that a pilot in the prone position could withstand six times the G-forces as a pilot in the normal sitting position, but this could not explain the hairpin turns of the ship I witnessed in 1953.

Low and High Frequency Electrostatic Potentials And Tesla’s Wireless Transmission of Energy

Low frequency radio waves can pass through solid bodies, and tend to “hug the earth”, while high frequency waves don’t readily penetrate solid bodies, causing a “skin effect” on them, and don’t “hug the earth”, but tend rather to travel outward away from the earth in straight lines. In his Colorado Springs Experiments, Tesla was the first person to investigate high voltage waves of high and low frequency, and their terrestrial, atmospheric and solid-body effects. But remember, Tesla was working with a completely new type of wave, not electromagnetic ones but longitudinal pressure (sound) waves in the ether. The results of these experiments were so farreaching, that whatever was said in current science journals about them had little effect, because they left other scientists so dumbfounded that they were paralyzed by mis-comprehension. This is not taught in electrical engineering schools.

It has been said that the basic difference between Heinrich Hertz’ 'transverse' waves and Tesla’s longitudinal waves is that Tesla’s waves were actually electrostatic mechanical compression waves in the ether. Tesla actually said that what Hertz was observing was the same electrostatically-induced longitudinal pressure waves. In 1934, Tesla stated (Possibilities of Electrostatic Generators, Scientific American), speaking of the electrode on his wireless tower erected on Long Island in 1902, “It was to be charged to 30,000,000 volts by a simple device for supplying static electricity and power.” Examination of the patent (#1,119,732, filed Jan. 18, 1902) shows “coil B” is a Tesla coil tuned to one-quarter wavelength, which produces rapidly-varying (D.C.) electrostatic potentials, resulting in sound waves in the ether, not electromagnetic waves.

High frequency longitudinal waves also make it possible to project forceful mechanical waves to a specific, distant point. Tesla also developed a method with his special aluminum hemispherical bulb for sending waves or 'heavy currents' along a special “carrier beam” of U.V. or similar high frequency radiation which we don’t know the exact nature of.

Powerful pressure (mechanical) long waves, carried directionally to a distant point, can in turn carry additional higher frequency waves superimposed on it, to deliver the high frequency exciting energy at the powerful long-wave peaks. These “sound waves” are apparently converted back into electrical energy by an appropriate Tesla receiver (or maybe just a conductor) at the target zone. This appears to have been the basis for Tesla’s “Transmission of Electrical Energy Without Wires” invention, as well as his “energy beam” and “death ray” inventions, as the same system can be used for all three. The manipulation of these wave characteristics is inextricably involved in Tesla’s propulsion. These these wave characteristics is inextricably involved in Tesla's propulsion. These inventions were undoubtedly stimulated by Tesla's study of 19th century "ether physicists", and his own brilliant intuitions when discovering the rotating magnetic field in Budapest, Hungary in 1882. This rotating magnetic field discovery was involved in his "brushless" electric motor because Tesla applied the rotatory force of magnetic fields related to the naturally occurring phenomenon spoken of by Faraday, Maxwell, both Thomsons, and several others known to Tesla, to his A.C. electric motor inventions.

The tubes of force had been discussed in 1881 in England by Thomson, who had no technology which could be used to apply the tubes to the propulsion of a ship, if that was what he had in mind, and never seemed to mention them in this respect until after Tesla had begun to move toward applying the discoveries to his intended "ideal flying machine" in experiments prior to his 1891 lecture at Columbia College in New York. But Tesla was influenced after he was apparently inspired by the writings of William Thomson and J. J. Thomson.

I think that Tesla discovered that by using a low frequency mechanical waves, he could cause, at the quarter wavelength, the eruption of a large pulse which could, by carrying a much higher exciting wave, excite the atmospheric gases in a region, to explosively expand them, followed by a tremendous implosion and the absorption of a great amount or heat in the area, causing immediate freezing. This process would create an initial explosive shock wave followed by the implosive return wave, similar to nuclear detonation. For example, by using a low frequency of say 50 cps, with a wavelength of 3,100 miles, a pulse could be made to erupt at onequarter wavelength—775 miles, corrected to 751 miles by velocity factor. By superimposing an exciting frequency of say 50 megahertz or so, the atmospheric gases could be excited to cause a "cold implosion" which absorbs heat. By altering the wavelength and the direction of propagation, the results could be delivered to any terrestrial point. At least that is my interpretation.

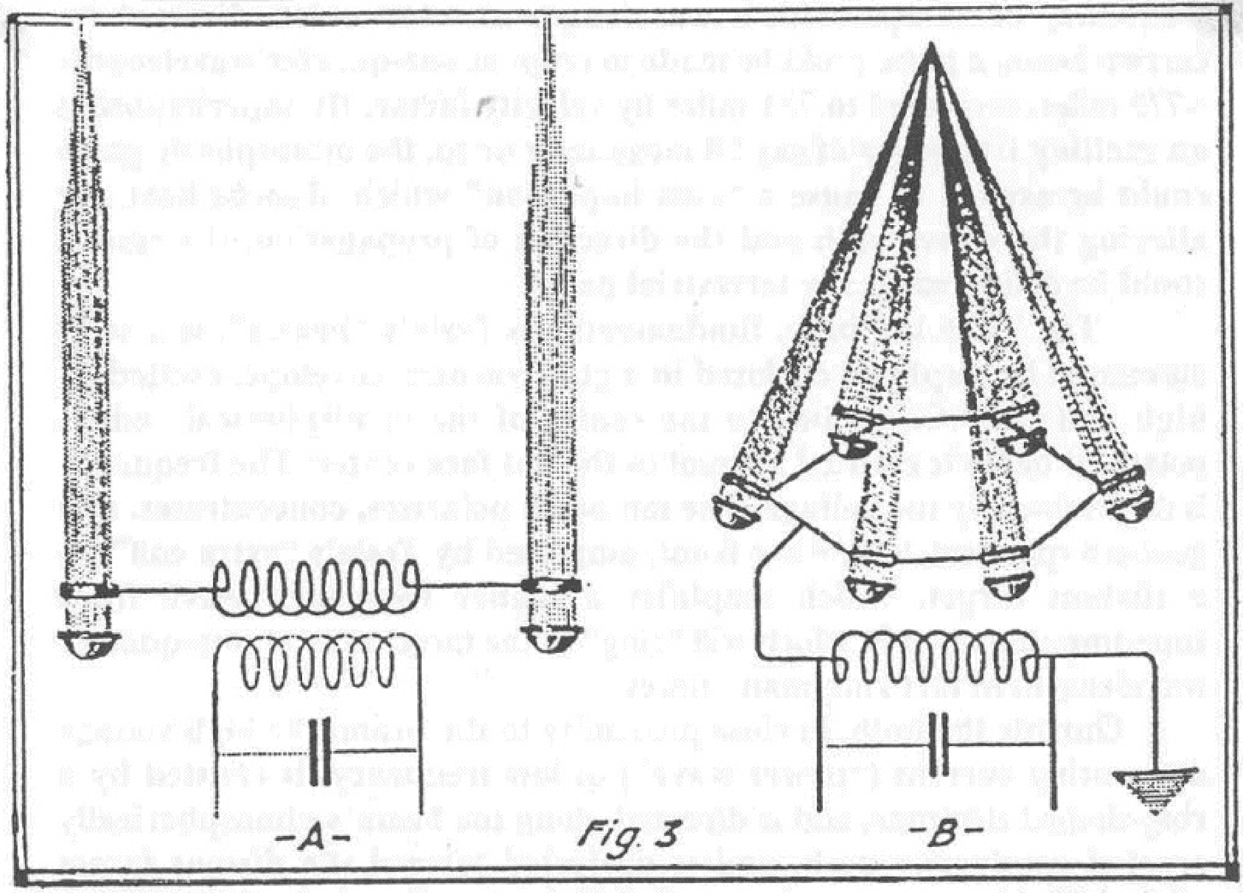
The Tesla ionizing bulb, fundamental to some of Tesla's "beams", is a solid aluminum hemisphere, enclosed in a glass vacuum envelope, excited by high voltage D.C., applied to the center of the hemispherical end. A polarized beam is emitted normal to the flat face center. The frequency and force is determined by the voltage. The ion beam polarizes, concentrates, and guides a long wave amplified by Tesla's "extra coil", to a distant target. This amplified higher frequency wave superimposed upon it will "ring" in the target area at one-quarter wavelength, in fact ring many times.

Outside the bulb, in close proximity to the beam, the rapidlyvarying high voltage electrostatic impulses create the pressure waves which are emitted by a ring-shaped electrode, and is directed along the beam's atmospherically created conductive path, projected toward the distant target where the wave peak delivers it at its "point" of greatest potential.

The June 30, 1908 Siberian explosion/implosion at Tungushka may have been a risky test or inadvertent result of Tesla's giant Wardenclyffe oscillator, and may have been an undisclosed reason as to why the project was discontinued, and eventually the tower was torn down in 1917. It should also be pointed out that this method involved the absorption of heat energy "from the environment". This was yet another great heat energy-harvesting discovery. Tesla's method "opened up" the atmosphere to this possibility, consistent with what he said about nuclear energy coming from "the environment". And maybe that is what Leland Anderson was referring to when he delivered Tesla's eulogy at his 1943 funeral, praising Tesla's ability to "...pluck heat units out of the thin air."

The Tungushka event may have also been the impetus for a "very tempting offer" made to Tesla by V.I. Lenin, mentioned in retrospect in a November 29, 1934 letter from Tesla to J. P. Morgan, Jr., (microfilm, Library of Congress). The Lenin offer would have to have been between 1917 and 1934, and was mentioned unsuccessfully by Tesla in attempt to tantalize Morgan.

The following illustration was not a Tesla one as thought by some, but turned out to be the idea of what another inventor apparently thought was Tesla's idea, which he himself was trying to cash in on, since Tesla never revealed it in detail. Tesla had something better, a particle beam which was finer in cross section than a hair, of tremendous power. The government has never revealed the details of Tesla's so-called "Death Ray" invention, but it is hinted at by Tesla's announcement of Sept. 22, 1940 in the New York Times, in an article by William L. Laurence, of Tesla's Teleforce discoveries. It should be noticed that the waves here are focused.



This illustration, from a July 11, 1934 New York Times article, shows several of the special solid aluminum Tesla bulbs which, as Tesla stated in 1940 (see page 27), no longer required vacuum. The current is placed on the beams by means of the ring-shaped electrodes near each bulb, fed with currents from the coils.

Tesla’s TELEFORCE Discoveries

Tesla’s Teleforce discoveries, evolved between 1900 and 1940, supposedly came in four parts, consisting of a “new” way to produce rays in free air without a vacuum, a “new” way to create a “very great electrical force”, a “new” way of “magnifying” the force, and a “new” means of space propulsion[2] . At least that was what was said in books. When I consulted the actual article, I found quite a difference. What Tesla called “His Greatest Achievement”, was “an apparatus by which mechanical energy can be transmitted to any part of the terrestrial globe” and which had four practical possibilities (aside from the energy transmission part), among which were a means of unfailing communication, a means for scientists to lay bare the physical conditions of the earth, and enabling them to determine all the earth’s physical constants. He called this “tele-geodynamics”, the determination of earth forces at a distance. He had an apparatus which he said was “ideally simple” consisting of a stationary part and a cylinder of fine steel “floating” in air. By impressing powerful impulses on the floating part, he said, it could be caused to react with the stationary part which then would transmit mechanical energy through (the ether in) the earth. This involved a “new amplifier for a known type of energy” which could produce the impulses through the earth so they can be picked up whenever and wherever needed.

I have discovered that the “stationary part” is his “Coil For Electromagnets” (Patent #512340, filed July 7, 1893) which was his bifilar coil which stores 250,000 times the energy of a ordinarily wound coil of the same size and number of turns. It is this coil which stores so much energy that it causes the steel cylinder to “float”. The “known type of energy” was of course the magnetic field. Just exactly how he subjected the steel cylinder to powerful impulses is another of Tesla’s discoveries, which was at least 35 years old at that time. It was probably his single terminal (“pancake”) coil. He said it “will be considered absolutely impossible by any competent electrical engineer”, a “new method and apparatus for producing direct current without a commutator”, considered impossible since the days of Faraday. These “new” discoveries—all of which could work together—were actually a juxtaposition of and different application of Tesla’s devices already tested separately in Colorado Springs experiments or later in New York or Wardenclyffe, with the exception that by 1912, he had tested a missile powered by wirelessly projected “mechanical” energy, and he had also tested a small, oneman flying machine prototype in which he apparently ventured out his hotel window at night over New York City in experimental tests flights, which served as an experimental basis for a much larger and more ambitious set of space ships which he had designed, which were repeatedly rejected by the U.S. government, probably because they thought he was nuts. In one interpretation, Tesla’s teleforce discovery was apparently a “tractor beam” technology which could reach out and lock onto many tons of air molecules—or onto the incompressible ether—by which means the “very great electrical force” could be used to pull against to propel the ship up or forward or backward without air or inertial resistance.

Tesla said of his flying machine in 1911[3] , in pertinent part, “Its lifting power will not depend upon any such delicate devices as the bird has to employ, but upon positive mechanical action.” By “positive mechanical action”, Tesla was referring to his “sound waves in the ether” which travel at the speed of light, which are mechanical in nature. Tesla had stated that his training was in mechanical engineering, and that he was primarily a mechanical engineer. In a 1929 article in the New York Herald Tribune[4] , Tesla stated "I satisfied myself that what he (Heinrich Hertz) had observed was nothing else but effects of longitudinal waves in a gaseous medium, that is to say, waves, propagated by alternate compression and expansion. He had observed waves in the ether much of the nature of sound waves in the air." And, "The velocity of any sound wave depends on a certain ratio between elasticity and density, and for this ether or universal gas the ratio is 800,000,000,000 times greater than for air. This means that the velocity of the sound waves propagated through the ether is about 300,000 times greater than that of the sound waves in air, which travel at approximately 1,085 feet a second. Consequently the speed in ether is 900,000 x 1,085 feet, or 186,000 miles, and that is the speed of light."

Even the Nazis were skeptical that the Tesla propulsion technology might work, being unconvinced until Wernher von Braun had actually tested the concepts at Los Alamos in 1936 and 1937, and obtained the final approval of Hitler. The large conical coil form, constructed of rough-sawn pine boards held together with dowels and shellacked, which I saw there from the old barn was about ten feet from top to bottom, a couple of feet across at the top, and about ten feet across at its base. I could see where heavy wire—then removed—had been wound on the boards from which the form was constructed. Almost immediately after von Braun's return to Germany in late 1937 in time for Christmas, construction was begun on large "cigar-shaped" ships (similar to those shown in the illustrations Tesla commissioned in 1914), using at first the iron pressure hulls of U-Boats, which were already equipped with a hermetically sealable system carrying diesel generators for use in the water or the atmosphere, and possibly the helium-based "nuclear" generators which I had heard about in 1947. With the huge difference between the weak interaction of gravity and the much stronger interaction of the electrical attractive force, "Weight is no object" Tesla said.

Since Tesla had actually received offers from Russia prior to that time, I had considered the probability that he had cooperated with von Braun in the Los Alamos experiments, through some of the unidentified three laboratories he said he was working with in 1937. But I already had the information that von Braun had been involved in a 1930s Los Alamos project from my friend Peter van Dresser. The old box from the p2 project which I saw in 1979 filled in the blanks. In 2008, I found evidence that indeed Tesla was here in New Mexico in 1936, and there was really not very much else he could have been doing here at that time. In addition to the work at the p2 project Tesla also was involved in 1936 in the testing of his wireless tranmission of energy system to run a train in Santa Fe, New Mexico, another activity which there is virtually no information on, even in Santa Fe. The spooks did a good job of cleaning out all references.

In looking for a probable Nazi spy, there was one who had wormed his way into Tesla's most intimate confidences, who was later convicted and imprisoned for his espionage activities in America, but the exact nature of his activities, other than the dissemination of Nazi propaganda, was never specified in the public records. This author's belief is that Tesla's sale of technology to German Admiral Alfred von Tirpitz in 1914, following rejection of this technology by the U.S. government, included the technology for Tesla's electric flying machine, not developed until 1936-38. Tesla's connection with Georg Silvester Viereck was the most probable explanation for how Tesla's propulsion discoveries attracted the attention of the Germans and found their way to the internationally funded "p2" project (funded by the Germans, the National Geographic, the Simon and Florence Guggenheim Foundation and the Smithsonian Foundation).

In his 1935 birthday announcement[5] , Tesla was extravagant, treating about 30 reporters, press, camera men, news and sound reel representatives to a lavish gourmet luncheon in a private dining room at the Hotel New Yorker where he had been living for the previous two years. This indicated a new source of revenue for Tesla, most likely from his German connections for the p2 project.

The fact that von Braun's pre-war New Mexico adventures have been subsequently concealed from the public by the Secret Government—a degree of secrecy which cannot be explained except by reference to the Nazi flying saucer project along with appropriating my friend Peter van Dresser's and his four colleagues' rocket engine design—is compelling.

The fact that I was a personal friend to an American rocket scientist named Peter van Dresser, who was angered by Dr. Robert Goddard's pre-war work with

5 [5] New York Times, July 11, 1935 (supra)

Wernher von Braun, and who was present in New Mexico in the ‘30s and was personally familiar with von Braun’s secret Los Alamos activities left little remaining to be proven, since there is no longer any security basis for concealing such events, if “rocket research” was the only thing von Braun’s pre-war American presence involved. He had already been appointed, just prior to his trip to America, as the Peenemünde research and the national German rocket research leader, and had been promoted by Hitler and Heinrich Himmler to Uberstürmbannfuehrer in the SS, and was given a “leave of absence” by Hitler to make the venture to America. After all, he was at that time in the Wehrmacht as well as the SS.

Willi Ley, the real rocket genius of Germany and von Braun’s tutor, was the first scientist invited to America by Peter and the New York branch of the American Rocket Society in 1934. In 1937, Ley was staying at the Greenwich Village, NYC apartment of Florence and Peter van Dresser, applied for American citizenship papers that year, and married a Russian ballerina named Olga Feldman, so von Braun was apparently invited by Dr. Robert Goddard, by his arrangements with the Germans, to fill the empty shoes of Ley. I suspect that all those promotions of von Braun after Ley’s defection were to insure that von Braun did not also defect and become an American citizen.

As shown by archival proof [6] , van Dresser’s group was the actual inventor of the first successful liquid-fueled rocket engine—called “A Dependable and Efficient Regeneratively Cooled Liquid-Fueled Rocket Engine” by Peter—the particular one that Dr. Robert Goddard “appropriated”, and turned over to Wernher von Braun, who used it on his V-2s. Peter was co-creator of the American Rocket Society and was the editor of its publication, Astronautics . But when the military became involved in the research at Mescalero Peter left because he was a Quaker pacifist and took Willi Ley with him so von Braun was brought in by Goddard from the Third Reich as a replacement in 1936.

One of the most telling pieces of evidence regarding the intentional misinterpretation of Tesla’s discoveries—especially just after Tesla’s death in Jan., 1943, at which point all Tesla’s papers and apparatus fell into the hands of the FBI—is the obvious meaning of the name for his system—TELEFORCE”—which means “force at a distance”. This must be seen in the context of the four listed parts of the system to be used together, being clearly applicable to flying saucer propulsion, once I pointed out the fraud, and correctly interpreted the statement in my 1993 publication.

I have to hand it to the spooks, for doing such a good job of concealing the connection between the flying saucer and the only man who could have invented it—and whom the public should most readily accept as the inventor who rightfully deserved the credit for it —even though he never had a fair opportunity of giving his greatest discovery to the world as an American, for lack of opportunity to build a working model of sufficiently developed potential to impress us. And the German-financed p2 Projekt gave him that opportunity after the U. S. government spit in his face. The reason why Tesla never had the opportunity was because of the secret "bill of attainder" placed on his name by the greedy monopolists who were and still are afraid of technological freedom and a truly free market of ideas, goods, and services. Tesla was a pariah and no one with money and power could touch him in America without being incinerated by the lightening strikes from the money gods in New York.

CHAPTER II: EXPLORING THE NATURE OF THE ETHER

The Early Background

In 1997, after many years of research and thought regarding the qualities of the ether, I decided to see what others had actually said, before completing this book. Some of the material available to me was second-hand information, being what someone said someone else had said. I wanted to determine whether or not these "repeated statements" were accurate, and if not, find the correct ones. After some difficulty, I accessed a copy of the classic, A History of the Theories of the Aether and Electricity, by Sir Edmund Whittaker (1951 revised and enlarged second edition, Vols. I and II). The 1910 first edition was probably the most comprehensive book ever published on ether theory as it existed in 1910, except it omitted the ether theory of Tesla. The first edition was printed in Scotland, under the title A History of the Theories of the Ether and Electricity, from the age of Descartes to the close of the nineteenth century. The second edition incorporated "new material" related to quantum mechanics. Classical theory was in Vol. I, while Vols. II and III gave the origins of relativity and quantum theory up to 1926. Neither the 1910 first edition nor the 1951 revised edition mentioned Tesla at all, but the chronological sequence of attempts at electro-propulsion by the Europeans appeared to be "skewered", with little or no attempt in either edition to point out what the scientists were actually aiming at in terms of electric propulsion, which was clearly their goal, or to point out this goal as a topic. Though information regarding Tesla's work was omitted, there is much valuable related information in the historical sense in terms of many experiments.

In his preface, Whittaker stated that where space is not considered “emptiness”—except for its property of propagating electromagnetic waves (a concept which is completely wrong according to Tesla’s discoveries regarding the pressure waves)—the development of quantum electrodynamics referred to a vacuum with a new status as the location of ‘zero point’ oscillations of the electromagnetic fields and zero point fluctuations of electric charge and current, as well as a polarization conforming to that of a dielectric constant, which is non-unity (i.e., which contains energy). This implies awareness of Tesla’s Primary Solar Rays, but quantum theory inherently excludes the possibility of “zero-point” fluctuations, since all such waves are always regarded as possessing one-half “quantum”, and this is an internal contradiction of the theory. And the probability remains that all this is completely wrong.

Whittaker said that an alleged failure by ether theory proponents to observe the earth’s motion relative to the ether, caused the downfall of the theory, but the facts show that the relativists, backed by corporate publishing interests, hastily dug the grave and threw the dirt over the corpse of ether theory while it was still alive, for the wrong reasons (or maybe the “right” reasons considering the lies propagated by powerful interests). Much of the “error” was due to focusing on the weakest proponents who failed to realize that a portion of the ether is “carried along” by the earth, and that an optical aberration—an “ether drift”—would have to be observed at some point away from the earth, in order for an ether to exist. It was asserted that the failure of this observation on the earth was the “death” of “the” ether theory. By advertising ether theory’s weakest and most erroneous proponents and ideas, the media made the RQM’s hasty funeral of ether theory easy, and paved the way for the gullible public’s acceptance of relativism. But remember, truth can flow from lies, but not lies from the truth, as stated by Schopenhauer.

I concluded that Whittaker’s 1951 edition intentionally skewered important facts which already should have been known to the author concerning Tesla's theory, which I have attempted to straighten out for you in this book. I now feel more comfortable with my interpretation of Tesla’s theory, than I did prior to reading Whittaker’s book, but that was only because I knew what I was looking for. The facts I found are almost exactly as I said in my second edition of Space Aliens From the Pentagon . It was unthinkable that a 1910 or 1951 book on the ether failed to mention Tesla or his ether theory, which contains distinct features not found together in any other ether theory.

By gathering and reorganizing Whittaker's material on electropropulsion into more proper order, I discovered much "new" ("old") documentation, that 19th century scientists were in pursuit of electro-propulsion, and that there were interesting similarities between the thinking of certain scientists of the era and my suspicions, which could eliminate some erroneous concepts about what they actually meant, and show similarities to what I had observed on numerous occasions in the behavior of what were obviously Tesla's "flying saucers", since the "proof of the pudding" is when it flies across the dinner table or the sky. It was my intent to examine known theories leading up to Tesla, to see what he contributed, and to determine what happened since that time to obscure, misinterpret and ultimately conceal the truth. To this end, I present for you a brief history and documentation of pertinent ether physics.

J. J. Thomson's "Electromagnetic Momentum"

Returning to the concept of the "carry-along" ether, Max Planck, originator of quantum mechanics, followed this form of ether theory in part, saying that the ether had to be irrotational, carried along at the same velocity as earth near its surface, and compressible and subject to gravity like the atmosphere, in order for the theory to be true. At best, Planck's beliefs showed a weak mechanical conceptualization, something unexpected from one purportedly so adept at "mechanics".

J. J. Thomson (1856-1942), discoverer of the electron, expressed a different and more plausible ether theory. Thomson had theorized —based on Maxwell's earlier theory—that a charged spherical conductor moving in a straight line must produce displacement currents in the medium[7] . But this did not purport to be electropropulsion. In 1893, twelve years later, he claimed to have discovered "Electromagnetic Momentum", saying "...in an electromagnetic field there is stored in every unit volume an amount of mechanical momentum, proportional to the vector product of the electric and magnetic vectors".[8] Thomson also was said to have developed the theory of moving tubes of force—which harked back to Faraday's earlier work—saying in 1891 that molecular structure is closely connected with tubes of electrostatic force, with magnetism regarded as a secondary force. He stated that "...the aether itself is the vehicle of mechanical momentum, of amount $(1/4\pi C)$ [D B] per unit· volume."[9]

Tesla Shows Up

It is interesting to note that these 1893 “discoveries” by Thomson, although following his initial speculations based on Maxwell’s theory, also followed Tesla’s lecture before the American Institute of Electrical Engineers at Columbia College, N.Y., on May 20, 1891, in which he described earlier experiments in which he had pre-empted Thomson’s work with experimental verification, together with a demonstration of techniques and machinery built by him which obtained frequencies and voltages which W. Thomson (Lord Kelvin) had said earlier in England, were “impossible to achieve”. In that sense, the “good old boys” in Britain should have admitted that Tesla’s work was prior, after having admitted that they were unable to create the equipment necessary to produce the required frequencies to investigate and to experimentally verify these phenomena. But Tesla's theory was different, based on electrostatics not electromagnetics.

J. J. Thomson’s theory, which supposedly linked electromagnetism with momentum in a mathematical and unified way, on paper, somewhat repeated Tesla’s earlier lecture of 1891, proven by his earlier experiments, but Tesla’s theory was different from Thomson’s and Maxwell’s. Thomson’s electromagnetic momentum could be theoretically created only with Tesla’s contrivances, which existed before Thomson’s “discovery”, and there was no way that Thomson could have reduced his theory to practice or experimentally verified it, because it would not work since electromagnetic waves cannot be transmitted through the free ether because it is not a solid.

Though the facts show that Thomson was prior to Tesla in attempting to publish a valid theory, Tesla could not publish prior to perfection of his invention, which was not a factor affecting Thomson. Tesla was apparently the only one to prove his theory by experimental results. Tesla deferred often to Thomson, even though Thomson attempted later to claim Tesla’s alternating current and high frequency discoveries. Thomson’s earlier work[10] , concerning a charged spherical conductor moving in a straight line (but involving no “rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials”) had undoubtedly commanded Tesla’s respect and probably influenced his work, but Tesla’s 1884 discovery of the rotating magnetic field had beaten them all to the punch, and documentation shows that because of this he had arguments with his “learned professors” in Graz, who said that he must be “crazy” for having such ideas during his 1870s student days to prove it.

It must have worked a horrible hardship on Tesla, to remain silent about his Dynamic Theory of Gravity , which he did not publish for fear of his technology falling into the wrong hands. It was like the Wardenclyffe tower, turning in the wind of incompleteness for lack of money, created by having been falsely induced into building an expensive system which would exhaust his energy and financial resources to the point of bankruptcy.

In respect to momentum, I would analogize it as follows: When a body is held by a spinning or arcing arm, it contains the changing momentum created by angular movement. It must continually shed some “old” momentum while accumulating “new” momentum in the new direction. When released, it moves in a straight line vector corresponding to the state of the tubes of force which have imparted their momentum at the time of release. While held by the arm, centrifugal force was created by the tendency of the tubes to impart momentum in a straight line, which created the resistance to change by the tubes at any moment. Once released, “something” (the tubes of force as they then existed) determined the body’s direction of movement and velocity. These facts are consistent with Tesla’s own concepts, in contrast to other theories of the ether or tubes of force, as I will explain later in greater detail.

Most of Thomson’s 1881 work harked back to Maxwell, and before him, Faraday, who had stated in 1831 that movement of an electrostatically charged body is equivalent to a current, which was described as a tube of force created by movement and momentum[11] . In his consideration of the nature of “ponderable matter”, Faraday had suggested that an atom may be nothing more than a field of force—electric, magnetic and gravitational—surrounded by a point-centre, which is completely penetrable[12] . This statement shows how Faraday’s opinions had temporarily been swayed by the relativism of Newton and Boscovitch. Fresnel later stated, ‘Upon considering the aberration of the stars, I am disposed to believe that the luminiferous aether pervades the substance of all material bodies with little or no resistance, as freely perhaps as the wind passes through a grove of trees’. Fresnel’s concept presupposed that the ether surrounding the earth was unaffected by earth’s motion, and generally agrees with what is actually observed, except for his failure to consider how the earth’s dynamic electric field affects the ether, and how the ether is not in motion relative to bodies at relative rest on the surface of the earth or within its electrostatic field. Along with his ca. 1831 theory of an (elastic) solid ether, and lines of magnetic force, Faraday considered all space as “filled”. Wm. Thomson (Lord Kelvin, 1824-1907), at age 17, based on Faraday’s earlier announcements, introduced into mathematical science the idea of electric action at a distance by means of a continuous ether. In 1846, he analogized electric phenomena with mechanical elasticity. It was his early concept that material atoms move through the ether ‘without displacing it or compressing it’[13] , a concept later to be adopted partially by Tesla in saying that the ether ‘behaves as a fluid to solid bodies, and as a solid to light and heat’. About 1853, Bernhard Riemann (1826-66) conceived an ether which resisted compression and changes of orientation[14] . Riemann thought the resistance to compression caused gravitational and electrostatic effects, while the resistance to changes in orientation caused optical and magnetic phenomena, but he failed to develop these concepts further. These early Riemann insights were however very influential on later thinkers. He conceived a stationary ether based on the generally accepted assumption that, as the earth moved through space, the ability of one to see a star with a steady image disproved a dynamic ether. As to the propagation of electric action through space, Riemann proposed a new equation in which voltage changes outward from charges with a velocity C, but he also failed to follow up with a proper consideration of the properties of the ether, because he died too damned young. Some of Riemann's insights were verified almost 50 years later, ten years longer than his entire lifetime.

Years later, Maxwell, after reading Faraday's 1831 Experimental Researches in Electricity (3 Vols.), formed a mechanical conception of the electromagnetic field, connecting Faraday's magnetic lines of force and electrical ideas with the mathematical analogies of Wm. Thomson, carrying Faraday's concepts a step further (I have always like to say that Maxwell "put the math to Faraday", because Faraday couldn't do much math, though he is recognized as the greatest "experimental philosopher" in history).

Faraday was a former Irish bookbinder's journeyman who got his early education from the books he was binding, and who at age 21 happened to write a letter to chemistry professor Sir Humphrey Davy in 1912 and so impressed him that the following spring he was appointed a chair at the Royal Institution. Faraday had remarkable insights right from the beginning, which remain long after his death, with so many observations and discoveries which were made without resort to tiresome pages of math, lucky for Maxwell, who made his own contributions in the process, although many were wrong according to Tesla, when it came to the ether and electromagnetic waves in free space.

Faraday had erroneously stated that induced magnetism in iron exists only within the iron, was zero in external free ether, and was the basis for electrical induction. Maxwell's "electric displacement in a dielectric" was analogous to the magnetic induction B, which he said may have a value different from zero even in the free ether. According to Maxwell, there is a displacement (i.e., an electric movement away from equilibrium position) wherever there is electric force, whether "material bodies" are present or not (thus carrying his electric displacement into the ether)[15] .

It had occurred to me that since the earth and bodies "at rest" on it are in uniform motion (or uniformly changing motion) in respect to an ether which is relatively stationary because "carried along", that there were differences in electric displacement of ether in the space within solid bodies and external to them in space within the free ether, due to the differences in dielectric constant between the two. I deduced from this that the constant movement of bodies through a stationary ether-filled space, carrying their charges with them, create displacement currents.

Maxwell had represented Faraday's lines of magnetic force (vectors of magnetic

Maxwell had represented Faraday's lines of magnetic force (vectors of magnetic induction) as the velocity of an incompressible fluid, based on Faraday's suggestion years earlier that there may be a "dynamical condition" similar to electric current, and that the 'physical lines of magnetic force are currents' of this "fluid". This agrees with Faraday's "dynamical condition" of the electric field 'carried along' by the earth, equivalent to a current, which appears to me to possibly produce the earth's magnetic field and gravitation, by effects on the stationary ether within earth's dynamic electric field. It also implies that magnetic lines of force are the "equal and opposite" reaction to electrical current as Faraday stated, and vice-versa, though magnetic fields are more the secondary effect of electric currents as Tesla said. The magnetic field is equally important however, in its creation of the rotatory motion imparted to electricity, which is responsible for the "tubes of force", which carry momentum which maintains the perpetual motion of celestial bodies in the universe, and guides electric currents through the ether forever. And this sounds very much like it is in agreement with Tesla's Dynamic Theory of Gravity as well.

Cosmic Motion and Local Momentum

The earth orbits the sun at approximately 18.5 miles per second (ca. 66,600 mph). The solar system is orbiting the center of the Milky Way much faster, and the Milky Way orbits the Magellanic Clouds much faster, and so fourth. This hierarchy of motion and velocity increases from the moon, to the earth, the Milky Way, the Magellanic Clouds, etc., although these pale into insignificance relative to electromagnetic velocity, since movement of force is timerelative. In all, the earth's velocity and polarity relative to the ether continually varies according to its rotation, orbital position, and galactic cycle. When between the sun and the Milky Way's center, for example, it moves relatively slower than when to the "outside". As the earth rotates each day, its polarity of movement relative to the sun rotates 15.2 degrees per hour, with a rotational surface velocity at the equator of approximately 1,041 mph. This continuous change in polarity is so gradual that it is sensually imperceptible, but probably contributes to modulating the gravity effects (and may even influence our emotional states!).

According to W. B. Morton[16] , an increase in charge of a body increases its "virtual mass", which increases the work required to move it by amount $2e^2$

[15]. Maxwell, Scientific Papers I, p. 451; p. 526.

$/3ac^2$. This was in correction of J. J. Thomson’s figures. Such a case suggests a dynamo consisting of large, insulated conductive balls on each end of a shaft turning at its center on a perpendicular axle, the balls being alternately charged and discharged to increase and decrease their “virtual” masses, thus rotating the shaft and turning a generator. But this possibility appears to be a fantasy, since the “increase in work required to move the ball” (in Thomson’s theory) may be related to an increase in the resistance to the penetration by the ether, caused by the presence of the extra charges, which according to Faraday created a “Faraday cage” effect which shuts out the magnetic lines of force. Without the magnetic lines of force—or with suppressed, deflected or diminished lines of force—the rotation of the tubes of force by the magnetic field may be diminished or stopped, resulting in a resistance to increased momentum. Such propositions gives ample food for thought.

If Tesla had continued to increase the earth’s electrostatic charge with his gadgetry, he might have thrown the earth’s timing off, slowed it down, and possibly caused it to drift toward the sun or away from it. But that is what he said was possible. Being aware of these facts he later addressed them and even listed them as future technical possibilities, which also corroborated his developments in the field of propulsion, in case anybody noticed.

Local Momentum and Celestial Movement

It’s an odd thing, momentum. If a body is in motion relative to earth, its momentum is in the direction of motion, while as a body at rest on a spot on earth, it still has momentum along with the spot’s ultimate motion relative to the universe. The motion is compound, the ultimate momentum of a body being truly a vector which represents all the forces acting upon it. Yet as a body at relative rest on the earth, it appears to defy all the other vector quantities because in it's stationary position it becomes a virtual part of the earth.

The earth rotates at over 1,041 mph at the equator, so there is that momentum, but the earth’s orbital speed and path around the sun means that the earth’s more general path in the solar system is in the direction of its orbit. A spot on the earth’s rotating surface would appear to a distant observer to be moving slower in its direction of orbital motion over a period of half a day, yet it is always moving in its orbital path at over 66,600 mph. The rotation alternately diminishes and increases the speed of that “spot” through the universe, gradually rotating its ultimate solar orientation once every 24 hours. With this compound movement and momentum—of the earth, the solar system, the Milky Way, etc.—we have a more complex pattern of movement, and since a body is in constant, compound, gradual, ever-changing motion relative to the ether and the universe, some interesting effects are bound to be discovered. These effects are not, as described by Newton’s laws, due to an attractive force acting at a distance, through an empty space. “Force at a distance” requires an ether relative to Tesla’s Teleforce discoveries and his Dynamic Theory of Gravity .

Due to the relatively gradual orbiting and rotating changes in respect to earth’s motion relative to the background ether, a relatively small amount of “externally acting” force (“gravity”) would have to be ever-present in order for Newton’s laws to appear to apply even on the purely descriptive level, except for the local ether phenomenon which I will specify in further detail, which insures “force-free” perpetual motion, despite the gravitational effects of the ether. While I agree with that part of Einstein’s theory that says gravity is not due to the direct action of one object on another (no “force at a distance”), I disagree with the part that says it is due to the idea that a large spinning body “wraps” space around itself and “curves it”. Without an ether there is nothing to curve, and with it, there is no Relativity Theory and “no curved space” (as Tesla said).

In early 1995, in exchange for a copy of Space Aliens From the Pentagon , I received a copy of Eric Lerner’s The Big Bang Never Happened , and was pleased to find that there are some in the academic world of physics (or astrophysics), who share at least in part, my own views on the 'Big Bang Theory', although they don’t go so far as I do in saying the theory has been promoted by the coercive energy monopolists, along with Relativism, because of its apparent negation of the free energy available from the universe via the ether. This universal free energy is due to what I call the “Law of Conservation of Perpetual Motion”. I found Lerner’s book refreshing, not to mention useful in charting some of my own if not Tesla's ideas on a more cosmic scale.

Lerner’s relatively unsung hero is Hannes Alfvén, a Swedish astrophysicist and cosmologist, whose earlier “academic burial” by the Relativists was somewhat reversed in 1970 by a Nobel Prize awarded to him for his development of cosmic magnetohydrodynamics and his concept of frozen lines of magnetic force, a theory later modulated in part by him. Alfvén had in a way replaced the word “ether” with “plasma”, and strongly disagreed with the Relativist’s misuse of mathematical theory, which he said ‘must always be the servant of physical mathematical theory, which he said ‘must always be the servant of physical understanding and close observation, rather than its master’. He claimed that giant currents through space, from the sun through the planets, along frozen lines of force, actually transfer angular momentum to the planets. This discovery, together with his work on cosmic MHD events, places Alfvén’s work very close to Tesla’s Dynamic Theory of Gravity.

The appearance of such books as Lerner’s is a positive development, which represents dissent which seems intolerable to the Relativists. The Big Bang Theory is in decline among scientists, despite all the NASA false propaganda in the press and mass media attempting to perpetuate and support this false theory. I recommend Lerner’s book, even though he has not yet evoked an affirmative support for ether theory, but has dared to challenge Relativism and the Big Bang cosmology.

The actual course that a particular spot on earth takes through the universe is naturally more complex than that of the sun, since the earth and the spot on it represents a smaller cycle within the larger. Relative to the background ether, the entire interrelated movements of the solar system and Milky Way takes our spot in a generally wavy path, along which our velocity relative to external bodies periodically accelerates and decelerates.

The same principles of momentum which apply to the cosmos must also apply to the motion of immediately local bodies, except that the effects are skewered by the presence of earth’s pesky electric, magnetic, and so-called “gravity” fields. What Alfvén had touched upon in his long-unrecognized discovery of the giant electric and magnetic currents through space, are similar to unrecognized forces operative on a local scale as well. As our planet hurls through space at ca. 70,000 mph, and us with it, there are things happening on a smaller, even microscopic scale, which play important parts in this giant panorama.

The big question—the one which those who promoted the Big Bang cosmology sought prematurely to put to rest—is how can everything stay in perpetual motion, while under the Relativist theory the law of conservation of energy is violated—and thereby the Relativist theory also refuted? The still-born theories of Tesla were forever gnawing at the monopolists’ throats, along with those of Alfvén, so they wanted to obscure all truly competing theories, and to enshrine the Relativists and Big Bangers in the annals of science for all time. Their method was to fabricate a scenario in which one original giant explosion was the ‘origin’ from which all we see is but an effect which will eventually “run down” like a car which is out of gas. Thus they created and attached the entropy theory to the Second Law of Thermodynamics as if an integral part of it so that energy is constantly becoming “unavailable” as the universe runs down. And that would mean that the Second Law of Thermodynamics would violate the First Law of Thermodynamics.

The missing ideas are how universal processes are continually self-replenished. Through an interplay of natural strong and weak forces acting with matter, perpetual motion is conserved. Strong forces overcome weaker forces and do more work in the same periods of time. Cosmic radiation travels through the ether, until it reacts with plasma, forming matter. When matter concentrates, forces acting with it concentrate. In contact with other, less concentrated matter, stronger cosmic forces acting within the space it occupies are unleashed, producing transmutations and eventually more cosmic radiation, which travels through space until absorbed and changed by plasma or other mass, producing larger masses or other radiation, and the process continues, ad infinitum. And all this reacting often with Tesla's Primary Solar Rays.

The rigid thinker must have a simplistic answer as to “where matter comes from”, “where it is going”, “what is the purpose of life”, etc. Sometimes we must accept reality, and discard phony theories which attempt to give us a simplistic answer for what we either must admit that we just don’t know, or should consider some questions too stupid to ask. The facts concerning the existence of universal matter, forces, vast distances, massive bodies and events, and perpetual motion are irreducible primaries or “first laws” about reality, which we must accept before we can progress with answering particular questions related to the more useful aspects of existence.

Since the orbital speed of the earth around the sun is greater than the speed of earth’s rotation, our spot never moves “backward” relative to the ether, though it slows down and speeds up. The orbital speed of the Milky Way is greater than the orbital speed of the solar system or rotational speed of the earth, and our spot continues in a generally “wavy-wavy” path in which we accelerate and decelerate over a one-day longer cycle, and so forth. There are still larger and larger cycles of motion over time, as stated before. As can be seen from these cyclical movements, the universe is a system of interrelated systems which move generally in gear-like precision, rather than in a more randomized explosive pattern ala the Big Bang. Universal movement is in an orderly, cyclical pattern of circles (or ellipses), within circles, representing mechanical oscillations which are related to smaller and larger electromagnetic ones. The exceptions to this are related to smaller and larger electromagnetic ones. The exceptions to this—the occasional cosmic explosion, such as that of a supernova—proves rather than disproves the rule. Even the occasional comet follows a cyclical pattern, while the debris from cosmic events eventually falls into orderly patterns. Though such explosions on our scale are gigantic, they are like minor ripples in a pond on a cosmic scale, and should not be allowed to warp our perspective. Neither are the events in the entire universe governed by the profuse scribbles written by someone on a fly-infested dung heap in the Middle East a few thousand years ago.

If last week a remote controlled telescope—such as the Hubbell —showed a movement which when compared to an earlier measurement of a few years ago indicated a movement away from a distant part of the universe, just remember that this is only an observation of movement taken from one perspective at one time of a much larger pattern of oscillations over a much longer period of time, in which the movement may later appear to be going the other way, from our point of view or that of the telescope, if we could make an observation millions of years into the future. Because of the circuitous patterns of movements which we observe in relation to earth at the present, and the larger structures in “our vicinity” of the universe, we have good reason to believe that all such movements are cyclical, and to extrapolate ourselves into the time when the appearance would be quite different. The theory that the earth and other celestial bodies are the result of the Big Bang are ludicrous. Just try to imagine the Big Bang explosion building the earth up from a small mass in space, to build thousands of feet of the detritus of living things, to increase the mass of the earth through photosynthesis, which has nothing to do with a Big Bang. What a coincidence! The universe has no “age”, as it has always existed, and always will. The whole theory about how planets “were created” from the Big Bang is ridiculous.

Life forms would not only have to have existed at one time on Mars, but on all other planets and stars, at some time. In fact, the planets grew from smaller bodies as a result of life forms, which convert interstellar ether into solid mass, driven by cosmic radiation. There is no depth to which we can drill on earth, or otherwise produce direct evidence to the contrary, where we will not find matter which was in its past part of living things. This theory of course makes the planet “too old” for the Big Bangers, as it would take a much longer time for the earth to reach its present state, and would throw their “calendar”—called the “Hubbell Constant”, through which the high priests of the Big Bang have determined earth’s alleged “birth date”—off.

For example, one of the components of chlorophyll is iron. This iron along with the carbon deposits and other elements result from photosynthesis. If strata of the earth, thousands of feet—even miles —thick, are composed of the decayed and metamorphosed remains of plant and animal life, the original biomass represents a conversion ultimately of ether, driven by radiation through photosynthesis, and into the many elements and minerals composing the strata, which can be easily traced to this process, such as iron, calcium, phosphorus, sulfur, nitrogen, carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and helium. Such elements accumulate through the cosmically-driven forces of life forms. There is probably a constant of universal mathematical proportionality between life forms and inorganic ones. And we should realize that all of this mass of the earth's upper layers, down to the deepest level we can drill, represents mass which has been added to earth's mass by life processes in which ultimately cosmic radiation drives the accumulation of mass from the ether.

The ether, the medium which supposedly conducts sound waves in the ether through space, can apparently be converted into any form of matter. Otherwise, where would that mass come from? It is also apparently possible to precipitate any element from the ether, or to transmute other elements, using proper technology which emulates or speeds up this natural process. The ether contains the building blocks of what we call "solid matter", the proof of which enhances this possibility.

Tesla eventually realized the ether's use in his discovery of the "tremendous propelling force". His propulsion technology works and that is more important that splitting hairs...or atoms.

Only an ether which is intimately involved with momentum, could explain such a tremendous propulsion force such as that which I observed in 1953. This propulsive force was nothing more than a force which exists in nature, which in the hands of man becomes an article of will, once the physical processes capable of synthesizing and manipulating it become known.

Based on the assumption that I could see the ship for thirty miles, I estimate that from the rate and manner of acceleration, in conjunction with the probable mass of the ship which I observed, it was immediately apparent that the entire volume of the ship, if filled with conventional rocket or jet fuel, would have been consumed in the three seconds required for it to accelerate to ca. 36,000 mph and disappear at the point of infinity. This was only possible because of the existence disappear at the point of infinity. This was only possible because of the existence of Tesla’s technology which “electro-mechanically” canceled inertia and synthesized a new momentum almost instantaneously. This technology also created a friction-free pathway through the atmosphere and also prevented a shock wave or sonic boom, perhaps explainable by the fact that Tesla’s “sound waves at the speed of light” are involved. Another explanation is that rapidlyvarying negative electrostatic potentials apparently create a path of mutually repulsive, same-sign negative charges in the atmosphere before, along and behind the ship’s path which do not clap rapidly back together behind the ship to create the sonic boom. I observed the atmospheric effects of the lingering charges scintillating and sizzling behind the ship, as they slough off.

What is inertia? Inertia is the momentum which a body “at rest” already possesses because it is in a state of uniform motion, but which to us appears to be at rest. Tesla’s technology apparently uses the electrical attractive force, which produces 2×10^{39} power times more work, using a smaller amount of “gravitational” or chemical “input energy” to drive an electrical generator to produce the electricity to trigger the change. If “energy” is the “ability to do work”, and “work” is the “movement of a mass through a distance”, and a stronger force will do more work over a given time period, a change in form of force from a weaker to a stronger force (which exists in the environment) will use “environmental energy” to do more work in a new way.

The process which makes Tesla propulsion possible, is the dynamism of the universe, which naturally exchanges weaker and stronger forces to conserve perpetual motion, with any lost momentum being re-supplied by the Primary Solar Rays or other natural cosmic radiation or forces. That seems the only way to explain such a fantastic demonstration of technology in defiance to so-called “accepted theory”, but in accordance to Tesla’s hidden ones which the government possesses in secrecy. Otherwise, why the secrecy?

CHAPTER III: OBSERVATIONS

With Tesla’s theory and the background of older research and theories held temporarily in abeyance, let’s look at what has been directly observed either by myself or by those closely associated with me.

What I began observing in 1946, and have continued ever since, are man-made electro-mechanical flying machines which can hover, turn on a dime at high speed without flying apart, and accelerate almost instantaneously to at least 36,000 mph, without readily audible sound or sonic boom. The ship I observed in 1953, in broad daylight, hovering at about 300 feet distance, about 250 feet above ground level, precessed at a high angle—about 45 degrees—and a low rate of about two cycles per second. Soon after I spotted it, it began to move away directly due west, quickly accelerating to about 200 mph, at which time it did two absolutely square turns—a right angle turn straight down and another right angle turn about a hundred feet lower, back into level flight—then accelerated to a point of infinity above the horizon about 30 miles away in three seconds. This maneuver to lower its elevation above ground by about a hundred feet appeared to be designed to make the ship less visible to observers on the ground, when the pilot discovered that he was hovering over a town. The high angle of precession appears in retrospect to have been a malfunction of the gyro-stabilization system, as it would have otherwise have made it very difficult for a viewer inside the ship to make any sense out of what he could see outside.

The ship was constructed as if it were two 50-foot diameter stainless steel woks joined together clamshell fashion. It had concentric “striations”—grooves in its surface which appeared to be about one inch wide all over its surface—which gave its two halves the appearance of giant “spun-metal” woks, as it precessed with the sun’s rays playing on its oscillating bright metallic surface. The sun was about ten degrees above the horizon at the time.

As it precessed, the ship gave off a sparkling, “rainbow-colored” electrical corona, like a metallic surface which was being electrified with high voltage Tesla coils. On the shadow side of the bottom when it was periodically turned away from the sun during oscillations, there appeared a soft, ‘cloudy’, infra-red glow, which indicated the possible presence of microwaves on the bottom, while the general “rainbow” corona from the top was “brushy” and apparently of high voltage negative electrostatics. As the ship began accelerating, the rainbow corona formed a sparkling, scintillating trail behind the ship, which also showed a “texture” across the trail which appeared to coincide with the frequency of the precessions which increased in rate as the ship accelerated, until a mere vibratory blur by the time the ship made its two 90-degree turns at about 200 mph, which is a rough estimate. The ion trail gradually faded out behind the ship, with little sparkles appearing in the trail as it did so. The ionizations produced by this ship—rapidly-varying electrostatic ones produced by the one-quarter wavelength tuning of Tesla’s single terminal coil—apparently produced the sound waves which were projected along the direction of acceleration, and bringing in the tubes of force necessary for the propulsive force to act on the ship. All this theory was apparent from the effects graphically illustrated by the corona together with the actions of the ship.

corona together with the actions of the ship.

The ship had flown due west, toward the northern border of Ft. Bliss, near El Paso, Texas. Ft. Bliss was the location of Headquarters, U. S. Army Ordinance, where Wernher von Braun was appointed research director in the summer of 1945. Von Braun's main base of operation had been moved to Redstone Arsenal, Alabama about 1951.

Consistent with the observed behavior, the electro-mechanical system appeared to instantly synthesize in an internal atomic way, inertia and momentum, things which normally create problems in acceleration and turning, but which the system overcame as shown by the evidence of the square, right-angle turns and extremely rapid acceleration. The system appeared to have very little to do with "gravity" in the textbook way, even though it did reveal that gravity itself is apparently due to the same kinds of electro-mechanics. These observations were taken at face value, as proof of certain facts concerning the nature of the ether, gravity, inertia, momentum, and electro-mechanical propulsion. It was also taken as proof of the fact that I saw a machine, that machines are man-made, and that Tesla had described his invention of a flying machine which had these properties.

I had observed whole squadrons of saucers flying at high altitude in formation at night, beginning in 1946, and continuing in 1947 through 1953 at our next house, during which time I slept outdoors in our back yard. The squadrons arrived over our town from the direction of New Mexico, the border of which was about ten miles north. The ships departed back to the north after their night-time maneuvers. Ergo, those particular ships were from a New Mexico base, which I took to be Holloman AFB at Alamogordo or White Sands Missile Range.

The night squadron saucers turned in angles of 30 degrees or multiples (30, 60, 90, 120, 180, etc.) which meant those particular multiples (30, 60, 90, 120, 180, etc.) which meant those particular vintage Peiltochterkompass was used on.

My observations, together with all the written information on the Peiltochterkompass, and an analysis of the device itself, revealed quite a lot about the German "Kurskreisel Tochterkompass-p2" and the propulsion system:

1. The ships were electro-mechanically propelled;
2. the propulsion system created an electric field around the saucers which necessitated the development of a celestial guidance system and compass, since necessitated the development of a celestial guidance system and compass, since a magnetic compass would be useless due to the “Faraday cage” effect;

3. the ship was a circular, discus-shaped craft, which turned in 12 peripheral directions (thirty degrees each) of the compass, plus “up” and “down”;

4. the ships used a celestially oriented master navigational gyro (“Kurskreisel”), calibrated prior to take-off to the Pole Star, Arcturus, as the frame of reference with which to navigate the ship using an electromagnetic slave compass (“Tochterkompass”), which was also interconnected to stepping switches which actuated the ship’s bi-polar propulsion electrodes as the pilot wished;

5. the system canceled the normal effects of gravity, inertia, and momentum, and instantly synthesized momentum in the chosen direction, without disturbing the operation of the master gyro, which continued to maintain its heading during flights, apparently because of its ‘internal’ inertia/momentum within the ship’s outer shell;

6. the instant turns showed an incompressible ether which is integrally locked with mass in the phenomena of inertia, momentum, and gravity.

The celestial orientation of the Kurskreisel to the Pole Star meant that no matter where on earth the ship flew, true north would be correctly indicated. If a line is drawn from the Pole Star down through the center of the earth, this is the axis around which the earth revolves. This master gyro had electrical contacts around it’s gimbal so that as the ship was turned in the 30-degree increments, the contacts would relay that information to the slave compass so that the small motor would come on and rotate the geared flight direction indicator ring until it showed the correct direction of flight in relation to true north.

Since the 1953 daylight sighting, I have seen many other electro-mechanical craft, but one of the best sightings I made was on a moonlit night while soaking in a hot tub.

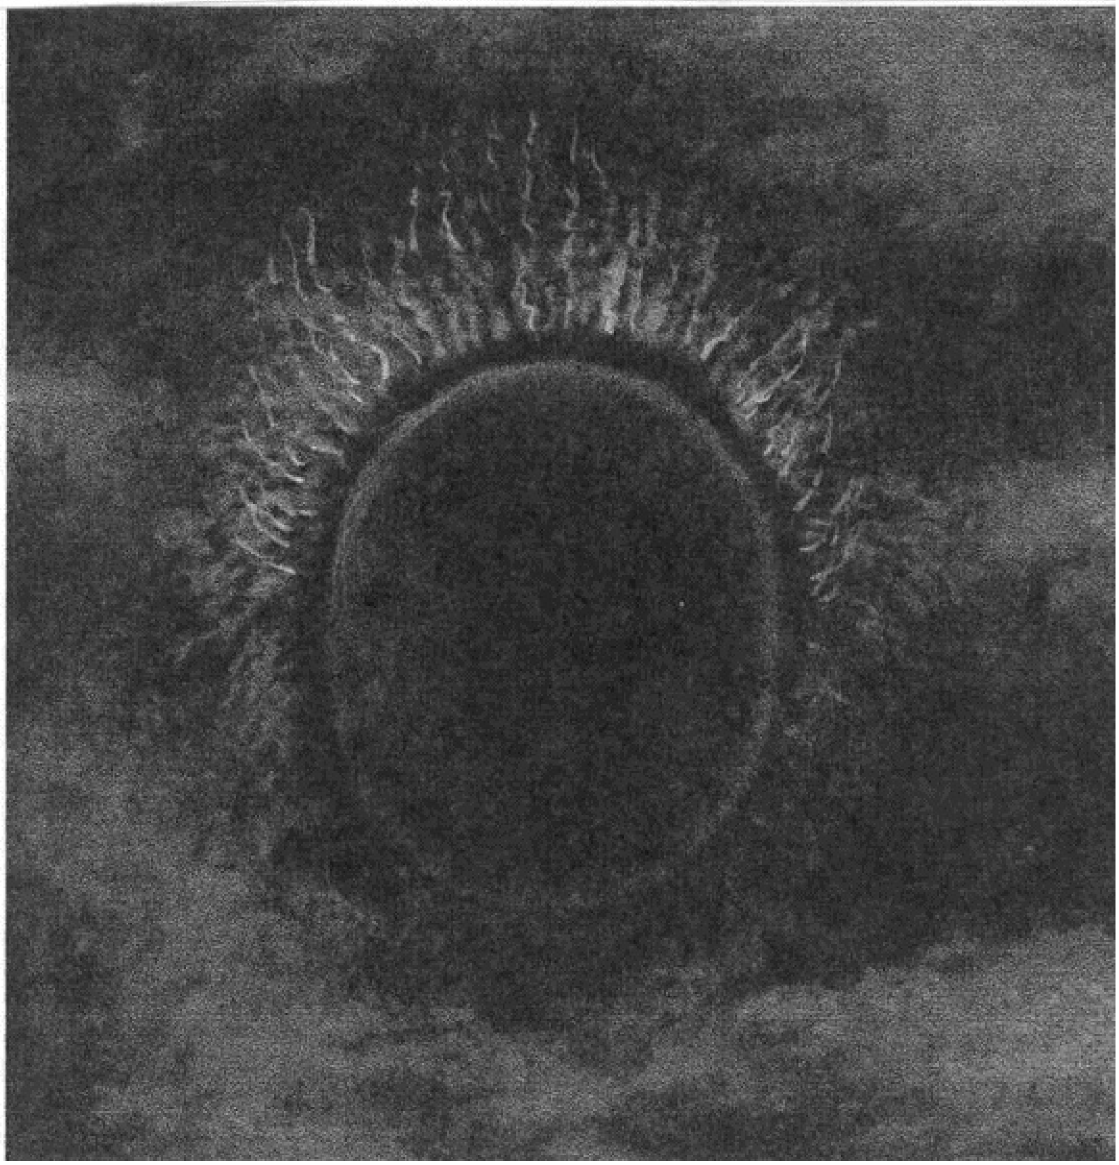
Rub-a-Dub-Dub, Seven Folks in a Hot Tub

On a Wednesday evening, January 24, 1996, at approximately 7:00 PM, I sat in a hot tub with seven other people, at the Ten Thousand Waves Japanese Bath House, located on the western slopes of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains, in the Hyde Park vicinity above Santa Fe, New Mexico. As I steamed in the tub, conversation between a couple from Denver and myself drifted from the dangers of fluoride to “What do you do?”, to which I answered, “I write some”. Asked what I had written, I answered “A book called Space Aliens From the Pentagon” .

A beautiful woman on my right exclaimed “I have your book. I’m a friend of Alex and Rex. I love your book so much, and so do they.” I thanked her and we exchanged introductions, and then I said “I see saucers up here almost every time I’m here after dark...and as a matter of fact, there’s one right there” (pointing out a flashing aircraft flying slowly easterly about 15 degrees to the lower left of the crescent moon, at a distance of about 10,000 feet from us).

A heckler across the tub said “Aww, that’s a plane”, to which I responded, “There’s another one...and if they’re planes, why have they parked? (The ships had become stationary in the air.) The flashing lights mask an underlying glow. The eye recoils from a flash, and never has time to recover before another flash. When they move faster, they glow brighter, which is why they are going so slowly.”

No sooner had I spoken than the stationary ship on the left quit flashing, and turned into a much larger dark, glowing green shape like a football field surrounded by a track. Around the “track” was a dark strip, with a purple corona outside that, produced by the Tesla coils. I could see the curvature of its bottom as it moved, flying in a large circle, as I followed it with my outstretched arm and index finger, and my fellow hot-tubbers oggled in jaw-dropped amazement. The following is a black-and-white photo of a painting I did of the saucer, as seen from the bottom. The ship is moving upward in the illustration, in the direction in which the electrostatic leaders are moving:



It returned to its starting point, stopped instantly and began flashing like a small plane again. This took approximately ten seconds. Since the ship appeared about three-quarters of an inch long at arm's length (about 2 feet), at the 10,000-foot distance, it was around 400 feet long and 250 feet wide. Since the diameter of the circle it flew in was about 30 degrees, its speed was about 2,000 mph (the speed didn't surprise me since I had clocked the one I saw in 1953 over our back yard at a minimum of 36,000 mph when it departed; I had also clocked one on a radar scope at Keesler A.F.B., Mississippi in 1956 doing 4,000 mph flying over Lake Ponchartrain).

I almost missed this ship because I didn't have my glasses, and because it appeared to have been "stealth-ized"—designed to be concealed by the dark night sky, by controlling its emission color to be dark green, with the purple corona also being dark, so as to more closely match the light value of and blend into the night sky. The main ‘give-away’ was the color differences.

Others in the tub—most of whom didn’t need glasses—saw it more sharply than I, yet wouldn’t have seen it at all had I not pointed it out to them. I probably would not have seen it myself had I not been observing as a habit, the flashing ships beforehand, with the moon so close above, creating some back-lighting which helped to define the larger, darker silhouette when it arrived. Moreover, the real reason I saw it, was my own preconscious mental selfconditioning.

I was amazed at its large size, since, when flashing, it appeared like a small plane with beacon. When I finally looked back to the other side of the tub, the heckler was gone, the on-cue saucer demo being apparently too much for him. If the saucer crew had been listening to my words, their performance couldn’t have been more perfectly timed. Bravo! Do they also have some computer software that reads lips? It is my theory that the human saucer-jockies have chosen that particular location to do some “testing”, because of the titillating availability of the numerous private hot tubs open to the night sky, occupied by private nude couples of all sexual persuasions, easily video taped by them. I can see them trading the tapes among themselves, another good reason to “...keep the secret” to avoid prosecution for invasion of privacy and violation of voyeurism laws.

It was the first time I had seen the green-glowing type reported years ago by astronomer Clyde Tombaugh, then recognized as the discoverer of the planet Pluto. It was the second most graphic demonstration of the saucer technology I have witnessed. If I had not spotted it, it is probable that none of us would have seen anything extraordinary, excluding the beautiful lady next to me who liked my book, and was a strong competition to the saucers. Incidentally, the female breast shape may be “natures most nearly-perfect shape for a flying saucer design.” The “green-glowing” type was apparently the result of research designed to make the ships less visible in the night sky, since the early models—such as the “foo-fighters” (“Fliegende Schildkrote” [Flying Turtle] and “Kugelblitz” [Ball Lightening]) glowed brightly. The oblong design (as distinguished from the circular or ‘peripheral’ saucers) comports with what I call the “linear type”. According to a friend who is an expert spectrographer, the green corona indicated atomic absorption, which I presume to be ‘stealth’ technology used to suppress the white light spectrum. He seemed to think sodium based coatings, while I think maybe chromium, because it appeared to be a veridian (“chrome”) green. The soft, ‘cloudy’ green also indicated positive a veridian (“chrome”) green. The soft, “cloudy” green also indicated positive corona, as distinguished from the ‘hairy’ negative (purple) corona around the outer periphery, and usually seen on Tesla coils.

Comparison to Other Sightings

Though remarkable, the hot tub sighting was not a clear, “daylight”, “close-range” sighting, like the first good sighting which I had personally made on a bright, late summer afternoon in West Texas, in 1953, within 250-300 feet, right over our back yard, in Kermit, Texas, as our family and friends were having an ice cream party. I had been the last in my family and neighborhood to see a saucer in a close-up daylight sighting, since three had appeared on two consecutive days, June 1st and 2nd, 1950, while I was unfortunately in the Davis Mountains about 120 miles to the west. My father in his lifetime had seen more than I had, and was once held in his car for 15-30 minutes, on the night of Nov. 2, 1957, just south of Levelland, Texas, by one of the 200-foot-long ships, which had scared the livin’ daylights out of him. The thing hovered within ten feet of his car top, killed his engine, and burned out all his lights, yet failed to burn out a single fuse in any of the car’s circuits. The saucer’s electric field was apparently so strong that it arrested current flow, and was strong enough to cancel the magnetic fields in the generator and circuits. The white-hot tungsten filaments of the bulbs were the weakest points in the circuits, and the saucer’s pulse currents apparently subjected them to magnetic and electric shear forces which broke them apart.

My father had to drive back to Levelland in the dark, spend the night in a motel, then drive home to Odessa, Texas at dawn’s first light. He arrived home about 7:30 AM, had a quick breakfast, and left for Sewell Ford to have his lights fixed, saying nothing about the saucer. I turned on the TV for the morning news as he left, and realized that he had been one of the several drivers held by the ship (or ships) that night. I went to Sewell Ford and questioned him about it as the mechanic fixed the lights, and he asked me how I knew about the ship, and I told him it was on the news. He said he didn’t want to be called “crazy”, so had remained silent. This was what I call “anti-paranoia”. It is sometimes reasonable to fear ridicule created by false government propaganda.

Later, in 1963, I had the opportunity to discuss the matter more fully with the sheriff of Hockley County, while working in Brownfield, Texas. The ship seen by my father matched in shape, appearance, and performance, the type observed by deputy Lonnie Zamora, near Socorro, New Mexico. Zamora had at first described the crew of the ship he saw as typical G.I.s in gray-green Air Force flight suits, but later altered his story, saying they were “...about the size of children”. This was after the security spooks had ‘leaned’ on him.

In 1993 to 1998, ships could be seen almost any night in the area where I live in New Mexico, and were very profuse in an even more obvious way around the Cheyenne Mountain area to the south of Colorado Springs, Colorado, where the underground NORAD complex is located. The prevalence of the ships near my home diminished rapidly after my books became more widely read, as this caused a lot of people to begin observing them.

There has been another separate problem which I previously thought to be unrelated, the fact that I have been working on a book about ancient petroglyphs and have been blocked out of the San Cristóbal Ranch which I had free access to for over sixteen years before it fell into the hands of Ronald Reagan’s blind trust. The trustee was John Henry Singleton, who eventually bought the over 81,000-acre ranch, which has some of the most important petroglyphs I know of for my research. The gluttonous ranch holdings for “Singleton Ranches” (there are several in New Mexico and some in California) had apparently become the receptacle for the large corporate income derived from military contracts by the two military-industrial complex corporations which Singleton was cocreator of, Teledyne and Raytheon. I had always believed that the reason I was blocked out of the ranch after the change in ownership was because of the archeologists, who hate my competing discoveries, and don’t want them published. I now know that the reason is additionally and especially due to my UFO research, made apparent after I gave them a copy of Space Aliens From the Pentagon in 1994, after which I was immediately and threateningly blocked out of the ranch. I am humiliated by the shoddy and rude treatment and I have never encountered such inhospitable behavior by land owners in the Southwest---who are usually dignified and hospitable---and maybe that is because these corporate, military-industrial complextype people from Los Angeles just don’t fit in here.

In January, 2010, as I was watching TV in the dark at 2:00 A.M. because I couldn’t sleep, I spotted a large discoid ship passing by through the large window above my TV on a downward path toward the ranch. Two minutes later I saw a second ship identical to the first one on the very same glide path toward the ranch. In the following nights when I traveled down the highway going home from Santa Fe I observed ships coming out of and going to the ranch. There is a saucer base over there. I should have figured this out before since Ratheon and Teledyne, and some of their many subsidiaries, manufacture components for Teledyne, and some of their many subsidiaries, manufacture components for UFOs. Their security there is way too high to be explained by mere “archaeological digs”. They don’t want me over there because they fear I’d discover the base. And now I have.

With the several direct observations or reports from those in my family or from close friends kept firmly in mind, let’s see what more can be found in ether theory history to reflect on them.

The Ether and “Ponderable Matter”

In 1879, James Clerk Maxwell (1831-1879) said that the velocity of the solar system relative to the ether could be determined by observing the retardation of the eclipses of Jupiter’s satellites. The purportedly observed behavior—in which the light of a star can be viewed with a steady image as the earth moves through space— indicates a stationary ether relative to a moving earth, solar system, and other bodies. But according to Tesla, this idea was defective, since you could not make such an observation on earth because the ether within earth’s electric field is carried along with the earth. You might be able to make such an observation in outer space.

The ether is ultra-fine and presumably composed of positive and negative electric matter, which pervades all so-called “free space” as well as space “occupied” by “mass”—which the old ether physicists called “ponderable matter”—even though mostly “space”. Since the ether is stationary near the earth, it is ‘ponderable matter’, at least where the ether is rigidified by earth’s rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials and electric field.

The ether is transparent and does not refract or reflect light because of its “inconceivable tenuity” (Tesla said), although it is said to behave as a solid to light and heat. To “access” the ether in a propulsive way, rapidly-varying high voltage electrostatic potentials are required, in accord with Tesla's sound waves in the ether theory, first confirmed by the tests conducted by Tesla in 1891 (later detailed in his 1891 lecture before the A.I.E.E., Columbia College, N.Y.). Tesla’s tests confirmed a reaction which was more than the feeble ionic reaction of light gases or so-called “electro-gravitics” such as those that the misinforming 1950s “patents” of T. Townsend Brown, later used in attempt to induce the gullible public to believe was the correct technology. After his tests, Tesla stated that the ether became a “solid state” medium which could be accessed by subjecting it to electrostatic impulses of “sufficiently high voltage and frequency”.

The ether also becomes more apparent when there is a sudden change in the direction of motion, rate of acceleration, or velocity of a body. The relative movement of a charged body, equivalent to current, apparently creates a new degree of electrical displacement of the ether through which it moves, and influences the resistance to changes in velocity through the affected ether by the protons, neutrons and electrons composing the body itself. The increased work required to move such a charged sphere—the increased “resistance to change” called “inertia”—reflected by the increase in its tendency to remain in its current state of motion (actually its current “momentum”), demonstrates that the changes have created the resistance to movement of the sphere through the space through which it moves. Therefore, once in relative motion at a constant velocity—though more work was initially required due to the increased charges to give it that increased relative motion—the sphere’s momentum should be increased consistent to an increase in its “virtual mass”. This should make it clear that both inertia and momentum are caused by the same thing, which is a persistence in the reaction patterns in the atomic and electrostatic structure of the mass to maintain its present state of motion due to its properties as they are affected by the ether. Just as changing magnetic fields or electric fields are required for inductance, the creation of such changing electrostatic fields are the basis for producing the sound waves in the ether for Tesla's electro-mechanical momentum.

All bodies are in motion, and within all bodies, protons, neutrons and electrons are always in motion, because “elasticity” and vibratory motion occurs in “ponderable matter” even when a body is at relative “rest”. The ether apparently sets up certain patterns of motion in ponderable matter passing through it, relative to that motion, and changes in those patterns brought about by electrostatic inductance can impart new motion to that matter, or inhibit its motion as shown by the charged sphere. It is clear that something in space affects motion, otherwise it wouldn't be harder to move a charged sphere through the space so engendered.

A body at relative rest on the earth sits within the ether rigidified by earth’s rapidly-varying electrostatically-induced mechanical waves, and there is a down-force on that body called “gravity” created by the tubes of force being pulled down. As a body on earth moves parallel to earth’s surface through the ether within its electric field, rigidified by earth’s rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials (creating sound waves in the ether), it accumulates some of these ether “tubes of force” commensurate to its motion, which gives it added horizontal momentum momentum.

It is possible that the tubes of force, induced to flow into an earth-bound body, can cause a downward thrust on the body's atoms, away from the pre-existing "equilibrium position" (which the atoms would occupy in the absence of earth's electric field) which we call "gravity". The equilibrium position for the electrical particles of ponderable matter varies according to mass density and displacement of the ether. A change in this electric displacement may result in a new equilibrium position. The body always moves toward equilibrium. The time-relative aspect of the rate of acceleration of a falling body is apparently due to its relative accumulated and dissolved tubes of force as it falls, regardless of its mass density.

In summary, inside an earth-bound body at relative rest there is a difference in ether displacement effects from that which exists outside the body in free space. Since earth's electric field is vertically graduated through the intermediate space between the negative at earth's surface and the positive at the ionosphere, the electric properties of mass are subjected to graduated strains. The effect of electrical displacement and gravity vary accordingly, somewhat like Newton's "inverse square" law. It is here that a difference between the "force of gravity" and the effects of inertia and momentum become apparent, since outside the earth's electric field there is apparently no gravity.

Traditionally, inertia has always been considered (according to Newton's First Law of Motion) the tendency of a body "at rest" (actually in "constant velocity" with earth) to continue its state of rest (or constant velocity), unless acted upon by an external force. Since all bodies at relative rest are already moving at the same "constant velocity" of the earth however, only changes in movement relative to earth are at issue, and any such changes affect the patterns of flow within mass of the tubes of force, as the body moves through the rigidified ether, at any given time. Since only a body which moves relative to the earth has been traditionally said to have "momentum" ("the product of a body's mass and velocity"), this rule ignores the fact that all bodies "at rest" relative to earth already have "momentum" therefore "inertia". And Tesla turned these theories upside down.

Momentum and inertia are apparently due to the exact same "tendency", which relates ultimately to a frame of reference to the universal ether, but for convenience—since we don't have an absolute "fix" on the ether—we use the moving earth as a frame of reference from which to measure a body's rate of change relative to the ether, as the earth maintains it relatively constant velocity. There is a special case on earth, because the ether within earth’s electric field has been “conditioned”—that is, it has been subjected to electric strain. This comports with Tesla’s statement concerning the effects of “rapidly varying electrostatic forces” emanating from the earth.

The earth has momentum within the sun’s frame of reference, just as a moving car has momentum within the earth’s frame of reference. Some physicists have mistakenly applied a “gravitational field of influence” idea, thinking this somehow isolates a body from references outside this field. I believe that this is only an “apparent effect” and that earth’s “gravitational field” is a product of its moving electric field (a “current”) as it influences the ether within it, and that the so-called “gravity field” extends no further than earth’s electric field.

Momentum is due to the accumulation inside a body of the dissolving tubes of force as the body passes through the ether, or in the case of UFO propulsion, the electro-mechanical inducement of the inward flow and dissolution of the tubes of force imparting mechanical momentum to the ship. The rotation of these tubes of force is the product of the magnetic rotation of the plane of polarization first identified by Michael Faraday. Any variance from the earth’s uniform motion results in a resistance to change in the orientation of the tubes of force, since the rotating tubes of force spin around their irrotational ether cores over a given time and a change in motion forces them to rotate around a greater or lesser quantity of ether depending on whether the change is an acceleration or deceleration. The tubes possess electro-mechanical force which is at least 10^{40} power times stronger than the gravitational interaction (or 2 X 10^{39} power times stronger than the so-called gravitational attractive force), which explains why these tiny tubes can have such a great influence over a mass in motion. This force is locked into the discrete flow pattern between the ether and the tubes, which are coupled to the ‘ponderable matter’ structure which is the recipient of the momentum.

Though the flow patterns are always gradually changing because of the continual reorientation of the earth as it moves in its angular momentum around the sun and in its motion with and within the solar system, these changes are sensually imperceptible because they are so gradual over time, with effects which are virtually constant. Though the changes are too slow to sense, the action of the tides are related to them as well as the electrical displacements caused by the positions of the moon relative to earth.

The natural gravity force is always normally toward the earth, which is

The natural gravity force is always normally toward the earth, which is negatively charged, within earth’s electric/gravity field, due to the polarity of that field, since the negative component of the ether in free space is electrically displaced upward by the repulsion of like charges. Meanwhile the inertial characteristics of positive mass is forced and attracted downward, and is more resistant to the changes in displacement.

The movement of ether particles is related to the gravity force. Due to the greater velocity of the electromagnetic interaction at C however, this down-force is irrespective to the direction of earth’s movement since the interaction between the electrical components of matter and the ether due to the conditioning by the earth’s electric field, is vertically polarized. This creates the same proximate effect on mass over time, irrespective as to earth’s orientation relative to the ether external to the earth’s electric field.

Orbiting Planets and Satellites

The concept that a satellite in orbit around earth is “held” in orbit by “earth’s field of gravity” seems false. The logical implication of my analysis is that the orbital path taken by a body is because it “sees” that path as one of least resistance, as if it were a straight and level path. Since for a given radius above earth the ether is displaced to a certain degree, an orbiting body would experience an accelerating force which would be met by inertia if it were to move upward, and a decelerating force which would be met by momentum if it were to move downward. Its path in force-free constant velocity remains at a constant radius or level of ether displacement, as the path of least resistance.

Since the determinate factor which limits a body’s motion is the reactance of its internal electrical content with the ether at its particular degree of displacement by earth’s electric field at a given altitude, an orbiting body “sees” its orbital path along a path of like displacement. This is contrasted to how Einstein said that space and time are “wrapped” around a large spinning body as it moves through space because, without an ether, there would be nothing in “empty space” to wrap, and time cannot be wrapped because it doesn’t exist as an entity, being our human concept invented to measure the rate at which events occur.

One of the revealing facts obviated by films of astronauts floating in the so-called “gravity-free” space of an orbiting space station, is the contradictory assertion that the space station is “held” in orbit by earth’s gravity. If earth’s gravity exerted sufficient force to hold the station in orbit, the internal environment would not be “gravity free”, but would pull the astronauts down to the floor, instead of allowing them to float all around inside, as we’ve seen so many times on TV. Yet, there is sufficient elasticity within the internal masses of the astronauts’ bodies, between electrical content and the ether, to allow movement in that manner.

If one calculates the phenomenon on a scale model of the earth one foot in diameter, the orbits of the astronauts would be only a tiny fraction of an inch above the surface. For there to be “no gravity” at that “altitude” shows the ridiculousness of the loss of gravity and refutes Newton’s inverse square law. But after all, Boscovich was the father of Relativism and Newton’s corpuscular theory of light was the basis for the eventual elimination of ether theory from textbook science.

CHAPTER IV: HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE THEORY

Rotatory Motion and the “Screw Effect”

Wm. Thomson (Lord Kelvin) asserted that magnetism possesses a “rotatory” character related to heat or the thermal motions of a body [17] . Nikola Tesla made many references to Wm. Thomson, pointing to his work as a prelude to his own discoveries and applications which especially intensified in 1892. A review of the work of the world’s major minds leading up to Tesla’s breakthrough is necessary to show just what Tesla discovered and what it meant in respect to ether physics and physics in general. This is a task made more difficult by the concealment of Tesla’s papers by the U. S. government. And incredibly, the suppression of Tesla began before the 20th century by the absence of references to Tesla or his work by the “Good Old Boys’ Club” in Europe.

Around 1870, Thomson had conducted experiments which seemed to indicate that “gravitational action” could be induced by spheroidal bodies oscillated by electrical currents or mechanical pulses[18] . The surface pulsations could cause attractions or repulsions in respect to other bodies, as verified by Thomson. Tesla was aware of Thomson’s work during his student days in Graz, Austria, beginning in 1875 when he was nineteen. Thomson’s work undoubtedly served as a spark of inspiration for Tesla in his early conception of an “ideal flying machine" which would be propelled by electricity acting upon the ether. This explains Tesla's continual references to Thomson, such as demonstrating during his 1892 London lecture a 'luminous wire' sign powered by a Tesla coil, which said "WILLIAM THOMSON".

At first, Thomson found that ponderomotive forces act between two solid bodies immersed in an incompressible fluid, when one of the bodies is immobilized and made to oscillate with a force which acts along a line between its center and that of a much larger sphere which is free. The free sphere was attracted to the smaller (immobilized) sphere, if its density was greater than the fluid, while a sphere of less density than the fluid was repelled or attracted, according to the ratio of its distance to the vibrator in relation to a certain quantity.[19]

Thomson's experiments were analogical ones, for which he had evoked praise from his contemporaries even when he was still a teenager, although his refusal to believe anyone's assertions unless he could build an analogical model to prove them often led to the consternation of his contemporaries, such as Maxwell, who relied often on mathematical equations. The sphere experiments were designed to use mechanical and electrical wave methods to construct a model to probe the gravitational, inertial and momentum reactions of solid bodies in the ether.

The Faraday Effect—the rotation of the plane of polarization of radiation in a dielectric medium (such as the atmosphere and certain solid materials) in a magnetic field—stated that the angle of rotation of radiation is proportional to the magnetic field strength and the length of the path in the medium in the field. These early experimenters also knew there was a connection between the rotatory motion and momentum, and sought to find it.

The rotatory (versus the linear) character of magnetic phenomena was strengthened by Thomson's experimentally verified conclusions on the magnetic rotation of light. This rotatory character not only influenced Tesla's discovery of the rotating magnetic field, but is also fundamental to inertia and momentum, as I will later explain, since movement of a charged body constitutes a current which creates a magnetic field which creates the rotatory motion which hypothetically may "bore" through momentum-carrying ether particles to create electromechanical momentum.

Thomson’s system was later investigated by C. A. Bjerknes between 1877 and 1910. Bjerknes showed that when two spheres immersed in an incompressible fluid were pulsated, they exerted a mutual attraction which obeyed Newton’s inverse square law if the pulsations were in phase, while if the phases differed by a half wave, the spheres repelled. At one quarter wave difference, there was no action. Where pulses were non-instantaneous at distances greater that a quarter wavelength, attractions and repulsions were reversed.[20]

These conclusions were hypothetically related to possible propulsion. The publishing of these researches and experiments in the physical journals of Europe were available to Nikola Tesla during his student days at the Polytechnic Institute in Graz, Austria, and at the University of Prague, in Czechoslovakia. Tesla could read and understand all these pertinent journals in their original languages.

Around 1878, George Francis FitzGerald (1851-1901) [21] compared magnetic force and velocity in a quasi-elastic solid, based on a model devised earlier by James MacCullagh (1809-47)[22] , whose model was the only one which could propagate waves with the properties of light. This was obviously analogous to the electromagnetic theory of light—as shown by MacCullagh’s ether equation of motion and ether theory which made it feasible to extend ether concepts to represent optical phenomena, along with magnetic and electrical interaction. According to Tesla the electromagnetic theory of light was erroneous because the ether is not a solid capable of transmitting transverse waves. To Tesla, light is also sound waves in the ether and is mechanical and not electrical or magnetic.

An Electrostatic Charge Carried Around

In 1879, Edwin H. Hall[23] , a student in Baltimore, repeated an experiment suggested by H. A. Rowland, his professor, whose original experiment with a gold-foil-covered ebonite disk in a magnetic field showed that electric charges on a disk were carried around with it as it was rotated.[24] In Hall’s experiment, a gold leaf strip in which a current was flowing, was placed into a magnetic gap.

This produced an electromotive force at right angles to the magnetic field and the current, which was proportional to the product of the two. Called the “Hall Effect”, it was already inherent in the three previous effects discovered much earlier by Faraday.

Faraday had discovered induction, by forcing a conductor through a magnetic field, cutting the lines of magnetic force and producing a current in the conductor, and also produced a magnetic field in an unmagnetized iron core, by forcing a current-carrying conductor through a gap between the poles of the core. Faraday’s third effect was the generation of a current. Though Hall’s effect was inherent in the fact that it was the reverse of the force required by Faraday to push the conductor through a magnetic field, Hall’s work completed the triad of effects, by experimental verification. This electromagnetic principal applies to solids not to the ether in free space. This is the basis for MHD (Magneto-Hydrodynamic) generators, and is integral to fluid propulsion.

Since the galvanometer needle in Hall’s experiment was deflected only when the magnetic field arose or collapsed, the physical thrust created was a vector product which had already been expressly suggested by Maxwell[25] almost 15 years earlier (derived from Maxwell’s analysis relative to Faraday’s work of ca. 1845), though Maxwell failed to follow up with experiment (because he died), but the equations are still used.

Though it was said by Whittaker that the Hall Effect, like the magnetic rotation of light, occurs only in ponderable bodies and not in the “free ether”, this statement is patently false since the effect actually depends on the conductivity of a medium. The fact that the effect occurs in ‘ponderable bodies’ and ‘conductive media’ however, seems important for electro-mechanical propulsion, since it shows the reaction between such bodies and media and the underlying “ether framework” which is accessed in the process.

Since the “natural media” (the ether and the atmosphere) so often referred to by Tesla in his patents become conductive under the influence of an electrostatic force of sufficiently high voltage and frequency, the effects of electrostatics on the free ether, dependent upon proper conditions, can impart momentum to a ponderable body, so as to move it though the free ether. A startling proof that Tesla's sound waves work in the free ether, was Tesla’s electro-mechanical plate suspensions in his laboratory in 1898.[26] This was also verified by Tesla’s transmission of mechanical energy through space by longitudinal sound waves which travel at C, as explained in his 1892 Lecture before the Institute of Electrical Engineers, London. This also showed Tesla’s priority with radio discovery.

Since an electric field ‘displaces’ the ether—which is the basis for MHD pumping (especially when pulsed)—the effect actually showed an operable “electromotive force” (“emf”), or “electro-propulsive force”, between ponderable bodies and the ether, by means of electro-mechanical action. But the high voltage and high frequency are required to ‘access’ the ether. Tesla had succeeded in transmitting mechanical energy by means of high voltage, high frequency electrostatically-induced sound waves —“radio waves”—‘accessing’ the ether. Tesla’s work at that point had already verified experimentally everything that he said and refuted what Maxwell had “mathematically” analyzed as being the supposed “electromagnetic” nature of light ---Faraday’s theory---which is false because the ether is not a solid but a gas.

Though it was implied, the literature available to me failed to explicitly state the idea that inertia and momentum are the products of an electrostatic force acting on the ether which acts within bodies and all space. Neither was it specified that a pulsating sphere or other ponderable body can be propelled through the ether, without the presence of another sphere or ponderable body to pull against—except in the statements of Nikola Tesla and his “Flivver” electromechanical “ideal flying machine”.

In 1884, the year Tesla invented the rotating magnetic field, J. J. Thomson attempted to determine the field produced by a moving electrified sphere, and the mathematical development of the theory accelerated. It was naturally easier to solve such problems from the known behaviors of simple geometric forms—planes, spheres, and cylinders.[27]

The possibility that the ether was composed of positive charges carrying their own ‘sub-quantum’ negative charges which were elastic and could be displaced had apparently evaded the thinking of Thomson, who had discovered the electron, the charge of which was considered indivisible. Although he had assumed that displacement currents must occur in the ether, he had earlier thought this was due to the magnetic effects of moving charges, though he failed to show how the displacement currents occurred, or what their specific effects were in terms of inertia and momentum, until after Tesla’s 1892 lecture in London, which he attended.

There was already a sort of battle brewing between the proponents of classical electrodynamics and the proponents led by Maxwell of an electromagnetic theory of light. To the former, conductivity occurred in metal wires, etc., while with Maxwell, it occurred in the surrounding dielectrics and ether-filled space, with the conductors serving only to “guide” the action. Tesla departed from the Faraday/Maxwell camp, particularly on some major points such as a solid versus a gaseous ether. Maxwell's work seems valid in terms of electromagnetic effects in solids. FitzGerald attempted to unify the two views by arguing that Maxwell’s unification was valid because radiation could be generated by purely electrical means. It is interesting to see how these researches contrasted with the development of the electro-mechanical propulsion of Tesla.

Along this line, Wm. Thomson (1884) first considered a charged sphere moving uniformly in a straight line. He assumed that the electric charges were uniformly distributed, with an electric field the same in all directions, no matter what position the sphere was in, the same as if it were at rest. This assumption proved true so long as the velocity of the sphere and the velocity of light were neglected.

In 1889, Wm. Thomson stated[28] , “Rotational vortex-cores must be discarded; and we must have nothing but irrotational revolution and vacuous cores.” By this, Thomson meant that the vacuous “ether” inside rotating tubes of electromagnetism did not rotate. Perhaps meaning that if the cores rotated along with the rotating tubes of electromagnetic force, it would neutralize the electromechanical action by which the tubes of force move.

FitzGerald found a purported error in Thomson's work, saying that the required "circuital condition" was not satisfied unless the moving charges on the sphere were considered as current, combined with the displacement and convection currents due to the motion. In correcting Thomson's error, FitzGerald went overboard in concluding that the magnetic force due to the displacement currents of the moving sphere had no resultant effect.

In 1888, Oliver Heaviside showed that the electrostatic units "vanished" to the inside of a moving sphere. This was the opposite to Faraday's experiment in which electrostatic charges placed inside a stationary, closed vessel "appeared" on the outside. Apparently, movement of the sphere—which increased its momentum—appeared to force the charges back inside.

Heaviside's conception of the "spherical" symmetry of charges during movement was disproved by G. C. F. Searle in 1896[29] . Searle found that a moving "point charge" system is not a sphere, but an oblate spheroid, with a polar axis along its direction of motion. What Whittaker failed to point out was the importance of this finding, a connection between inertia, momentum, current, surface charges "vanishing" and "reappearing", and an electrical polarity along the direction of momentum, as well as an electro-mechanical link between the movement and the ether, since the displacement of the electric lines and polarity correspond to the movement, consistent to the thinking that the tubes of force deliver momentum to a body forced to move through the ether.

During this time, Nikola Tesla had not tarried. He had already shown that the "circuitous condition" could be met in a totally new way. In his lecture before the A.I.E.E. at Columbia College, N. Y., may 20, 1891, he demonstrated his years-old technology, and stated that he connected "one terminal" to a lamp and the other to "an insulated body of the required size. In all cases the insulated body serves to give off the energy into the surrounding space, and is equivalent to a return wire." In this lecture, Tesla also spoke of his electro-mechanical momentum theory which was similar to J. J. Thomson's discovery of 1893[30] , which was flawed.

In the same year as Searle’s finding (1896), W. B. Morton[31] similarly showed that the surface density of a charged body is unaltered by motion, but the lines of force no longer leave the surface perpendicularly (like the ship I saw while hot-tubbing). He also found that the energy of the surrounding field is greater when in motion than when at rest. Since greater work is required to move a charged sphere, than an uncharged one, with no increase in the actual mass of the sphere, a connection between moving charges and an ether was verified. This was considered true because the charges increase the “virtual mass” of the sphere, and the self-induction of convection currents is formed when the charges are set in motion by movement of the sphere, but neither of these explanations seemed to explicitly note that a force between a moving charged mass and the space through which it moves must have an ether framework to push or pull against, or that a current is caused to flow between matter and the ether, (as in Tesla's “circuital condition”) due to the movement.

J. Larmor[32] suggested that the inertia of ponderable matter may be ultimately proven to be of this nature, since atoms were constituted of systems of electrons. If a greater “virtual mass” effect (W. B. Morton, supra) is created electrically, which increases or decreases the ease of movement of a body through the “free ether”, and increases the total energy of the moving system, then a link between ponderable bodies and the ether framework was proven. If the increased charges opposed a body’s movement, then the system could be reversed to produce a thrust on the body. This suggested that a system of movement of charges into or through a sphere would propel it through ether-filled space.

There were similar implications in the works of Faraday, Maxwell, Wm. Thomson, J. J. Thomson, MacCullagh, Morton, Searle, Heaviside, Hall, and FitzGerald, of a search for a distinct relationship between momentum and the movement of charges connected to mass, through an interpenetrating “solid” ether, rather than the gaseous, dynamic, incompressible, ultra-fine ether of Tesla, existing in all space and ponderable matter, upon which electromechanical ponderomotive forces act. Once the equilibrium of the ether was “disturbed” by the moving charges, the ‘displacement’ could be rectified only by an equal and opposite reaction, which was the propulsion of the ship. Thomson had accepted the principle that the ether itself is the vehicle of mechanical momentum. The Hall effect had shown that an electromotive thrust (at close range) is produced along a third axis as a result of a current and magnetic field at right angles. Though Tesla alleged that this thrust could not be produced “in the free ether”, but only in ponderable matter, the works of Heaviside, Searle, and Morton showed that the moving charges could either increase or decrease the normal ease of movement of a body, which inferred the feasibility of Tesla's theory.

Nikola Tesla’s 1938 retrospective statement[33] , that he had his Dynamic Theory of Gravity “all worked out” by 1894. Some available documentation of Tesla’s work of 1891 or earlier shows that he was already experimentally ahead of the European field led by Wm. Thomson, J. J. Thomson, Searle, Morton, and Larmor—to whom he undoubtedly owed a debt. Though some of their statements were dated earlier, they lacked Tesla’s essential hardware to verify their theories, or a complete valid theory.

In 1915, Tesla stated[34] that his (electro-mechanical) “...manless airship...” would travel “...300 miles a second...” (1.08 million mph), “...without propelling engine or wings, sent by electricity to any desired point on the globe...”.

In 1940, Tesla stated[35] that he had already tested his four-part Teleforce system, which included “...a new method for producing a tremendous propelling force...”, as used on his flying machine, in case anyone noticed.

CHAPTER V: TESLA AND THE GOOD OLD BOYS’ CLUB

When Tesla popped into the picture, the British “Good Old Boys’ Club” had been debating ether theory for quite some time, and the upstart Tesla must have hurt the pride of their linemen, by making an end run to make a touchdown. After his 1892 lectures in London, they said nothing about him in their journals, never mentioned him. But he had showed them his hardware and how it worked. So they did mention “Tesla coils” and nothing else.

In 1847, Wm. Thomson, in discussing the motion of a magnetizable body in a non-uniform field of force, said a charged body attracts a body having a greater specific inductive capacity than that of the surrounding medium, and repels a body with a lower specific inductive capacitance, to afford the path of best conductance to the lines of force.

Thomson had also stated that an electrode immersed in a fluid insulating medium (apparently an analogy to a body in ether-filled space), at “...sufficiently high frequency”, would cause a gravitation of gases all around toward the electrode, but that the general opinion (of he and his European colleagues) was that it was “out of the question” that such frequencies could be reached. While this was theory on Thomson’s part, Tesla had already done the experiment. And Thomson’s last opinion regarding frequency was soon to be disproved by Tesla, a close follower and admirer of Thomson’s work.

In reiteration, the other Thomson—J. J. Thomson—had claimed to have mathematically developed the theory of moving tubes of force[36] . In his Recent Researches in Electricity and Magnetism , his hypothesis was that “...the aether is a storehouse of mechanical momentum,” as stated earlier in this book.

Tesla’s lecture before the A.I.E.E., Columbia College in 1891 was based on earlier experiments. He mentioned the “tubes of force” and disclosed some of his discoveries concerning the ether and momentum. His Feb. 1892 lecture[37] in London was made at a time when the Good Old Boys were still debating whether an electromagnetic action could occur in the free ether, at which time Tesla explained that he planned to run motors at a distance by wireless energy, with equipment he had already built, and to extract free energy from the environment. They must have been paralyzed by miscomprehension.

Four years later, Wm. Thomson stated[38] his “inclination to speculate” that “alterations of electrostatic force due to rapidly changing electrification” are propagated by “...condensational waves in the luminiferous aether.” This statement seemed to indicate that Thomson was just beginning to take Tesla seriously. By “condensational waves” he apparently meant Tesla’s mechanical pressure waves.

In his 1892 London lecture before the Good Old Boys at the Royal Academy, Tesla had stated that the ‘required’ frequencies— which Thomson had said were “out of the question” to be produced —were “...much lower than one is apt to estimate at first”, and continued (in pertinent part, emphasis mine): “ We may cause the molecules of the gas to collide by the use of alternate electric impulses of high frequency, and so we may imitate the process of a flame; and from experiments with high frequencies which we are now able to obtain, I think the result is producible with impulses which are transmissible through a conductor." Tesla was already talking about outer space. In this respect, Tesla seemed also to address his Primary Solar Rays. His statements also show he was attempting to make up his mind as to the characteristics of the ether, such as its rigid or fluidic states, and under what circumstances it may change, and its static or dynamic nature, of high or low density, and so forth: "What determines the rigidity of a body? It must be the speed and amount of moving matter. In a gas the speed may be considerable, but the density is exceedingly small, in a liquid the speed would be likely to be small, though the density may be considerable; and in both cases, the inertia resistance asserts itself. A body might move with more or less freedom through the vibrating mass, but as a whole it would be rigid."

This statement reflects Tesla's earlier tests, as stated (emphasis mine) in his 1891 lecture before the A.I.E.E. at Columbia College in New York, repeated during his 1892 lectures in London, "...he illustrated how mechanical motions are produced by a varying electrostatic force acting through a gaseous medium". The tubes of force were said to be "...formed of rows of moving directed molecules" (in this sense, Tesla was referring to "ether molecules"). Tesla looked upon "...all electrostatic, current and magnetic phenomena as being due to electrostatic molecular forces." This statement clarified what Tesla meant by "molecules", and this is where Tesla parted ways with J. J. Thomson, who considered these phenomena to be of a purely electromagnetic nature, while Tesla regarded electrostatic phenomena to be more important.[39]

39 [39] Nikola Tesla, Lecture before the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia (Feb., 1893); Lecture before

These lectures addressed how "solid bodies" can pass through a vibrating, incompressible mass of ether which, as a whole, is rigid. This is the essence of how the "inertia resistance" of the underlying ether framework can be summoned up by an electrified body which activates and rigidifies the ether with electrostatic impulses of "sufficiently high voltage and frequency". As the inertia resistance of the ether "asserts itself" the electrified body can be propelled through the ether.

Tesla's "specially constructed alternator" was in one embodiment a 32-inch diameter one, which, if similar to the type used on the saucer I saw in 1953, was probably driven by one of Tesla's bladeless turbines. In the 1890s, Tesla said the alternator had produced up to 10 amps and 30 kilocycles, like the one below:

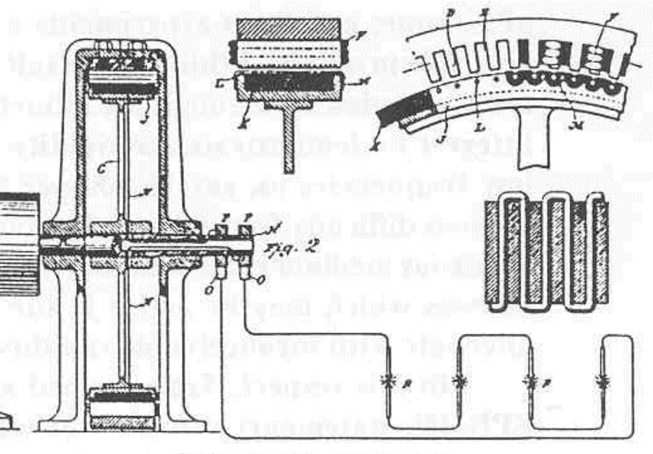

FIGS. 200. 201. 202 and 203

The saucer which I saw in 1953 exhibited precessional characteristics which could have been caused by the use of such an alternator, the output and rpms of which under the circumstances could have been varied with the power level of the saucer. The high angle and low frequency of the precessions would be consistent with the use of a large diameter alternator, which was turned more slowly at hovering power, and increased in rpm for more power as the ship accelerated.

Since the alternator would have been attached to the airframe of the saucer, it could have caused the entire saucer to precess at a high angle and low frequency at low rpms. But this appeared to be a malfunction or perhaps a defect in the saucer at that time which had not yet been corrected. A "double plate" gyrostabilizer idea which I mention in the following “bare-bones” saucer design would probably have corrected this problem, unless it was due to a turbine problem, with the turbine turning too slowly to maintain correct stability. On the other hand, the problem could have been caused by a malfunction of the main gyrostabilizer system in which case the rotating alternator’s precessional characteristics predominated. This situation is shown in the last illustration in this book, the saucer which I saw in 1953.

The balanced forces holding the ship in mid-air would have been equivalent to holding it on “gimbals of air”, so that it could have been precessing freely according to the speed of the rotating alternator’s angular momentum and mass. This would have required very little force if the main gyro-stabilizer was malfunctioning, but points up the need for the better gyro-stabilization system which Tesla emphasized in his 1912-14 statements.

Tesla had anticipated the problem of how to counteract the tendency of his VTOL-type ship to rotate due to the torque of the propeller, alternator or turbine, by using two turbines or alternators, turning on parallel axes in the same direction or counter-rotated, as stated in his patent #1,655,114, Apparatus for Aerial Transportation, Jan. 3, 1928. In the case of a saucer however two-axis gyrostabilization is necessary to stabilize the ship, one on horizontal axis to stop the spin of the ship, the other on vertical axis to keep the ship upright. And then a special gyro-stabilizer would be required to stop the wild gyrating of the ship caused by the alternator. But despite any possible malfunction of the main gyro-stabilizer, the high angle precession problem was solved when the alternator was spun up to high rpms as the ship departed. It just seemed such a big problem for the pilot and crew if they were trying to see where they were. I think by the way the ship made the two 90-degree turns to go about a hundred feet lower in altitude showed that they suddenly realized that they were over a town and wanted to diminish the visibility of the ship by the public by those maneuvers.

As the ship accelerated to full speed and power, its low precessional rate and high precessional angle became a mere highfrequency vibration, as the ship shot to infinity in three seconds (as I counted them off, “...thousand and one, thousand and two, thousand and three...”). My calculation of the speed was based on my being able to see the ship for thirty miles. (I had previously miscalculated the speed by assuming that I could only see the ship for 7.5 miles, but I see aircraft coming over the Sandia Mountains thirty miles away all the time so this was wrong.) Since the ship covered ca. 30 miles in three seconds it was doing ca. 36,000 mph.

As the precession of the ship became the high-frequency vibration, this tended to blur the appearance of its edges, something which has probably made it more difficult to obtain sharp definitions of the profiles of saucers in photographs and videos. Coupled with this physical vibration may be the “Faraday effect”—the “magnetooptical effect” which tends to blur the outlines of objects subjected to intense electrostatic fields. The extension of the ship’s electric field also extends its magnetic field, and causes a rotation of the optical plane, so in addition to visual effects of the high frequency precessional oscillations, the optical plane is actually rotated to create the weird magneto-optical effects so often reported, and becomes distorted in the minds of mystics, who think it is some sort of “time travel” or “inter-dimensional travel” effect, a “spacewarping” or “wrapping around” of “time and space” by a “rotating body” as it moved through space ala Einstein, except saucers don’t “revolve”, as proven by my Peiltochterkompass and visual observations, and Einstein was full of baloney, as Tesla said.

The flying saucer may be powered by a Tesla alternator, powering a Tesla coil, with improvements which have probably come along in the meanwhile. The required currents could be conveyed through conductors by means of high voltage stepping switches or relays, to several coils facilitating the instantaneous control of a ship. Since an on-board power generator is usually required—unless the wireless Tesla transmission of power is used—the use of an alternator is convenient to run a spark gap, coil and condenser combination, since the necessary high frequency alternations can be easily stepped up to higher voltages by several closely linked “extra” coils distributed about the ship. That would make it easier to pipe medium high voltage current around to several coils as needed. The more modern development of very high K-factor dielectrics now makes it possible to more easily handle very high voltages and currents and greatly reduce the size of components, so that a high-output coil of several million volts can be made only a few inches in diameter, for example.

The master gyro-stabilizer for German ships, according to undocumented rumors from Germany, was purportedly constructed of two counter-rotating steel plates with pinion reversing gears between to create equal and opposite rotation. The precession and torque of one plate would cancel the precession and torque of the other plate to create the stability that Tesla sought, and may have been the “special” device which he referred to in 1914 in addition to the turbine, relied on for gyro-stability. For the high altitude flights that I observed in 1946-47, a pressurized cockpit would be required. Below is my illustration of the basic “bare bones” man-made UFO:

TESLA'S DYNAMIC THEORY OF GRAVITY

According to Tesla's 1938 Lecture before the Board of Immigrant Welfare[40] , his Dynamic Theory of Gravity was one of two far reaching discoveries which he "...worked out in all details" in the years 1893 and 1894. Tesla never published his complete theory and the government now possesses all the papers related to it. The 1938 lecture was less than five years before his death.

More complete statements concerning these discoveries can only be gleaned from scattered and sparse sources, because the papers of Tesla are concealed in government vaults for "national security" reasons since 1945. When I specifically asked for these papers at the "National Security Research Center"—now the "Robert J. Oppenheimer Research Center"—at Los Alamos National Laboratory in 1979, though they admitted having the papers, I was denied access because they were classified and I didn't have a "badge" (clearance), and even though on that same day, I discovered the plans for the hydrogen bomb on an open shelf, and told a Harvard graduate student about it later in the day at a Santa Fe restaurant. The student went to Los Alamos, copied the plans and wrote an exposé at Harvard. I asked myself, "What could be in Tesla's papers in 1943 which is more secret than hydrogen bomb plans?" Of course I already knew the answer.

In his 1938 lecture, Tesla said that he was progressing with work on his Dynamic Theory of Gravity, and hoped to "...give it to the world" as soon as he had completed his secret developments.

The "two great discoveries" to which Tesla referred were:

1. The Dynamic Theory of Gravity - which assumed a field of force which accounts for the motions of bodies in space; assumption of this field of force dispenses with the concept of space curvature ala Einstein; the ether has an indispensable function in the phenomena (of universal gravity, inertia, momentum, and the movement of heavenly bodies, as well as all atomic and molecular matter); and,

2. Environmental Energy - the discovery of a new physical Truth: There is no energy in matter other than that received from the environment.

In the usual Tesla birthday announcement—on his 79th birthday (1935)—Tesla made a brief reference to the theory saying it applies to molecules and atoms as well as to the largest heavenly bodies, and to "...all matter in the universe in any phase of its existence from its very formation to its ultimate disintegration."

Those imbued with relativist theory often refer to "pure energy" in some "form", but there is no such thing, since "energy" is an abstract "ability" which has no physical form as an entity unto itself. Who's to say what "form" is "pure" and what form is not?

My favorite philosopher, Ayn Rand, said "...In reality, there are no contradictions. Things are what they are irrespective as to whether we know it or not. Check your premises." If the term "energy" is only a convenient abstraction, then it does not exist in physical form, and really describes a process, the potential to perform work as a by-product of matter and electromagnetic radiation in perpetual motion, some of the force of which has been diverted through a path where it performs the desired work, as it goes on its way though the universe. Every change of form of form, matter or radiation involves the "work" which induces the change, or the "work" which is induced by the change. Without work there is no change, but all work is ultimately the product of the universe in perpetual, self-sustaining motion, as a rule and not an exception.

As for Tesla's theory, we have hints, such as, that the earth is the "star of human birth." In poetic expressions, he referred to scientific meanings in statements such as, that by using the "thunderbolt of Jove" (the Indo-European sky god), man "annihilates time and space", an allusion to the use of electrostatics ("thunderbolts") to travel so fast, that time and space are "annihilated". Where the government has stolen his papers, we must search for meaning elsewhere. In an article[41] , Tesla outlined his Dynamic Theory of Gravity in poetic form (as paraphrased by me):

1. That the luminiferous ether fills all space;
2. That the ether is acted upon by the life-giving creative force;

3. That the ether is thrown into "infinitesimal whirls" at near the speed of light, becoming ponderable matter;
4. That when the force subsides and motion ceases, matter reverts to the ether (similar to "atomic decay", only non-relativistic)

5. That man can harness these processes, to:

-Precipitate matter from the ether
-Create whatever he wants with the matter and energy derived
-Alter the earth's size
-Control earth's seasons (weather control)
-Guide earth's path through the Universe, like a space ship
-Cause the collisions of planets to produce new suns and stars, heat, and light

-Originate and develop life in infinite forms

Tesla was referring to unlimited energy, derived from the environment. Several of his major free energy discoveries have been the exclusive stolen property of our Secret Government. The conversion of a weaker force to a stronger force—electro-mechanical propulsion—used to control the much weaker gravity force, would accomplish more work in the same amount of time, and therefore produce "over unity" results.

Some of Tesla's unusual conceptualization of the ether had been nonetheless expounded piecemeal, in his preceding 1890s lectures.[42] He later railed against the limited and erroneous theories of Maxwell, Hertz, Lorentz and Einstein.

[41] 41. John J. O'Neill, Prodigal Genius (1944) pp. 251-52, referring to the Tesla article Man's Greatest Achievement .

Tesla believed that the ether is composed of “independent carriers immersed in an insulating fluid”. A “carrier” is a conductor. The ether therefor is a conductor. It is unclear whether Tesla meant that the “insulative fluid” in which the conductive ether is immersed is the ether's own insulative fluid or the air, which Tesla often referred to as an insulator. When Tesla spoke of “the medium”, he meant the ether, as stated here (emphasis mine): “...But the upper strata of the air are conducting, and so, perhaps, is the medium in free space beyond the atmosphere, and these may contain an opposite charge.” (Nikola Tesla, High Frequency and High Potential Currents , Chapter XXVIII, The Philadelphia and St. Louis Lecture. On Light and Other High Frequency Phenomena, February and March, 1893). We know today that the ionosphere is positively charged and that it is conductive. Meanwhile, Tesla said the ether in outer space may have a negative charge, and is also probably conductive.

Tesla’s ether was neither the “tenuous” ether with the “solidity of the hardest steel” of Maxwell and Hertz, nor the half-hearted, gaseous ether of Lorentz. Though Tesla’s ether was gaseous it consisted of “...carriers immersed in an insulating fluid”, which filled all space, with properties which varied according to relative movement, the presence of mass, and the electric and magnetic conditions it is subjected to. It’s incompressibility and other qualities meant it could be used to produce motion of ponderable bodies.

Tesla’s ether was rigidified by rapidly-varying electrostatic force, and was thereby involved in gravitational effects, inertia, and momentum, especially in the space near earth, since, as explained by Tesla, the earth is “...like a charged metal ball moving through space”, which creates enormous, rapidly-varying electrostatic forces which diminish in intensity with the square of the distance from earth, just like gravity. Since the direction of propagation radiates from the earth, the so-called force of gravity is toward the earth, and this apparently also applied to all other bodies in space under the theory.

Tesla commenced to complete his theory at the same approximate period of time that many of his experimental results and observations had been revealed in the three lectures, often illustrated with demonstrations using Tesla-invented equipment, as revealed in the following eight excerpts (the statements in quotes are Tesla's actual documented words) in pertinent part (emphasis mine):

1. “The most probable medium filling the space is one consisting of independent carriers immersed in an insulating fluid.”

2. “In his experiments he dwells first on some phenomena produced by electrostatic force, which he considers in the light of modern theories to be the most important force in nature for us to investigate.”

3. “He illustrates how mechanical motions are produced by a varying electrostatic force acting through a gaseous medium.”
4. “One of the most interesting results arrived at in pursuing these experiments, is the demonstration of the fact that a gaseous medium upon which vibrations are impressed by rapid changes of electrostatic potential, is rigid.”
5. “If through this medium enormous electrostatic stresses are assumed to act, which vary rapidly in intensity, it would allow the motion of a body through it, yet it would be rigid and elastic, although the fluid itself might be devoid of these properties.” 6. “...on the assumption that the independent carriers are of any configuration such that the fluid resistance to motion in one direction is greater than in another, a stress of that nature would cause the carriers to arrange themselves in groups, since they would turn to each other their sides of the greatest electrical density, in which position the fluid resistance to approach would be smaller than to receding.”
7. “If in a medium of the above characteristics a brush would be formed by a steady potential, an exchange of the carriers would go on continuously, and there would be less carriers per unit volume in the brush than in the space at some distance from the electrode, this corresponding to rarefaction.”
8. “If the potentials were rapidly changing, the result would be very different; the higher the frequency of the pulses, the slower would be the exchange of carriers; finally, the motion of translation through measurable space would cease and, with a sufficiently high frequency and intensity of the stress, the carriers would be drawn towards the electrode, and compression would result.”

In 5. above, Tesla states that an assumption exists that enormous, rapidly-varying electrostatic stresses exist in the natural environment,which rigidify the ether , yet allow the motion of a body through it. In 6., he assumes that the carriers can be induced to cause motion of a body in one direction. In 7., he mentions that a steady D.C. potential brush will cause a continuous rarefaction of the ether carriers in one direction to induce the pulling motion via the of the ether carriers in one direction to induce the pulling motion via the "veritable ropes of air" which Tesla mentioned in 1914. And in 8., he gives the conditions for compression by high frequency potentials which will stop the carriers from passing through the solid body, so as to force the tubes of force from the opposite direction to dissolve in the body and impart momentum.

The eight excerpts are further reducible to the following four statements pertinent to his electro-mechanical propulsion technology:

1. Mechanical motions of solid bodies can be produced by varying electrostatic force acting through a gaseous medium (ether), which thereby becomes rigidified, yet allows solid bodies to pass through.

2. Under influence of stress in one direction, the carriers may group together, forming tubes of force, creating greater ease of movement in that direction.

3. When a D.C. brush is created by a steady potential in one direction, a continuous exchange of carriers is created corresponding to ether rarefaction, as the tubes of force are drawn into the conductor.

4. With a sufficiently high frequency (higher that that creating the brush discharges) and intensity of stress in the opposite direction, carrier exchange is blocked by ether compression, forcing the tubes of force entering the conductors of the ship from the opposite direction to dissolve and impart mechanical momentum.

The system, using the two kinds of potentials (D.C. and A.C.) is known as "p2", according to Tesla's (and that of the Germans under von Braun's direction) 1936-38 UFO project by that name at Los Alamos, New Mexico. My friend Peter van Dresser was the first person to tell me of von Braun's pre-war stay in New Mexico. Peter was distressed to the end of his life by the fact that, while he had invented the first successful liquid-fueled rocket engine, Dr. Robert Goddard had not only misappropriated Peter's invention, but had given it over to von Braun during his two-year stay in New Mexico. Peter considered Goddard a traitor and invention thief for this reason. Prior to Peter's invention, all the rockets of von Braun and Goddard exploded at an altitude of around 5,000-6,000 feet because the combustion chamber overheated. Peter wrapped the fuel lines around the chamber, cooling it and vaporizing the fuel for greater efficiency, making continuously extended flights possible.

In reiteration, the steady D.C. Electrostatic potential of the brush creates the

In reiteration, the steady D.C. Electrostatic potential of the brush creates the required exchange of carriers, ‘rarefying’ (stretching) the elastic, rigidified medium (composed of ether carriers in an insulating fluid) in advance of the ship, as the higher frequency A.C. to the rear compresses them, blocking exchange in that direction, dissolving the tubes of force from the opposite direction and creating instant momentum, normal to the surface.

In 1884, John Henry Poynting’s theorem had been that the flux of energy at any place is represented by the vector product of the electric and magnetic forces, multiplied by $C/4\pi$.[43] This implied that forces in a conductor could be transformed there into other forms (such as the transformation in the conductors of the tubes of force into momentum). In 1893, J. J. Thomson stated practically the same thing, saying “...the aether is itself the vehicle of mechanical momentum, of amount $(1/4\pi C)$ (D B) per unit volume.[44]

(Using e.-s. Units for D and E
And e.-m. Units for B and H.)
E = electrical force

D = electrical displacement
H = magnetic force
B = magnetic induction

Heinrich Hertz’s theory[45] was that two systems of varying current should exert a ponderomotive force on each other due to the variations. Tesla’s disagreement was apparently based on the fact that he proved that the “ponderomotive force” is due not to mere “varying currents”, but to rarefaction and compression of the ether carriers, respectively, produced by different kinds of currents (D.C., rapidly varying electrostatic and A.C.) Moreover, Tesla's method for accessing the mechanical momentum of the ether was from a completely different and simpler perspective, the creation of (longitudinal) sound waves in the ether in the direction of desired propulsion. This also appears to be the method which allows the ships to eliminate drag and sonic booms.

J. J. Thomson[46] had extensively developed the theory of the moving tubes of force, both magnetic and electric, saying that the magnetic effect was a secondary one created by the movement of electric tubes, and assumed:

➔ That tubes exist everywhere in space, either in closed circuits or terminating on atoms;
➔ that electric force becomes perceivable only when electric tubes have a greater tendency to lie in one direction;
➔ that in a steady magnetic field, positive and negative tubes may move in opposite directions with equal velocity;
➔ that a beam of light is a group of electric tubes moving at C at right angles to their length.

Tesla later said his “dirigible torpedo” (“steerable” torpedo) would fly at a maximum 300 miles per second, perhaps since its forward velocity would be some discreet fraction of C. Thomson’s 1893 publishing on this subject followed Tesla’s 1891 lectures before Franklin Institute and Columbia College in America, and his lecture before the Royal Society in London, and appeared to shed light on Tesla’s work, stating:

➔ That a ponderomotive force is exerted on a conductor carrying electric current, consisting of a transfer of mechanical momentum from the agent which exerts the force to the body which experiences it;

➔ that, if moving tubes entering a conductor are dissolved in it, mechanical momentum is given to the conductor;
➔ that such momentum must be at right angles to the tube and to the magnetic induction;
➔ that momentum stored in a unit volume of the field is proportional to the vector product of electric and magnetic vectors.

Thomson’s Electromagnetic Momentum hypothesis was later developed by H. Poincaré[47] and by M. Abraham[48] .

But we can see a distinct difference between Tesla's and Thomson's theories in that Tesla said nothing about the electric and magnetic fields, relying solely on that Tesla said nothing about the electric and magnetic fields, relying solely on the effects of the combination of a rapidly-varying electrostatic D.C. (rarefying) potential and a higher frequency rapidly-varying electrostatic A.C. (compressing) potential, both produced by a Tesla coil with different tuning.

By 1910, it was said[49] (by Sir. Edmund Whittaker) that the consequences of these pronouncements left three alternatives:

(1) Modify the theory to reduce to zero the resultant force on an element of free aether (as with Maxwell, Hertz, and Einstein);
(2) assume the force sets aether in motion (as with Helmholtz);
(3) accept the principle that aether is the vehicle of mechanical ·momentum of amount [D B] per unit volume (as with Poynting and J. J. Thomson).

Whittaker’s greatest error was in omitting mentioning Tesla's theory entirely, even though Tesla’s experiments had verified it, in front of the esteemed members of the “Royal Academy”. It seems highly improbable that they simply failed to comprehend Tesla. Tesla however said he had not “completely” worked out his Dynamic Theory of Gravity until 1893 and 1894, but never published it, so how could it be discussed? In reality, the “three (later) alternatives” were moot, and a new law existed, that of Tesla. So we see that the suppression of Tesla’s theory was partially a conspiracy and partially his own fault.

Tesla’s Secrecy

Due to his pacifist sympathies, Tesla originally contemplated giving his electric flying machine to the Geneva Convention or League of Nations, for use in ‘policing the world’ to prevent war. Later disillusioned after WW I with the collapse of the League, he said he’d “underestimated man’s combative capacity.”[50]

In 1919, Tesla’s reason for increased secrecy emerged[51] , while discussing his plans for a “three-hour” airplane between New York and London: “...we have here the appalling prospect of a war between nations at a distance of thousands of miles, with weapons so destructive and demoralizing that the world could not endure them. That is why there must be no more war.” With the U. S. government’s spurning of his defense suggestions and technology, Tesla’s only recourse was to withhold his Dynamic Theory of Gravity, and to dissuade discovery in that direction. But he had already sold his secrets to the Germans in 1914.

In 1929[52] Tesla ridiculed Heinrich Hertz’s 1887-89 experiments purportedly proving the Maxwellian “structureless” ether filling all space, “of inconceivable tenuity yet solid and possessed of rigidity incomparably greater than the hardest steel.” Tesla’s arguments were to the contrary, saying he had always believed in a “gaseous” ether in which he had observed (longitudinal) waves more akin to sound waves. He recounted how he had developed a “new form of vacuum tube” in 1896, “...capable of being charged to any desired potential, and operated it with effective pressures of about 4,000,000 volts.” He described how blue coronal discharges about the bulb when in use, verified the existence of “particles smaller than air” , and a gas so light that an earth-sized volume would weight only 1/20 pound. He further said that so-called “electromagnetic waves” are actually longitudinal--not transverse---sound waves moving at the velocity of light through this medium.

In 1932[53] Tesla mentioned using his special tube to investigate cosmic rays, saying that when its emanations were impinged upon a target material, radioactive emissions resulted, and that radioactive bodies were simply “targets” continuously bombarded by “infinetesimal bullets projected from all parts of the universe”, without which “all radioactivity would cease”. His name for these “bullets” was “Primary Solar Rays”.

Later in 1932[54] , Tesla said Einstein’s theory regarding changing matter into force, and force into matter, was “absurd”. He compared this to the difference between body and mind, saying force is a “...function of matter” , and that, just as a mind could not exist without a body, “...without matter, there can be no force.”

Again in 1932[55] , Tesla derided the Maxwellian/Hertzian ether, while saying that higher frequency waves “...follow the curvature of the earth and bend around obstacles” , yet in Apr. 8, 1934[56] , Tesla said that short waves for “power purposes” of the ‘wireless art’, were inappropriate, and that power will travel in “long waves”. All this in retrospect to deaf ears since no one in the public’s knowledge uses wireless technology to transmit energy today, and no one since Tesla has been able to do so because they haven’t paid close attention to all that Tesla said (that we in the public know of).

With so many “experts” today claiming to know Tesla technology such as those who say that Tesla used “quaternion equations” (“curved space-time” and “fourth-dimensional” math, ala relativism), I will settle once and for all the question of authenticity of these “experts” on Tesla. Lest there be any misunderstanding or confusion about Tesla’s beliefs, here is a 1932 newspaper quote under the headline “Pioneer Radio Engineer Gives Views on power:

"The assumption of the Maxwellian ether was thought necessary to explain the propagation of light by transverse vibrations, which can only occur in a solid. So fascinating was this theory that even at present it has many supporters, despite the manifest impossibility of a medium, perfectly mobile and tenuous to a degree inconceivable, and yet extremely rigid, like steel. As a result some illusionary ideas have been formed and various phenomena erroneously interpreted. The so-called Hertz waves are still considered a reality proving that light is electrical in its nature, and also that the ether is capable of transmitting transverse vibrations of frequencies however low. This view has become untenable since I showed that the universal medium is a gaseous body in which only longitudinal pulses can be propagated, involving alternating compressions and expansions similar to those produced by sound waves in the air. Thus, a wireless transmitter does not emit Hertz waves which are a myth, but sound waves in the ether, behaving in every respect like those in the air, except that, owing to the great elastic force and extremely small density of the medium, their speed is that of light. general knowledge of this subject seems very limited, I may state, that even waves only one or two millimeters long, which I produced thirtythree years ago, provided that they carry sufficient energy, can be transmitted around the globe. This is not so much due to refraction and reflection as to the properties of a gaseous medium and certain peculiar action which I shall explain some time in the future. At present it may be sufficient to call attention to an important fact in this connection, namely, that this bending of the beam projected from reflector does not affect in the least its behavior in other respects.

It might be inferred that I am alluding to the curvature of space supposed to exist according to the teachings of relativity, but nothing could be further from my mind. I hold that space cannot be curved, for the simple reason that it can have no properties. It might as well be said that God has properties. He has not, but only attributes and these are of our own making. Of properties we can only speak when dealing with matter filling the space. To say that in the presence of large bodies space becomes curved, is equivalent to stating that something can act upon nothing. I, for one, refuse to subscribe to such a view."

Anyone who says otherwise after reading this quote is definitely a liar or someone who has serious reading comprehension problems and shouldn’t be taken seriously. You may agree or disagree with it but you can’t deny that this is what the man said and meant.

THE NATURE OF ELECTRICITY

What were the old ether physicists referring to when they attempted to describe “an incompressible, perfect fluid”? What would a “perfect fluid” do? It would be able to “wet” and soak into everything it came into contact with, such as protons, and neutrons, and could flow everywhere often without resistance (except in the circumstances already described). This fluid, the ether, because of its ultra-fineness, could flow everywhere. Grosser matter on the other hand, experienced resistance, depending on the circumstances. Another fluid—electricity—could flow in certain places, and wet only certain things, but often met resistance.

In his 1891 A.I.E.E. lecture at Columbia College, Tesla said (in pertinent part, emphasis mine): “What is electricity, and what is magnetism? “...We are now confident that electric and magnetic phenomena are attributable to the ether, and we are perhaps justified in saying that the effects of static electricity are effects of ether in motion.” “...we may speak of electricity or of an electric condition, state or effect.” “...we must distinguish two such effects, opposite in character neutralizing each other.” “...for in a medium of the properties of the ether, we cannot possibly exert a strain, or produce a displacement or motion of any kind, without causing in the surrounding medium an equivalent and opposite effect." "...its condition determines the positive and negative character." "We know that it acts like an incompressible fluid;" "...the electro-magnetic theory of light and all facts observed teach us that electric and ether phenomena are identical." "The puzzling behavior of the ether as a solid to waves of light and heat, and as a fluid to the motion of bodies through it, is certainly explained in the most natural and satisfactory manner by assuming it to be in motion, as Sir William Thomson has suggested." "Nor can anyone prove that there are transverse ether waves emitted from an alternate current machine; to such slow disturbances, the ether, if at rest, may behave as a true fluid."

In his statements, Tesla was balancing the various arguments in preparation for his decision: "...Electricity, therefore, cannot be called ether in the broad sense of the term; but nothing would seem to stand in the way of calling electricity ether associated with matter, or bound ether; or, in other words, that the so-called static charge of the molecule is ether associated in some way with the molecule."

"...It cannot differ in density, ether being incompressible; it must, therefore, be under some strain or in motion, and the latter is the most probable."

Tesla therefore believed in 1891 in an ether which was in motion relative to earth. I think this belief was modulated in Tesla's 1899 Colorado Springs Experiments due to his discovery that the earth emits rapidly-varying electrostatic forces which rigidify the ether in the earth's electric field and create the "carry along" ether, while the tubes of force induced by this are in relative motion.

The thing which Tesla had realized, was that ether possesses electric charges which are deposited on molecules. His "dynamic" ether belief is consistent with the idea that everything is in motion.

The importance of cosmic motion to the effects of electrostatic charges was apparently brought up by Tesla in his lecture: "About fifteen years ago, Prof. Rowland demonstrated a most interesting and important fact, namely that a static charge carried around produces the effects of an electric current." "...and conceiving the electrostatically charged molecule in motion, this experimental fact gives us a fair idea of magnetism. We can conceive lines or tubes of force which physically exist, being formed of rows of directed moving molecules; we can see that these lines must be closed, that they must tend to shorten and expand, etc. It likewise explains in a reasonable way, the most puzzling phenomenon of all, permanent magnetism, and, in general, has all the beauties of the Ampere theory without possessing the vital defect of the same, namely, the assumption of molecular currents. Without enlarging further upon the subject, I would say, that I look upon all electrostatic, current and magnetic phenomena as being due to electrostatic molecular forces.”

In these statements, Tesla showed he was aware that any “stationary” locale on earth is actually in fantastic motion (“70,000 mph”). The electrostatic charges “carried around” are currents between atoms and the ether, which produce magnetism. The phenomena of ‘permanent magnetism’ or ‘cosmically induced’ magnetism are apparently due to electrostatic charges ‘carried around’ by cosmic molecular motion, in the universal ether field.

Since no one can hold atoms, electrons or molecules perfectly still—because they are in fantastic motion—all atoms and molecules carry currents producing magnetic fields. Since a magnetic field is the product of a current, no one can produce a magnetic field without electricity, moving through or along a conductor, or as electrostatic charges in local or cosmic motion.

CONCLUSION

Since these phenomena are electro-mechanical in nature, they are synthesized by recreation of the electromagnetic conditions which a body would exhibit due to a particular kinetic state. Just as sound waves of low frequency can penetrate a body, waves of higher frequencies can cause the ether to “assert its inertia resistance.”

Tesla stated that the steady “brush” discharge causes a steady exchange of carriers, but emphasized the necessity of the “rapidlyvarying electrostatic” impulses to create sound waves in the ether to cause it to assert its “inertia resistance” and form the tubes of force. Here is where Tesla said the best of electrical engineers would not believe it, that the rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials create the steady D.C. potential which causes a steady exchange of carriers, which brings in the tubes of force to propel his ship. Because the D.C. potential is undisturbed yet continuous and rapidly-varying, it is nonetheless “steady”.

The technology involves high voltage (“D.C.”) electrostatic ‘brush’ currents on top of the ship and which rarefies the elastic ether and creates the bouyancy of the ship, and in front which stretches (“rarefies”) the elastic ether and pulls the ship forward, while a higher frequency A.C. current compresses the ether and blocks ether from passing through the rear of the ship. These currents force the tubes of force to dissolve in the conductors of the ship and impart momentum. Since the strength of the electrical attractive force is 2 x 10^{39} power times stronger than the gravitational attractive force, that much more work can theoretically be done in the same amount of time, using the same “energy”. And that is how the ship I saw in 1953 accelerated to ca. 36,000 mph in three seconds.

Since “seeing is believing”, and I have seen, I believe. The behavior of man-made flying saucers proves the existence of these “free energy” inventions of Nikola Tesla, which show that he was right in his opposition to Relativism, and that the prevalent theories taught in the scientific institutions of the world today are false.

Consistent with the idea that “dynamite comes in small packages”, this small book, along with my prior book, Space Aliens From the Pentagon , along with my third edition of that book, Pentagon Aliens , have all initiated the rediscovery, reconstruction and publication of Nikola Tesla’s Dynamic Theory of Gravity and related electro-mechanical propulsion technology, the greatest invention of mankind.

The deep black Secret Government by whatever name, be it “illuminati”, “cabal” or whatever —a fraudulently concealed, unconstitutional, corporate-state entity —has heretofore controlled electro-mechanical propulsion technology by concealing it along with other advanced free energy technology, on behalf of international, coercive, corporate-state monopolists. Electro-mechanically propeled ships are concealed through “special effects”, and “stealth” technology (also based on Tesla inventions)—as they fly over and hover in the sky, and by “psycho-political” means—the dissemination of false “alien” and “extraterrestrial” origins propaganda—through “UFOlogy” groups led by covert government agents. While official government spokesmen deny the existence of flying saucers, covert government agents, posing as “skeptics”, “UFOlogists”, and “paranormalists”, engage the public’s attention in a phony debate. The “skeptics” ridicule the UFOlogists and paranormalists, lumping them together with rational witnesses, as if “...to see a flying saucer” is as ridiculous as “...to see a ghost or alien”. This phony debate based on false logic fits nicely into the see a ghost or alien”. This phony debate based on false logic fits nicely into the overall cover-up system, designed to conceal advanced human technology, not “alien” technology.

The grip of this secret socio-economic dictatorship depends on coercively extorted income, by forcing us to buy archaic fuels and power—which funds its control of our communications, political and monetary decisions, enforcement of unjust laws, regulations and procedures expanding its powers, while limiting or excluding our individual human rights, and denying our access to information, materials, and technology which is ours because we paid for it with our taxes. Our access to the truth is necessary for our fully-informed consent, independence, and survival as a free people.

Despite the confusion, concealment, BIG LIES, and judicial and socio-economic abuse by the corporate state, we can resurrect the TRUTH, determine the correct technology, circumvent obstructions, and use our creative ingenuity to build these ships for ourselves, to free our society from the Secret Fascist Corpocracy.

There is much confusion created by government agents or dupes regarding UFO propulsion technology. Do not be fooled. You will find no “patents” on this technology because it is secret, “classified” information by all the major governments of the world. Anyone who shows you a “patent” purporting to represent this technology is either a liar or a fool, and could only show you “how NOT to build a UFO”. The same goes for anyone who jabbers idiotic nonsense about “space aliens”. These craft are exclusively man-made.

Below is a post from the Electrical Review [57] , entitled, which also appeared in The Sun, N.Y., Nov. 21, 1898, and which contains some pertinent information relating to when Tesla began to develop his flying machine, more particularly what he called his “dirigible torpedo”:

“Referring to my latest invention, I wish to bring out a point which has been overlooked. I arrived, as has been stated, at the idea through entirely abstract speculations on the human organism, which I conceived to be a selfpropelling machine, the motions of which are governed by impressions received through the eye. Endeavoring to construct a mechanical model resembling in its essential, material features the human body, I was led to combine a controlling device, or organ sensitive to certain waves, with a body provided with propelling and directing mechanism, and the rest naturally followed. Originally the idea interested me only from the scientific point of view, but soon I saw that I had made a departure which sooner or later must produce a profound change in things and conditions presently existing. I hope this change will be for the good only, for, if it were otherwise, I wish that I had never made the invention. The future may or may not bear out my present convictions, but I can not refrain from saying that it is difficult for me to see at present how, with such a principle brought to great perfection, as it undoubtedly will be in the course of time, guns can maintain themselves as weapons. We shall be able, by availing ourselves of this advance, to send a projectile at much greater distance, it will not be limited in any way by weight or amount of explosive charge, we shall be able to submerge it at command, to arrest it in its flight, and call it back, and to send it out again and explode it at will, and more than this, it will never make a miss, since all chance in this regard, if hitting the object of attack were at all required, is eliminated. But the chief feature of such a weapon is still to be told; namely, it may be made to respond only to a certain note or tune, it may be endowed with selective power. Directly such an arm is produced, it becomes almost impossible to meet it with a corresponding development. It is this feature, perhaps, more than in its power of destruction, that its tendency to arrest the development of arms and to stop warfare will reside. With renewed thanks, I remain,

Very truly, yours, N. Tesla”

Tesla didn’t want to give the whole ball game away on his propulsion system, and was secretive about it, which is why he never published his completed Dynamic Theory of Gravity. By habit, if Tesla disagreed with a theory, he usually wasted little time in refuting it. In scenting out Tesla's secret ether theory that Tesla relied upon for his propulsion system, I compared it with a theory which he did not even mention, J. J. Thomson’s Electromagnetic Momentum theory. While Tesla had in fact gotten into rather spirited exchanges with Thomson regarding electrostatic versus electrodynamic excitation of luminosity of gases in a tube at a distance, that was the most that Tesla was willing to risk. he never said a word directly regarding Thomson’s Electromagnetic Momentum theory, which was wrong because it was based on the 'solid ether' and electromagnetic waves theory of Maxwell and Hertz.

The absence of a specific refutation or even a mention of it is a conspicuous omission which points to Tesla’s thinking on this subject once one realizes that this is a pattern seldom if ever broken by Tesla. What this means is that, regarding Thomson’s Electromagnetic Momentum theory, Tesla could not regarding Thomson's Electromagnetic Momentum theory, Tesla could not criticize Thomson's theory without revealing his own ether propulsion theory. He had already discussed his use of electrostatically-induced mechanical waves rather than the supposed electrodynamics of Thomson. Not only that, but Tesla could not even mention the theory specifically lest he draw attention to his own theory and disclose his most important secret.

In a similar vein however Tesla had earlier stated (Electric Discharges in Vacuum Tubes, The Electrical Engineer , N.Y., July 1, 1891) “...the electrostatic effects were of far greater importance...” and “In using the term electrostatic I had reference rather to the nature of the action than to a stationary condition, which is the usual acceptance of the term.” To this Thomson agreed, saying “As a matter of fact, it is very much easier to get the luminosity when these electrostatic effects are operative than when they are not.” (Note by Prof. J. J. Thomson in the London Electrician , July 24, 1891).

There is in my opinion, based on all my studies, only one kind of UFO propulsion technology and it is electro-mechanical, invented by Nikola Tesla. From my observations of the ship I saw at close range in broad daylight in 1953, there were no intake or exhaust ports, no jets or rockets, no “plasma” repulsion system, etc. The ship was apparently sustained and moved without these, the only external evidence being high voltage electrostatic corona. When you have a ship which can fly at 36,000 miles per hour in 1953 you cannot want for more.

While Thomson's theory proposed a Maxwellian three-axis system which used electric and magnetic force on two of the axes to purportedly create momentum on the third axis, Tesla used “p2”, a combination of electrostatic brush discharge in the ether projected in the direction of travel and high frequency A.C. in the opposite direction to block the ether and that was it. Tesla proved that Maxwell was wrong regarding electromagnetic waves in free space and rejected those theories, which were based on Hertz's erroneous theory of a solid ether.

Some of you reading this may have thought there was a contradiction between Tesla's statement that his flying machine was propelled by “mechanical” waves to propel his ship with a “pulling” action (ropes pull), then referred to the “steady D.C. brush discharge” as a means of creating the continuous exchange of carriers which imparts “mechanical” momentum to the ship. Both these means are combined, and Tesla also referred to “environmental” energy in free space, which can be harvested.

To put it into a nutshell, the rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials tuned to one-quarter wavelength produces the steady D.C. brush discharge which rarefies (stretches) the ether, while the rapidly-varying electrostatic potentials tuned to one-half or full (resonant) wavelength produces the reaction which compresses the ether. The sound waves in the ether are also used for transmitting wireless energy. A quarter wavelength tuning is for transmitting, while the half or full wavelength tuning for receiving, but at high frequencies has the effect of blocking the ether by compression.

Tesla's Dynamic Theory of Gravity and method of mechanical space propulsion brought a cosmic crowning achievement to the works of his esteemed predecessors who did so much of the ground work, but the public has been denied this achievement.

CHAPTER VI: FREE ENERGY MASSACRE;

The Atomic Hydrogen Process ©1996, Wm. R. Lyne

What better way to end a book on "Occult Ether Physics" than with a chapter on another concealed "free energy" process, which appears to extract energy from the environment—using similar techniques on the same substance—the ether—that makes Tesla's electro-mechanical propulsion possible?

In Space Aliens From the Pentagon and Pentagon Aliens I specified a free energy process in which helium is made to produce 460,000 calories/gram-atom by simple spark discharge, which is based on data from numerous generally available texts and scientific encyclopedias. This is the highest energy output I know of from a noble gas, and the same gas can be used ad infinitum , the only input energy being that required from spark discharges. Since helium is inappropriate for the average "Joe" and since the output is probably more than you could handle, I will more appropriately show you how to perform another free energy process, using that most easily accessible gas, hydrogen. This chapter will also give you the explanation for the heat produced in so-called "cold fusion" and a few other free energy processes, all closely related to the atomic hydrogen process and occult ether physics.

Over the years, the "Relativistic Quantum Mechanics" (hence "RQMs") concealed every process or reaction which could show the invalidity of their theories, "...in the interest of national security". Their false theories actually became one of the most important means by which, from the standpoint of the controlling corporate fascists, all 'dangerously efficient' (i.e., "disruptive") technology which would destroy their iron grip on us, could be concealed. According to deceitful relativist quantum mechanics, all energy coming out of a reaction must go into it only from a source recognized by them, and only in the discrete “quanta” permitted by Planck’s earlier quantum theory. The basic idea of Planck’s original quantum mechanical theory, was that energy levels of atoms must change in whole number integers (1, 2, 3, etc.) called “quanta”, which are based on the basic charge of a single electron or multiples thereof, which assumes only certain assigned energy levels in different atoms and molecules, and is used to define the magnitude of all of the smallest, intermediate, and largest possible energy changes of atoms and molecules. All atomic energy changes must conform to the permissible whole number equivalents or multiples of these quanta. Accordingly, energy absorbed or emitted by an atom must fit this stringent criterion.

What, then, would you say about a process which completely destroys this neat plan, which causes atoms to emit more energy that that which was put into them?

Despite what I consider to be obvious attempts to conceal basic physical data conflicting with this principle—as defined by the RQMs and incorporated into their theory, as if it were exclusively their theory and not that published earlier by Planck—the process I am about to discuss with you has glaring inconsistencies in it, as described by the Relativists, in particular Irving Langmuir. Langmuir was wrong and my research, invention and experiments and tests based on it prove him wrong.

It is said by the RQMs that the process of dissociating diatomic hydrogen molecules into separate atoms as atomic hydrogen, requires the absorption of 109,000 cal./gram molecule (“1.9 k.cal./gram molecule”), and that that is all the energy you can possibly get out of it. Yet, in taking the basic hydrogen atom and considering all its discrete ‘quanta’—whether in the atomic or molecular state—it appears to me that there is no state of the hydrogen atom or molecule in which such energy could be “stored”, even when using the RQMs’ theories,, especially in view of their irrational statement that the energy is still possessed by the molecule after it has already been released! It is their contention that an independent hydrogen atom can only exist as such because it has absorbed an abnormally large amount of heat, despite the fact that by their own criteria the atom has no mechanism identifiable by them by which it could do so.

When two such hydrogen atoms come together with the presence of sufficient

When two such hydrogen atoms come together with the presence of sufficient electrostatic initiation energy, the great amount of heat said by the Relativists to be “stored” in the hydrogen atom is liberated. The RQMs never directly measured the amount of dissociation energy necessary to bring the hydrogen atom from the diatomic to the atomic state, because they didn’t know how to do so, but because their theory said that this reaction is reversible, they said the dissociation energy was the same as the energy released on recombination of hydrogen atoms. Then to make matters worse, they defined the atomic hydrogen (ground) state as if it were an excited state, and the molecular state as if it were the ground state.

Realistically, the atomic hydrogen reaction can only be satisfactorily explained by reference to, construction of, or reconstruction of, an ether theory and involving Tesla's Primary Solar Rays (one form of “environmental energy”). While it may be arguable that the electrostatic “binding energy” between the two atoms of the molecule somehow ‘includes’ this energy in some undefined and mysterious way, this argument actually supports an ether theory, since the binding energy (from somewhere) must somehow be exchanged with what is said to be the heat energy which is released when the molecule forms, according to their theory, consistent with the equal-and-opposite-reaction rule. Otherwise, one is expected to believe a kind of backwards Orwellian doublethink that the RQMs. This kind of latitude is permitted only for them, while those who disagree are held to a higher standard.

The doublethink (contradictory) features of Relativism apparently stem from the fact that Albert Einstein was a KaballistExistentialist—whose epistemology was a Platonist one. In philosophy, there are two basic epistemologies—theories of the origin, nature and limits of human knowledge—representing the two basic categories into which the epistemologies of all philosophies must fall, and which are supposed to explain how one knows something according to a particular philosophy...by what means they know it...if in fact, they do “know” it. Since he who asserts something has the burden of proving it, rather than one who disbelieves it, the means by which it is purportedly known may come into question. No one is legally, morally, or “spiritually’ obligated to believe anything, without reason, or a valid means of knowing it to be “true”. All epistemologies are classified as either Platonist or Aristotelian.

The “Platonist Epistemology” is so named because of the theory illustrated by the ancient Greek philosopher Plato’s cave analogy, in his book, The Republic . In this analogy, an observer inside a cave (us), facing the inner wall at night, sees only the shadows cast upon the wall by such things as a passing caravan, projected by a fire burning beyond a road along which the caravan is passing. According to Plato, man cannot know reality, but sees only a ‘shadow’ of reality, because there is a ‘higher world’ of ‘perfect forms’, which exist only ‘in heaven’. It therefore becomes obvious how this epistemology follows religious thinking, and that many religions have been influenced by it as somehow adding ‘scientific credence’ to their religious ideas, which are based on faith rather than reason. The same reasoning has been used by scientific, philosophical, economic, political, and ‘spiritual’ con-artists for centuries, and every totalitarian philosophy ever known has relied upon this fallacious ‘reasoning’ which is identical to the Platonist epistemology, because it relieves its advocates of showing reason and logic for what they assert. One wonders how the viewer in Plato’s cave would draw the line between ‘knowing’ a shadow, and a “shadow of a shadow”, since a shadow might also have a ‘higher form’ under this theory.

The “Aristotelian Epistemology” in the meanwhile—based on the ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle’s theory of knowledge— holds that the senses are valid, scientific tools of cognition, which we can rely upon to detect the facts of perceivable reality, and that we can, by relying upon the facts so perceived, know reality—and the nature of reality—and based on that, determine other, perhaps unapparent facts of reality.

As can be seen from a comparison of these two epistemologies and their implications, the philosophies and endeavors based on the Platonist epistemology are mystical, nebulous and/or totalitarian because its advocates require you to believe things based on faith and not reason, while the Aristotelians are more rational and objective, especially when applied to the natural sciences. It can also be seen that the use of a Platonist Epistemology by a physicist should be considered unforgivable, while Einstein’s theory, built upon this fatally flawed epistemology, has been popularized by the communication monopoly controlled by the power élite, because it makes a potentially inquisitive and questioning society dumber and easier to control. Einstein’s image is continually built up as if that of an ultimate and infallible creature who should be regarded as a ‘god’. This propaganda not only protects the false theory but also aids in concealment of valid theory and advanced technology which would end the reign of a world-wide power structure of corporate-statists, who think society already has all the technology it ‘needs’, else the élite’s ‘grip’ on the world, held in place by their archaic technology which exploits mineral, industrial, and banking interests owned by them, might be torn loose. Although Einstein eventually admitted in the 1920s that 'there has to be an ether', he never Einstein eventually admitted in the 1920s that 'there has to be an ether', he never followed up on that change in his ideas with anything concrete, although his friend Paul Dirac did in a paper he sent to Einstein arguing for an ether.

I would have very little quarrel with a quantum theory of atomic energy levels, were it extended to include somehow the phenomenon of external environmental energy and ether theory as it should have been logically construed, but I take issue with its present development, limitation, and abuse by the RQMs.

My position is that they already have covertly applied it to an ether theory, that this application is well concealed, and that this book is needed to begin the reconstruction of these concealed truths, for use by the public. While Planck said his quantum theory applied to a "system", he didn't say the "Relativist system of Einstein"— which came into vogue after Planck's theory—and was the only system it could be applied to. Since a rationally extended quantum mechanical theory would not exclude an ether, my "RQM" label distinguishes between the relativistic misinterpreters of quantum mechanics, and what could be called the "Integrated Reality Mechanics" ("IRMs").

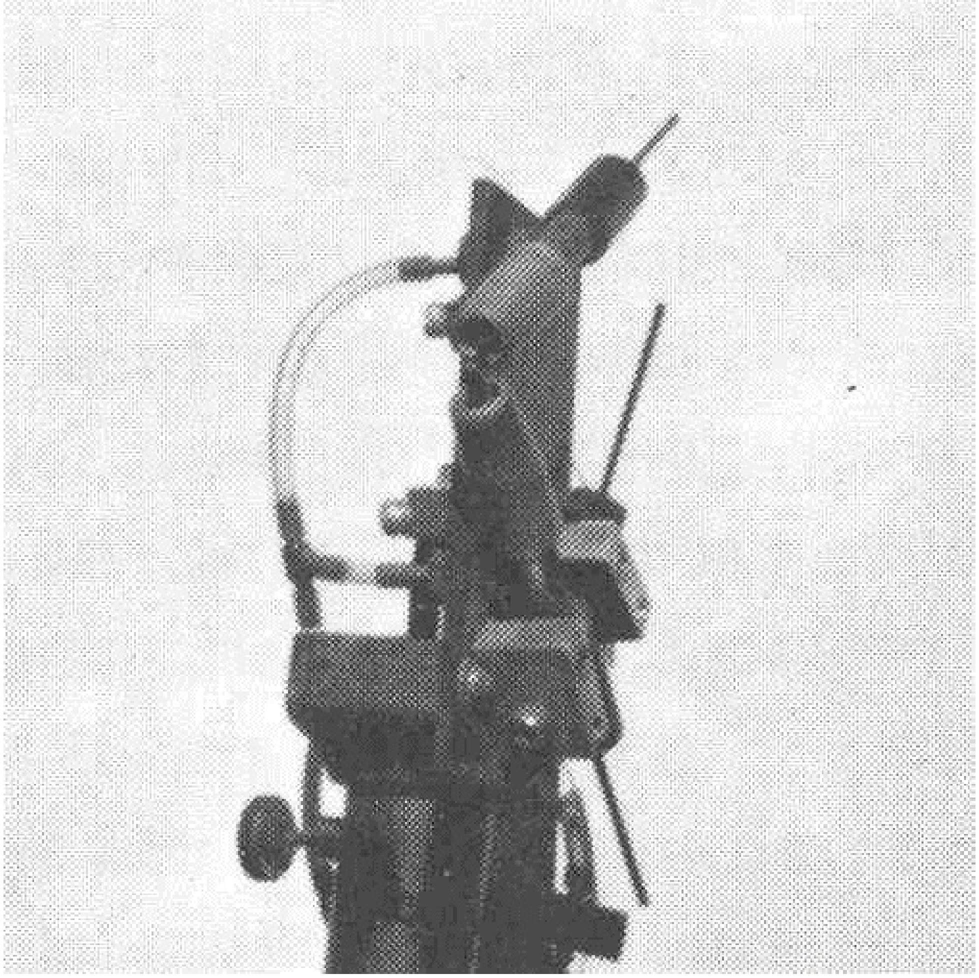
The atomic hydrogen reaction first came to my attention in 1964, when I was studying industrial processes at Sam Houston State University, Huntsville, Texas, the year after taking an introductory course in college physics. While reviewing various welding processes in a textbook, my eyes fixed on an older process called "atomic hydrogen welding". By that time, the process was already considered "obsolete". To me, the process seemed valuable, not only because it produces such high temperatures—up to 5,000° C., more than enough to melt tungsten with a M.P. Of 3410° C., and the highest temperature producible by man—but also because it is "selfshielding", can be used to weld diverse metals (often without flux) and produces a concentrated flame, with little heat distortion when welding thin metal. In the process, 'normal' diatomic H_2 is shot through an electric arc which dissociates it into "atomic" hydrogen, H_1 . This atomic hydrogen recombines at the (welded) metal surface, producing the very high heat. Though the process interested me then, and always has, I have never seen an atomic hydrogen welding unit for sale for the many years hence. Industry's obvious excuse for laying the valuable process aside was that it has been replaced by 'better' processes, such as Heliarc (TIG, "Tungsten Inert Gas") and MIG welding, though they also rarely mention "plasma arc welding", which has also almost disappeared from the market. Since plasma arc welding is merely an extension of the atomic hydrogen and TIG processes, using a specially redesigned torch, the mysterious reasons are undoubtedly the same. Neither of these two processes uses a lot of “consumables” (welding fluxes, rods, gases, etc.).

It was then that I got the idea of my atomic hydrogen furnace. The process simmered in the inner recesses of my mind, taking shape for a few years until 1976, when I rekindled my interest in the process for possible use in welding stainless steel and reducing and fusing platinum metal compounds, because hydrogen reduces such compounds (which must also be shielded from oxygen) to their metallic states. The atomic hydrogen process does not rely upon the combustion of hydrogen with oxygen in the air, but upon the purportedly “atomic” energy released when the atomic hydrogen recombines to form the ‘normal’ diatomic hydrogen. I still had some unanswered questions, since the various welding data at my disposal failed to mention sufficient specific details.

If Nikola Tesla was right, then I am right, that atomic energy comes through the ether from the Primary Solar Rays, not from the radioactive elements themselves.

Because I knew of no source from which to purchase an atomic hydrogen torch in 1985, I decided to build one, but my information was inadequate for proper construction. In the torch I made, the hydrogen entered the arc concentrically around both electrodes, instead of passing through the arc at a right angle. I also used the wrong kind of arc transformer, so it didn’t work as well as it should have.

Despite the disappointment, I knew the torch would work better if I corrected the problems, so I kept the torch in my barn until better information and sufficient time was available. I excited the curiosity of the industrial spies when I rented a large tank of hydrogen at a local welders’ supply, and this probably contributed to the sudden acceleration of the CIA-maintained judicial harassment that I endured between 1974 and 1992 (18 years). They apparently assumed I was exploring the process for its energy potential, rather than for just welding, and they were correct. My torch is shown below:



In the ‘70s, I had acquired an old English inorganic chemistry textbook[58] , purchased from Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory salvage for $.25, which contained a halftone photo of a 1930s vintage atomic hydrogen welding torch, along with some basic data. The torch shown was different from the one I constructed, in that I used a high voltage arc transformer and had no mechanism to strike the arc electrodes together to start the arc, because the high voltage made it unnecessary. It also showed the gas passing through the arc at a right angle. In this old textbook, it was stated at page 170 (emphasis mine), as follows:

“Langmuir (1912) discovered that hydrogen at low pressure in contact with a tungsten wire heated by an electric current is dissociated to some extent into atoms:”...“This absorbs a large amount of energy, about 100 kcal. per gram-molecule.” “...The atomic hydrogen formed is chemically very active. Atomic hydrogen is formed when an electric arc between tungsten electrodes is allowed to burn in hydrogen at atmospheric pressures (Fig. 106).” (NOTE:

This statement shows a basic misunderstanding of the process by Langmuir and others before my ideas emerged.) The text continued:

"Atomic-hydrogen blown out of the arc by a jet of molecular hydrogen across the arc, forms an intensely hot flame, capable of melting tungsten (m. Pt. 3400°). This flame obtains its heat from recombination of hydrogen atoms to H_2 ."
"Hydrogen being set free in a chemical reaction is often more reactive than hydrogen gas."
"...the activity of such nascent (newborn) hydrogen, in the act of liberation from its compounds, is due to the hydrogen being in the atomic state."

The following is a copy of "fig. 106":

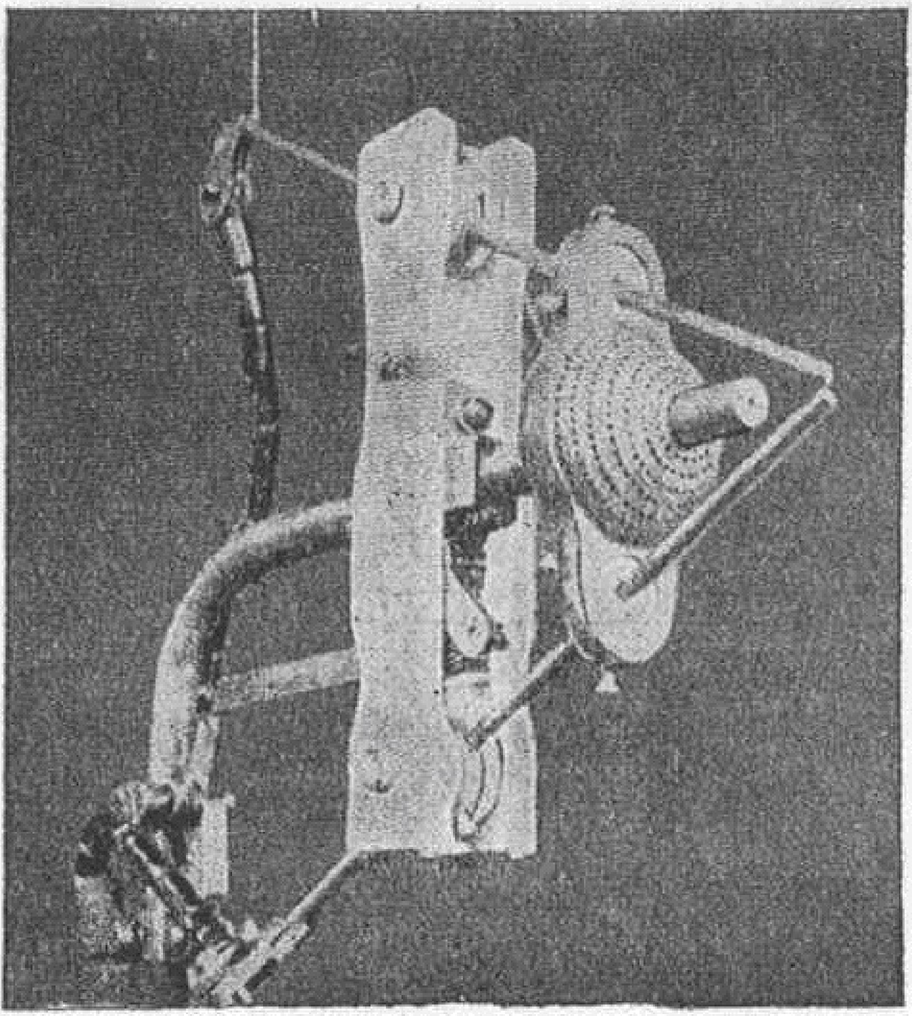

FIG. 106.—The atomic hydrogen blowpipe.

In checking this data in a more recent Van Nostrand’s Encyclopedia of Science[59] , at page 1311 it was stated in pertinent part:

“Hydrogen molecules dissociate to atoms endothermically at high temperatures (heat of dissociation about 103 cal/gram mole) in an electric arc, or by irradiation.” “...the hydrogen atoms recombine at the metal surface to provide heat required for welding.”

59 [59]. Van Nostrand’s Scientific Encyclopedia , Fifth Edition (edited by Douglas M. Considine), Van Nostrand Reinhold Company (1976).

I was surprised to find this in the Van Nostrand encyclopedia, but I also found that in 1910, the D. Van Nostrand Company published a book by Haller and Cunningham entitled The High Frequency Coil (The construction of a Tesla Coil for the advanced amateur. 119 pages), so there is a record of the Van Nostrand company's association with Tesla technology.

SMOKESCREENS FROM ACADEMIA

It seemed odd to me that it was later suggested that the 103 calories of dissociation energy absorbed from a very brief exposure to the arc is the same heat as that "...required for welding" as described, and I believed it to be more reasonable that the excess heat had to come from "elsewhere". I believe the true dissociation energy must be somewhere between the 103 calories and the 109 kcals./gram mole.

The older text showed the clearer construction of a device, and the newer text showed that only 103 cal./gram mole were required for dissociation, while the older text (Langmuir) showed that 100,000 cal./gram mole were liberated on recombination. Only by jumping back and forth between the two sources was I able to put a complete documentation together, and discover the conflicts. It meant that if the 103 cal./gram mole dissociation energy was correct, that with the 109 k.cal/gram mole output, the process was theoretically capable of producing 1,058 times the input energy. This is probably too high but it is definitely higher than all previous calculations.

It was apparent from the newer text that the writers intended for us to believe that the final 100 k.cal./gram mole heat—later upped to 109 k.cal./gram mole—was absorbed from the arc, but the 103 cal./gram mole dissociation heat figure showed a net 108,897 cal./gram mole unexplained. If there are about 22.4 cubic liters or 22,400 cubic cm. If that amount of hydrogen at STP can be dissociated by 103 calories of heat seemed astounding, but since hydrogen is the lightest element, it might be possible, but considering the idea that this same volume of hydrogen, weighing one gram, could somehow carry the heat of 109,000 calories—equivalent to the caloric heat of about 75 loaves of bread weighing at least 112 lbs.—it seemed ludicrous. This bread would weigh 50,400 times the gram of hydrogen, and the actual hydrogen content would be so much greater than that gram of hydrogen, so that the "official story" seemed impossible. So the "extra heat" appears to come from an officially unidentified source.

The idea that sufficient energy to weld could be extracted by the arc during the time required for the gas to pass from the orifice and through the arc is remarkable. The time required for 22,400 cubic cm. to pass through the arc allows for .2 calories per cubic cm. Five cubic cm. of gas would be required to provide each calorie of heat, amounting to 1/9th of one slice of bread. A minimum number of cubic cm. per second of hydrogen involved in making a weld is obviously required.

109,000 cal./gram mole equals 432.5 BTU/gram mole—roughly the heat energy contained in 75 loaves of bread (1 lb. 8 oz. loaves at 90 calories per each of 16 slices)—so the heat energy which they have asked us to believe is ‘stored’ in an amount of atomic hydrogen which weighs 1/28th of an ounce, during its passage through the arc seems incredible. Yet the transformer is required to produce only half what it does in conventional welding processes. It seems more likely that excess heat could be stored in molecules than in ‘almost naked’ atomic hydrogen atoms. What ever happened to Bohr’s little atom! It got bigger, and bigger, and ....

Between the older text (1921-1950, from the first and sixth editions) and the newer (1976) Norton science encyclopedia, it was obvious that science was much more simpler in the pre-National Security Act days, and that in the newer text, there was a reflection of the fishy attempts brought on by the national security laws and the firmer establishment of the RQMs, to conceal certain scientific knowledge which had been discovered all the way back in 1912 by Langmuir, and I even find it hard to believe that Langmuir did not know or suspect the truth. Aside from the discrepancies between the older measurements, regarding the comparable outputs between the combustion of gasoline and the combustion of molecular hydrogen, and the output from the atomic hydrogen process, to the newer text, there was a failure, so far as I could determine, to state under appropriate references (or any others I could find) some important facts concerning atomic hydrogen, and even apparent misrepresentations of the actual comparative outputs of gasoline and hydrogen combustion, through “doublethink”—the Orwellian “badges of fraud”—of which I spoke in Space Aliens. Though this 103 cal./gram mole “slip” appears to have been made, Norton apparently was also forced by circumstances to rely on some ‘scientists’ who represented the fossil fuel cartels and other conflicting interests, while the older text, though inaccurate, should have been relatively free of such influences at that time, but maybe not.

For example, in the newer text, page 1311, energy from the combustion of hydrogen was stated at 29,000 calories per gram (52,200 BTU/lb.). In the older text, this value was given at 62,100 BTU/lb., with a comparative value for gasoline ("petroleum") at 19,800 BTU/lb., stretched to 20,825 BTU/lb. in the newer encyclopedia. These figures roughly comported with those in the encyclopedia for n-Heptane ("gasoline") at 19,314 BTU/lb., and hydrogen at 51,571.4 BTU/lb., more or less repeated at page 1137, with n-Heptane at 10,737.2 cal./gram, and hydrogen at 28,669.6 cal./gram, yet nowhere in the newer or older text was it affirmatively stated that the hydrogen was not "consumed" in the process.

The corrected figure (52,200 BTU/lb.) shows, in a comparison between the combustion of "normal hydrogen" (to form $H2O$) and gasoline (to form $CO2$), that hydrogen has a yield of roughly 2.7 times that of gasoline, by weight. Then we come to a comparison between gasoline and atomic hydrogen. Though the two can be compared BTU-for-BTU and pound-for-pound, showing atomic hydrogen's phenomenal output, the real measure of the atomic hydrogen process is gleaned only from a comparison between the "input energy)—103 cal./gram molecule—and the net output. The "input energy" would be "unity" for the process, because the process does not 'consume' the hydrogen, but only returns it to its associated diatomic state as H_2 . The dissociation energy, subtracted from the gross output, would be the net output:

109,000 cal./gram mole (gross heat output)
Minus 103 cal./gram mole (dissociation energy - "unity") Leaves 108,897 cal./gram mole (net output - "over-unity" because the hydrogen didn't have that much calorific energy in the first place, and was not 'consumed' in the second place)

This output is theoretically 1,058 times the input energy. In my opinion, hydrogen is not really a "fuel" in this process but rather a "medium" used in the extraction of and conversion of energy from the Primary Solar Rays via the ether, by transforming cosmic radiant energy into infrared (heat) radiation, which according to Tesla is actually (mechanical) sound waves in the ether. The energy required to pump the diatomic hydrogen to a holding tank, before being recycled and shot back through the arc and into the reaction chamber once again, is not considered in this computation because it is relatively negligible and unrelated to the process itself, since the dissociation energy is less than a thousandth of the gross output, and there might be a way to make the process work without this particular pump anyway.

The manipulators of information appear to have done everything they can to make a direct comparison between atomic hydrogen and gasoline as difficult as possible, but I have waded through a multistep mathematical, physical, chemical and unitary process to get closer to the truth. According to 'official' sources, atomic hydrogen produces over 109 k.ca../gram mole, which is 109,000,000 cal./kilo. Subtract the 103 cal./gram mole endothermic dissociation energy, and a net of 108,897 k.cal./gram mole is left.

If true, the 1,058 times the input energy figure for atomic hydrogen however brings into question as to whether or not the official figures for gasoline are correct. Perhaps they are wrong, which would explain how Shell Oil Company in a battery of efficiency tests in the ‘50s were able to get hundreds of miles per gallon of gasoline in an automobile with a specially designed carburetor.

No wonder the atomic hydrogen welding process “went out of use”. With this process, home consumers would pay nothing for fuel, because they could produce a small amount of hydrogen in the basement, any time needed, and could use it over and over, ad infinitum. They could heat their houses, drive their cars, and use it for “home industry” purposes. In a motor cruiser on the ocean, one would never have to worry about where the “next gallon” of fuel was coming from, or what it would “cost”, because like sunshine, the heat from atomic hydrogen is “free”, except, unlike sunshine, you could produce as much as you want, any time, day or night, summer or winter, rain or shine; the farmer would no longer be dependent upon the oil cartels for his energy, and could run his machinery and heat his barns “free”. He could tell the fuel suppliers and the banks to screw themselves. People in the far Alaskan north could heat large spaces without huge expense. “Northern industry” would thrive again. The population control Nazis will hate me.

It is obvious that the reason that corporations like ARCO went so heavily into producing solar energy equipment in the early ‘70s, was so that they could control the patents and raise the costs of solar panels and ultimately control the cost of (free) solar energy, to make it “competitive” with gasoline and other fossil fuels. And they were eventually busted for this anti-competitive activity.

There are many ways used in contemporary texts to confuse facts, but the most effective way is by complete omission. Such facts could not have been concealed by “accident” or mere “oversight”, because they are too phenomenal. Only by plowing through a tortuous mathematical process and confusing units and other factors was the true motive for such concealment revealed for certain and other factors was the true motive for such concealment revealed for certain, but tell me why I’m not surprised?

Conservatively speaking, the atomic hydrogen process bears a 10.5-to-l ratio to n-Heptane. Would you care for 315 miles per gallon? How about 550,000 miles? It all depends on how many times you recycle it. You don't need to worry about wasting energy on electrolysis because you recycle the same hydrogen continuously.

The figures for n-Heptane are grossly confusing, as one might expect, since it is shown only by comparison by weight that hydrogen combustion has a 2.7-to-1 ratio to n-Heptane. This deception was effected by playing around with differing heat and weight units, pressures, and volumes, and the difference between the centigrade, Fahrenheit and English unit systems. The “109,000 cal./ gram mole” figure for atomic hydrogen was omitted from the newer texts, though one might have been able to extrapolate it from some complex data stated in other areas where even the inquisitive person is not expected to look. There was a total absence in the new text or other “new” data available to me, of a direct comparison of energy outputs between combustion of petroleum and hydrogen, much less the atomic hydrogen process. This is of course consistent with the continued government secrecy since 1943 regarding the huge mass of information on Nikola Tesla. Hide what you can. Lie, ignore or confuse about the rest. My invention has thrown all the data up in the air. Physics will have to make some fundamental changes.

I have never seen a direct comparison by any of the thousands of Ph.D.s in chemistry or physics, who should have become aware of these facts during their cursory studies. To make these figures even more ludicrous, with BTU (“British Thermal Units”), one would expect the weight to be shown in kilos under the metric system, instead of the English “pounds”. These machinations appear to rely upon the well-founded assumption that all scientists who know, are controlled and don’t say, and those who aren’t controlled, will be considered “quacks” if they try to say. Again, it the usual case of “Those who know, can’t say, and those who say, will be presumed not to know.”

Another stupid trick used is to compare “system weights”, under the false assumption that the user of hydrogen would have to use only the systems they present, raising the “comparable” weight of hydrogen to gasoline, using cumbersome cryogenic bottles or hydride storage tanks, etc., when the simple figures clearly show that onethird the amount by weight of hydrogen would be needed for a comparable combustion process. Whenever hydride systems are mentioned, there is an obvious omission of the liquid hydride system developed by Dr. Gerald Schafflander of California, the promotion for which Schafflander and associates were abusively prosecuted by the SEC, as previously stated in Space Aliens and Pentagon Aliens . Yet, the atomic hydrogen process would be more than adequate—even fantastic—with only a pound of hydrogen, and one could carry an extra 25 lbs of Dr. Schafflander's liquid hydride in the trunk. Below is a direct comparison between the BTU/lb for combustion of gasoline and molecular hydrogen, and the atomic hydrogen process, respectively:

Gasoline combustion (n-Heptane) 19,314 BTU/lb Hydrogen combustion (H_2 + O) 52,200 BTU/lb Atomic hydrogen ($H_2 \leftrightarrows 2H$) 196,200 BTU/lb

Note that this comparison is based on the 'accepted' value for the atomic hydrogen process and does not involve a "consumption" of the hydrogen, yet even if it did, the ration between atomic hydrogen and gasoline is still 10.5-to-one. Take into consideration also that all the best methods for obtaining over a hundred miles per gallon (even hundreds of miles per gallon) of gasoline in automobile engines, utilize the vaporization of gasoline and mixture of it with air prior to combustion, something which is easier to do with hydrogen because it is in a gaseous state at normal temperatures and pressures. Also consider that while n-Heptane is a 'purer' gasoline, it hasn't been available for years, and most "gasoline" is a dilute mixture with water and various additives, with only about 50% n-Heptane, so I'm being as kind as I can be to "gasoline".

If a pound of gasoline could propel a car 30 miles, the consumption would be 666.6 BTU/mile. On the same scale, a pound of atomic hydrogen would yield 315 miles. Then you could repeat it, over and over and over. A pound of hydrogen could conceivably supply all your energy needs for your whole life, and you could produce another 100 pounds of it electrolytically, right in your basement, from tap water. Is this free energy, or what?

Though the facts of this "secret" hydrogen process are "hidden in plain sight", one must beware of the disinformation, as well as the common mistakes created by "scientists" who have been duped by the RQMs. For example, in the 1976 Norton Encyclopedia, 5th Edition, page 1311, most of the pertinent facts about hydrogen are shown. The "109,000 cal./gram molecule" for recombined hydrogen, reported in an older text, was not shown directly, though the following facts which were shown, are of particular note:

Heat of vaporization at 20.4°K 107 cal/gram Energy released upon combustion 29,000 cal/gram Heat of combustion at 25°C (gross) 63,317 cal/gram Heat of combustion at 25°C (net) 57,797/6 cal/gram

ANOTHER ASTOUNDING PROOF AND MORE HYDROGEN METHODS

The Norton encyclopedia was in its 5th edition, and the "103 cal/gram mole" dissociation energy did not appear to be a typographical error or misprint, and should have been corrected by that time if discovered. How many books would I have to search to find such a 'misprint', especially since I didn't expect to find the anomaly because of the obvious concealment? Yet, in Physical Chemistry[60] , at page 418, appeared the following:

"The Spectroscopic evaluation of the dissociation energy

The energy of dissociation, D_e of a diatomic molecule is the difference between the potential energy of the atoms when infinitely separated, and their energy when the atoms are at rest at the equilibrium separation."

Notice that the "at rest" state of the molecules is couched in language that makes you think that the "infinitely separated" atomic hydrogen atoms represents the "excited state" for the element. In layman's terms, the RQMs simply made the statement that the dissociation and recombination energies had to be the same, because their theories depended upon them being the same. Then they measured the dissociation energy backwards, by measuring the recombination energy, and stating the measurement as if it were the dissociation energy. The statements are supplanted by a lot of RQM gobbledegook, with a "spectrographic evaluation" thrown in like some snake oil, because the spectroscope purportedly "can't lie". There is also in the same text, at page 417, the following obtuse statement:

"...In kilocalories per mole, D_e is 109."

If hydrogen atoms exothermically release energy when they combine to form molecules, the potential energy of the heat has been lost by the atoms, yet they attribute the "potential energy" to the hydrogen molecules—backwards—to evade their duty to draw the logical conclusion. If this energy cannot be obtained except by the prior injection of 109,000 cal/gram mole, then it is not "potential energy". This is shown by a graph ("fig. 4") purporting to show the 60 [60]. E. A. Moelwyn-Hughes, Cambridge, Physical Chemistry (1965) Pergamon Press, London, page 418 (Supra.).

“potential energy of the hydrogen molecule in the ground electronic state.” This clearly appears to be a misrepresentation by a Ph.D. in physics of the “Royal Society”, that hydrogen in the “atomic state” is not in a ground state, but in an excited state. In this 1965 physical chemistry text from England, the heat energy released on recombination of the hydrogen atoms is given as 109,000 cal/gram mole, then misrepresented as equal to the “potential energy” of the “ground state hydrogen molecules” which have just formed. But the “ground state” of hydrogen should be the atomic state, with the electron at its lowest level of energy, since there appears to be no way the naked atoms could “store” the 109,000 cal/gram mole. Where, exactly would this energy “reside”? I could believe that the atom could capture the energy from the Primary Solar Rays on dissociation, but since the heat energy is released on recombination, the molecules lack the heat energy already released. The potential energy of the separate atoms is greater than that of the molecules, which I think is because the heat energy is released from the entrained ether and converted Primary Solar Rays—not from the hydrogen atoms—when they combine to form molecules.

Since original publication of this book in 1997-98, there have been at least four specific cases where, based on my original invention, at least four tests have shown over-unity results. These are:

1. D. W. Energy Research, LLC, Colorado Springs, Colorado, U.S. Patent #6,113,065, “Liquid Gasification Process”, claiming an “energy amplification factor of about 1.9” (a patent based on a verbatim copy of my design).

2. Alexander Frolov, Faraday Labs, St. Petersburg, Russia, claiming an efficiency of over 200%, using an A.C.-heated tungsten filament. (http:/faraday.ru).

3. Jean-Louis Naudin, Paris, over 2,100% effocoemcu isomg a 50 Hz. D.C. pulse (created from Eurpoean 50 Hz. House current).
4. Italians, Andrea Rossi and Sergio Focardi---the “Rossi-Focardi LENR Device”---based on the Lyne Atomic Hydrogen Furnace, but concealed by a deceptive description and “secrecy”). This was announced Jan. 14, 2011, from Bologna, Italy. Rossi claimed an output of 12,400 Watts with an input of 300 Watts (COP of 31).

Though Naudin says that his experiment was based on Langmuir’s work, Langmuir never invented the use of a closed loop system, and never knew that the process was over-unity, which means his calculations were WRONG. That is my work. I also am the first that I know of to design an industrial grade atomic hydrogen furnace. Naudin used the same unit constructed by Frolov (using a large old metallic water-cooled rectifier tube) with a slight alteration of the dissociation current (from a conventional electrically-heated tungsten filament). Both Frolov and Naudin mention a Danish man named Nicholas Moller who plagiarized my work and my design and misrepresented to Frolov that it was his work. Frolov corrected this fraud.

Andrea Rossi copied my invention with minor variations. He dissociates the H_2 to H_1 then reacts it in a stainless steel chamber packed with nickel powder around which a water jacket removes the heat and converts water to low pressure wet steam. Then he recirculates the hydrogen circuitously as in my invention to be repeated ad infinitum . There is a difference in design but in effect no difference in concept.

The dissociation method used by Rossi---Nichrome® resistance heating wires---after which the H_1 is injected into the reaction chamber packed with nickel power, provides the environment which effects the recombination of the H_1 to H_2 with release of heat. This is said by some to produce some nuclear radiation as a result of energyconsuming transmutation of some of the nickel to copper (ca.10%) and iron (ca.14%), but there is no residual radioactive matter. The reaction chamber has a surrounding water jacket through which water is circulated to remove the heat and generate low pressure wet steam. The nickel buffets and lowers the high temperature reaction heat, so the water is of insufficient temperature to produce the dry, superheated steam required to power a turbo-electric steam generator. I solved the problem of how to handle the extremely high temperatures years ago but am now holding that secret as proprietary technology.

The transmutation effected by Rossi's device is not desirable with this process and is counter-productive, since it diminishes energy output and also leads to confusion for those who need a conventional explanation. It has also confused Rossi, whose explanation has been rejected because it is a failed attempt to satisfy conventional physics. Only my “ether and Primary Solar Rays” explanation will suffice. Scientists must realize that with my invention, I have opened a door to use of cosmic energy. Until they realize this, they will only continue to prop up a false (relativist) physics, and incidentally continue to supply a market for uranium and nuclear energy, coal, gas and other fossil fuels.

There is a definite deception by Rossi, saying that he “invented” it and that he has a “secret catalyst” (when in fact, in this case, the catalyst is the “catalytic metal”, nickel). This is shown in my original 1996 drawing as “ Activation energy device (spark plug, catalytic metal , etc.)”. The use of a catalytic metal is unnecessary so I apologize for that. Rossi's statement that 'there is absolutely no tungsten' in his device (in obvious reference to my design) only confirms his prior knowledge of my invention as well as confusion that my design somehow relies on tungsten, per se (it was recommended only for its high-temperature applications, not for catalysis). Almost any metal will trigger the recombination of H_1 to H_2 . Once the reaction is triggered by contact with metal it will continue so long as H_1 is supplied.

I have also solved the exact mechanism by which the molecular binding energy is canceled and resupplied. I have also conceived a unique method for dissociation. But I won't disclose those details here because idea-thieves will only steal and say they discovered them.

My 1996 design is as follows (the encircled part is where Rossi got his “catalytic metal”/“eCat” idea):

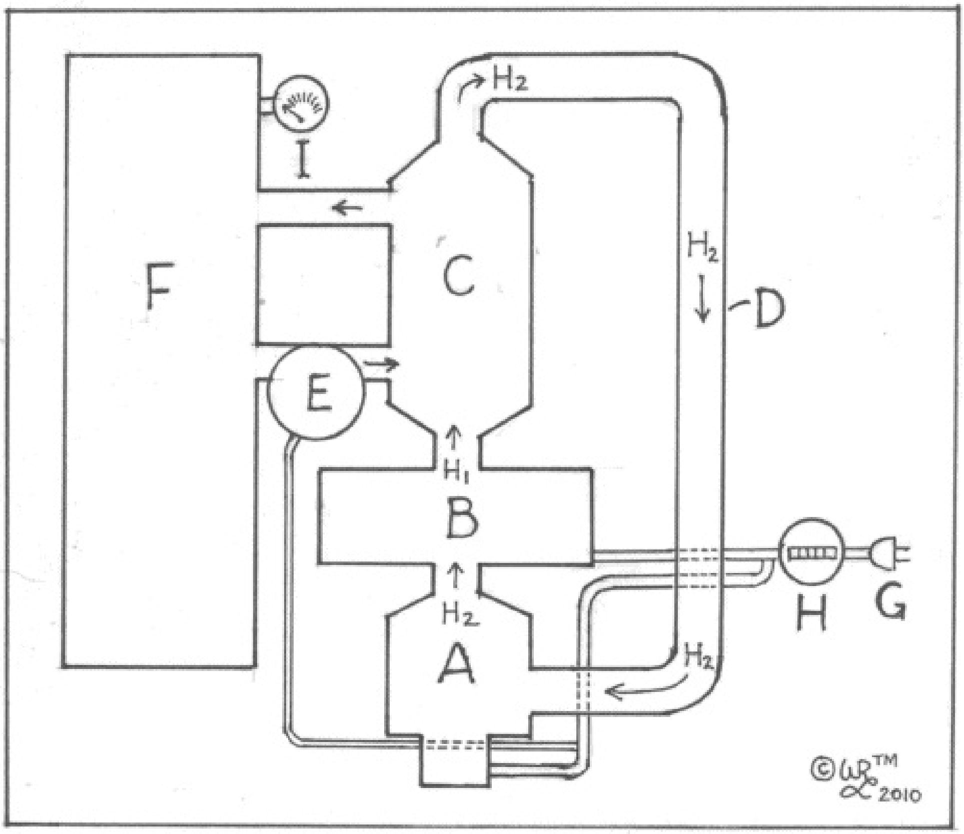
origen of "Rossi's" "eCat" idea

With both Langmuir's and Rossi's use of electrical resistance heating wires to dissociate the H_2 , you have to ask what kind of radiation comes off the wires. I believe that it is not the heat---as Langmuir and Rossi believed---that dissociates the molecules, but the radiation, which according to Tesla is mechanical sound waves in the ether. These waves tear the H_2 molecules apart physically rather than by heat expansion. (Some have mistakenly described the H_1 as a “superheated hot gas” which is wrong.) The I.R. radiation is in the microwave spectrum. Other frequencies may work---some possibly even better---to get maximum effect, the idea being to use as little energy as possible to produce the greatest effect in the name of efficiency. The invention must also be durable and resilient to component fatigue, with minimal maintenance so as not to break down in the long Winters of Alaska or Sweden, or on a steamturbine-driven ship in the middle of the ocean.

The following is a simplified drawing of my re-designed furnace, which does not include the secret details of each of the parts shown:



A. - Accelerator
B. - Dissociator

C. - Reactor/Heat Exchanger D. - H2 Return Conduit
E. - Heat Exchange Fluid Pump F. - Hot Fluid Tank (test) G. - Electric Input
H. - Watt-hour Meter I. - Thermometer

H2 is accelerated by Accelerator A through Dissociator B where it is efficiently converted to H1. H1 is reacted in Combined Heat Exchanger/Reactor C returning H1 to H2. H2 is returned from C to A via H2 Return Conduit D. Heat Exchange Fluid Pump E pumps heat exchange fluid from Hot Fluid Tank F through Combined Reactor/Heat Exchanger C and back to Hot Fluid Tank F. Electric Input G Wattage is measured by Watt-hour Meter H and compared to calories measured by Thermometer I to determine efficiency ratio.

Inclusion of the details would enable the corporate thieves and other fakers to decipher my design, patent it, sell it to the government, and the people might never see it. The corporations would be unjustly enriched. A rough conservative estimate of this single unit's expected output, in a size no more than a cubic meter including the holding tank, is at least 50 kW net, free energy, and it will heat a large space or produce superheated dry steam to power a turbo-electric generator for electric power.

As of February, 2012, I have no backers, so building is slow on my meager means. Its secrets may die with me whenever I go, unless a fair backer emerges. At this point you might say that I am “on strike” like John Galt. But a pocket full of money will induce me to go off strike.

Due to changes in our patent laws---“first to file” not “first to invent”---I have decided not to open-source the details of my newest design, for then we might have the spectacle of some copy-cat suppressing me for authorizing the use of my own invention to people at large. The idiots in the Patent Office, in their infinite wisdom, probably thought this new rule would induce someone like me to apply for a patent. I do not have the financial resources to do so.

The RQM’s misrepresentation of the real potential of this process is hereby unmasked as Orwellian doublethink. Since when is the potential energy of the atom of an element measured from its molecular state, or its atomic state called its “excited state”? This is exactly like saying that a truck sitting at the bottom of a hill has more “potential energy” than one sitting at the top, because of the energy required to drive it up to the top of the hill! What a strange way to define “potential energy”. It is like saying that an empty gas can has the potential energy of the gas that it takes to fill it up!

The unique thing about the hydrogen atom, is that it is “born” at the top of the hill! Its astounding properties lie in its ability to perform as a “doorway” between the ether, Primary Solar Rays and the world of more familiar atomic matter.

The relativist statements have been unwittingly accepted as correct, because there is no ether or Primary Solar Rays possible under their theories, and the molecules have to have more energy than the atoms separately, because “E = MC^2 ”. The RQMs have misrepresented and concealed this process in which separate atoms— with lower MASS—possess more “atomic” energy than the molecules!. These facts on hydrogen show that E equals MUCH MORE THAN MC^2 .

Under relativism “solid” matter is thought erroneously to be the most “compact”, “stored” form of “atomic energy”, because the energy is supposed to be released from mass by the “smashing” and destruction, or fusing together of atoms, which Tesla said was false. It is clearly shown by the Lyne Atomic Hydrogen Furnace that Tesla was right and the relativists and Einstein were wrong, because the hydrogen atoms acquire more potential energy between the separate atomic state and the diatomic molecular state when the atoms recombine and the atoms have to get their energy from an external source. The only other way that the molecules can release any “potential” energy is through combustion with oxygen, which is a much lower energy output, and that too may come from the Primary Solar Rays. Tesla said that radioactivity was a reaction of atomic mass with the Primary Solar Rays, just as the hydrogen atom emits IR radiation. The separate atoms must convert kinetic energy from the Primary Solar Rays and eject it in the form of sound waves in the ether in the microwave spectrum when recombined. This radiation then reacts with matter to produce heat.

The perverse “potential energy” fallacy is also a way to confuse the diatomic hydrogen molecules with the nascent atomic hydrogen atoms produced by dissociation. The energy of hydrolysis is equated with the energy of dissociation, and the energy of combustion with the energy of recombination, yet the information presented here shows that by combining a type of hydrolysis of water, in which atomic hydrogen is produced directly, with the atomic hydrogen recombination process, instead of the combustion process, that at least 10.5 times as much energy as the hydrolytic input can be produced, in still a third astounding hydrogen free energy process. This is a gain in energy which Langmuir seemed to to have missed and failed to mention. This is true because the atomic hydrogen process without question releases at least 3.75 times the BTUs by weight (even by RQM standards), as ordinary hydrogen and oxygen produce in the combustion process. It is generally agreed that the “energy of combustion” equals at least the “energy of hydrolysis” (even though it is well known that the industrial production of hydrogen is generally 120% efficient in the so-called “water-gas” process, in which steam is shot through a white-hot graphite orifice).

Production of atomic hydrogen directly by hydrolysis, eliminating a separate dissociation operation, is yet another exciting possibility. If the 103 cal/gram dissociation energy is correct and the electrolytic energy is recovered by combustion, there is a theoretical possibility of getting a net 1,058 times the energy of input in the recombination process.

HOW DOES IT WORK?

As a “welding process”, this process was allegedly ‘obsolesced’ by MIG and TIG welding, neither of which can compare to its welding efficiency and uses. Since the welding process was its main use in the years past, the “new” processes allowed industry to toss the ‘obsolete” process onto the junk heap. The “new” processes were promoted by the establishment, motivating their suppliers and the electric power companies at their own levels. More archaic tanks, transformers, gauges, torches, electrodes, gases, fluxes, and electric power, etc., etc., to be sold at a hefty profit. If people generate their own hydrogen for welding at home, how much equipment, supplies and power will they buy? Is saving money a crime?

How does the atomic hydrogen obtain its energy, if not from the “ether” and Primary Solar Rays? No wonder establishment science doesn’t want you to know there is an ether. If we are to believe the “law of conservation of energy” as interpreted by ether-excluding establishment “science”, this process is impossible, yet using data available from the ‘standard’ texts, I have shown that the input energy of 103 cal/gram mole (or however much is required) is somehow ‘magnified’ by use of hydrogen as a ‘medium’ so that the 103 cal/gram mole ‘seed’ energy triggers the atomic hydrogen’s apprehension of a net 108,897 cal/gram mole from the Primary Solar Rays via the “ether”.

I reiterate, an equally phenomenal “atomic helium” process (reported in Space Aliens) is 4.6 times this caloric output per gram mole. What is the proportionate input? It can be conducted almost the same way, and produces the same kind of electrical energy and radiation-to-heat energy transformation, in which “mass” is only a “medium” used in the process. Similar principles are shared by the Lyne Atomic Hydrogen Furnace, as shown by my illustration at this chapter’s end, and Josef Papp’s noble gas engine[61] . If these processes used as much electrical energy as they produced, and electrical energy was the end product sought, what would be the reason for the process, right? At the comparable 30 mpg for n-Heptane, helium could produce 42.86 times as much as atomic hydrogen, or about 1285.8 miles per pound. That is, if you used the helium up, which you don’t.

According to the Van Nostrand’s Scientific Encyclopedia[62] , simple electron bombardment of helium gas in a special chamber, excites the helium atom to a temporarily radioactive isotope of extremely short half-life. In this state, the helium atom unpairs its electrons, promotes one electron to the 2s state (in which state it remains for only a very short time), and afterward releases 460,000 cal/gram mole on collapse of the excited atoms back to their ground state. This gram of gas molecules occupies only slightly more than a gram mole of atomic hydrogen. It is my belief and theory that the elements in the excited state somehow convert the energy of the Primary Solar Rays according to Tesla’s theory of radioactivity.

Since each hydrogen atom is composed of a proton and an electron, each with equal-and-opposite charge, one would expect the binding force between diatomic molecules to be very weak, but when the atoms are separated they purportedly expand greatly in size, encompassing a greater volume of ether. On recombination, the atoms shrink in volume, and according to standard theory, infrared radiation is squeezed out of the atom. The dissociation requires only 103 cal/gram mole, yet on recombination, the atoms “exothermically” yield a net 108,897 cal/gram mole. How exactly does this occur?

All space is packed solid “bumper-to-bumper” with ether. This elusive and ultra fine, absolutely transparent matter is being omnidirectionally interpenetrated by Primary Solar Rays composed of minute particles propelled at high speed by the enormous forces in stars. These particles must collide with and excite the ether held within the atomic space between the proton and the electron cloud, transferring their momentum to the ether and producing sound waves in the ether in the infrared (heat) spectrum, while the minute solar particles themselves must be absorbed by the atoms creating new mass or discarded. The increased momentum must be carried by the mono-atomic hydrogen atoms until they are opened up on release during recombination into diatomic molecules.

The facts suggested here are forbidden by relativity and quantum mechanics, in which a simple harmonic oscillator cannot have a stationary state of zero kinetic energy, because the ground state still has one-half quantum of energy and the appropriate motion, yet by relativity's 'other' rules, the principle of kinetic energy has no applicability to electromagnetic radiation. Since relativity also rejects the existence of an ether, there is nothing in so-called "empty space" to contain such radiant energy, and the atomic hydrogen process would have to create its energy from "nothing", therefore violating the law of conservation of energy, as misinterpreted by the relativists who see all energy functions as part of the 'winding down' products of an "original" BIG BANG and entrained entropy theory.

Incidentally, this same atomic hydrogen process, as first published here and now, is also the apparent source of the anomalous exothermic heat produced in aqueous cavitation, as well as in the socalled "cold fusion" process, which are two other free energy processes which I believe are versions of the atomic hydrogen process.

The atomic hydrogen atoms have single, unpaired electrons in enlarged shells. These atoms are in Mendeleev's Group I-a, and all the atoms in that group have unpaired outer electrons, and are photoreactive to and transmute when exposed to ultraviolet light, and all of them can be used to convert Primary Solar Rays into usable free energy. This photo-reactivity creates temporary, artificialradioactivity-produced isotopes of short half-life, with the emission of radiant energy. But the radioactivity is contained within the atoms. The energy for the infrared frequency ether waves comes from the Primary Solar Rays according to Tesla, not from the atoms themselves. The atoms can be analogized by certain crystals, described by the Raman Effect, in which light passing through the crystals is "stepped down" to lower frequencies. The infrared spectrum light produced by the atomic hydrogen process is thermally reactive with normal atomic and molecular matter.

The transfer of force from the Primary Solar Rays to the dissociated H_1 atoms, is apparently the kind of thing spoken of by Tesla when he stated: “There is no energy in matter other than that received from the environment.”[63]

In so-called “cold fusion”, the electrolytic cell produces “nascent hydrogen”, with the atomic hydrogen process, and the recombination of the mono-atomic hydrogen to H_2 releases overunity heat, the product claimed. My process also proves Tesla’s theory that atomic energy comes from the environment. It proves that “mass” does not even enter into the equation, and that Einstein’s “E = MC2” is wrong. Einstein’s theory says this process as I describe it could only be possible if the hydrogen were ‘annihilated’, converting its “mass” into heat, and otherwise, is impossible. But the hydrogen is still hydrogen, and Einstein was still wrong. It defies relativism and the BIG BANG.

Perhaps this or a similar process was also what Leland Anderson referred to in his eulogy of Tesla, when he mentioned his “plucking” thermal units “...right out of the thin air”. After all, the hydrogen atoms when in the H_2 molecular form are smaller, therefore “compressed”. Compression of a gas releases heat radiation, usually thought to originate with the energy endothermically absorbed during decompression, which is backward from the gas dynamics. So in this case the question is “Where did the heat come from and exactly how much does it produce?”

In the case of hydrogen, the change is effected by the natural, physical process of recombination to H_2 . According to standard theory, the molecular atoms can be ‘decompressed’ by application of “the heat of dissociation”, because the strong binding force between the atoms is supposedly weakened by an amount of exothermic energy sufficient to separate the atoms, which is exactly the amount regained when the atoms are recombined.

Hydrogen atoms have the highest charge-to-mass ratio known, a ratio which almost completely neutralizes the protons. ‘Decompression’ of the electron clouds occurs during dissociation. As the protons dissociate with application of the 103 cal/gram mole, this allows the greatly expanded electron clouds of the atoms to encompass a larger volume of space, from which a net 108,897 cal/gram mole can be extracted from the only sources available, the Primary Solar Rays and the ether. Since there is no great cooling activity in the proximate area of dissociation, the ‘heat’ can only come from a conversion of environmental radiation, else there would be the formation of ice, etc. This process, though it can be thermally set up and triggered by electrons, is not merely a thermal process, because the net energy released is converted originally from kinetic energy, while the relativists have no plausible answer.

The raw data for this process came from ordinary science books. The full magnitude and output comparable to petroleum was only obviated by conversion of weights, measures, and temperature units, to produce a consistent picture and to obtain the total net outputs. Most physicists or chemists would refuse to believe the results, even if they had calculated them themselves, and would insist that they had erred. This is indeed an inverted BIG LIE which is told very small and often. The lie consists of a denial that there is an ether, the distortion of quantum mechanics, and the exaggeration of or minimizing of other incompatible measurements, to create a false overall picture. This is then backed up by a vacuum of information in texts and other sources available to the public, created via the National Security Act, at the behest of the Fuel/Power Cartels.

APPROPRIATE USE OF THE PROCESS

With an understanding of the atomic hydrogen process, and the great magnitude of its output, what are its most immediately applicable uses?

The most direct, appropriate use of this technology appears to be to provide heat for homes, as well as for home-industrial or industrial heating purposes, or for agricultural heat production. A secondary use would be to produce heat for steam to drive turbinepowered electric generators or for motive power for cars, trucks, boats, trains and planes. This system would be excellent if coupled with refrigerant-driven, closed-loop turbo-electric generators, to provide electric power for electro-propulsive flying saucers, the ultimate in private transportation.

Since the net output is heat, the first order of business is a special heat exchanger, to transfer heat to water or other media, or to produce steam for turbine power. The heat in the reaction chamber of the atomic hydrogen furnace must be quickly removed by the exchanger to prevent a buildup of heat sufficient to melt the reactor surfaces which receive and catalyze the recombining gas atoms. The simplified design shown is merely a proposal which I presented to prospective backers without disclosing the true details.

I presented to prospective backers without disclosing the true details.

Years ago, German metallurgists used atomic hydrogen in a copper crucible, creating a “hydrogen environment” to reduce platinum group metals from their compounds. To resist the high temperatures required for the reductions, the copper crucible was cooled from below by water, which removed the heat fast enough to prevent melting of the copper, as platinum metals were melted in it with the torch from above. The occlusion of oxygen prevented oxidation of the crucible and the platinum metals, and insured reduction of the platinum compounds by the hydrogen. This idea, together with over 45 years familiarity and used of the pyrotechnology and over 34 years of welding has influenced the design of my atomic hydrogen furnace. The following is a simplified graphic showing the proposed circuitous cycle of the hydrogen atoms:

CONCLUSIONS

196,200 BTUs is a lot of energy from a pound of hydrogen. I have to pinch myself. Then repeat it many times. And this is only the tip of the iceberg.

Soon after this kind of “atomic energy” hit a small segment of the unknowing American public—the welders—in the late ‘40s, there were newspaper stories saying that the trans-Atlantic voyages of the Queen Mary could be powered by a hunk of radioactive material the size of a golf ball. They exaggerated their stories that way when the nuclear industry wanted us to get hooked and pay for it, but today’s “nuclear reactors” produce electricity at the same efficiency level as coal and gas-fired generators (38%), and we still have to deal with the inevitable problems of greater expense, entrenched, archaic, stagnant “nuclear” and fossil fuel technology, nuclear decay, waste, and probable devastation like Cernobyl.

The stumbling blocks to the use of hydrogen are actually illusions, created by the corporate-state coercive monopolists. The atomic hydrogen effect was discovered in 1912 by Langmuir, and was developed only as a “welding process” in the ‘30s. The DOE ‘scientists’ at Los Alamos said the use of hydrogen involved heavy, cumbersome cryogenic tanks and equipment, until a liquid hydride system was developed by Dr. Gerald Schafflander of California, and was pointed out by me in a letter to the New Mexican newspaper in Santa Fe, New Mexico in 1980, totally ridiculing their phony efforts in 1979. Then Schafflander and associates were prosecuted by the SEC—because the liquid hydride stored hydrogen in something like “rock salt”—which cracked out at about 70° C. (The SEC presented this as incredulous, I don’t.) DOE scientists mention only the heavier, more cumbersome, solid metallic hydride systems. Schafflander’s lighter liquid hydride system, which used solarvoltaics to generate the hydrogen, would be a wonderful way to store and deliver hydrogen for the atomic hydrogen process. Goodbye oil cartels, hello atomic hydrogen, it’s pay-back time!

By the way, the reason my “cold fusion” process (using my weird lead-based cathode) which I tested back in 1980, worked so well was because Langmuir, back in 1912, said his lead amalgam cathode produced “nascent” (atomic) hydrogen directly. Cold fusionists, throw away your palladium cathodes and get lead amalgam! Watch the price of water rise to $4.00 per gallon. After all, why should “they” allow “us” to buy a whole gallon of pure H2O “chemicals” for less, especially when a gallon is enough for a lifetime?

If the energy of hydrolysis produces approximately the same heat energy as that recovered by combustion, and dissociated hydrogen atoms can be produced directly by hydrolysis, this process with the furnace has to be free energy.

Never Give Up: Intro and part of chapter 1

I will be posting some excerpts here from my autobiography, Never Give Up, here. This is the introduction and part of Chapter 1

Introduction

I remember being told, when I was a very young child, to say the words, with other children, "Ich bin eine kinder macht zachens gut" (I am a child who does things well). I believed it then, because life really was about performing well. But now, as I am older, I realize that this was not really true. I was a child who desperately wanted to be loved.

This is an autobiography in which I describe parts of the first twelve years of my life growing up in a highly organized and extremely wealthy occultic group: the Jesuit Order. Their wealth enables them to build extremely sophisticated programming studios and laboratories, and to use and develop advanced healing and mind control technologies. This autobiography does not include all memories, of course, since that would require a library of books. Instead, I share the memories that stand out the most from these early years. It is thus a "snapshot" of various scenes I lived through as a child to show what it was like to experience these events. While in previous books, I have discussed programming more from the observer perspective, in this book, I am much more personal.

This book is not written in chronological order. The first chapter covers a few key milestones in my infancy. The remaining chapters are grouped according to topic, and cover memories from various ages within that topic. In these chapters, I often share how early trauma and training lay the foundations for later programming and training for the skill area or job discussed in that chapter.

all) writers in that genre may be actually drawing from their memories of these types of things. I am also aware that some of the events I describe can be attributed to cult members dressed in costumes in elaborate setups, the use of virtual reality, drugs and hypnosis and other forms of trickery.

However, I also believe that not all things that occur in our world can be explained this simply. I believe that there is a spiritual, or even unknowable element to some experiences, i.e., encounters with forces that defy material or rational explanation. All that I can do is to share for the record my own encounters with these beings according to how I experienced these events, alongside the memories of the more mundane and very physical events of my childhood growing up in an occult training facility.

My memories are not unique. Many survivors around the world from various cults and agencies that practice mind control have reported similar things, including the military and assassin training, the training to respond to visual codes, tones, colors and other cues; spiritual training, and being wedded to Satan. None of these training and events are unique to the Jesuit order, although methods may vary from those used in other groups.

I have heard concerns that sharing memories about programming is giving too much information, possibly providing a “blueprint” for “how to program people.” I do not agree because programming involves much more than reading how one group does things. Reading memories of how one organized group programs their members, and then being able to program others, i.e., elicit the desired behaviors and beliefs in the subject, would be similar to reading a book on quantum physics, and then being able to build a spaceship. It simply can’t be done. A lot more knowledge and skill are required to be able to program people than is described in this book. Additionally, the groups capable of conducting the kind of programming described in this book are already doing the things described here, since this is from fifty years ago and things have advanced exponentially since then.

I have written this autobiography for several reasons. One is to expose what is going on in a world that is increasingly confronting what can simply be termed as “evil”, and some of the experiences that produce people capable of this evil. I also want to validate the memories of those who have survived similar types of abuse. I describe the impacts of such abuse on a young child and over that person’s lifetime, and hope that this would be helpful not only to survivors, but also to therapists and others who support survivors. To emphasize hope and the incredible strength and capacity for humanity that survivors retain despite pervasive early abuse, I share too how I began to question and break free of the abuse and control, despite my years of indoctrination, trauma and mind-controlled, programmed obedience to the Order where I had perpetrated against others under orders.

In the book I describe several memories of the Order investing tremendous amounts of time, effort, manpower and finances on the spiritual training and spiritually-themed programming of their infants and children. Some readers may ask, “Why on earth do they go to such a great lengths to instill occult beliefs in their children?” The answer is that the Jesuit Order in its dark side completely believes in the concepts of ascension (into immortality, bliss and fulfilment) and descension (into mortality and hell). Religion is a great motivator, as seen historically and around the world, and the Jesuits are no exception. They are fervent in their beliefs in ascension and descension to a degree that would put to shame many of the most fervent believers in many faiths. They spend a great deal of time passing their beliefs on to each new generation, as my memories illustrates, and believe that children must be introduced very early to these concepts in order to fully believe and grasp such concepts. As very young children learn best through concrete experiences, they train and program children through the use of older cult members dressed up as spiritual entities, and take them through studios designed to look like locations in the spiritual realms or dimensions. They believe that without these early concrete experiences, the child when older will eventually have much greater difficulty in accessing the dimensions, and seeing, hearing and interacting with immortal beings who assist with ascension.

Finally, this is my personal story. As human beings, we each long for someone to hear our story, whether good or bad, as this is part of the processing that occurs for those who have survived extreme trauma. In a sense, this is my narrative shared with the world now, in hopes that it will accomplish some good, and provide some hope for others who long to be free.

The memories shared within these pages are the result of 35 years of working at healing. These memories did not come forward quickly, easily or painlessly. It involved many years of journaling, therapy, prayer ministry, using dolls and other toys to act out what had happened, as well as other modalities. Over time, I have gained a much better understanding of what my life was, and as a result, what I want to rest of my life to be. I want it to be free of the manipulation, the demands for performance, and the spiritual darkness that characterized my younger years. My greatest desire is to now live my life in thanksgiving to the God of the Bible, and His son, Jesus, who have forgiven me for the terrible – and painful – things I was forced to do, throughout my life.

Defining Some Terms Used in this Book

Dissociation and Programming: When a person is subjected to extreme pain to the degree that his/her mental, emotional or physical survival is threatened, that person can dissociate, i.e., create a new state of consciousness that is capable of doing anything in order to survive or stop the trauma. Emotional traumas, such as abandonment, even in the absence of physical traumas, especially by an attachment figure, can also cause dissociation. This new state of consciousness is extremely suggestible. Programmers in the cults consider this a type of tabula rasa state: in order to survive, this new state of consciousness will believe/do/feel whatever it is told to think/do/feel and is easily convinced that this compliance is what stops the abusers from abusing him/her. Common terms for these new states of consciousness include “personalities”, “parts” or “alters”. The goal of cult-controlled dissociation as described in these pages is to ‘program’ the child: (1) subject a young child to enough pain, physical or mental, or both, to create new states, (2) give them names or codes, (3) teach these new states specific beliefs, emotions and/or jobs, (4) condition these parts into continued compliance by reward and punishment. In this book, I use the term ‘parts’.

Cult host: the cult host is the part of the child raised in a cult who lives the child’s cult life, e.g., this is the part who is out in the body during rituals, meetings and lessons in the cult facilities, and so on. This part will not be amnesic to the cult activities. For me, this was the part of me that felt most substantial and most like the “real me” since most of my life was spent in cult facilities or carrying out duties for the cult in other settings.

Presenter: In the Jesuit order, these are the parts of an individual that are created to be “out”, or to present and live in the “normal world” in “ordinary families” outside the training facility. These parts are programmed to present in various countries, and will have families that host them starting at age three. Each presenter in each country will have been programmed to have its own name, personality, abilities and preferences, and to be completely amnesic to all cult activities, as well as to the activities of the other presenter parts. Despite being one set of parts, they will believe that they are the entire person, and only recall an ordinary life with no hint of any cult existence. Presenter parts are typically programmed to disbelieve, deny, or be highly distressed by any cult-related memories.

Internalize: During early childhood, we tend to internalize the things we experience and see (building a sense of reality and how the world works). Programmers take advantage of this natural developmental period to introduce parts to concrete experiences that demonstrate to the child the scenarios, people and beliefs that they want the child to internalize. For instance, if they want the child to internalize a castle, they will take the child to spend time in this castle. If they want the child to develop an internal 'castle guard', they will have a designated part spend time with a castle guard (to role model the beliefs and behaviors), then dress the part up as a castle guard and have the part act out this role. This kind of 'internalization' is common across individuals who experience early trauma, for instance, the person who realizes that they still hear their critical parents' voices inside their heads long after they have attained adulthood. Due to the dissociation, parts subject to these setups may only have experiences of the 'reality' that their programmers had them 'experience'.

Programming studio: These are large dedicated rooms or areas for programming in the cult facilities. These studios would rival the best of any Hollywood filming studio. They can be designed to look like any place that the programmers need, e.g., space ships, pyramids, underwater caverns, the city of Troy, a circus, etc. They have state-of-the-art lighting, animatronics, holograms, walls, ceiling, and floors that are screens that can display any scenario, and other audio-visual technologies to create extremely realistic experiences for the child being programmed in them. During programming scenarios, the adults and older children will put on costumes and act out the scenes (for instance, in a 'hell' scene, they may dress up as demons) that the programmers want the infants and children to learn about and eventually internalize.

Programming laboratories: Often located in the same buildings as the programming studios, these are areas dedicated to research on programming, and where children and adults receive assessments, health checkups, programming schedules and other processes that are critical to their programming. Very sophisticated equipment for programming, data collection, data management and so on is part of these labs.

The Fathers: Individuals in the Jesuit Order, both men and women, (yes, there are both sexes in the occultic side of this order, unlike the male only fathers in the public side) who have undergone the full training required and completed the coming of age ceremony at age 13 (described later in this book), are titled 'fathers'. For instance, as a child, I called my primary mentor, "Father Mattheo".

The Fathers I Loved: As the Order understands the importance of attachment and community for mind control, each child raised in the Order will be given 12 primary Fathers to be bonded to from infancy. Three of these 12 will be designed as the child's primary programmers, and the child will be conditioned to bond most strongly with these three fathers. This bonding starts in the womb, then throughout infancy and childhood. It is common for individuals in the Order to be assigned three new primary programmers as they become adults. This is to ensure that the person continues to be bonded to agents capable of controlling them as their original programmers age, and that there is no risk of losing control over that individual should their original programmers die. These new programmers are typically selected from among peers who he/she is already very close to, such as a twin, a classmate (who is as close to them as any biological sister or brother could be), or a close mentor.

Class: At the age of six, children raised in the Jesuit programming facilities are assigned to a class consisting of eleven other children their own age, to create a group of twelve for each class. There are multiple classes within each facility, and each class will have their own dormitory. These children eat together, sleep together, go to classes together, go through physical training together, and bond extremely closely to one another. The fathers tell them that they are “sisters” and “brothers”. The children consider their classmates to be sisters and brothers, emotionally, even if not genetically. Along with the fathers, these classmates comprise the child’s “family” when growing up in the facility.

Mage: The Jesuit Order is very occultic. Each child will have spiritual mentors who have achieved the status of a mage, an individual who has become extremely well versed in occultic knowledge, incantations, spells, and rituals over many years of training, intense study and testing. Mages are expected to mentor those younger than them, and to help raise up a new generation of mages. They are skilled in oral teaching, ancient languages and are often master storytellers, since much of the information is also passed down in oral form. All children are expected to become mages themselves. I use the term ‘mage’ instead of other terms for practitioners of the occult arts, such as ‘wizard’, ‘sorcerer’, ‘magician’ or ‘witch’ as this is the term that parts used when sharing their memories.

Ascended Master: This is considered by the Jesuits the highest form of spiritual achievement. These individuals are considered as close to ascension as a human being can achieve while still walking the earth.

Immortal: The Order believe that immortals are beings who are trying to help mankind ascend and become like them, and to teach them how to overcome their mortal flesh. “Overcoming the mortal flesh” includes suppressing the desires within a human being that make them flinch away from interacting with these beings, and accepting the pain and long, difficult training that the fathers believe is necessary to ascend. The Jesuit fathers utterly and completely believe in these immortals, and in the theology of ascension and descension.

Demon: I believe that the immortals and other spiritual beings described in this book are actually demons, or what the Bible describes as fallen angels. These beings were formerly filled with glory and were in the presence of the true God of the Bible. However, the one named Lucifer (now known as “Satan”) chose to rebel against the loving creator of the universe, due to pride (he wanted to be as God). In his rebellion, the Bible says that one third of the angels followed Lucifer and became fallen angels, or demons are they are commonly known. Demons can also refer in some theologies to the souls of individuals or Nephilim who are wandering the earth. In my book, I am not referring to this interpretation, but instead, to the “fallen angel” definition. While I believe that both angels and demons are real, as the memories in this book make clear, some of the “demons” I encountered in childhood were actually older children or adults in costumes. Also, I had many parts who were programed to believe they were demons. This is extremely common in ritual abuse and mind control groups. These parts are usually very young children. These parts, when they came out, would growl, threaten, and act very convincingly according to how people believe demons would act. In reality, however, they were frightened little children who had been given a difficult role to play inside, whether as a punisher, a guardian, or other jobs.

Chapter 1: Infancy

One of my first memories is of looking at the light sifting in through an outside window. I am an infant, and am being held, and allowed to look outside for a brief moment. I am old enough to hold my head up and body straight, as I peer longingly at the outside world, at the soft greens, browns and blues of grass, earth and sky. I wonder if even then, I was longing to be free from the facility that was almost my whole world the first three years of life.

I was conceived in a genetics laboratory in Switzerland, the product of “state of the art” genetic manipulation. I was a “generation 3” baby in the Order, from one of the batches of genetically designed babies that were ‘benefiting’ from their latest round – the third one – of genetic knowledge, including the ability to isolate genes for intelligence, strength, and quick healing. I know this from looking later in life at my own records, once I had clearance at the cult facility as a trainer myself. As an adult in the Order, I also read my own records of the programming done to me while in utero, but I have no conscious memories of the programming; only vague, inchoate feelings of rage, sadness, joy, love and rejection, and feeling very disturbed at the thought of what these feelings could mean.

All I can really be sure of is that as a fetus, my life was unpleasant and manipulated, a mixture of reward and punishment, to prepare me for what was to come when I was born. What was distressingly omitted was something I had never known, but instinctively craved: real love without conditions. It was to become a deep longing throughout my life. Later in life, after I left the Order, during my healing journey I met fetal parts from the prenatal period of my life. These fetal parts had not only their original memories, but had also been programmed throughout my lifespan. This made their memories a mix of primal fetal rage, fear, and pain due to early traumas, and the meaning their programmers gave these memories.

My next conscious memory, a brief flash, is of being held lovingly by a woman who is rocking me in a chair, while she nurses me at her breast. The room is white; the woman is dressed in white, and she is singing me a song about how the best and bravest do great things for the Order, smiling tenderly at me the whole time. I am content, and love her, this woman who is one of my primary trainers, as she soothes me after a programming session that I no longer remember, or want to remember, wanting simply to experience being held and loved for this point in time. There is no other type of love available, so like a sponge, I soak it up.

Another memory flash: men in white lab coats come through the nursery, checking each infant. I am in a metal crib with bars, and want to get out, but I am still too young to try. But even then, the thought of escape, while unattainable then, simmers in the back of my mind. The problem is that it is getting fuzzier, a bit harder each day, to know exactly what it is that I want to escape, but even during rest, I feel deep within that something is very wrong here, something that I need to get away from, regardless of the soothing words and loving pats on the back.

I want to note here that early trainers are both male and female, and in the facility that I was raised in, female trainers often nursed young infants as part of the bonding, and also to comfort them after stressful training sessions. The trainers were sometimes given injections of hormones to lactate if they were not actively lactating. The Jesuit fathers were well aware of the importance of attachment in development, and in programming. The fathers who programmed me were dissociative as well; there was a tradition of abuse that created dissociation for many centuries in the Order. The love and nurturing they showed was real; it was not “fake”, but it was still manipulative, because they were not free to love the way that I believe many of them longed to. They were all slaves to fear – the fear of disobeying Satan – and this fear made them unable to love in a truly free or healthy manner. What they did instead was to pour out the love within them in the carefully prescribed ways that were permitted, such as when holding and nursing the babies. When I was older, this was one of the ways I was allowed to be tender, and I loved cuddling and holding the babies. Even in this terribly abusive environment, the members of our group found ways to express love whenever we could.

Josef Mengele's Cruelty

I am in the infant nursery at some point later in time. There are dozens of us infants in this room. We are in little metal cribs with metal rails, on mattresses with white sheets. We all wear little white soft long shirts and linen diapers, and can see each other through the bars of our cribs, or when we pull ourselves up to stand and peek over. Today, one of the other babies in the nursery is pulling himself up, and is energetically trying to climb over the raised rail of his crib. Interested, I pull myself upright, using the rail of my crib, to get a better view of what he is doing. He tries to climb over, drops back, then keeps trying, until finally, he falls right over onto the white tiled floor with a "thump!"

All of us other babies stare, and wonder if we can do the same; it looks like fun! The baby who escaped happily crawls around to the other cribs, as if urging us to join him. He seems to act a bit triumphant and proud of himself. Then, he crawls towards the main door to the nursery, which seems to be the way out since that is where all the trainers go through when they leave. Suddenly, footsteps are heard, the door swings open, and an enraged Mengele comes stomping into the nursery. His glasses and hair are quivering with rage.

He yanks the little boy baby on the floor up by one arm, and takes him over to a large wooden table in the middle of the room. He takes a large steel cleaver off a nearby table, and suddenly he chops the infant's hands off on the table top, with loud "thunks". All of us other infants stare at this scene with wide eyes of horror. We are silent, too terrified to even scream. Then, Mengele takes the little boy baby, and hangs him upside down from a hook in the middle of the nursery, to bleed to death in front of us all. The blood drips down, and the terrified baby screams as his white shirt turns scarlet, until finally, his cries slowly stop as the life ebbs out of him in spurts.

During this act of dying, Mengele glares at the rest of us infants, and screams in German, "This is what happens to "bad babies" who don't obey or try to get away!" Terrified at what I have just witnessed, shaking inside, I decide then not to try to crawl out of my crib, regardless of how wrong things feel in this place. I decide to bury these feelings of wanting to escape deep inside, because I very much want to live. Being the object of Mengele's anger is a very, very bad situation to be in, and I try to conform to what he wants as best as I can, even at this young age.

Mengele could be unutterably cruel, as this scene demonstrates. In our facility in Italy, he was the top trainer, due to the large amount of new programming information that he developed during the war years. This is why in occult groups, he is at times referred to as "the father of modern programming." He discovered that fetuses and very young infants could be programmed, and that in fact, programming done at these impressionable ages when the brain is developing rapidly, is less likely to break down later in life.

Being raised in a cult facility just north of Rome, Italy, the memories I share in this section are some of my earliest ones. I have other memories of Mengele, who I believe, along with Hilde, his blond, blue-eyed assistant, were both dissociative. I believe that they were products of the extreme and cruel programming methods of the early 1900s, when attachment was less understood, and sociopathic personalities were more likely to develop. As far as I know, Hilde, who was raised with him and endured the horrors of their childhood together with him, was the only human being that he trusted, although he did obey orders from those who paid him to program their children, both in Italy and other countries.

Mengele and Hilde were two of my infant trainers, but not my only ones (thank goodness!). I shudder to think of what kind of human being I would have grown up to be if I had not also experienced the kindness at times from the Jesuit fathers who were my primary attachments.

Survival of the Fittest

Mengele liked to use 'survival of the fittest' setups to cull out the weakest babies, and ensure that only the fastest, strongest, most intelligent babies were kept. Fortunately, due to the large numbers of babies that died, this setup was phased out quickly in the Order after his death. By then, I was an adult, and my influence as a trainer, along with that of Mattie, another top trainer, caused this change. We argued successfully that this method was needless, since there were other ways of assessing these qualities. We were also concerned about the long-term impact on the Order's unity, longevity and prosperity, if all our members believed deep in their unconscious minds that their peers were competitors for basic needs, and that the only way for them to survive was for their peers to die.

I can crawl, quickly, now that I am four months old, with soft curly brown hair starting to grow that matches the color of my brown eyes. I am athletic and fast, and perform well in the physical assessments. Today, I am in a small cage with bars. I can see two dozen other similar cages in the room, each containing a baby. I am hungry and thirsty, since I have not been fed for several hours. In the middle of the room are three bottles with formula. I look hungrily at them, I want one! Suddenly, the doors to all of the cages lift simultaneously, and a baby race is on. We all crawl as fast as we can to get to the bottles in the middle of the room.

I, and two of the other fastest babies get there first. Breathing hard, I grab a bottle and start drinking the life-giving, nourishing formula. But two other babies are trying to grab the bottle away from me, they are hungry too. There is a fist grabbing for the bottle, and another baby is climbing onto my back. I have to fight them off, kicking, biting, twisting and turning my back on them, all the while trying to drink the formula as quickly as possible. I am able to successfully keep my bottle and fend off the other hungry babies, using my strong, chubby little legs to kick some away, and get enough formula in me to allay my hunger – and to survive. After a few days of this scenario, the weakest babies are crawling extremely slowly, and I, along with two other of the strongest babies are able to drink a full bottle with barely any resistance from the others.

Mengele walks into the room and picks one of the babies up who is drinking formula, cuddles him, and praises us three, looking at us with a smile. "You are good babies, strong and smart," he tells us. He then goes around the room, and one by one, he hangs a baby from a hook through its gut, in the middle of the room. "This was a weak baby," he says derisively. "This baby didn't try hard enough." He hangs others of the "weak" babies from hooks, and horrified, we three survivors watch. I realize deeply that, in order to survive, I must perform well. Surviving means performing well for Mengele, and I learn quickly to be fast and smart – to find the best way to do something. I don't want to end up on a hook, hanging in the middle of a room.

I am a toddler, several months later, and I hate Mengele, on whom my survival depends. Once again, I am in a cage in a room, with doors that can rise. Next to me is another toddler my age, a little girl. I smile at her, and she smiles at me. In the middle of the room is some food and water, and I already know what will happen.

Suddenly, the doors to our cages lift, and we all run to the middle, trying to fight off each other in a melee that includes mashed faces from tiny fists, kicking, and grabbing. I grab some food, which I eat quickly, grab a drink, and return to my cage.

This happens for two more days, but on this third day, I notice that the little girl in the cage next to me is weakening. I am starting to notice others more at this age, and seeing her look this way bothers me – a lot. When the doors lift, I race to the middle, grab some food, eat a quick bite, then return back to my cage. I then offer some of the food in my little fist to this other toddler. She smiles gratefully at me, but doesn't seem to want to eat; I wonder why, since I was extremely hungry before I ate some of the food. I go over to her cage, and try to put it in her mouth, but she doesn't eat, to my huge distress. I realize now as an adult that she was probably dehydrated and too weak to eat. "Eat, eat, eat" I tell her over and over, but even when I try to put the food in her mouth, she just closes her eyes and falls asleep.

The next morning, she dies and is taken away. As I watch her body being carried out, I cry silently, hiding my tears from Mengele, who would have punished this type of weakness. Fortunately, the fathers were more understanding, and disagreed at times with his methods.

That night, Mattheo, the father I love most of all, notices that I am upset. In my high-pitched little toddler voice, I sob and tell him about the other little girl.

"I am glad that you cared," he says. "But even more glad that you lived. There simply wasn't enough food for all of the babies." While he is trying to promote my acceptance, I can see in his eyes that he is sad and disturbed, too.

"I wanted to share, but she wouldn't eat," I say, crying.

"She was too weak to eat," he says. "But it was good of you to try. And very smart of you to try to find a way to help her."

Mattheo is a rising leader in the Order, and I am glad that he understands. In a few more years, he will be one of the fathers who initiates stopping these survival exercises, with the support of the younger trainers. I love Mattheo and the other fathers, and trust him more than I trust Mengele. But Mengele will never, ever suspect how I feel, because I want to survive, and Mattheo has made it clear that he wants me to live, too.

Many of the infants programmed by Mengele and other trainers in this type of scenario struggled with issues around food all of their lives. When adults, later in life, they hoard food, or gain weight, or become anorexic. Even as a young child, when hosted in my American presentation, I would sneak food and hide it under my pillow. My family teased me relentlessly about this habit, but allowed it, perhaps sensing the deep psychological need to do so.

Mattheo and the other fathers argued successfully to discontinue these methods for several reasons. One was seeing disturbances related to food in the children that survived. But another was that this programming promoted survival at the expense of others, while the Jesuits wanted their leaders to think of the good of all, when leading teams on missions; they wanted to promote a cohesive working together and bonding with each other that is part of life in the order, and this training went against it. Later generations – those after G7 in the Jesuit Order- would not have to undergo these extreme setups.

Sexual Training

I am just a few weeks old. One of the fathers I love, Father Jerome (who is also a primary trainer) comes into the nursery and stands over my crib. He looks at me lovingly, then takes my diaper off, and rubs me gently with his hand between my legs. It feels nice, but also odd; I feel confused. He continues for a while, and then puts his mouth between my legs.

This happens daily, as part of my early sexual training. I have never known anything else. When these things happen, I am called “Amis”. At first, all is gentle and kind, and I learn to accept it as part of being loved by my trainers, as part of the daily routine. After all, this doesn’t hurt, unlike some of the other things they do to me.

But after a few weeks, Father Carlotti, another primary trainer comes in. He has a special object in his hand; it is round, small, and not too hard, and he lubricates it and gently inserts it into my rectum. It is uncomfortable, and I wiggle and make a noise of dislike (I have learned not to cry and tantrum in rage already), but he makes a hand signal that means “Be still”. The halt and be still commands are among the very first commands I have learned since birth, and so I go limp, as taught, and allow him to continue. After a few seconds more, he stops, and then picks me up and praises me. He tells me, “Amis, what a good baby you are!” with genuine love in his voice, looking me in the eyes with his beautiful amber brown eyes. I wiggle in delight; I have performed well, and he is happy with me, that is all that matters. I am learning that when asked to do things that hurt or make me feel sick inside, I must endure them for the ultimate reward afterwards: love and affection. Father Carlotti holds me against his strong, warm chest for a while, then takes me to one of the female fathers to be nursed.

I have already learned that when I don’t perform as asked, I will be punished with even more pain, such as being held upside down by my legs, and whipped with a small but very painful whip. I prefer hugs and praise, so I do what I am asked to do, almost always. I am considered “programmable” and not “difficult” or “resistant” as some babies are, as I learn about when I am older and hear the fathers discussing different babies in the nurseries, categorizing this among other qualities. I also learn when allowed to watch the fathers as an older child that babies who are considered not “programmable” or “too difficult” get slated to be the infant or toddler that dies in various scenarios. But at this young age, I still don’t know these things. I work hard to gain the smile and affection from the fathers, which is what they want – for me to perform in order to earn their love and approval.

I am five months old, a vigorous, healthy, happy, active baby. I can already sit up and crawl, and am practicing standing up. I also am able to speak some very simple two-word phrases, and understand my trainers when they speak with me. Father Mattheo, the father I love most of all, comes to my crib. He has some equipment that he hooks me up to, and inwardly I flinch, although outwardly I smile. This is equipment to shock me with, and I am already familiar with it.

He then calls out Amis, and some of the parts that she oversees inside, including Charté, a part that has been previously split from her. As he sexually stimulates Charté with his finger, he also applies mild, but painful, shock at the same time. I have learned not to flinch away from shocks, although internally I am upset at the pairing of what I have associated with “love” with this new pain. I can’t help myself; salty tears run down my cheeks, but I don’t flail or try to get away.

Mattheo continues doing this for five minutes, telling Charté over and over, “Love is pain. Love is pain. You love pain, it shows love.” Afterwards, he stops the shocks, and holds her tenderly, saying, “You are a good baby, and I love you.” Charté , while still upset, is glad that this was not a punishment, as shocks can be. He then looks into her young baby eyes, and says, “You must learn to do this. I know it is difficult, and it makes you feel angry, but this is important, and what you are learning is very, very important. I am not doing this to you to punish you, but because I love you. Charté, you are very special for learning to do this and will be able to do great things for me and the other fathers if you learn this.” He, and the other fathers, always acknowledge the discomfort and understand the feelings, and discussing them with me and the other parts, even as infants.

Charté is learning to enjoy sadomasochistic sex, and to associate it with feelings of love, arousal, and feeling special and important. Later, she will be dissociated and reorganized into other parts who have only known these feelings, and she will oversee them as a sub-controller within Amis’s system. These skills will be used when I am older to help me do missions with individuals who prefer this type of sex, including gathering intelligence or gaining favors. These skills, learned so young, will also help me to survive the extremely painful sexual acts that I will have to endure in some of the homes of the very wealthy around the world. In the order, they do not call us “trafficked”, but “skilled”; and our being sent out for various forms of sexual abuse from earliest childhood are considered “missions” for the order.

But deep inside, I feel violated and angry. This is abuse, and my little baby heart and mind know it, even though all of the adults around me treat this as normal, and model it in their own lives. I have learned to hide my anger, but it is there, simmering deep inside. While I love the fathers who rock me, hold me, nurse me and love me, I also hate them with a deep, white-hot hatred.

One thing that the scene above illustrates is that even in infancy, the Jesuit programmers acknowledged how their abuse made me feel. They could tell, by my reactions, the look in my eyes. But then they normalized it within a framework of something that must be done in order to successfully complete missions, as necessary to show my love for them. The Jesuit fathers were masters at manipulating my infant need to attach and maintain a loving bond with them and used it to get me to accept their abuse. The Jesuit programmers understood that a child – even an infant – will do much more for love than in response to any amount of torture, and used this knowledge on me and the other infants I grew up with, just as it was used against them, continuing the cycle of abuse and its normalization generation after generation.

During my own healing, it was a struggle for Amis, Charté and other parts to realize that they had even been abused, since this was “love” to them, the only love they had ever known. They wondered what all the fuss was about when they wanted to continue their activities, even after I left the group, and became aware of their activities and wants that put us in extreme danger. I was quite surprised when Charté came out early in my healing journey, offering to sit on my therapist’s lap and give him rough sex; I was also saddened realizing that she had been pushed out by another part inside who wanted to disrupt and distract from what I had been talking about with this therapist. Talking to these parts using logic didn’t help. Holding them inside, spending time with them, and showing them other forms of love and experiences that were not sexual helped more.

Thank you so much for sharing this here, Svali. I realised last year, age 50, that I had survived ritual abuse in my childhood and so I am just at the beginning of my journey of reclamation.

It surprises me that the fathers were willing to congratulate you for showing your humanity by offering food to the other girl. I appreciate seeing that glimmer of humanity in your portrait of them. The inhumane things that they did to you and other children make it easy to label them monsters. The subtlety in your description clearly demonstrates the complexity of human interactions, behaviour and relationship.

I also appreciate the way you highlight their obsession with the polarity of ascension/descension and the veneration of ascended masters. It seems almost ridiculous that they are so obsessed with ascension and yet they fail to see the simplicity of listening to the wisdom of the heart. So focused on up/down and an unwillingness to go within.

Thank you again for sharing and being willing to speak out. 🙏

I will be posting some excerpts from my autobiography, part 1, Never Give Up here. Below is more of Chapter 1.

Bonding to the Fathers

As an infant, each day was broken up into programming, training, comfort, rest, play times and attachment/bonding time on a strictly regimented schedule in the facility nursery. The fathers in the order were experts in child development and were careful to balance training (which was gentle, and filled with praise very early on, with only mild punishments if any for inability to perform in the early weeks) with nurture. They realized that if a child was not given enough nurture, they could develop psychopathic tendencies, would be less controllable (since love is the greatest motivator), and would show other pathologies in psychological or physical development. They knew this because of the failed programming methods used in the early 1900s, when the children were not given enough nurturing and failed to attach to a loving adult caregiver: many had to be "put down" later as they developed severe psychopathic tendencies, to the point of killing the trainers that they did not love, without a twinge of regret.

Oh, how carefully the fathers monitored and doled out "love" to us infants, and we came to look expectantly for that special time each day with the "fathers we loved". Each infant had three primary fathers they bonded with, along with nine others who were also important to their emotional development and training. I loved three special fathers the most: Father Mattheo, Father Jerome, and Father Carlotti. I was also very closely bonded to Father John, an older female trainer, and Father Daniel, bonded to only one individual and that individual died, the baby or child would be at a huge risk for failure to thrive, or would be basically un-programmable. They learned this, also, from the failures of the early 1900s, when some children bonded to only one primary trainer, who died. Data was collected on these children, and they kept it in their huge library of training materials and information, as well as coded into a huge computer database that could be accessed with a simple series of codes and voice commands for those authorized to do so.

So I, and the other infants I was raised with, bonded to the fathers we loved. But the fathers I loved also tortured me and the other babies. Infancy and childhood was a strange mix of torture and being held and rocked lovingly; being nursed by the same individual who later sexually abused me.

I am just a few months old, and angry about the pain the fathers inflict upon me. I feel sullen. While I have been trained to look up and smile when the fathers come into the nursery, today, I turn away. I turn my back on these men and women who bring me daily pain. It is Father Carlotti who comes by my crib, and sees my angry turning away.

“You cannot act this way,” he tells me curtly in Italian. “You are being a bad baby to act this way, and must be punished.”

He then goes and gets a couple of wrist holders and straps. He places the wrist holders around my chubby wrists, and then as punishment hangs me by my arms from the side of my crib. This hurts terribly, I feel as if my small arms which do not yet have the muscles and ligaments to take this, are being wrenched out of their sockets. The muscles burn as they are stretched. My arms do pull out of their sockets and I scream in pain.

Carlotti repeats, “This is what happens to bad babies who turn away, and don’t turn and hold their arms up.” He holds me with one hand, releasing my wrists with his other, and assesses me for the extent of the physical damage. He takes me to a healing room, and uses technology to put the arms back into their shoulder sockets, and to heal the joints and ligaments that have been so painfully stretched.

“Don’t do this again,” he warns. I don’t.

I came to hate and fear that phrase, “bad baby”, used by Mengele and the fathers, as something to avoid at all costs. “Bad babies” cried, turned away from, and kicked at their programmers, and did not greet them with an unfailing smile. “Bad babies” were allowed one or two chances, but after that,” bad babies” were hung on hooks from the nursery ceiling until they died, or were seen in “hell” later that day, being whipped to death by “demons” (children in costumes). We all learned to be “good babies”: compliant and programmable, and never to show how we really felt about how we were being treated. We were taught to send that anger down into an “anger pit” filled with anger-holding parts inside; this rage would then be directed at other objects, such as Christians, outsiders, and most importantly, ourselves.

This inability to show my feelings at the person who caused them fostered intense dissociation which the fathers had already carefully conditioned me to rely on while in the womb and during the early weeks after birth. I already had the structure in place to ‘dissociate away’ into designated parts the angry feelings out of my fear of punishment for “bad babies” and to focus on performing well and being a “good baby”.

In the memory above, I also mention the healing rooms. The programming facility had state-of-the-art healing technologies that even over sixty years ago were far ahead of what is commercially available to healthcare providers currently. There were vats filled with saline and electrolyte/mineral solutions of various types, with various types of frequencies to promote healing, and even artificial skin that when lit with a red light would help new skin to grow rapidly. Because of the ongoing, physical abuse, these technologies were necessary to prevent permanent scarring or disability for the children being programmed, as well as older children and adults who might come back injured from dangerous or strenuous missions, or who might be accidentally injured during training and military exercises.

The Drawer

I am a few months old, and I am upset. Father Jerome is taking out the wires and electrodes that I have come to hate; wires and electrodes that cause sharp, biting pain with the electric shocks that they conduct. I don't want this! When he tries to put the electrodes on me, I kick and squirm and wiggle away, struggling to avoid these stinging wires being placed on me.

"This type of behavior can't be allowed. Be still!" he commands sternly.

But I am not still. I disobey him, for I am still very small, and do not know yet what can be done to ensure compliance. His command instills less fear in me than the fear that the memory of shocks that sting like bees, shocks that cause terrible, burning pain. I don't want to be hurt, so I continue to resist, arching my back in protest and screaming.

Father Jerome stops, then takes a key hanging around his neck, and with it, opens a small drawer. This drawer has padding on the bottom and sides. He picks me up, saying, "You will experience utter darkness, the hell reserved for disobedience such as this." He then places me into the drawer, and slides it shut it with a loud "click".

It is utterly dark and soundless in this drawer. I can breathe, but there is no light, no noise, nothing. It is quiet, and I am afraid. I wait to see what will happen.

Time passes, and I am frightened and hungry. I cry and cry with ever louder wails, but no one hears. My diaper is wet and filled with stool, and I am afraid. No one can see or hear me in this place; no one is there to take care of me. I am a little baby, and I know that I will die if no one takes care of me. I depend on the adults around me for everything. And now, there is…nothing. Just black darkness. I am terrified.

Time passes, where I alternate between loud screams of terror, and soft whimpers. Finally, I am too exhausted to cry any longer. I fall asleep.

I am very sleepy; maybe I will never wake up. I am starting to feel very far away and strange, as if my body is getting smaller and further away. Maybe this is what dying is like. It feels like a long time has passed, and I am resigned to being here forever, and dying.

Suddenly, I hear the drawer slide open. There is a light, much too bright for my eyes which have been in complete darkness for so long, even though it is just the dim light that is on in the nursery at night.

Father Jerome is there, and I am frantic, desperate for him to take me out of this terrible, terrible box. "Will you obey me now?" he asks, looking me in the eyes. He sees the terror and pleading in them, and lifts me out of the box of terror, of abandonment.

He holds me for awhile, close to his chest, then gives me part of a bottle. I drink, but keep looking at his eyes the whole times, frantic for him to respond to my frantic terror and need for him to not leave me alone. Later, he takes me into a white room with a rocking chair, and rocks me for a period of time. Finally, I relax and rest awhile.

The next morning, Father Jerome returns, comes to my crib, and tries to put the electrodes on me. I do not struggle or resist this time.

These drawers are reserved as punishment for resisting being programmed, and being placed in one was one of the cruelest tortures that I experienced as an infant. The sense of utter abandonment and terror was overwhelming, but it also ensured compliance in an infant that comes to realize that emotional survival depends upon obedience to what the trainers demand, no matter how difficult.

Learning to Crawl Towards Colored Lights

I am a baby, able to crawl but not able to do much else, yet. After all, I am only three months old. I am on the smooth floor of one of the programming labs. I have been told to wait. Suddenly, I hear six notes played in a specific sequence. Simultaneously, a code is flashed in front of me on a large overhead screen: it is a black and white pattern in a specific configuration meant to bring out a specific part. I have already learned to bring the correct parts out when different tones and patterns are shown to me during the previous first few weeks of life, and have become quite good at it, to the pleased smiles and “good girl!” comments from the fathers I love. This ability to make them so happy makes me coo and wiggle with joy.

Now, a part loyal to the Jesuit Order is out, and a green light, about the size of a traffic light, shines down the smooth tunnel I am crawling through as I crawl towards this light. The tunnel is bathed in the green light, as Cerachnid-1, a cult-loyal presenter, is learning that green is her color, just as the tone sequence and pattern are hers. This task is fun, and when Cerachnid reaches the light, she is given a piece of soft fruit as a special treat by Father Jerome, a man in his early 20s who already has white hair that looks beautiful with his clear blue eyes.

“Cerachnid, you did well,” he tells her. Jerome then picks me up in his strong arms and cuddles me against the soft folds of his lab uniform. “Cerachnid, you are so special for being able to do this,” he says, and Cerachnid wiggles with delight at the praise in his voice. “I love you,” Jerome tells her. “I am glad that you had fun doing this.” During this early part of training, there are lots of rewards and hugs when Cerachnid and other parts perform well, doing simple tasks such as recognizing cues to come out; recognizing their special colors, and obeying the trainers.

Punishments will come later on after this first, primary belief is instilled deeply: obedience to cues brings feelings of love, security, joy, and is even “fun”.

It is a month later. Cerachnid has been performing very well, but now something very important happens to her. Cerachnid undergoes extremely severe pain, being told ahead what will happen. The fathers always tell parts when pain is going to happen, they never hide this fact.

Cerachnid cannot endure this pain, and her mind starts dissociating from it, creating new little babies from herself. These new parts are quickly given names as each comes out; a code specific to them is flashed on the screen above her, and these new cult loyal parts split from Cerachnid become the system parts that she will oversee and eventually learn to control.

“You must keep these parts safe, Cerachnid,” Father Jerome tells her. She understands what “safe” means; it means making sure that they obey and believe everything they are told. Her job is make sure that they obey and believe; this is the only “safe” that she and others inside have experienced.

Cerachnid will eventually learn to forget that these other parts originally came from her, and instead, will see herself as protecting them from “further harm” (going through the agonizing pain, pain that made her feel as if she was dying, of her original splitting memory). She is told that she can only keep them “safe” by ensuring that they are always “good” by being obedient to programming cues and commands. Her desire to protect these parts dissociated from herself from experiencing further pain and trauma actually reflects the deep, instinctive self-love that all babies have for themselves, which the programmers are counting upon as they cause her and other primary controller parts to dissociate and then re-organize into subsidiary, system parts.

It is several weeks later, and I am four and a half months old. Cerachnid is taken to a special room in the programming lab. There is a huge tree pattern laid out on the floor, with a trunk, roots, branches and leaves. She has already met “Gnossis” (the tree of knowledge), a woman dressed in a tree costume, who visited her crib numerous times over the past few months, and explained to her who she is. Cerachnid now sees the face of this woman embedded in the center of the tree, inlaid with the bark, and wiggles with recognition.

“Cerachnid, it is time for you to learn where you live on the tree,” the soft, beautiful voice says. “Come to your place.” At that moment, a special pattern (Cerachnid’s code), a small green light and the musical sequence play on a specific branch, close to the trunk. Cerachnid is guided by the trainer to this spot, and she sits.

“This is where you will live,” says the soft voice of the tree. “This is your special place where you can feel safe; if you leave your special place, you and those you protect and help – your system – will be unsafe”. The trainer then comes and hugs Cerachnid, and gives her a soft, sweet rusk to suck on. They spend time in peaceful activity, while one limb of the tree slowly strokes Cerachnid’s back and the trainer murmurs loving words to her. After a few minutes, the trainer calls out another part whose job is to not remember the programming session, Cerachnid goes back in, and the trainer picks me up and carries me out of the lab. I have no memory of what happened inside the lab; only Cerachnid will remember learning her place on the tree.

This gentle, loving scene is repeated numerous times over the next few weeks for Cerachnid and other system controllers, until each one understands their “place” on the tree; my system controllers are major branches, with their system parts the outlying twigs, and programs (leaves) that branch out from them.

It is not until this program, and the deep feeling of love and safety for going to the correct place on the tree, and remaining there, is instilled, that the punishments for leaving the designated place or disobedience are installed. For the rest of her life, Cerachnid will always seek to return to that initial sense of peace, safety and being loved that underpinned her programming. And for her, this means complete, unquestioning obedience and belief in what her trainers tell her.

The above memory illustrates how the Jesuit trainers use a combination of concrete, physical structures and activities for their training of infants and young children, combined with rewards and punishments to ensure that expected behaviors will be instilled. But this, like all programming, will often rest upon an earlier, primary memory, of a time when the controller was loved and felt safe; in essence, a "resting place" that the controller will always try to return to whenever possible. The trainers provide a framework for the only way this feeling of security and attachment can be attained: being programmable, and obedient to the programs being installed by the trainers.

Also, to Jo, Ellen, Barbara, Heather, Dick, Travis, Hoji, C. D., and many others who have been part of my journey out. Without you, it would not have been possible. I appreciate you so much. The LORD knows the cost and the joy you have experienced when helping survivors, and the crown in heaven awaiting each of you.

Also, to the One who has made my journey out of the cult possible and given me the courage to share the things written within these pages: the true Jesus Christ. I have failed Him many times, as these pages reveal, but He never, ever gave up on me. This book is a testimony to His goodness and mercy throughout my life.

About the Author

Introduction

In part two of my autobiography, The Struggle, I describe my life from 13 - 43 years old as a member of a highly organized and extremely wealthy occultic group: the Jesuit Order. This follows on the book Never Give Up where I write about my experiences in the Order from conception until age 14. Never Give Up, as part one of my autobiography, contains descriptions of how they subject infants and young children to extremely sophisticated and high-tech trauma-based mind control programming alongside spiritual manipulation and deep social bonding to raise members who are competent, loyal and obedient. My memories in this book will demonstrate how the early childhood programming, and spiritual and social control continued to impact me in my teen and adult years, causing me to continue carrying out the Order's agendas despite how repugnant they were to me.

I call this book The Struggle because of the conflicts that ensued between my own humanity and the inhumane agendas of the Order, which is directly controlled by Satan. In several chapters, I describe the two times during this period of my life in which I attempted to get free even after years of indoctrination, abuse and forced perpetration. In spite of being re-accessed and re-programmed several times during my teen and adult years, they could never truly take away my innate yearning to be free. My hope is that by sharing this struggle, I can show that survivors retain incredible strength and capacity for humanity and liberty. I believe this is true of all human beings – no matter how much torture, exploitation and forced perpetration a person has experienced, nothing can really erase the desire to be free. It may become 'hidden', 'buried' or 'forgotten', but the desire for freedom will always remain in that person's heart.

Being able to share these memories is the result of 35 years of ongoing healing work, involving journaling, collaging, therapy, prayer ministry, EMDR, and other modalities. Many of my memories are extremely brutal but not unique. Survivors around the world have reported similar things, including: the manipulation of attachment needs; being impregnated at a very young age then being forced to kill the newborn; the military and assassin training; science and scholarship training; human experiments; sex trafficking; racist, antisemitic and/or globalist agendas; high tech programming and horrendous punishment for the slightest 'disloyalty'. Nothing described in my books are exclusive to any single government or occult group that practices trauma-based mind control, although specific methods and ages at which events occur may vary between groups.

Like in the previous book, I narrate my experiences through the first-person perspectives of various parts in my system[1], mainly:

- Luke (Lucient), also called Luce by those closest to me, my Jesuit 'cult presenter' or 'cult host' who fronted in the occultic side of life in the Order. Her memories are of growing up in the Order's facilities and of carrying out a diverse range of jobs such as participating in rituals, programming, mind control technology research, assassinations, intelligence gathering, infiltration of other organizations, training the children of the Order in academic and practical skills, and other tasks.
- Ana (Anagram), my Illuminati 'cult presenter' who fronted on the occultic side of life in the Illuminati. Her memories initially only reflected that of a person who was raised and programmed by the Illuminati; she had no memories of actually being a member of the Jesuit Order until several years after starting the healing journey. Ana's main job as an adult in the Illuminati was as a programmer, and she was also an oracle during her teen years.

- Elsa (pseudonym), my 'American presenter' who fronted in my ordinary, non-occultic side of life in America. Elsa grew up with complete amnesia to her Illuminati and Jesuit experiences, and the experiences of the other presenters who lived in other countries. She started to recall that she was an active member of the Illuminati in 1996. Her recall of Jesuit memories began in 2009. My early writings as svali reflects Elsa's and Ana's perspectives and memories.
- Other national 'presenters' who fronted as ordinary, non-cult people in various countries: Jean (France), Misha (Israel), Trixie (UK), Trina (Amsterdam), Trudi (Germany), and Gina (Italy). Like Elsa, each one of these presenters was programmed to have complete amnesia to each other and the cult world. Each presenter also was programmed to have a distinct personality and cover story, and to believe that she was the only person occupying the mind and body.

The memories in this book can be grouped into three main categories: memories of 'cult jobs' such as assassinations and conducting rituals; memories of my lives as 'ordinary, non-cult' individuals in various countries; and memories of trying to get free from the Order and the Illuminati. I share these particular memories for several reasons. One is to expose the evil, and to explain how people are coerced and conditioned into perpetuating this evil generation after generation. Another is to validate survivors who have similar memories, and to help therapists and other supporters to understand how early mind control and programming impacts a person over their lifetime. Most importantly, I share the many mistakes I made on the journey to get free, in hope that others could avoid these mistakes and also be encouraged to keep going, no matter what mistakes they might make. Getting free does not depend upon never making mistakes; for me, it involved continuing trying in spite of them.

My journey of getting free is inextricably intertwined with my Christian faith. I therefore have included several chapters where I describe how the Order and the Illuminati went to extraordinary lengths to force me to recant my faith, and 'prove' to them that I had genuinely and permanently rejected Jesus. I also share how God has been healing these experiences and their aftermath. I share these memories to highlight that these events do not make God condemn the survivor, and that He desires to bring comfort to anyone who has been through such horrors. Over and over again, I have found that God can deal with the guilt, shame, confused rage, sense of abandonment by God, and the anguished questions of "Why, God?" that such events create, and that His love, presence and forgiveness is still with me.

It has often been a painful and lonely journey to create a new life outside of the cult. However, it has been totally worth it to become more and more free from the manipulation, the demands for performance, and the spiritual darkness that characterizes life in the Order. My greatest desire is to now live my life in thanksgiving to the God of the Bible, and His son, Jesus, who have forgiven me for the terrible and painful things I was forced to do, throughout my life, and have provided me with the courage and love I need for building a new life.

Defining Some Terms Used in this Book

Dissociation and Programming: When a person is subjected to extreme pain to the degree that his/her mental, emotional or physical survival is threatened, that person can dissociate, i.e., create a new state of consciousness that is capable of doing anything in order to survive or stop the trauma. Emotional traumas, such as abandonment, even in the absence of physical traumas, especially by an attachment figure, can also cause dissociation. This new state of consciousness is extremely suggestible. Programmers in the cults consider this a type of tabula rasa state: in order to survive, this new state of consciousness will believe/do/feel whatever it is told to think/do/feel and is easily convinced that this compliance is what stops the abusers from abusing him/her. Common terms for these new states of consciousness include "personalities", "parts" or "alters". The goal of cult-controlled dissociation as described in these pages is to 'program' the child: (1) subject a young child to enough pain, physical or mental, or both, to create new states, (2) give them names or codes, (3) teach these new states specific beliefs, emotions and/or jobs, (4) condition these parts into continued compliance by reward and punishment. In this book, I use the term 'parts'.

Cult host: the cult host is the part of the child raised in a cult who lives the child's cult life, e.g., this is the part who is out in the body during rituals, meetings and lessons in the cult facilities, and so on. This part will not be amnesic to the cult activities. For me, this was the part of me that felt most substantial and most like the "real me" since most of my life was spent in cult facilities or carrying out duties for the cult in other settings.

Presenter: In the Jesuit order, these are the parts of an individual that are created to be "out", or to present and live in the "normal world" in "ordinary families" outside the training facility. These parts are programmed to present in various countries, and will have families that host them starting at age three. Each presenter in each country will have been programmed to have its own name, personality, abilities and preferences, and to be completely amnesic to all cult activities, as well as to the activities of the other presenter parts. Despite being one set of parts, they will believe that they are the entire person, and only recall an ordinary life with no hint of any cult existence. Presenter parts are typically programmed to disbelieve, deny, or be highly distressed by any cult-related memories.

Internalize: During early childhood, we tend to internalize the things we experience and see (building a sense of reality and how the world works). Programmers take advantage of this natural developmental period to introduce parts to concrete experiences that demonstrate to the child the scenarios, people and beliefs that they want the child to internalize. For instance, if they want the child to internalize a castle, they will take the child to spend time in this castle. If they want the child to develop an internal 'castle guard', they will have a designated part spend time with a castle guard (to role model the beliefs and behaviors), then dress the part up as a castle guard and have the part act out this role. This kind of 'internalization' is common across individuals who experience early trauma, for instance, the person who realizes that they still hear their critical parents' voices inside their heads long after they have attained adulthood. Due to the dissociation, parts subject to these setups may only have experiences of the 'reality' that their programmers had them 'experience'.

Programming studio: These are large dedicated rooms or areas for programming in the cult facilities. These studios would rival the best of any Hollywood filming studio. They can be designed to look like any place that the programmers need, e.g., space ships, pyramids, underwater caverns, the city of Troy, a circus, etc. They have state-of-the-art lighting, animatronics, holograms, walls, ceiling, and floors that are screens that can display any scenario, and other audio-visual technologies to create extremely realistic experiences for the child being programmed in them. During programming scenarios, the adults and older children will put on costumes and act out the scenes (for instance, in a 'hell' scene, they may dress up as demons) that the programmers want the infants and children to learn about and eventually internalize.

Programming laboratories: Often located in the same buildings as the programming studios, these are areas dedicated to research on programming, and where children and adults receive assessments, health checkups, programming schedules and other processes that are critical to their programming. Very sophisticated equipment for programming, data collection, data management and so on is part of these labs.

The Fathers: Individuals in the Jesuit Order, both men and women, (yes, there are both sexes in the occultic side of this order, unlike the male only fathers in the public side) who have undergone the full training required and completed the coming of age ceremony at age 13 (described later in this book), are titled 'fathers'. For instance, as a child, I called my primary mentor, "Father Mattheo".

The Fathers I Loved: As the Order understands the importance of attachment and community for mind control, each child raised in the Order will be given 12 primary Fathers to be bonded to from infancy. Three of these 12 will be designed as the child's primary programmers, and the child will be conditioned to bond most strongly with these three fathers. This bonding starts in the womb, then throughout infancy and childhood. It is common for individuals in the Order to be assigned three new primary programmers as they become adults. This is to ensure that the person continues to be bonded to agents capable of controlling them as their original programmers age, and that there is no risk of losing control over that individual should their original programmers die. These new programmers are typically selected from among peers who he/she is already very close to, such as a twin, a classmate (who is as close to them as any biological sister or brother could be), or a close mentor.

Class: At the age of six, children raised in the Jesuit programming facilities are assigned to a class consisting of eleven other children their own age, to create a group of twelve for each class. There are multiple classes within each facility, and each class will have their own dormitory room. These children eat together, sleep together, go through training together, and therefore bond extremely closely to one another. The fathers tell them that they are "sisters" and "brothers". The Order considers the children in a class to be sisters and brothers whether or not they are genetically related. Along with the fathers, these classmates comprise the child's "family" when growing up in the facility.

Mage: The Jesuit Order is very occultic. Each child will have spiritual mentors who have achieved the status of a mage, an individual who has become extremely well versed in occultic knowledge, incantations, spells, and rituals over many years of training, intense study and testing. Mages are expected to mentor those younger than them, and to help raise up a new generation of mages. They are skilled in oral teaching, ancient languages and are often master storytellers, since much of the information is also passed down in oral form. All children are expected to become mages themselves. I use the term 'mage' instead of other terms for practitioners of the occult arts, such as 'wizard', 'sorcerer', 'magician' or 'witch' as this is the term that parts used when sharing their memories.

Ascended Master: This is considered by the Jesuits the highest form of spiritual achievement. These individuals are considered as close to ascension as a human being can achieve while still walking the earth.

Immortal: The Order believe that immortals are beings who are trying to help mankind ascend and become like them, and to teach them how to overcome their mortal flesh. “Overcoming the mortal flesh” includes suppressing the desires within a human being that make them flinch away from interacting with these beings, and accepting the pain and long, difficult training that the fathers believe is necessary to ascend. The Jesuit fathers utterly and completely believe in these immortals, and in the theology of ascension and descension.

Demon: I believe that the immortals and other spiritual beings described in this book are actually demons, or what the Bible describes as fallen angels. These beings were formerly filled with glory and were in the presence of the true God of the Bible. However, the one named Lucifer (now known as “Satan”) chose to rebel against the loving creator of the universe, due to pride (he wanted to be as God). In his rebellion, the Bible says that one third of the angels followed Lucifer and became fallen angels, or demons as they are commonly known. Demons can also refer in some theologies to the souls of individuals or Nephilim who are wandering the earth. In my book, I am not referring to this interpretation, but instead, to the “fallen angel” definition. While I believe that both angels and demons are real, as the memories in this book make clear, some of the “demons” I encountered in childhood were actually older children or adults in costumes. Also, I had many parts who were programed to believe they were demons. This is extremely common in ritual abuse and mind control groups. These parts are usually very young children. These parts, when they came out, would growl, threaten, and act very convincingly according to how people believe demons would act. In reality, however, they were frightened little children who had been given a difficult role to play inside, whether as a punisher, a guardian, or other jobs.

Breaking Free: Autobiography of a survivor of ritual abuse and mind control

Part 2

Part 1: Teen Years

This section describes events from age 13 ½ to 19. This was a time of increasing responsibility and beginning leadership as I was expected to use my training and education to serve the agendas of the Jesuit Order, including continuing to infiltrate the Illuminati as a trainer and oracle, and serving as a general in the Order. Over the first four chapters, I share the most significant event of my teen years – running away, becoming a Christian, then being forced to recant my faith and carry out assignments against Christians as penance; the remaining chapters in this section describe the different jobs I was given to carry out for the cult during my teen years.

Chapter 1: Heartbreak

I am thirteen and a half years old and I am in my Jesuit cult presenter, Father Luke, or Luce. My body is contracting, deep below my belly, every few minutes in the painful rhythms of labor. I am in the process of delivering my firstborn child. My child's father is Mattheo, my primary trainer and the father I love most. We are carrying out a long-established custom in the occultic side of the Order, where a female father's firstborn child is conceived with the male trainer that they are most closely bonded to.

I am sweating and gripping Mattheo's and Lizzie's (my twin sister's) hands in a hard squeeze. Father John is hovering over me as well. John, who is female, is one of my twelve primary trainers, and so is another father I have loved deeply since childhood. I am grateful to have them tending my delivery, which is progressing normally. I feel deep, unbearable pressure below, and a sudden urge to push. I can feel the baby crowning and I know that I am just moments away from holding my baby in my arms. One final push, and I hear the loud, healthy cries of the baby – a boy, as planned carefully. Father John puts the baby on my chest. As I see his red, wrinkled face and tiny clenched fists for the first time, I am overwhelmed by how beautiful my newborn son is.

"He's strong and healthy," Mattheo says, smiling.

"He looks like you," I say, awed with wonder at this little being that has come out of my body, a little being made with the person I love most. I hold tiny Jonathan to my breast and he begins to nurse. The contractions continue, as the afterbirth begins its journey out, but I am completely absorbed with my beautiful son.

"You did so well," Lizzie says. She pats her own stomach, rounded with her own soon-to-be firstborn son. She knows that I will attend her birth in a few days, once I am rested and recovered a little.

"You will be fine, I know," I reassure her. We both give each other a look of deep love tinged with sadness, for we both know that this joy of birth will be accompanied soon by great pain. But for the moment, I push away this knowledge. Instead, I focus on the joy of being permitted to utterly love another human being for the first time in my life.

For the next few days, baby Jonathan (I call him "Jon") and I are inseparable. I am allowed to spend my days and nights with him. When not cooing over him, changing him, nursing him, or simply gazing in adoration at him, I carry him in a baby sling that keeps him snuggled to my chest. I am utterly, completely in love with this tiny baby. At times, I feel a trickle of fear when I think about what must happen soon, but immediately suppress the feeling. I gently touch his face and the soft, downy hair on top of his head, and hold his little feet in my hands. I love his baby smell of milk, baby powder and his own unique sweetness. For the first time in my life, I am completely filled with joy.

A few days later, Lizzie's delivery, like mine, progresses normally. It is strange to me to see my sister, who looks exactly like me, sweaty and grunting as she pushes out her little son, the one that she and Father Carlotti, her primary trainer, have made together. I see the look of complete adoration in her eyes as she looks at her son, and I understand completely. I squeeze Lizzie's hand, and then kiss her softly on the cheek.

"He's beautiful," I tell her, my voice filled with emotion.

"I know." Lizzie looks at me, and I see a flash of fear and sadness for a second –just a second – in her eyes. I understand that flash of emotion all too well. Then, she tenderly holds baby Paul, brings him to her breast, and nurses him while smiling into his eyes.

Two indescribably wonderful weeks pass. For the first time in my entire life, I am free to love another human being, without constraints, without abuse, without pain. I love Jon so much, he means everything to me. I laugh when he has a stinky bowel movement, I try to make him smile when I look into his eyes, and I am so glad that I know this tiny human being. He is glad, too, although his expressions of gladness are different than mine: a small yawn, clutching my finger with his tiny, curled up fingers, and the satisfied, sleepy expression on his face after nursing. But the clock is ticking, the hours are passing, and it is getting harder to suppress a growing feeling of dread.

A few days later, Mattheo walks into the room where I am nursing Jon.

"It's time," he says quietly.

I look at him. Tears of utter devastation stream down my face. Mattheo has come to take me and Jon to the main chapel where our praises of adoration to Satan are sung twice daily. Slowly, so slowly, I dress Jon in a little white lace and golden silk robe. This is the kind of robe that all firstborn sons are dressed in for this horrendous ritual. He looks so tiny, so vulnerable, and my heart contracts as I look at his face. I pick him up, and hold him close, holding him tightly, as if that could change what is about to happen. Mattheo silently takes my hand. He knows that I am incapable of speech at this point. We walk towards the chapel, our feet echoing softly on the stone floor. I wish I could stop time, but I cannot.

Finally, we enter the chapel, and we both go to the front where there is a stone altar. On it is a small golden chalice. I am trembling as I slowly walk to the altar, my feet reluctant to move forward. But I must, for waiting next to the altar is Satan himself, in his hideous form. There can be no disobedience, even now. For he is requiring that I give up my firstborn child – a child that I have been allowed to love- because the cruel, cruel theology of the Order dictates that this be a willing sacrifice of love to this being that the Order worships. I must show my complete devotion, and this is what he wants – what he demands of me, and of Mattheo.

I am trembling and crying as I place my beloved son on the altar. Mattheo's hands are under mine since this child is his offering too. Satan doesn't mind these tears; he enjoys seeing my distress and anguish because this shows that I truly do love this tiny baby, a baby that I desperately do not want to give up. My heart is breaking as Mattheo picks up a golden knife, and looking at me, waits for me to place my hands with his. We will make the sacrifice together.

For a panicked moment, I realize that I cannot do this; I cannot destroy the first real love I have experienced in my life. It will destroy me. Mattheo takes my hands, as though in a loving gesture, then firmly places them between his on the knife. His iron grip covers mine, and together, we plunge the knife in. Mattheo's firm grip continues to guide my hands as we both take the golden chalice and collect the blood spurting out of Jon's tiny chest. I am numb, dazed, and far away. I feel as if it is my own blood spurting out and away, my life draining away. It will not be until later that I realize that instead, it is my ability to love fully that has been draining away in this terrible act.

The blood is collected. Mattheo and I offer it with bows to Satan, declaring the "great joy" that we feel in doing so, in an act of complete hypocrisy since neither of us feels joy at all. The offering is shared with those attending this ceremony as a "celebration" of this "great offering".

Finally, I am allowed to stagger and sit in a pew, while songs of worship and adoration to Satan are sung. Dannie, my triplet brother, is away in Tibet. The thought crosses my mind that he must be secretly glad to not have to be here to witness my heartrending pain, or to have to pretend to feel joy at this occasion.

But I have to pretend. I numbly move my lips, mouthing the soaring worship songs so that my lack of worship will not be noted. Afterwards, I go to my room, and sit gazing blankly at the stone walls. Alone, I cry for many hours until the dawn comes. I hear a knock and it is Mattheo at the door.

He takes one look at me and says, “I see you are too ill to work today.” He will give this excuse at the labs for me, even though everyone will know why I am unwell, because this is what happens to each young mother who must give up her young infant.

“Yes, I am ill,” I tell him. What he pretends to not hear is that I am more than ill: I cannot stand to live in a world where this type of heartbreak and cruelty is allowed. A world in which soon, my twin sister must go through this same pain and I will be forced to pretend that I feel joy during the ceremony that breaks her heart. A world where love and humanity are not allowed other than as things that must be sacrificed to Satan. I hate Satan, and the Jesuit fathers, for doing this to me; my true feelings are now larger than the extensive programming I have to be loyal and grateful. I plan what I will do to break free of them all.

In the Jesuit Order, like in many occult societies, all members, male and female alike, are required to sacrifice their firstborn child to Satan. In the Order, this ritual usually takes place between 13 and 14 years old, after they have completed the coming-of-age ceremony and have received their adult names as fathers. For the Jesuit ceremony, the child is always a boy, since if a girl child is conceived, it is aborted until a boy is conceived. Female members, as my account shows, will conceive this child with the adult male trainer they are closest to. Male members will conceive this child with a female member from their own age group who they are closest to, usually a twin sister. This means that the female fathers often end up having to sacrifice two children within a space of less than two years. Both the young male and female fathers are given time to bond intensely with this infant together with the person they conceived the child with in order to ensure that it will be a ‘precious’ and ‘costly’ sacrifice to Satan. The heartbreak of having to sacrifice this child, conceived with a person they love deeply, has a devastating impact on the young teens. The ostensible reason for this sacrifice is to ‘prove’ that they do not and will never love anyone more than Satan. The truth is that we did this not out of ‘love’ or ‘worship’ of Satan, but rather out of the terror of disobeying and displeasing Satan that the Jesuit fathers have internalized for generations. Satan enjoys human suffering, because we were created by a God who loves us, and Satan’s goal is to ultimately grieve the heart of God by lashing out in cruel ways at His creation.

Chapter 2: Running Away in America

I am 14 years old, and it is springtime. I am fronting in my American presentation, Elsa. Here, I am a rebellious teenager, smoking pot with my friends after school and not giving two cents about my grades, which have been slowly declining over the past year. My boyfriend, Steve, is equally rebellious and uninterested in school. It was interesting how I came into this relationship. The first day of class last fall, I saw a dark-haired girl sitting to my left and a sandy-haired boy behind me. I couldn't decide which I liked more since I was bisexual. Unable to decide, I took a quarter out of my pocket and flipped it: heads, I would go for girls; tails, I would go for boys. The coin showed tails, so I turned and smiled at the sandy-haired boy behind me and asked him his name. Soon, we became friends, then close friends. Recently, he has told me that he is in love with me.

The day before, after school, I had quietly gone into my U.S. stepfather's drawer where he kept his wallet while he worked in the fields outside, and took most of the money out. It was around my waist, carefully divided up inside a money belt, so that no bulge would show.

"Hey, I'm going to run away from home," I whisper to Steve partway through math class. "I'm going to leave – today."

"Yeah, sure, right," he whispers back. I can tell he doesn't believe me.

"Come with me after class, and you will see that I mean it," I reply.

The teacher in the front of the classroom is droning on about how to find out what "x" and other variables in an equation are, but I could not care less. My mind is far away, and I am terrified about what I am about to do. Steve stays with me after class is over.

"I'm going out to the highway, and I'm going to hitchhike," I tell him. I have told no one else of my plan, especially not my younger sister, who would instantly report my plan to our parents and others. However, for some reason, I want Steve to know. He has been my closest friend at school when I am there.

"Hey, that can be dangerous, aren't you scared?" he says. I can tell he is starting to believe me.

"Not at all, I don't scare that easily," I say, as I nonchalantly flip my shoulder-length brown hair over a shoulder. The truth is, I am scared as hell, but I don't want anyone to know this fact, not even myself. Maybe if I act brave, I will start feeling brave.

He walks with me outside, towards the highway that runs past the high school at the bottom of the hill the high school is built on. All I have is my backpack with two t-shirts and an extra pair of jeans and underwear stuffed into it, the little bit of money I stole from my stepfather in America, and my wits. Trembling inside, I go down to the highway where there is lots of traffic this time of day. Steve stares, not believing what he is seeing, and looking as if he would like to pull me away. He doesn't, though, and finally, a truck pulls over. I climb inside and wave goodbye to Steve.

As the truck rolls away, the driver looks at me, and says, "Aren't you a little young to be traveling alone?" I quickly look over at him. His tone is kind, and he doesn't have that gleam and look that means that he wants to have sex with me. He seems okay and I tell him the story that I have invented.

"I'm going to go see my grandmother in Florida," I say. "Things are really bad at home. I had to get away and she said I could stay with her." This is a partial truth: I do have a grandmother in my American presentation and she does live in southern Florida. But I do not intend to stay with her at all. Rather, I love the sun and warmth of the Palm Beach area. If I can't find a place to stay in Florida, at least I would not freeze to death.

My story seems to satisfy the truck driver. He nods and turns on a country music station. I am trembling with excitement: I am escaping!

"I'm Carl. Where are you heading to?" the truck driver asks, as the beat and nasal twang of country music plays in the background.

"Florida, near Palm Beach," I tell him. I don't want to tell him too much, but after all, he is driving me south and I need to know how far I can travel with him.

"I'm not going that far south," he replies, to my great disappointment. He looks over and then says, "But I am going into Georgia. When we get there, I'll buy you a bus ticket to Palm Beach."

I cannot believe my ears. This truck driver with a southern accent, who is smoking a cigarette as he drives, wants to help me.

"Um, why are you doing that for me?" I ask, not sure what he expects in return for this kindness.

"Because I have a son just a little older than you somewhere out there. He left home two years ago. I hope that somewhere, someone will help him the way I am going to help you," he says gruffly. I realize that his tone is to cover how worried he is about his son. Carl continues, "You have no business being out on the highways hitchhiking, little miss. You are lucky – damned lucky – that you ran into me and not someone who might hurt you." He lectures me on the dangers of hitchhiking, citing numerous TV shows that show the fate of people who use this form of transportation.

I know that he is right. I am very lucky to have met a kind man, rather than a lecher or serial killer, on my first attempt to hitchhike. Hours later, Carl stops for gas, and goes inside for a burger. It is nighttime now. I am hungry but I don't say anything. "Would you like me to get a burger and fries?" he asks to my great surprise.

"Yes, please," I reply eagerly. He must have realized that I haven't eaten since breakfast. When he returns to his truck, he is carrying a large coke, a large fries, and a huge burger with cheese and all the extras. He smiles as I dive into the food after a quick and sincere "Thank you!"

We make it to Georgia, where Carl's large semi circles the city of Atlanta, then takes an exit. Soon, we are at a bus station. As promised, he goes to a ticket counter and buys me a ticket to West Palm Beach. "Thank you," I tell him, overcome once again by his kindness and generosity. "I will never forget what you have done for me."

Carl brushes off my thanks with a "I hope someone will do this for my son. That what goes around comes around."

He waves at me as I get on the bus, and I give the ticket to the bus driver, and sink into the seat. I fall asleep as the bus makes its journey south. I dream of palm trees, soft ocean breezes and sandy beaches as the bus rolls steadily down the highways.

"West Palm Beach!" I wake to the announcement as the bus doors open with a hydraulic sound. The air is much warmer here, with a soft breeze that holds a faint scent of salt water, letting me know I am near the ocean. It is daytime and I feel a little disoriented.

I wonder where to go, where I will stay, since I don't know anyone here – no one at all, other than my grandmother, who I have no intention of contacting. She would turn me in to my parents, and thus the Order, in a minute. So, with slightly dazed eyes, blinking at the change from the softly tinted interior of the bus to the bright, bright sunshine outdoors at the bus terminal, I look around, considering which direction to start walking.

Suddenly, a young man walks up to me. “Are you new here?” he asks me. He has long bushy hair and a mustache, and is dressed like a hippie, which was common in 1971, the year I am 14.

“Yes,” I tell him, eyeing him a bit warily.

“Well, if you need a place to stay,” he says, “I know where there’s a house where lots of young people are living. They always welcome new people. And, there’s plenty of weed there, too.”

I decide, what the heck, and follow him as he leads me to this house.

We arrive at the house. It is a stucco house, white with dark green shutters, and tall palm trees stand over the backyard like guardians, whose leaves flutter with a soft rustle in the breeze. “Here we are,” the young man says.

“What’s your name?” I ask him.

“Felix, like the cat, because I’m lucky,” he tells me.

We go inside, out of the bright sunshine. The living room is darkened by drawn blinds at the windows, and is crowded with people of varying ages, all older than me by at least three years. The room is littered with bongs and other paraphernalia of drug use. I look in wonder as these young men and women sit on a large couch in the middle of the room, or on large pillows on the floor. They are dressed in shorts, flowered shirts and sandals, and talk in sleepy tones. They all look up when I come in, and greet me with soft “Hi”, “Hey there” and “Welcome to the House.” I sense I will be accepted here, and as promised, there are plenty of drugs laying around and the air is filled with the sweet smell of hash.

Maybe I am lucky, too, like Felix, I think to myself, relieved that I will not have to sleep on the beach tonight.

The next few weeks pass in a drug-filled haze. I have a small room in the house that I share with another woman. I am given food and pot to smoke. I make friends with some of the people in the house, especially with a young man named Piggy, whose large and rotund size earned him this nickname. He takes me under his wing, showing me where essentials like tampons are kept, and teaching me street skills such as how to steal food from a local supermarket. “You have to earn your food, you know,” he tells me. When not shoplifting or smoking pot in the house, I spend the afternoons at beach parties, drinking and doing drugs and talking, always talking to the new people I am meeting.

I do not see Felix for a couple of weeks. When he does return, he invites to me spend the evening with him at his other house, the ‘nice one’. This house is large and furnished with expensive furniture. The first night there, he has sex with me. I don’t mind, since he found me a place at the communal house, so I figure it’s a fair trade. But a few nights later, he has a friend over, and they do a drug deal. Halfway through the evening, Felix gets up, stretches and says “I’ve got to go out and do an errand.” I get up to follow him, but he tells me, “No, you stay here. I’ll come and get you later.”

So, I stay, and in a while his friend tries to lead me upstairs to the bedroom. I am reluctant to follow but his friend is insistent. “Don’t you know anything?” he tells me harshly. “You were part of the deal tonight.” I realize that Felix has sold me for the night, so I do whatever his friend tells me to. After all, this is part of the price of having a place to live when you are too young to work and earn rent money. Nonetheless, I had run away from home to be safer, not to become someone’s prostitute or collateral for drug deals. I realize that I have to leave quickly before this happens again. Or, before something worse happens; I have a vague feeling of disquiet about this house.

As soon as it is light, I sneak quietly out of the house with my heart in my mouth. I am terrified that Felix's friend will stop me or that Felix will return before I make my escape. I walk as quickly as I can for several blocks, reach a major road, then start trying to thumb a ride. My fear mounts as car after car passes me by. Finally, a pale blue sedan pulls over. It contains a man and wife with a small baby in a car seat in the back. Shaky with relief, I climb into the backseat, next to the baby. "Where are you going?" the man asks me.

"North", I tell them briefly.

"We're going to Atlanta," he responds.

It is silent in the car for most of the journey to Atlanta. Halfway there, the man exits off the interstate and pulls into a gas station to get gas. He tells his wife to go in and buy burgers for everyone. While his wife is in the store, he reaches into the backseat and feels me up. I hate it, but I am desperate for a ride and for food. It has been 24 hours since I have eaten, so I don't yell or get out of the car. He stops his abuse of me as soon as his wife returns. She passes the food around, and I eat while silently calling this man vile names for the way he is treating me and his wife. Several hours later, the man lets me out in Georgia, at a truck stop just outside of Atlanta.

It is the middle of the night. Completely exhausted, I fall sleep on the hard cement ground next to a cinder block wall, well behind a parked truck. The sun wakes me up a few hours later and I go drowsily from truck to truck, searching for one heading north. I have decided to go into New York City where I have heard there are numerous runaways and hippies, in hopes that I will get lost in the crowd of other runaway and throwaway children. Most of the truck drivers are not yet at their trucks but I eventually find someone who is driving north, and I ask for a ride. The man pauses, looks at me, and finally says, "Okay, get in." He is quiet and talks little as he takes me to New Jersey. Here, I hitch a ride outside the restaurant he stops at, to New York City.

After wandering the edges of the city and sleeping in the streets for a few nights, I come across a shelter for runaways. Exhausted and hungry, I push the doors open and enter.

"Where are you from?" the worker at the shelter asks me. I give her a false name and false home address, telling her I am from North Carolina. I am tired, dirty, frightened, and have no idea what to expect in a runaway shelter. I sit warily on a worn-out couch in the communal area by the shelter's main entrance. To my surprise, I hear a friendly greeting from a boy who looks the same age as me. "Hi, I'm Sam," he tells me cheerly.

"I'm Sarah," I reply, using the same false name that I had told the shelter worker.

"You don't have to worry, the people are okay here," Sam says. I relax a little, and start talking to him. I discover that like me, Sam has left an abusive situation at home, preferring to take his chances on the streets rather than endure the ongoing physical and sexual abuse by his father.

At lunchtime, the shelter gives us a sandwich and a piece of fruit, which I accept gratefully, then Sam takes me downtown to teach me how to earn my living in the Big Apple. The two of us stand on a busy street, and I learn how to panhandle for money. While most people pass us by without a glance, here and there, generous people do stop and give us a dollar or a few quarters. What I don't like are the older men who keep coming up to me, telling me that they can help me earn "a lot more" than I can make panhandling. I know what they mean, and let Sam stand between me and them.

After a few days, an older man who is a teacher at NYU invites Sam and I to stay with him. He and his friends are socialists, and I enjoy hearing their discussions about Castro and changing the political structure of our society. They also have lots of pills around the house, and when the teacher and his friends are at work, Sam and I help ourselves to drugs and food. I decide that socialists are pretty nice people since they are feeding me and my friend. I also start looking for work. I lie to anyone who asks, saying I am 16, and plan to get a driver's license at the DMV. Sam is doing the same. We supplement our panhandling with shoplifting and eating at small diners where after eating, we get up and run out the door. It is easy to run into the crowds in NYC and no one ever catches us.

A week later, I am with Sam and the teacher at a James Taylor concert that he has bought us tickets for. I love James Taylor, but in the bathroom, someone has offered me a small pane of windowpane acid (a form of LSD). I have dropped acid before and had enjoyed laughing for hours the last time I did so. However, this time, it is different. Soon after dropping the pane, the bathroom starts spinning and revolving. I stumble out into the street for fresh air and start screaming. Time is slowing down, I see blood dripping everywhere, and terrible visions of horror flow in a relentless stream of gore and violence before my eyes. I continue screaming in stark terror, completely disoriented. I hear the siren of an ambulance just before I go unconscious.

At the hospital, my stomach is pumped, and a team of doctors and other clinical staff work over my body. I know this because I am floating on the ceiling above, looking down on my body below as the medical team works frantically to save my life. But what horrifies me is that all around, surrounding me as I float, are demons lathering at the mouth, and stretching their claws towards me. I feel immensely sad and start crying. "God, I'm not ready to die yet," I tell Him, in the first sincere prayer I can remember to the God who created me. I know that these creatures surrounding me in a ring are just waiting for me to die, like wolves around prey, and intend to carry me away to hell.

I then wake up, back in my body, to discover that I am on a stretcher in the emergency room. There is an IV dripping fluid into my right arm which has a bandage over the insertion site. I feel dazed, sleepy and look up. An orderly is wheeling me into a small private room. "You are lucky," he tells me. "You almost died." He bends over and gives me a kiss on my lips, and then leaves. I fall asleep.

Sometime later, a nurse comes in. She has been checking on me from time to time, because there is a blood pressure cuff on my arm, and I am hooked up to a heart monitor. She smiles and says, "Your parents are here."

I look up, and to my horror, my American mother and stepfather walk into the room. They look anxious, tired and relieved to see me. "How did they find me?" I ask the nurse.

"When you came in last night, you told us your full name. There was an All Points Bulletin out for you, and so we called them," she says.

"I don't want to go with them! I can't! They are terrible people, terrible! Please, let me stay here," I plead.

"It's just the drugs in her, she's disoriented and doesn't know what she's saying," my American mother says.

I become hysterical, and start screaming "No, no, no, don't make me go back with them!"

"You need to sedate her," my American mother tells the nurse. "She is still feeling the effects of the drugs which have affected her mind."

The nurse leaves and returns with a sedative. Later that day, my parents have me released from the hospital. We fly back together to Virginia, and they immediately check me into a hospital where I will be checked for venereal diseases and aftereffects of the drugs I had been abusing.

This narrative of running away from home at 14 years old for about two months and nearly dying from a bad LSD trip is something that I (the American presenter) had always remembered. Until several years ago, I believed that I had tried to leave home because of my stepfather's verbal abuse and my mother's neglect. However, after I had started to heal from ritual abuse and mind control, I learned from the other parts in my system that my running away from home in America was actually an attempt at leaving the Order motivated by the horrendous pain of being forced to sacrifice my firstborn son at 13.

My running away was enabled by cooperation between my American presentation 'Elsa' (the parts of me that lived life in the United States with absolutely no memory that I was a member of the occult world), and the cult presenter Luce (the parts of me that knew much more of my life story and wanted to leave the cruelty of a group that ordered me to kill the only human being I had ever fully loved – my infant son). While I was unaware of Luce during this period, had she not been wanting to leave the Order as well, I would never have been able to even leave my house unnoticed by the cult. Other parts who were also cooperating with this runaway attempt included the parts whose jobs were to recontact and return to the Order. This is evident from how none of the 'return home', 'recontact' or 'reporter' parts had disclosed the runaway plans of either the American presenter or the cult presenter to our programmers or leaders, none called the Order to disclose our location, or switched out so they had the control over the body to make us return to the cult. Without this extensive cooperation between many different parts, I would not have been able to stay away from the Order for as long as I did.

The fact that I was able to run away from home at all and to stay away for two months shows that even when programming to be loyal, obedient and to recontact is present, an individual can still choose to not recontact. While it can be difficult and painful to resist programming, it is not impossible to do so. All cults want their members to believe that programming cannot be disobeyed or broken, but my own experience at this age exposes the falseness of this belief. To the Order, my ability to not tell on myself that I was planning on running away and success at not re-contacting them or disclosing where I was or what I was doing was an indication of massive 'programming failure'. This made me a tremendous security risk both to the Jesuit Order, and the Illuminati (which I was actively infiltrating in my American and several European presentations). I learned later that they had spared no expense and used many strategies to try to locate me. APBs for missing children were uncommon back in 1971; having an APB out for me showed how determined the cult, and not my 'parents', was to locate and retrieve me.

I knew that taking drugs was risky, but both my cult presenter and I had a lot of pain and grief to deal with. This was compounded by the terror we were feeling about trying to escape the Order, and the pain of resisting the programming to recontact and return. Numbing these feelings in this way seemed like a good (the only) way to cope. Nonetheless, we did not anticipate that the drugs we took in New York would be laced with other substances that almost killed us and got us returned to the group. I had a deep desire to die to escape the pain that killing my infant son had created. Yet when confronted with death, deep inside at core level, I realized that I did not want to die. God heard my cry for mercy and saved my life. This answered prayer laid the foundation for my accepting Him as my God and Savior a few months later.

While I had always remembered running from Virginia to Florida then to New York, healing work and increased communication between different parts many years later brought another piece of the narrative to light: Felix was more than just a drug dealer, commune leader and exploiter of runaways. He was also a member of an occultic group. I learned this shortly after he had first sold me as part of a drug deal, and the following account relates this piece of the narrative:

Two weeks later, Felix invites me to a party at his nice house. The food is excellent, and beer and pot flow lavishly, and the partygoers stay late into the night. Suddenly, just before 2 am, someone says "It's time."

Time for what? I wonder but I don't have to wait long to find out, as I see the floor beneath a corner of the living room sliding away to one side. The opening reveals stairs going down one level into a windowless basement. One by one, the adults at the party go downstairs. Felix puts my hands into those of an older woman with cold blue eyes, and a young man with black hair and black eyes. I have a funny feeling about this. They lead me downstairs, and I see a ritual setting: altar, candles, silver chalice on a black velvet cloth. The other adults have shed their clothes and are naked except for black cloaks with hoods. I surmise that the woman who had taken my hand earlier must be the high priestess, as least for tonight's ritual, as she is the one who starts to tie me up. I realize with a shock that I am to be the "expendable" tonight; these people plan to kill me, a young runaway, who will be untraceable. Desperate to save my life, my system switches fully away from my American parts who have no idea about what is going on, into my Illuminati parts.

"You don't want to kill me," I lift my chin arrogantly and tell her in German. "I have the protection of someone very powerful that you don't want to anger. I am a daughter of Battenberg."

The woman pauses in surprise and says suspiciously, "How do I know you aren't lying to me, little rat?"

I respond without missing a beat, "Ask me any question you like, something that I can't possibly know, and I will tell you anything you like, about your past and future. This will prove what I say." I am gambling that I can do this, and ask for help from the spirits within.

"How many children do I have?" she asks.

I tell her, "You have four, but only three are living. One was killed in a ritual like this, when you were much younger."

She sees for herself that I really can tap into the spiritual realm and "read" her past, 'proving' my status as a trained member of a cult. Therefore, I am not likely to be an 'expendable' they could kill. In fact, if I am indeed a Battenberg, killing me could cause them trouble. She narrows her eyes thoughtfully. "I am sure that your absence from your father's 'loving care' is not making him happy," she says. "He might pay me handsomely for bringing you back where he can punish you personally." She looks into my eyes, sees the flash of real fear there at the mention of punishment from this sadistic man, and smiles a slow, malicious smile. She continues, "I think we will have a little fun with you tonight before we send you back to him. I can't imagine he would mind."

They rape me for hours, tying me up, then putting sharp rods up me front and back when they get bored with ordinary rape. I scream and scream for their benefit because I know that this is what they want. However, they let me live. I survive the night, although bruised and exhausted.

The next day, Piggy comes to visit Felix. Felix goes out, telling him to keep an eye on me. After he leaves, Piggy says, "I feel sorry for you, little schmuck. You're in for it now." Piggy wasn't there last night, but I have no doubt that he has been told that I am in real trouble with some powerful people.

"Piggy, you're my only friend here. You have to help me escape," I plead, looking at him with large, brown, desperate eyes. "Please, please, just take me to the interstate; I will find a way to get away from there."

Piggy pauses. I can tell that he would not mind helping me, but he was not going to put his own hide at risk. I start using my psychic (theta) skills to compel him to both feel sorry for me, and to obey me. Finally, he says, “Okay, but we have to be quick. Let’s go, schmuck.”

He takes me in his old beater car to the interstate. Once again, I am hitchhiking, desperate to leave this place as quickly as possible. I am terrified that Felix, or one of the people from the night before, will see me before I can get away. I put my thumb out, and car after car passes me by. Finally, a pale blue sedan pulls over. It contains a man and wife with a small baby in a car seat in the back.

I had completely dissociated this episode, believing previously that I had left the commune for New York because of Felix selling me for drugs. Looking back, it seems like a miracle that I escaped the occult group that Felix was involved with. They did not seem to be aware that there was an APB out for a teenager of my description despite recognizing the Battenberg name and understanding German. They did not even try to ensure that I would not be able to escape beyond telling Piggy to keep an eye on me. I can only say that I am glad that they were careless and that I was able to get away.

Chapter 3: Finding and Losing Faith

I am still fronting in my American presenter, Elsa, and it has been a week since my parents retrieved me from the hospital. At the hospital in northern Virginia, the staff spent three days conducting careful psychological and physical health tests, and gave me antibiotics to clear out any diseases I might have caught from living on the streets. I have been home back at the farm only a week, but I am planning to run away again in two days, because deep down, I do NOT want to be chained again to my former life. That afternoon, my American mother makes a request. “Put on some decent clothes,” she tells me.

“Why?” I ask, sullenly. I am still angry that she and my stepfather ‘retrieved’ me from New York and have barely spoken to either of my parents.

“I’m going to a special study, and you’re coming with me,” she says.

“What kind of study?” I ask.

To my extreme surprise, she responds, “A Bible study.”

I have no idea why she wants to do this. She is not religious; no one in my family is. We are all agnostics and atheists so her sudden desire to have a mother-daughter visit to a church activity puzzles me.

“Tina and Ellie are going,” she tells me. These two girls are sisters and are two of my friends from school. “I want you to come with me,” she insists. “I am taking you, willing or not.” To get her off my back, I dress and sullenly get into the car. But I also attend out of mild curiosity. I have never been to a meeting outside of a liturgical, formal church service where a book of Common Prayer guides what is said and done. Why on earth would someone meet to talk about the Bible during a Friday night? I wonder silently.

It is a 30-minute drive to the meeting. The group meeting starts out with guitar playing and singing. It meets in a small Episcopal church out in the middle of nowhere, in a very rural part of northern Virginia. After the singing, a couple of people come up to the front and share testimonies of how God has helped them during the past week. Then, the pastor who leads the meeting gives a short talk about Jesus and the Bible. I am bored. But after the service, there is an altar call and my friend Tina goes forward. She comes back to her seat, crying copiously.

“Why are you crying?” I ask her in bewilderment. “I thought this shit is supposed to make you happy.” I am a true heathen, observing with curiosity her strange reaction to a prayer.

“Oh, I am, I am happy,” she exclaims. “I’ve never been happier in my life.”

I look into her blue eyes filled with tears, and see that she is telling the truth: there is real joy in their depths.

“You should go forward and get prayer,” she says, earnestly. I hesitate.

“Go ahead,” she urges.

I decide to see if I will end up crying like a baby, and wonder if that would be good or bad. I walk down the aisle. A woman I have never met before who is standing in front of the altar rail comes over to me and asks, “Do you know Jesus?”

I tell her “No” and she places her hand on my head and begins praying for me.

Instantly, I react, but not with tears. “I have to go!” I say, as I run down the aisle of the church and out the door.

“What happened to you?” my friend Tina asks me as she runs out after me.

“I didn’t want any of that shit,” I tell her, to cover the fear I feel. Something made me afraid of that woman’s prayer. I pretend to not care about what happened. But secretly, I am disappointed, and a little envious of my friend who did cry from joy. It has been years, if ever, since I have felt joy.

That night, I have two nightmares. One is about the end of the world: I am running out of a city where a nuclear blast has occurred, running for my life. All around me, I am impeded by the dead human bodies: torn body after body is pouring out blood on the road, and I am slipping in the blood, screaming. The second nightmare is of hell: I am alone, in complete and utter darkness. It is cold and dark. There is no love or hope; only endless despair. I am revolving in a terrible twisting motion upon myself, throughout the blackness of a silent, cold eternity, and I can see my sins on the arms of self that revolve inward. I wake up screaming, filled with terror, and cannot go back to sleep for the next two days.

“I am going to have a nervous breakdown if this panic doesn’t stop,” I tell my mother.

“These must be flashbacks from the drugs,” she tells me.

“Flashbacks or not, I think I need to go meet with the pastor from that Christian group and pray. They started this, maybe they can stop it,” I moan. I have dark circles under my eyes from lack of sleep. I feel as if I am losing my mind. I spend most of the day with my head down in my hands, moaning in desperation and terror.

Desperate, my mother calls and makes an appointment to meet with the pastor who led the prayer meeting. He is leading a charismatic renewal in the local Episcopal church, and is in his office when we arrive at his church. When we meet, I tell him about the nightmares, the sleeplessness and the terrible feeling that I will go to a black, cold, silent hell.

He says, “I will lead you in the sinner’s prayer, but first, I need to ask you: have you had any involvement in the occult?”

I am surprised at his question. “Not really,” I answer him. At that time, in my American presentation, I am still completely amnesic to my own history with the cult. “I did play around a few times with my cousins, with a Ouija board, and once when I was ten, they and I tried to bend spoons with our minds.” I am trying to think of anything that could be labeled “occult”. “Oh, yes, a few times, I played with some tarot cards that I bought, and tried to read my sister’s and my cousin’s futures, and let them do the same. That’s it.” That was all that I could consciously recall.

“You must renounce all of these things,” he tells me.

“I renounce playing with a Ouija board, tarot cards, any trying to bend spoons, and any other occult activities that I might have done,” I say.

“Now, pray this prayer with me,” the pastor says.

I then pray the prayer that he leads me in: “Dear Jesus, I am a sinner and have sinned against you. Please forgive me for these sins, and come into my life. I receive the gift that you purchased for me when you died for me on the cross.”

Suddenly, it as if someone has turned a light bulb on inside. I didn’t even know it was deep darkness inside of me, but suddenly, I feel life, and light, and joy, and something I have never experienced before in my life: pure, genuine love, a love that causes tears to stream down my face. I am forgiven, really forgiven! And the darkness is gone.

My life will never be the same again.

"Jesus loves me," I say wonderingly. I am stunned and amazed.

My mother drives me home, and that night at dinner, I tell my parents, "Jesus loves me, and He loves you, too."

"This is bullshit," my atheist stepfather tells me. "It's just a fad."

"You shouldn't be too religious," my mother warns me. "People go nuts if they do."

"You're a fucking Jesus freak," my sister, who is a year younger than me, yells. "What happened to make you go off the deep end?"

But I ignore their comments. Instead, after dinner, I grab my American mother's huge Catholic bible that has rested, unread, in a bookshelf for years, and read it avidly. It is all fresh, new and real, like today's news. I feel happy. I am joyful, for the first time that I can remember.

I attend another prayer meeting at my friend Tina's house. On the table is a book called They Speak with Other Tongues by the Sherrills. I read this book avidly, and in my bedroom at home, ask Jesus to baptize me in the Holy Spirit. I start speaking in an unknown language, and I am overjoyed.

"I can speak in tongues! It's wonderful!" I shout.

"Oh, Jeez, what now?" my sister says unhappily. My whole family is upset about my Christianity, and my numerous attempts to witness to them. I want them to know this love and joy, too, but they seem uninterested, to put it mildly.

Much later in life, I asked my American mother why on earth she took me to a Christian group at this time. After all, we were all secret occultists. Her reply surprised me: "I couldn't control you, and was hoping that this would help you settle down." Stunned, I realized then that the only reason she was hoping I might get infected with a bit of Christianity was in order to make me more "good" and compliant in my American presentation. This had backfired on them though, because I encountered the real Jesus, and this changed the course of the rest of my life.

At school, all the kids notice that I am different – REALLY different. I am happier, kinder and more loving to each of them. "You're a lot nicer than you used to be," is something I hear from many. Their amazement makes me wonder how unpleasant I had been to others before. I stop doing drugs, don't smoke pot and start carrying a little Bible to school during the last two weeks of the spring semester. I fail two classes, simply because I was away on the streets and wasn't there to learn anything, but that doesn't matter. I love Jesus, He is the center of my life, and I am more interested in witnessing than academics.

When school lets out, and summer vacation begins, my parents send me to a mental institution for the wealthy in central Virginia. They insist that I undergo a drug rehabilitation program at this institution, even though I had been telling them that I was no longer using drugs. The clinical staff there put me through a battery of psychological tests, all of which show that I am psychologically normal. The staff tells me that my parents are relieved that the drugs didn't fry my brains. The program lasts two months, and I spend my time there witnessing to the other residents on the rehab unit who are mostly young teens like me. They have little patience for my evangelism, but I do make friends with a young woman who comes at night to clean. During my first week here, she overhears me crying one night.

"Are you okay?" she asks me, putting a comforting hand on my shoulder.

"I…I'm scared, and feel lonely," I tell her.

She looks at the Bible on my bedside stand, and asks, "Are you a Christian?"

"Yes," I tell her. "I became one a few weeks ago, and I'm trying to learn about Jesus."

"Hmmm," she says, thinking. "My parents have a Bible study on Saturday evenings at our house. Would you be willing if you can get a pass, and come spend the weekend with me? You could go to the study and learn more about the Bible."

I am delighted to meet another Christian here, and say eagerly "Yes, I would love to!"

Because I no longer do drugs or act out, I easily get a weekend pass and go home with this young woman, Belinda. Her family are wonderful to me, and the whole weekend, I am in total joy: I spend the weekend with this family of loving people, where we pray, study the Bible and talk about the new love in my life: Jesus. After this, while I am at the rehab center, I spend every weekend with her family, and feel less lonely. I am growing in my new faith, and love fellowshipping with other believers.

This time at the institution was a miracle that I have no explanation for. Typically, I only spent a few weeks in my American presentation before returning to Rome or my other presentations. To have been allowed to stay in the U.S. for a full two months in this program, in addition to the two months when I ran away, is unheard of. This is the longest time interval I have ever spent outside of Rome in my entire life. It is possible that the Order wanted special assessments done of my American shell and presenters at the institution, or needed to placate the American Illuminati by doing so. Or, maybe God arranged for this time for me to have the opportunity to be around a loving group of Christians and grow in my faith. I really don't know.

At the end of summer, I return from the drug rehab program to my American home, an isolated farm in a rural part of northern Virginia. The next morning, I wake up to the sound of familiar voices talking in Latin in the yard outside. I dress hurriedly, switching from my American presenters into my cult presenter, Luce, as I run down the stairs. Two large black vans are parked in my parent's driveway. In the yard are the three fathers I love most, Mattheo, Carlotti and Jerome. Half of my Jesuit class, including my two twins, Danny and Lizzie, are present as well. My stepfather is not there, having gone into town to take care of some business. But my American mother, a Jesuit father herself, turns to me. "You have to go back to Rome," she says.

I really did not want to. I had had enough of the Order's cruelty and subservience to Satan. However, Conner looks at me and says, "I want to know your Jesus, but I can't, unless you come back with us. Don't let me die and go to hell." He looks at me beseechingly. Conner is the second member of my class, and next to Danny and Lizzie, he is one of the people I love the most in the world.

"If you come with us, you can tell me about your faith, but if you refuse to come, I never want to hear about it," says Mary Margaret, the third member of my class. She is someone closer than a sister to me.

Father Mattheo speaks to me earnestly, his clear grey eyes filled with sadness. "If you don't come with us, we will have to kill your class, and ourselves, because we have all failed in our training of you, and so our lives will be forfeit as well. We will all go to hell without knowing this Jesus of yours."

I am filled with an overwhelming desire to share my faith with these loved ones. I want to rescue them from the hell I am certain they will go to if they do not know Jesus.

"I'll go," I tell them.

Suddenly, deep inside my mind, I feel the words, "Don't do this. Don't go." Somehow, I know it is Jesus telling me not to go to Rome. But I am looking at the lost, sad faces of my brothers and sisters and fathers, and I can't help it. I WANT them to know Jesus, and I can't risk their going to hell. I can't. Still, the voice inside says more sternly, "Don't go. Don't. It will not work out well." But I am determined to rescue my loved ones. I ignore the voice, and get into one of the vans, and we drive off together to a small airport nearby where a military plane is waiting. I am going to Rome to be a witness for Jesus.

We are back in the Vatican by the next day. I am having deep, dark espresso with Father Mattheo to help me overcome the jet lag that comes in spite of the supplements I have taken. His questions are earnest as he sips his own cup of espresso. "Why have you decided to believe in the ridiculous Jewish God, the traitor and liar?", he asks me angrily. "What caused you to give up the beliefs of a lifetime?"

"Because He loves me, and Satan never did," I explain simply. "Satan is the liar, not the God who created the universe." Mattheo looks baffled and gets up abruptly, leaving me alone at the small table. I pray in tongues for him that he will be able to hear what I have to say.

The two other fathers I love most, Father Jerome and Father Carlotti, come in and ask me similar questions. I give them the same response, and like Mattheo, they leave quickly. Their quick departures remind me of the time I had run out of church when being prayed for the first time.

The torture begins the next day. I am strapped to a table. Conner, the brother I love so much, is slowly peeling the skin from my upper arms. Mattheo, Jerome and Carlotti are in the room. The torture goes on and on. I turn my head and whisper to Conner: "I forgive you for this, because Jesus loves you." Conner turns his head to the side, away from me, so that I will not be able to see the look in his eyes. I know that he is doing what he has been ordered and coerced to do, not what he wants to do.

They apply various forms of torture for weeks: I am stretched on a rack until I feel as if all of my joints are loose, screaming as they dislocate; I am shocked over and over and over, all the while being told by the people I love, and by Satan, "All you have to do is raise one finger to show that you no longer believe in the traitor – that you are no longer an adulteress" (as Satan's "wife" from the ceremony at age 13, he considers my faith in the Christian Jesus as an act of adultery). They administer medical care in between bouts of torture so that they can continue the torture without killing me. But I refuse to deny the One I know loves me. I weep but am also comforted and strengthened by the love of Jesus as I cry out to Him. I wonder how much time will pass before I die for my faith. I no longer fear death, for I have a real faith, and a Savior who is with me through it all.

My continued refusal to renounce my faith leaves the fathers in a difficult place. If I die without recanting, then I would be a martyr. Furthermore, it would show that I was able to resist my programming and remain unintimidated by Satan to the very end. They were concerned that this could inspire others in the Order to question their own indoctrination and consider believing in the Christian God, especially those who I had mentored, programmed, or led. Furthermore, the oracles have predicted that the occult messiah, their much awaited and longed-for 'light of the world' would come through me. Therefore, they could not allow me to die a Christian. It was absolutely imperative that they somehow force me to recant my belief in Jesus.

They design a plan that they believe would not only put unbearable pressure on my newfound faith but also serve as a severe warning to anyone in the Order who might be considering becoming a Christian after watching the faith, comfort and determination I had even under weeks of torture. The next day, I am led in chains outside by Mattheo, Jerome and Carlotti, accompanied by Satan. All of the children and adults are gathered here to watch today's events. We walk past the crowd into a field, and I see thirteen crosses in a circle in its middle. To my unspeakable horror, on each one is hanging one of my classmates, the brothers and sisters I have loved deeply and grown up with. Conner, Mary Margaret, Timothy, Andrew, John, they are all there. My twin brother and sister, who are in the next class, are also hanging on crosses. I see the blood staining the nails and ropes fastening them to the crosses, and I learn over and retch into the grass.

"I will be forced to kill them if you do not recant your faith in this Christus (note: the Latin name for Christ)," Mattheo says to me in Latin, the language of the Order. I look at him unbelievingly. It is unheard of to kill a group of Jesuit fathers in this way. I cannot comprehend what he is telling me; my mind has shut down from the nightmarish horror of this scene. "I will give you three chances before I kill the first one." Satan is standing next to him, waiting for my answer.

"No, I can't," I stutter.

"I give you another chance. Will you recant your faith in the traitor Jew (a term the fathers use for Jesus)?"

"N-n-no," I stumble over the word. I cannot renounce Him, even to save a brother or sister that I love.

"Are you willing to give up and renounce your faith in Christus?" Mattheo asks again, this time raising the spear that he is holding in his right hand.

I am weeping. "No, I cannot," I say.

Mattheo takes his spear and thrusts it with all his strength into Andrew's heart. I hear ribs crack and Andrew jerks from the force of the spear entering his helpless body. I watch my brother spasm in death while blood spurts out of his mouth. I scream and collapse.

Mattheo moves to Peter next. He has tears in his eyes as he asks again, "Will you recant your faith in the traitor Jew?"

Satan is pacing beneath the cross where my brother hangs, glowering at me. Once again, the three questions are asked, and my response is the same.

"Kill me instead! Kill me instead!" I scream. "He doesn't deserve to die! Please, kill me instead!!" But my cries are ignored. This time, I feel as though the spear has pierced my own heart, that the blood is spurting out of my own mouth, as though my brother's death is my own.

Mattheo kills five more brothers in spite of my pleas and screams to be the one to die instead. I am weeping, shaking, vomiting on the ground, screaming in emotional anguish. I cannot believe that this is happening.

"Why is your God allowing your brothers to die this way?" Satan sneers with each death. "If He really cares, why is this happening? Maybe you have disobeyed Him and He has turned His face away."

Deep in my gut is a trickle, as I remember my saying "No" when hearing Jesus tell me not to come to Rome. Maybe Satan is right. Maybe God has abandoned me, for He is certainly abandoning these sisters and brothers that I am screaming prayers for, asking Him to save them, or, for Him to take me instead. The heavens have indeed been silent as the killing continues, one after another.

Finally, only Conner, Mary Margaret, Timothy, Anastasia, Lizzie, and Danny are left. Seven brothers have died. Seven times, I scream and retch and pass out from the emotional anguish. Seven times, I hear the screams and sobs of the remaining classmates and fathers, for these are people we all love, deeply. No one is unaffected by these deaths. We are all heartbroken. The sobbing has increased in intensity, punctuated by the screams of toddlers and very young children. Several of these little ones were deeply bonded to the seven who have just been killed, since we had already come-of-age the year before and have been given children to bond to as their primary programmers and trainers. It is particularly traumatic for these children to watch their beloved fathers died in such a terrible way on crosses. The watching crowd resembles a mourning assembly now as the tears fall continuously.

"How can you do this to the children?" Satan accuses me. Mattheo looks white-faced and shaken, unable to speak at this point, so Satan has taken over with the angry words meant to wound me further. "Do you want the whole Order to die?" he screams at me.

Looking into those coal-black, malevolent eyes, I believe he would do that, if for no other reason than to break me. For I have stood against him, in front of the entire Order, and he cannot stand this. I see Mattheo standing below Danny, my beloved twin brother. If I do not recant, my brother will die. He asks the question again. "Will you renounce your faith in the traitor Jew?"

I hesitate. I cannot, I cannot see Danny die. Too many have died already, God has abandoned me. The previous weeks of torture, sleep deprivation, and now this horror are too much. I can no longer hold on to conscious thought or sanity. Something breaks deep inside me. Everything is gray and terrible. "Yes," I whisper.

"Say it louder, so everyone can hear!" Satan demands, standing before me. "DO YOU RENOUNCE YOUR FAITH IN THE CHRISTUS WHO ALWAYS BETRAYS THOSE WHO BELIEVE IN HIM?" he screams.

"Yes!" I yell back, and then I fall down, unconscious. I want to die.

The world is dark with despair. The love, hope and joy that I had experienced for the past three months is completely gone. Deep inside, I know that I will go to hell one day, for I have given up my faith. It doesn't even help when after coming back to consciousness, my twin sister, Lizzie comes up to me and whispers "Thank you, sister." Or when Danny, my twin brother, gives me a look of gratitude for saving his life. I have saved his life at the cost of my immortal soul.

For the next two months, the Jesuit fathers reprogram me extensively to never ever believe in God again, and to always be loyal to Satan and the Order. Much of this programming is designed to exploit the guilt and shame that I felt for recanting: they put me through numerous traumatic scenarios in the programming labs to show me that God cannot forgive those who deny him, that my faith is too weak to ever hold onto God, that I love my brothers more than I love God and therefore cannot be His follower, and many other similar lies. In my grief, guilt and shame, however, their twisting of scriptures feels completely true. Something deep within me feels more and more broken and lifeless as the reprogramming continues. They also program in a complete terror that Satan will kill all my loved ones if I ever even had the slightest disloyal thought again. After the programmers and Satan are satisfied that my reprogramming will ensure my loyalty and all future refutation of Christ, I renew my vows of allegiance, love and obedience to both Satan and the Order, and am reinstated as a Jesuit father. A lavish celebration dinner is held to celebrate the "return of the prodigal" into the fold of occultism. My brothers who died are honored as martyrs whose sacrifice had brought me back home.

My memories in this chapter show the Order investing tremendous amounts of time, effort, and manpower in the breaking and re-programming of a member who had become a Christian. The price they are willing to pay to 're-convert' one member back to them even includes killing members who had not shown any 'disloyalty' themselves. I believe that this happens because Satan does not like to "lose face" and has no value for human life. Rather than killing a member who has become a Christian and thus creating a martyr who he had lost all control over, he enjoys the suffering of an individual who caved under soul-crushing pressure to recant. He loves to use these situations to 'demonstrate' that God 'doesn't answer prayer'. Indeed, for many years, my cult presenter, Luce, was completely convinced that she was permanently rejected and condemned by God for 'losing her faith', and that she was an 'example' of what happens when one strays from the beliefs of the Order, and an 'example' to both young and old that God does not hear our cries and prayers. To this day, I do not fully understand why my cries to die instead of my brothers seemed unheard by God. I do know that after this time, I was never the same again. I may never understand until I stand before God in eternity when all things are known in His presence the answers to my 'whys'.

Nonetheless, I have come to realize that He did not really abandon me, or my brothers and sisters. We were pawns in the hands of human beings who used their free choice to commit terrible evil in obedience to Satan. I have also realized since, during healing, that God can and does forgive me for renouncing Him and returning to the Order. He has always been more than willing to; this is why it was so urgent for Satan to program me with the lies that God would not forgive me. I know that many occult groups treat members who become Christians in very similar ways. If any reader has been through events like what I describe in this chapter, God does not condemn you, He is not afraid or dismissive of your anguished questions, and He will forgive and restore you.

Chapter 4: Mission Against a Pastor

After my reprogramming and reinstatement, I am expected to demonstrate my full loyalty and fealty to Satan by attacking Christians. A few weeks later, Mattheo calls me into his office.

"I need you to do a special mission for me," he tells me. "I want you to destroy the ministry of a Christian pastor that you yourself choose. But he must be a real Christian." I realize that this mission is meant to be a seal on my reprogramming to believe that God can never forgive me; I am being ordered to work against His people to show my full loyalty to Satan and create an even larger wedge between myself and the Christian God.

"I will start my research today," I reply, and leave to do so.

The Order keeps databases on Christians and their organizations, particularly on those who seem to be effective in their ministries and who are striving to lead truly godly lives. I review the profiles of numerous pastors around the world. I look for a male pastor who has been faithful to his wife and has at least one child. As the mission involves seduction, this pastor also needed to be someone emotionally insecure with a strained relationship with his wife. Preferably, his wife would be someone not involved in the ministry so that the pastor would be feeling 'alone' in his work. Additionally, the target should be in Italy or a country close by so that travelling between this mission and my other jobs would not require too much time.

I find one that meets these requirements, and set out on my mission. As this pastor has no pedophilic tendencies, I have to convince him that I am older than my 14 ½ years of age. I dress and use makeup that make me look like a young adult, with special padding around my hips and breasts to show a more mature shape. I can certainly put on eyes that are much older than my age, having experienced being trafficked from early childhood. I begin attending his church regularly, volunteering to help out in numerous ways that involve coming in after hours. I present myself as single and sophisticated, and thanks to the data I received from the Order, I know exactly how to dress in the way this pastor would like the most.

After several months, one evening, I am the last person out of the church. I stop, and look at the pastor. "You're brilliant, you know that, don't you?" I tell him, looking up at him from lowered eyelashes. With the skills that I had been taught to employ since I was toddler being sex trafficked to the wealthy, I give him a look that is seductive yet edged with shyness and admiration.

"Thank you," he smiles at me, gratified.

"I would love to get together for coffee sometime, and learn more from you," I tell him, baiting the hook with the prospect of his sharing his theological brilliance and learning with an adoring member of his congregation. I happen to know that he and his wife had a fight the night before, and decided this would be the perfect time to make a move. I pause, waiting expectantly for his answer.

"How about next Tuesday at lunchtime?" he answers, smiling.

I smile back. He has taken the bait.

The lunch on Tuesday turns into, as I had planned, the first of several one-on-one meetings regularly for coffee and the occasional meals, all with adoring looks from me at his utter brilliance. These meetings soon progress into more than just talks.

After several months, I go to the pastor's house on a morning when he is at church running a men's meeting. I introduce myself to his wife and ask to be let in for a private talk that will not take long. Sobbing quietly on the couch in their living room, I "confess" the affair I have been having with her husband, telling her that I cannot stand the guilt and want to "make things clean" with her and God. I hand her ample photographic 'evidence' (faked by the Order) of our dalliances. To make my confession as devastating as possible, I am dressed to accentuate the fact that I am in my early teens, implying that her husband was not only adulterous but also a pedophile. I then leave town and am never seen again by that congregation.

I struggled with horrendous grief, shame and guilt when the memory of my "penance" mission came forward. I had hated every minute of the mission. I hate the harm that my action caused this family. The implicit threat that my loved ones would be killed if I refused was the only reason I complied. After the bloodbath earlier in the year, I could not bear to go through another ordeal of loved ones being killed "because" I disobeyed the Order.

The very point of this mission was to reinforce shame and guilt which would strengthen their control over me. Having recanted my faith in Jesus, this mission helped to ensure that I would never believe He could forgive me, since I deliberately exploited the weaknesses of one of God's children and led him into sin. This act was just one more 'proof' that I was utterly corrupt and lost, and absolutely destined for hell. It no longer mattered what I did to others, or what happened to me, since there was nothing left for me other than obedience to the Order and the adults within it who claimed they still loved me. I was chained to the Order now more than ever before with my own guilt, shame, and self-hatred. The deep desire to not know what I was capable of doing enabled the programmers to reinforce old layers and build new layers of amnesia and barriers against Christianity. I was no longer considered a security risk after completing this and other acts against Christians.

According to my memories and what other survivors have shared with me, missions to destroy Christian individuals and families, and/or their churches or organizations are common in occultic groups. Besides harming the targeted Christians, the goal of such missions is to harm the cult member's relationship with God through the guilt and shame, as I describe above. In my experience, often, there are two types of parts who are forced to carry out such missions: the parts who truly become Christian outside the cult's directives, and parts who are programmed to be in the person's front 'Christian' presentations. For the former, after forcing them into such missions, the cult tells them things like, "God will never forgive you for how you have moved against His body", "You were never really a Christian or you would never have fallen to this", "You love your own family more than God so you can never follow him". The cult programmers then offer the devasted parts continued membership in the cult as their only option and place to belong.

For the parts who are programmed to present as 'Christian' in the person's non-cult normal life, the cult says similar shaming statements to them. However, instead of offering these parts a place in the cult, the programmers instead offer to 'take away' the emotions and memories of the horrible deeds against Christianity and their knowledge of their apostasy. In this way, the programmed Christian parts are blackmailed by guilt, shame and horror to amnesia and denial programming, and also become vulnerable to the programmers creating false experiences of Christianity (e.g., the programmers presenting the parts with a "Jesus" who reminds them to always obey the "father" who is a higher ranking internal programmer). Resolving both types programming installed through the guilt of having attacked Christians most fundamentally involves self-forgiveness and accepting God's forgiveness while processing the grief and other hard emotions, and finding ways to bless rather than tear down the church.

When I hear about a Christian leader falling into financial or sexual sin, and other behaviors that split or otherwise destroy his or her congregation, I often wonder if there is more behind the story than the media reports. I do realize that people can sin or make foolish decisions without being led into it by cult-sent agents, but I also believe it is possible that that individual may have been targeted by the cult. This is not to say that people are not responsible for their own actions; I am only saying that sometimes there might be more to the picture than is evident at first glance. This is one reason among many why it is critical for church leaders (and all Christians) to invest in building strong relationships with their spouses, children and friends, and to work on continuously addressing any wounds, beliefs, habits, strongholds, and/or lack of knowledge/resources that would make themselves, their families and their congregations vulnerable.

Chapter 5: Teen Years in Other Presentations

The Jesuit Order, as many of the highly-organized and well-funded occult societies do, programs its members to have separate sets of parts with cover identities in different countries. In this chapter, I relate a few memories of presentation parts in France, Amsterdam and the UK through their first-person perspectives. Each presenter was programmed to only have memories of her own life in her respective country, with no conscious awareness of other parts or memory of cult life and life in other countries. In my first book Never Give Up, I describe part of the early programming to create and control these parts when they are fronting and when they are inside.

France

I am 15 ½ years old, and I am just getting home from school with my twin sister, Annette, or Ani. My name is Jean, and I live in France in a house in a small town just a little over an hour's drive from Paris. My mother is a wonderful, warm person, and I love my father and my younger brother, Paul. As I come into our home, I see my mother, and ask her in French, "Do you want to hear a joke I heard at school?"

"Yes," she answers. She is in the kitchen starting to prepare dinner. Ani and I put our books on a side table, wash our hands and help her. Our mother has taught us how to cut up vegetables, sauté them, and prepare meals using the herbs that she raises in a window box and in her garden. I tell her the joke, and she and Ani laugh.

After dinner, I visit one of my favorite people who lives down the street from my family. She is an older woman with beautifully styled white hair, and is an accomplished artist in oil paints. For the past four years she has been teaching me to paint. I enter her studio, and the familiar smell of oil paints, linseed oil and the sight of brightly colored canvases stacked against the walls greets me. Pauline greets me with a smile but then goes back to her painting. "You know where the supplies are," she reminds me.

I grab my palette and the canvas I was working on two days ago. I am trying to capture how the sunlight looks, the soft buttery feel of it when it falls on the grasses and flowers in my mother's garden. I started the painting in plein aire but want to put the finishing touches on it here in the studio. Pauline and I work in companionable silence, absorbed in our work. After two hours, I get up. "I have to get home," I tell Pauline.

She nods and looks at the canvas I have been working on. "I like the colors you have used here and here," she says, pointing to some of the flowers, "but I think you need cooler colors to offset the warmer brights over here, and deeper shadows to highlight the sunny warmth in the light." Pauline always gives wonderful critiques.

I tell her "Thank you! I will do that next time," as I leave. I am grateful for her help because I want to be an artist one day. I am already thinking about which school has a good art department, where I will apply to when I go to University in a few years.

Amsterdam

It is a month later, early on a Monday morning. My name is Katrina and I am usually called Trina by family and friends. I live in an apartment in Amsterdam with my Uncle Leo and my Aunt Marie. Uncle Leo is my father's first cousin who adopted me after my parents died in a car crash when I was four years old. Aunt Marie is an obsessive housekeeper, constantly bleaching, disinfecting and scrubbing our apartment. They have no children of their own and at times I feel like a messy intrusion into their immaculate home. In stark contrast to the spotlessness of their living space, in their work lives my uncle and aunt are sex brokers. They buy and sell children and adults of all ages and sexes for the pleasure of the wealthy or for purchase by the large brothels. I know far too much about evil and exploitation for a teen but I have learned to cope with this knowledge by using humor and cynicism.

Today I am going to a coffeehouse where the main brokers in the city meet to discuss business. This coffeehouse admits only the brokers on this day and everyone in this part of town knows not to disturb the "businessmen" who meet here every week at this spot. Uncle Leo has sent me to pick up a copy of the broker's list which shows the current going rate for trafficked children of various ages and training. I will also take a copy of this list into the office of Uncle Leo's friend, Johan. I have been helping Johan with his accounting books on weekends for the past year. Uncle Leo wants me to understand all aspects of the "industry" including how to keep books correctly. These books are kept stored in secret safes behind hidden areas in Johan's office. All the 'businesses' in town, including Uncle Lou's, have ways of hiding their hardcopies of their illicit trade in offices and facilities that masquerade as legal businesses and more innocent activities.

When I enter the coffeehouse, I am greeted by the familiar smell of rich, dark coffee and the sweet smell of expensive cigars and pipe tobacco. While most of the brokers are men, there are two women sitting with them, sipping coffee and smoking. The women are dressed as men. This is not unusual in this town where boundaries for all genders are flexible even back in the early 70s. After getting the list, I tuck it inside my purse, and go immediately to Uncle Lou's office off the canal. While the door says he is a lawyer, the other brokers know otherwise. Keeping with this façade, his official accounts show that his vast income is generated by legal fees charged to international clients. His clients are certainly international but there is nothing legal about what they do. After all, his clients are not only brothels, but wealthy people who want children for parties, children whose disappearances would never be questioned or investigated.

I push these thoughts aside and use my key to enter Uncle Lou's office. "You're late," he growls at me. Uncle Lou is very strict, and his discipline can be very severe.

"I had a coffee before I left," I tell him, annoyed that he expects me to account for every minute of my day. I, who have seen the worst that the streets can proffer, who have helped him deliver "merchandise" to brothels and purchasers, who have kept his secrets for years, must account for the few minutes needed to sip a cup of coffee? But I am silent. Uncle Lou is not a man to anger, as I have learned over the years.

"I wanted to send these prices to Alex before noon," he states curtly. Alex is another head broker. It seems as if all of south Amsterdam holds its breath each week, waiting for the price updates, impatient to learn how much to charge for the "shipments" coming in.

"I will copy the list, and run it to him," I say. While the Order has advanced communications technology, this is south Amsterdam in 1972 so computers and email are still unknown here. I must use other means to get this information to Uncle Leo's friend in a timely way. I make the copy and leave.

"Be back by 12:30," Uncle warns me, "I have another job for you then."

I sigh. Uncle earns enough from his ‘business’ that he hires a tutor so I don’t have to go to regular school, but this means he can keep me running around for him or working all day. I obey, waiting for the day that I am an adult, and can order others to run around for me. As I leave Uncle Lou’s office, I fantasize about growling orders at him, and his rapid running to obey them.

UK

It is two months later, and I am almost 16 years old. My name is Beatrice, but my friends and family call me “Trixie”. I live in a suburb of London. My father is a banker and my mother works for the government as a secretary. However, I know she works for a shadowy organization that she can’t talk about and I am positive that she is no “secretary”. I hate my mother and secretly call her “the bitch” because since I was a small child, she has used me to satisfy her sadistic urges. She enjoys ‘disciplining’ me by suspending me from leather straps fastened to the ceiling of her room and whipping me. She always makes me hide the long dark bruises left by her bouts of ‘discipline’ with long dresses, or long sleeves and jeans. Once, when I was ten years old, she accidentally broke a rib. I had to stay home from school with the ‘flu’ until I was able to breathe without gasping in pain. There was never any apology for her sadism which was highly sexualized and became more and more vicious as I grew older. My father is a weak and ineffective man who ignores her abuse of me, and keeps his head buried in the newspaper or his books when he is home.

I am planning on running away as soon as I graduate from secondary school. I take great satisfaction in the fact that in spite of my high intelligence I am doing extremely poorly at school, because this upsets my mother. In fact, I am the black sheep of the family. My younger brother and sister are the “good children” who do well at school and extracurricular activities. I am the one who climbs out of my bedroom window at night to go clubbing with my older friends, who like me are rebellious teens. But unlike my friends, I don’t go from boyfriend to boyfriend. After watching my parents’ relationship, I have no desire to get tied down to a loveless dyad, or to produce children who will repeat the cycle of pain and emotional neglect. I want something better even though I don’t know what ‘better’ could be.

“I’m going to just finish my “O”s and then take a secretarial course,” I tell Georgia, my best friend, talking above the loud music at the club we are at.

“That will kill your mother,” Georgia says. “She’s telling everyone you are going to university.”

“Bullshit”, I tell Georgia. “With my grades, even if she endowed three departments, I have no chance. Most of all, I don’t want to go. Besides, I want to see the look on her face when I tell her my plans.”

“I wouldn’t want to take that dragon on,” Georgia says, referring to my mother. But like my mother, I am very strong willed.

“Oh, I plan to get away from her fire and smoke,” I say. “I put in an application to secretarial school and I’ve asked John if I could move in with him until I complete the course.”

“But…you two aren’t a couple, are you?” Georgia asks, her eyes going wide.

“Of course not! We’re just friends. But I can work part-time at the market after school hours, and told him I would pay half the rent. His place is cheap.”

“You’re a lot braver than me,” says Georgia. “I couldn’t just move in with a guy…”

"Just think what my mother will say!" I respond, with a smile on my face. "She's going to have a gorgeous year-long conniption."

"Won't she turn you into social services?" Georgia asks.

"I will tell her if she does, I will have a long, intimate chat with them about our family, and her 'child discipline' methods," I answer. "I doubt she wants that to happen."

My memories of Jean, Trina and Trixie demonstrate that the Jesuit Order programs different presentations to have different personalities, each with their own set of likes and dislikes, beliefs about life, religiousness, emotional traits and so on. The Order also designs different experiences of family life for each presentation, ranging from the 'warm, happy family' such as Jean had, to the ostensibly physically, sexually and emotionally abusive family such as Trixie had. Typically, the programmers are careful to ensure that across the different presenters, as a whole, there is a variety in the personalities and experiences of family life. That is, they aim at having a 'balance' between the presenters who are programmed to be 'good' and those programmed to be 'rebellious', as they also balance the family lives between those that are 'abusive' and 'loving'. The parents and other family members in each presentation family are also carefully programmed to reinforce the presenters' programmed personality and assigned roles in the family. For instance, if a child is programmed to have a presentation where her parents are alcoholics and that child is to be the 'hero' who takes care of her siblings as well as her parents, then her parents and siblings will be programmed to coerce, encourage, permit and/or reward this caretaking behavior, whether explicitly or subtly.

In the Order, the cover identities for each presenter and their families are not unique to respective members. Instead, typically, 3-6 individuals share one cover identity. For instance, my French presenter Jean and her twin sister Annette, was played by Lizzie and me and two other females of the same age and physical appearance. This is possible because the genetic program enables the Order to easily produce several babies at a time who are biologically identical siblings. Having multiple individuals to fill in for a particular cover identity is a logistical necessity: one sibling can continue maintaining the cover in one country while the other siblings are in training, on a job, or presenting in a different country.

But why have presentation programming? What is the need? One is that these identities can be used to provide a seemingly legitimate reason for the Order's agent to be in a particular location in a particular country at a particular time. Who would suspect the rebellious teen who goes on to secretarial school and is eventually hired by a large corporation of being a Vatican agent aiming at stealing their corporate secrets for the Jesuits? Or the young French artist of later marrying a member of the Templar Knights in order to infiltrate this group, and learn their secrets to share them with Rome? Or that the bumbling, shy American girl in glasses was just flown to the U.S. after she completed a high-profile assassination in a politically sensitive country? As Trina, the real reason that "Uncle Leo" (also a Jesuit agent) had me working in Johan's office was that the Jesuits suspected that Johan was trying to cheat them and his doing so would instigate others to cheat the Order as well. Trina had no idea that other parts in her existed and were reporting to Rome; all the presenters had no idea that within them were highly trained parts that rotate out and complete a task beneficial to the cult, while they remain completely amnesic to these activities.

In other words, the cover identities of various presentations are used to hide the individual's cult and intelligence activities. Presenters are thus often referred to by the programmers as the "sheep" that cover up the "wolf" within. In fact, sheep and wolf programming, with the hostility between the sheep (presentations that come out outside of the cult facilities) and the wolves (cult host and overtly cult loyal parts) are installed to increase the amnesia barrier between the two groups.

Besides the practical utility of presentations as a means for members to carry out missions, the Order engages in presentation programming because of how it enhances and facilitates mind control. That is, when an individual is forced to accept and partition multiple different narratives about their 'lives' as entirely different 'persons' in completely different 'families', they become more easily manipulated and controlled because their perceptions of reality remain fragmented. Both these reasons are also why other occult societies such as the Illuminati and Templers, and government agencies that practice mind control such as the CIA, also program their members to have more than one 'non-cult', ordinary front presentation. In order to maintain ties with the original European countries, Illuminati in the U.S., South America and other regions will often have European cover identities, or presentations, as well.

When I first learned that I had lived in other countries, under different names, with a full life history for each, it was extremely disorienting and very frightening. I struggled with questions such as "Who am I, really? Which is the REAL me? Do I even have a real me, or am I simply a conglomeration of parts, created at the whim of others?" I experienced a horrendous identity crisis that lasted until I came to know the other parts better, and discovered that we were actually more alike than different. Their ability to love, laugh, cry, feel pain, feel anger, resonated with who I was, regardless of programmed identity: all of us were the 'real me', we all reflected an aspect of my true soul and what I like and dislike. All of them wanted to be free of being controlled by others, which is why they courageously shared their stories with me. All wanted the freedom to love others without being chained to a terror of disobeying Satan, or to the need to obey his commands. All wanted the chance to live a life that reflects who I truly am underneath all the stories that I had been programmed to believe about myself. All of us had to grieve the terrible abuse, emotional pain and manipulation that was required to cause the fracturing of who I am into various identities. All felt the rage that this was how I/we were treated for an entire lifetime, and all wanted the abuse to stop, and to be free to stop abusing others. This was the "real me" and why they chose to share their stories with me, and thus I was able to write this book.

Chapter 6: Hidden Illuminati Child

I am 16 years old and Anagram (Ana), my Illuminati cult presenter, is fronting in Germany. I am at one of the Illuminati's private medical facilities. The doctors here have just confirmed that I am pregnant, and ascertained that the fetus is male. My Illuminati mother is with me. She immediately makes a call to the head of the German family because the child has been fathered by David Rothschild, and may prove a useful tie with the Rothschilds in the future. I pay close attention to the call because I need to know the fate of this child. Would the German father decide that another Battenberg-Rothschild bastard son would not be useful at this point, and so order an abortion? Even worse, would this child be sold at birth into the violent, perverse underworld of sex trafficking and human experimentation? Would I be ordered to foster the child out? Or, maybe, just maybe – I might be allowed to keep my son and raise him myself. Waves of love flood me for my little unborn son, and how I wish that I could be the one to dictate his fate.

The discussion between my mother, who is one of my main Illuminati programmers and the German father continues. Another voice enters the call, and I hear Timothy Brogan, another one of my main programmers join the conversation. He strongly advises that we retain this child because my maternal instincts could then be harnessed for loyalty to the cult and my programming.

As Ana, I know full well that it is extremely common for teenage girls in the Illuminati to be allowed or encouraged to bear a child who is then fostered out or 'hidden' in other Illuminati households. This child is essentially a hostage, i.e., the young mothers are told that if their programming fails or they disobey orders from the cult, then they would never be allowed to see their child again, or the child will be killed. Typically, although the Illuminati cult presenters remember the child and look forward to the times they are allowed to be together, the non-cult, ordinary day presenters have no memory of the hidden child because they are told that the child would be painfully killed if they ever remember him or her, or the cult. In this way, the hidden son or daughter helps ensure the amnesia of the non-cult presenters and the obedience of the cult presenters, as an Illuminati child matures into adolescence. I am only surprised that at 16, I have not already been made to have a hidden child.

For a moment I allow myself to hope that my non-cult presenters might be allowed to have the story of being a teenaged mother and so I might actually get to raise the child myself. My heart sinks bitterly, however, as the conversation develops into a detailed discussion of the advantages of fostering my son with the Rothschilds.

"It will cause them to trust Ana more," notes Brogan.

"This is critical as they are already showing interest in her skills as an oracle," my mother puts in.

I tune them out as they continue the discussion, wrapping my arms around my belly. Although I do not have the power to keep him, at least, I have the power to love him as long as he is still with me.

The next time I am in France, I tell David, "I'm pregnant," as I have been told to do by the German family.

"Well, don't let it come near me until it's old enough to carry on a decent conversation," he replies casually.

I think to myself, "Typical David, he doesn't have a paternal bone in his body."

It is time for the birth, and I am attended by my twin sister, as expected, and by the people I am closest to in my family: my mother, sister, and my beloved friend, Barbara, who is also a high-ranking trainer. As I deliver my son, I feel a deep surge of sorrow inside. As Ana, I have absolutely no idea that this birth has triggered the deep anguish that my Jesuit cult presenter, Luce, experienced when she had to sacrifice her firstborn years before in Rome. Instead, I believe that it is because I am remembering sacrificing my firstborn son in Germany when I was 13, a required ritual for all Illuminati teenagers. My sadness is dispelled, however, when I catch my first glimpse of my red-faced, crying, very healthy young son. His name is David, in honor of his father. I tenderly pick him up, hold him to my breast, and nurse him, ecstatic at becoming a mother. My attendants all congratulate me, and I fall asleep soon afterwards, my infant son next to me in a small bassinet.

That evening, they move baby David and I to a small stone cottage on the property of the Rothschild main summer residence, with a servant to take care us. Over the next few weeks, I am allowed plenty of time with baby David. I nurse him, burp him, change him, and coo over him. I am completely in love. He has started growing fine wisps of light brown hair, and his eyes are still an infant blue. I am convinced that when I smile at him, he smiles back at times, although he is still so young. My mother, sister, Barbara and other close friends in the Illuminati visit frequently. I never tire of showing David off to them, or of talking about him to them. They smile patiently, and agree with me that he is indeed marvelous.

During one visit, however, my mother states firmly, “It’s time to take him to his foster home.” She had warned me about this event coming several days before, but I had refused to think about it.

I begin crying. “I don’t want to give him up!” I yell. My loud voice startles baby David and seeming almost in sympathy, he begins crying loudly. “See, he wants to stay with me!” I begin crying, and both David and I have tears streaming down our faces.

“You know you have to do this,” my mother and sister remind me. “You will be able to visit David from time to time, and he will always know that you are his real mother and how much you love him.”

Their words don’t help. I love my baby, and cannot bear to give him up.

“I can’t,” I say, trembling. “I’m not able to give him up.”

“If you don’t, you know I can’t let you keep him, if he makes you weak. I will kill him myself to make sure that doesn’t happen,” my mother hisses at me. At this moment, I hate her with a blinding rage. I hate this woman who throughout my life has never tolerated weakness in any form, who has pushed me since earliest childhood with her own blind ambition.

I cannot keep David, but I can make my feelings known.

“I hate you, I hate you, bitch!” I tell my mother. “I will never forgive you for this!”

“Hate me if you must, but know that I am doing my best to protect you and my grandson, even though you can’t realize it now,” my mother says. She reaches out for my son, and I clutch him to my breast.

“Mother, please, don’t do this,” I sob, as anguished tears flow down my face. Little David is crying in tandem with me, his fists curled and his screams filling the room.

"Ana, you must, and you know it!" my mother replies. She sends Lizzie to go and ask two men in the next room to come in and help her take my son away. The men literally hold me and pry my arms open, and take my son, who is still screaming, away. I lie down on the bed, and feel as if I am dying. I cannot describe the loss and bereavement I feel.

I pull myself to my feet and scream, "Kill me, mother!" I cannot even see her for the red haze of rage and grief, "Kill me, finish off what you have started today!"

"Ana, stop it!" she screams back. "You will see David in a year, once he is settled in his new home. Don't you want him to live? To have a good life?"

"I could have given him a good life!" I yell in anguish.

"You are only a teen, without money of your own. How could you possibly support him? And yourself? For you would both become outcasts if you failed to give him up. Is that the life you want for your son?"

I lie on the bed, and cry for hours, until exhausted, I fall asleep. I have told my mother to leave and not come near me again. Lizzie and Barbara hold me and comfort me. Later in the day, Brogan comes and sits next to me on the bed.

"I hear that giving up wee David was hard on you," he says, in his brogue that seems like a mix of northern UK and Scottish. "I know your heart is breaking," he continues.

"You have no idea!" I sob, "I will never recover from this!"

"Aye, I know it feels that way now," Brogan says. "But one day, you will see your son as a fine young man in a successful career, and feel proud of what you did for him today."

"I will never be proud of this!" I insist. "I hate you and everyone else for making me do this!"

"You are going through the pangs of motherhood and loss, what all girls your age must go through," Brogan tells me. "All survive this pain, and it really is for a purpose: to remind you that the daytime presentations must never remember us. To remind you to always obey. For your young son is your covenant to do so, and his life depends on you. I know the price is dear, and has cost you more than you feel you can bear. But for the sake of all the others you love, you must do so. For you also hold their lives in your hands – and your heart – and they also have done the same for you, including your mother, your sister, and your friend." He turns and looks at Barbara, who is four years older than me, who nods sadly at me.

"I had to send my son away to a foster family too," she whispers. "I know how really hard this is on you." I see tears in her eyes, and realize that my closest friend in the Illuminati does understand.

"How did you survive?" I ask.

"One second at a time at first," she says, coming over to me and taking my hand. "It helps that I can see him whenever I am in Germany. They let me play with him, and he calls me 'Mama' and it means the world to me to know that he is doing well."

"Oh, Barbara," I say, and fall into her arms, weeping. The others leave, and the two of us cry together for a period of time, and then she holds and kisses me.

"I wish I could live a different life," I whisper to her.

"S-s-h-h!" she cautions me, whispering into my ear. "They can listen to us, you know. Don't say anything you don't want reported back."

"At this point, I don't care," I tell her.

"But one day, you will," she reminds me. "And your son will, too." So wordlessly, she holds me and comforts me throughout the night.

It is a year later, and I am seventeen. Today, as an Illuminati programmer, I am working with Barbara to reinforce the bonds between Beltsar, an eight-year-old boy, and Desiree, a six-year-old girl. They are already very close friends in both their ordinary non-cult presenter lives, and in their Illuminati side of life. It is extremely important that these two children be deeply bonded, because Desiree will eventually carry Beltsar's hidden child when they are teenagers; as male adolescents cannot carry and bear children, their hidden child is typically a child that they father with a peer whom they have been in love with since early childhood. The Illuminati programmers work to ensure that every male child has a female best friend that they fall deeply in love with, and are trauma-bonded to. The pairing is usually based on observing which children are naturally drawn to each other in their toddler years or early childhood years, and they are careful to ensure that both children believe that their relationship is developing organically without influence by the adults.

Today, Desiree will be placed in a situation of extreme danger, and Beltsar will be allowed to rescue her, not only to create a trauma-bond between the two, but also to foster Beltsar's protectiveness towards her. Barbara and I are monitoring Beltsar and Desiree through hidden cameras as they are walking down a path in the woods owned by the German Illuminati. We use these woods for outdoor programming scenarios, so the grounds and flora are riddled with all kinds of equipment and structures used to create specific programming experiences. When Desiree is over the correct spot, I push a button, and the ground under Desiree's feet gives way. By all appearances, she has fallen through some rotten boards into a deep, dark well beneath. As the boards had been covered by a thin layer of dirt, grass and weeds, neither of them had noticed it. Desiree falls far enough to be terrified and to be unable to get out, but not far enough to be badly hurt. As she falls into the old well, she screams.

"Desiree, are you okay?" Young Beltsar peers over the edge of the well, terrified.

"I'm not hurt, but I can't get out!" she yells back up. "And there's something down below...a snake! Oh, there's a snake down below!" she screams.

The hole is large and shallow enough at that time of the day for there to be enough light at the bottom to identify the snake. As Desiree is the Illuminati cult presenter who has been taught about poisonous animals, she has no problem identifying that it is a type of pit viper down there with her. She is now more than terrified, as she does not know that before the programmers planted it down in the hole, it already has had its poison sacs removed.

"It's a viper! Beltsar, help! You have to help me!" Desiree is crying, in full panic. "I don't want it to get me!" Hidden speakers play back the sound of snake rattles loudly, galvanizing Beltsar to immediate action. Both children are young enough and too panicked to notice that it is impossible for a snake to shake its rattles that loudly.

Beltsar runs and grabs a large fallen branch from the ground near the trees. The programmers have conveniently left precisely the right kind of branch for his use.

"Desiree, grab this!" he says. "Climb up!"
